T H E P R E F A C E.

HAVING been persuaded to put together some scatter'd Notes which I long ago made upon several Places of holy Scripture, I began the last Year to consider some Texts in the Book of GENESIS; where I soon found there would be a Necessity of making an entire Commentary upon a good Part of it; and therefore I resolv'd to go thro' the Whole in the same manner as I had done the Three first Chapters.

After I had finish'd the better Half of my Work, I was inform'd that Monsieur le Clerc had publish'd a critical Commentary upon the same Book; but whether I have concurr'd in any thing with him, or contradicted him, I am not able to say, having wanted Leisure to peruse his Work, by reason of the Publick Business which came upon me in the End of the Year; when I likewise understood that a very learned Friend and Brother had put into the Press Annotations upon all the Five Books of Moses; but by communicating some of our Papers to each other, we found there would be no reason that either of us should lay aside our Design, but go on in our several Ways to make the Scriptures better understood by all Sorts of Persons; for all Helps are little enough in this Age, which seems to take Pleasure in being ignorant of the most important Truths.

In which we are so particularly instructed by Moses as by no other Author, nor by all the Authors that are or have been known to be extant in the World; for to him we owe the Knowledge of the Beginning of the World, of the first Parents of Mankind, the Inventors of Arts, the Original of Nations, the Founders of Kingdoms and Empires, the Institution of Laws, the Fountain of religious Rites; yea, of all the ancient Mythology; and which is most considerable, the Means of propagating that Sense of God and of Religion which Mankind brought into the World with them, and how it came to be corrupted.

There have been those who have taken the Liberty to say, that it is impossible to give any tolerable Account of the Creation of the World in Six Days, of the Situation of Paradise, the Fall of our first Parents by the Seduction of a Serpent, &c. But I hope I have made it appear there is no ground for such presumptuous Words, but very good reason to believe every thing that Moses hath related, without forsaking the literal Sense, and betaking ourselves to I know not what, allegorical Interpretations; particularly, I find the Truth of what I have noted concerning Paradise, very much confirm'd by a learned and judicious Discourse of Monsieur Huetius, which I did not meet withal till I had made an End of these Commentaries; but then took a Review of what I had written, and found cause to correct what I had noted out of Mr. Carver concerning the Spring of Tygris and Euphrates. I might also have given a clearer Account of the Deluge, if I had observ'd some Things which are come to my Notice since these Papers went to the Press; but I hope I have said enough to evince that it is not so incredible as some have pretended; for having made the largest Concessions concerning the Height of the highest Mountains, which, according to the old Opinion, I have allow'd may be Thirty Miles high, Gen. vii. 19. (whereas if instead of Thirty, I had said not above Three perpendicular, I had had the best of the modern Philosophers to defend me) it appears there might be Water enough to cover the loftiest of them, as Moses hath related.

The P R E F A C E.

Whose Account of the Families by whom the Earth was peopled after the Flood, is so surprisingly agreeable to all the Records that remain in any Language of the several Nations of the Earth, that it carries with it an uncontrollable Evidence of his Sincerity and Truth, as well as of his admirable universal Knowledge; for as there is no Writer that hath given us an Account of so many Nations, and so remote, as he hath done; so he hath not satisfied himself with naming them, but acquainted us with their Original, and told us at what Time, and from what Place, and on what Occasion, they were dispersed into far distant Countries; and this with such Brevity, that he hath inform'd us of more in one Chapter, than we can find in the great Volumes of all other Authors; having shewn us from whom all those People descended who are spread over the Face of the Earth, from the Caspian and Persian Sea to Hercules's Pillars (as the Ancients speak) that is, all the World over.

In short, whatsoever is most ancient in those Countries which are furthest from all Commerce with his own, is clearly explain'd by Moses, whose Writings therefore cannot but be highly valued by all those who will apply their Minds seriously to the Study of them; for if they, who now have no Regard to him, would but compare what he hath written on the fore-nam'd Subject with what they find in those Heathen Writers, whom they have in the greatest Veneration, they would be forc'd to confess him to be a Man of wonderful Understanding, and could not reasonably doubt he had an exact Knowledge of the Truth of those Things whereof he wrote; to this purpose I remember the famous Bochartus speaks, who hath given the greatest Light to the Tenth of Genesis, wherein these Things are deliver'd.

And truly it is some Wonder, that they who so much cry up the Egyptian Learning, should not easily grant (unless they will believe all Historians but only those whom we account sacred) that Moses must needs be qualified, even without the Help of divine Revelation (which he certainly had) to write both of their Original, and of all those who were related to them, being bred up in their Country, nay, in their Court, till he was Forty Years old, and well vers'd in all the Wisdom that was to be found among them, Acts vii. 22. which Wisdom of theirs I doubt not was much augmented by Abraham's living among them (as I have observ'd upon xiii. 2.) but especially by Joseph's long Government of that Country, for the Space of Eighty Years, who was endu'd with such an incomparable Spirit, that the wisest Men among them learn'd of him, for he taught their Senators Wisdom, Psal. cv. 22. And in like manner Moses liv'd Forty Years more among the Midianites, where, it appears by Jethro, there wanted not Persons of great Knowledge, and from thence he might easily be instructed in all that the Arabians knew, who were no mean People (it appears by the Story of Job and his three Friends, and Elihu, who is supposed by some to have wrote that admirable Book) and were near Neighbours to the most famous Nations of the Eastern Countries; from whom, it is evident by this History, all Learning, Arts and Sciences originally came.

I could add a great deal more to this purpose, but the Reader I hope will find enough to satisfy him in the Commentary itself; and therefore I shall only make this one Request to him, that he would take his Bible and read every Verse entirely along with this Commentary; for I have not set down every Word of the Text, for fear of swelling this Work to too great a Bulk.

A COM-

A

UPON THE

First Book of MOSES,

CALLED

GENESIS.

THAT MOSES wrote this and the Four following Books hath been so constantly believed, both by Jews, Christians, and Heathens, that none, I think, denied it, till Aben Ezra (a Jewish Doctor, who lived not much above five hundred Years ago) raised some Doubts about it, in his Notes upon the First of Deuteronomy, out of XII Passages in these Books themselves: Which he pretended could not be his, but the Words of a later Author. But when I meet with those Places, I shall make it appear, that all such Exceptions are very frivolous, and ought not to shake our Belief of this Truth, That these Five Books were penned by MOSES, and no Body else.

The first is called GENESIS, because it contains the History of the Creation of the World, with which it begins; and the Genealogy of the Patriarchs, down to the Death of Joseph, where it ends. It comprehends an History of Two thousand three hundred and sixty-nine Years, or thereabouts: The Truth of all which it was not difficult for Moses to know, because it came down to his Time through but a very few Hands. For from Adam to Noah, there was one Man (Methuselah) who lived so long as to see them both. And so it was from Noah to Abraham: Shem conversed with both. As Isaac did with Abraham and Joseph: From whom these things might easily be conveyed to Moses, by Amram; who lived long enough with Joseph. In short, Moses might have been confuted, if he had written any thing but the Truth, by learned Men of other Nations, who sprang from the same Root, and had the like Means of being acquainted with the great Things here reported by Tradition from their Forefathers; who lived so long in the Beginning of the World, that they more certainly transmitted Things to their Posterity. Besides, it is not reasonable to think, they had not the Use of Writing as we have; whereby they conveyed the Knowledge of Times foregoing, to those that came after.

Verse 1. In the beginning.] The World is not eternal, but had a Beginning, as all Philosophers acknowledged before Aristotle. So he himself informs us, L. 1. de Cælo, cap. 2. (speaking of the ancient Opinions concerning the Original of the the World) ἡ ἐκείνη ἦν ἀπὸ τοῦ οὐκ ἔσθαι, they all say it had a Beginning: But some thought it might have no End; others judged it to be Corruptible.

God created.] He who is Eternal gave a Being to this great Fabrick of Heaven and Earth, out of Nothing. It is observed by Eusebius, (in the Beginning of his Book De Præpar. Evang. p. 21, & 25. Edit. Paris.) That neither the ancient Historians, nor the Philosophers, do so much as mention GOD, ὁ θεὸς μὲν οὐκ ὀνομάσκει, no, not so far as to name him, when they write of the Beginning of the World. But this Divine Lawgiver, designing to hang the whole Frame of his Polity upon Piety towards GOD, and to make the Creator of all the Founder of his Laws, begins with Him. Not after the manner of the Egyptians and Phœnicians, who bestowed this adorable Name upon a great Multitude: But he puts in the Front of his Work, the Name of the sole Cause of all Things, the Maker of whatsoever is seen or unseen. As if he had told the Hebrew Nation, That he who gave them the Law contained in these Books, was the King and Lawgiver of the whole World: Which was, like a great City, governed by him. Whom therefore he would have them look upon, not only as the Enactor of their Laws, but of those also which all Nature obeys. See L. vii. de Præpar. Evang. c. 9, 10. & L. xii. c. 16.

The Heaven and the Earth.] The Hebrew Particle Eib, put before both Heaven and Earth, signifies as much as with, if Maimonides understood it aright; and makes the Sense to be this: He created the Heavens with all things in the Heavens, and the Earth with all things in the Earth, as his Words are in More Nevochim, P. ii. c. 30. Certain it is, these two words, Heaven and Earth, comprehend the whole visible World. Some would have the Angels comprehended in the word Heaven; as particularly Epiphanius, Hæres. lxxv. n. 45. ἀνα ἐκείνῳ καὶ τοῖς ἁγγέλοις ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ. But others of the Fathers are of a different Opinion, as Petavius observes. It is a pretty Conceit of Theophilus Antiochenus, L. ii. ad Autolyicum, That the Heavens are mentioned before the Earth, to shew that God's Works are not like ours: For he begins at the top, we at the bottom: That is, he first made the fixed Stars and all beyond them, (so I take the word Heaven here to signify) for they had a Beginning, as well as this lower World, tho' they do not seem to be comprehended in the six days Work, which relates only to this Planetary World, as I may call it, which hath the Sun for its Center. And thus Philo understood the first word Bereſchith, in the beginning, to respect the Order wherein things were created. God began his Creation with the Heaven, as the most noble Body, and then proceeded to the Earth; an Account of which follows.

Ver. 2. And the Earth was without form, &c.] Some connect this Verse with the foregoing, by translating the first Verse in this manner, When God first created, or began to create, the Heaven and the Earth, the Earth was without form, &c. That is, at first he only created a rude Matter of those things, which afterwards were fashioned as we now see them.

Without form.] A confused, indigested Heap, without any Order or Shape.

And void.] Having no Beasts, nor Trees, nor Herbs, nor any thing else, wherewith we now behold it adorned.

So these two words, Tobu Vabobu, are used in Scripture, where we meet with them, (which is not often) for confusion and emptiness, Iſa. xxxiv. 11. Jerem. iv. 23. Being a Description of that which the Ancients called the CHAOS (of which the Barbarians had a Notion, no less than the Greeks) wherein the Seeds and Principles of all things were blended together. This is called, in the Pagan Language, by Epicharmus, ἀεὶ τὸ οὐκ ἔσθαι, the first of the Gods: Because all things sprang out of this; which was indeed the first of the Works of God, who, as Moses shows in the Sequel, produced this beautiful World out of this CHAOS.

And darkness was upon the face of the deep.] Nothing was to be seen, for want of Light: Which lay buried, as all things else did, in that great Abyſs, or vast confused heap of Matter, before-mentioned. So the Hebrew word Tebom signifies (which we translate deep) tumult and turbid confusion: The first Matter being very heterogeneous, as they speak, i. e. of various forts and kinds, huddled together without distinction.

And the Spirit of God moved.] Men have been extremely fanciful in the Exposition of these plain Words: Some understanding by the Spirit of God, the Sun, which gives Spirit and Life to all things upon Earth; others the Air, or the Wind: When as yet there was no Sun in the Firmament, nor any Wind that could stir, without the Power of the Almighty to excite it. This therefore we are to understand to be here meant; The Infinite Wisdom and Power of God, which made a vehement Commotion, and mighty Fermentation (by raising, perhaps, a great Wind) upon the face of the Waters: That is, on that fluid Matter before-mentioned, to separate the Parts of it one from the other.

Waters.] That which Moses before called the Deep, he now calls the Waters: Which plainly shows that some Parts of the confused Mass were fluid and light, as other Parts were solid and heavy. The heavy naturally sunk, which he calls the Earth; and the lighter Parts got above them, which he calls the Waters: For it is clearly intimated the Waters were uppermost.

The word we here translate moved, signifies literally brooded upon the Waters, as an Hen doth upon her Eggs. So the ancient and modern Interpreters have observed: And Morinus, who opposes it, hath said nothing to make us doubt of this Sense of the Phrase. From whence some have, not unhappily, conjectured, the Ancients took their Notion of a μεσσηριον ὠν, a first-laid Egg, out of which all things were formed: That is, the CHAOS (out of which all the old Philosophers, before Aristotle, thought the World was produced) consisting of Earth and Water, of thicker and thinner Parts, as an Egg doth of Yolk and White.

Now the Spirit of God thus moved upon the Waters, that by its Incubation (as we may call it) it might not only separate, as I said, those Parts which were jumbled together; but give a vivifick Virtue to them, to produce what was contained in them. The Souls and Spirits, that is, of all living Creatures, were produced by the Spirit of God, as Porphyrus saith Numenius understood it. For

For his Opinion, he tells us, was, That all things came out of the Water ὁ ἀνὴρ ὁ ὕδωρ, being divinely inspired: For which he quoted these Words of the Prophet, as he called Moses. See Porphyrus περὶ τοῦ Νυμφ. Ἀντρε, on those Words of Homer:

Which gives us to understand, that the Spirits of all living Creatures (which we call their active Forms) did not arise out of Matter, for that is stupid; but proceeded from this other Principle, the powerful Spirit of God, which moved upon the Face of the Waters by a vital Energy, (as St. Chrysostom speaks) so that they were no longer standing Waters, but moving, having ζωτικὴν πνεύματος δύναμιν, a certain living Power in them. From whence we may also gather, that the Spirits of living Creatures are distinct things from Matter; which of itself cannot move at all, and much less produce a Principle of Motion.

And thus indeed all the ancient Philosophers apprehended this Matter: And some of them have most lively expressed it. For Laertius in the Life of Anaxagoras tells us, that he taught among other things, Πάντα χεῖματα ἦν ὁμοῦ ἅπα Νῦς ἐλθὼν αὐτὴ διέκοσμιεν, all things were budded together: And then the Mind came and set them in order. And Thales before him, (as Tully informs us, L. 1. de Nat. Deor.) Aquam dixit esse initium rerum; Deum autem eam mentem quæ ex aqua cuncta fingeret; said, Water was the Beginning of things: And God that Mind who formed all things out of the Water.

By the Spirit of God some of the ancient Jews have understood the Spirit of the Messiah, (as Hacksplan observes in his Cabala Judaica, n. lxvi. out of Baal Hatturim, the Hierusalem Targum, &c.) which explains the Evangelist St. John, who in the Beginning of his Gospel says, All things were made by the Eternal ΛΟΓΟΣ or WORD of God, (the same with the Νῦς of the ancient Philosophers) whose Almighty Spirit agitated the vast confused Mass of Matter, and put it into Form.

Ver. 3. And God said.] These Words are taken notice of by Longinus, περὶ ὕψους, as a truly lofty Expression; wherein appears the Wisdom of Moses, who represents God, like himself, commanding Things into Being by his Word; that is, by his Will: For whosoever we read these Words in the History of the Creation, He said, the Meaning must be understood to be He willed, as Maimonides interprets it, More Nev. P. i. cap. 65. This Justin Martyr demonstrates Orpheus had learnt out of Moses his Books, when he swears by the Heaven, the Work of the Great and Wise God, and by the Word of the Father, which he spake at first, when he establish'd all the World by his Counsels. So his Words are in Περσιν. εἰς Ἑλλήνας, p. 16.

And as there is nothing more famous in Antiquity than the ὄρεον ὠν, Orpheus his Egg, which I before mentioned; so it is remarkable that the Egyptians (among whom Orpheus travelled) described their God KNEPH, with an Egg coming out of his Mouth: Which was a lively Representation of this World (noted by the Egg) produced by God's Omnipotent Word. For how richly soever the CHAOS was furnished with Materials, it could have brought forth nothing, without his powerful Motion, and wise Contrivance, by whom it was created. So A-anaxagoras himself resolved, ὅτι μὲν ἀρχὴ κινήσεως that Mind was the Principle of Motion, (as Laertius tells us in his Life) by which Mind he understood God, as others have reported his Opinion more largely in these admirable Words: The Beginning of all things is ὁ νῦς; the Mind, who is the Cause and the Lord of the whole World; and gave τάξιν τοῖς ἀτάκτοις, καὶ κίνησιν τοῖς ἀκίνητοις, &c. order to things in disorder, and motion to things immoveable, and distinction to things confused, and beauty to things deformed.

Let there be Light.] Having spoken of the Creation of all things, now follows an Account of their Formation out of that rude Matter which was at first created. And the first thing produced was Light; which Greg. Nazianzen (Orat. xliii. pag. 699. a.) calls ἀπόματον καὶ ἀνήλιον, because it was not yet collected into a Body, as it is now in the Sun. Others think it to have been a dimmer Sort of Light from the Sun, not yet perfectly formed. Abarbinel (upon the xlth of Exodus) takes this to be the SCHECHINAH, the most excellent of all created Things, called, in Holy Scripture, the Glory of the LORD; which God, faith he, sealed up in his Treasures, after the Luminaries were created, to serve him upon special Occasions, (for Instance, to lead the Israelites in the Wilderness, by a cloudy Pillar of Fire) when he would make himself appear extraordinarily present. And because of the Perfection of this Light he fancies it is that Moses says in the next Verse, That God saw the Light (repeating the word Light) that it was good: Whereas in all the rest of the six Days Work, he only says, He saw it was good, without naming again the thing he had made.

But it seems to me most rational by this Light, to understand those Particles of Matter, which we call Fire, (whose two Properties, every one knows, are Light and Heat) which the Almighty Spirit that formed all things, produced as the great Instrument, for the Preparation and Digestion of the rest of the Matter; which was still more vigorously moved and agitated, from the top to the bottom, by this restless Element, till the purer and more shining Parts of it, being separated from the grosser, and united in a Body fit to retain them, became Light.

Ver. 4. And God saw the Light, that it was good.] He was pleased in this Work of his, as agreeable to his Design. Which for the present was (we may conceive) to influence the upper Parts of the CHAOS, and to be the Instrument of Rarefaction, Separation, and all the rest of the Operations, which were necessary to mould it into such Creatures, as were afterwards made out of it.

And God divided the Light from the Darkness.] Appointed that they should constantly succeed one another; as we see they do now, that this Light is embodied in the Sun; and as they did then, by the circular Motion of this first Light of Fire, round about the CHAOS, in the space of Twenty-four Hours: which made it Day to those Parts where it shined; and Night, where it did not. It is remarkable how Moses ascribes every thing to God, the Former of all things; who by making this Light move round about the Chaos, still more prepared, and exalted the remaining indigested Parts of Matter, for their several Uses.

Ver. 5.

Ver. 5. And God called the light Day; and the darkness he called Night.] He settled them (that is) in such a constant Course, that it gave them these distinct Names.

And the Evening and the Morning were the first Day.] In the Hebrew Language, Evening and Morning signify a whole Day; which the Motion of this Light made, if we conceive it to have been formed about Noon, and to have gone round the fore-mentioned Heap of Matter in twenty-four Hours.

How long all things continued in mere Confusion, after the CHAOS was created, before this Light was extracted out of it, we are not told. It might be (for any thing that is here revealed) a great while; and all that time the mighty Spirit was making such Motions in it, as prepared, disposed, and ripened every Part of it, for such Productions as were to appear successively in such spaces of time, as are here and afterward mentioned by Moses; who informs us, That after Things were so digested, and made ready (by long Fermentations perhaps) to be wrought into Form, God produced every Day, for six Days together, some Creature or other, till all was finished; of which Light was the very first. This Maimonides hath very happily illustrated, in his More Nevochim, P. ii. c. 30. where he observing that all things were created at once, and then were afterwards separated one from another successively; he says, their wise Men resemble this proceeding to that of a Husbandman, who sows several Seeds in the Earth at the same moment; some of which are to come up after one Day, others after two, and others not till three Days be past; tho' the whole sowing was in one and the same moment. Thus God made all things at the first, which did not appear together; but, in the space of six Days, were formed and put in order one after another: Light being the Work of the first Day.

Ver. 6. And God said, Let there be a firmament.] The next thing that God commanded to come forth of the CHAOS, was the Air; particularly, that Region next to us, wherein the Fowls fly, as it is expounded afterwards, ver. 20. The Hebrew word Rachia, properly signifies a Body expanded, or spread forth, (as may be seen in Exod. xxxix. 3. Isai. xl. 19. Jer. x. 9. where it can have no other Meaning) but it is by the LXX translated στερεωμα, and from thence by us, Firmament; because the Air, tho' vastly extended and fluid, yet continues firm and stable in its Place.

In the midst of the Waters, and let it divide the Waters from the Waters.] This Region of the Air manifestly parts the Waters above it in the Clouds, from those below it here upon Earth; the one of which Waters bears a good Proportion, and is in some measure equal unto the other; for there are vast Treasures of Water in the Clouds; from whence the Waters here below, in Springs and Rivers, are supplied. This appeared afterwards in the Deluge, which was partly made by continued Rains for many Days. The great Objection against this Exposition is, That now there were no Clouds, neither had it, after this, rained on the Earth, Gen. ii. 6. But it must be considered, That neither were the Waters below, as yet gathered into one Place: And therefore Moses here speaks of the Air, as a Body intended to be stretched between the Waters above and beneath, when they should be formed.

That the Clouds above are called Waters in the Scripture-Language, is plain enough from Psal. civ. 3. Jer. x. 13. and other places.

Ver. 7. And God made the firmament, and divided, &c.] What his divine Will ordered, his Power effected; by that Light which rolled about the CHAOS, and that Heat which was excited within it; whereby such Exhalations were raised, as made the Firmament. That is, the thicker Parts of them made this Region of the Air, which is the lower Firmament, ver. 20. And the thinner Parts of them made the Æther, or higher Firmament, wherein the Sun and the Planets are seated, ver. 14, 15.

Ver. 8. And God called the firmament Heaven.] Made it so different from the rest of the Mass, called Earth, that it had the Name of Heaven, to distinguish it from the other. So all above the Earth is called, as appears by the following Part of the Chapter, in the Verses now mentioned. And that's the very Import of the word Schamaim, which in the Arabick Language, (as Aben Ezra observes) signifies Height or Altitude.

And the Evening and the Morning were the second Day.] This was the Work of another whole Day. Concerning which it is commonly noted, That it is not said of this, as of all the Works of the other five Days, God saw that it was good. What the reason of this should be, is enquired by all Interpreters; and the most solid Account that I can find of it is this, That the Waters mentioned upon this Day, were not yet separated and distinguished from the Earth: And therefore in the next Day's Work, when he did gather the Waters together, ver. 10. and when he commanded the Earth (which was become dry) to bring forth, ver. 12. these Words, God saw that it was good, are twice repeated. Which made Picherellus and Ger. Vossius think the two next Verses (9, 10.) belonged to the second Day's Work; and that the first Words of the ninth Verse should be thus translated, And God had said, Let the Waters under the Heaven, &c. And so the Words in the End of the tenth Verse, God saw that it was good, relate to the second Day. L. 2. de Orig. Idolol. c. 67.

Ver. 9. And God said, Let the Waters under the Heaven.] All the Waters which continued mixed with the Earth, and covered the Surface of it.

Be gathered together, &c.] Collected into one Body by themselves.

And let the dry Land appear.] Distinct and separate from the Waters.

There being such large Portions of Matter drawn out of the CHAOS, as made the Body of Fire and Air before-mentioned, there remained in a great Body only Water and Earth; but they so jumbled together, that they could not be distinguished. It was the Work therefore of the third Day, to make a Separation between them; by compacting together all the Particles which make the Earth, which before was Mud and Dirt; and then, by raising it above the Waters which covered its Superficies, (as the Psalmist also describes this Work, Psal. civ. 6.) and, lastly, by making such Caverns in it, as were sufficient to receive receive the Waters into them. Now this we may conceive to have been done by such Particles of Fire as were left in the Bowels of the Earth: Whereby such Nitro-sulphureous Vapours were kindled, as made an Earthquake; which both lifted up the Earth, and also made Receptacles for the Waters to run into; as the Psalmist (otherwise I should not venture to mention this) seems in the fore-mentioned place to illustrate it, Psalm civ. 7. where he says, At thy rebuke they (i. e. the Waters) fled; at the voice of thy thunder they basted away. And so God himself speaks, Job xxxviii. 10. I brake up for it (i. e. for the Sea) my decreed place, and set bars, and doors. Histories also tell us, of Mountains that have been, in several Ages, lifted up by Earthquakes; nay, Islands in the midst of the Sea: Which confirms this Conjecture, That possibly the Waters were, at the first, separated by this means; and so separated, that they should not return to cover the Earth. For the Word, in the beginning of this Verse, which we translate gathered, comes from Kav, which signifies a Square, a Rule, or perpendicular Line: And therefore denotes they were most exactly collected, and so poised in such just Proportions, that they should not again over-flow the dry Land.

This Work of God (whereby the Waters were sent down into their proper Channels, and the Earth made dry, and fitted for the habitation of such Creatures, as were afterwards created) is observed by Strabo in his Geography, as an act of Divine Providence, l. xvii. Because, says he, the Water covered the Earth, and Man is not ἔνδρον ζῷον, a Creature that can live in the Water, God made ἐξοχὰς ἐν τῇ γῇ πάλαι καὶ ἐνδοχὰς, &c. many Cavities and Receptacles in the Earth for the Water; and raised the Earth above it that it might be fit for Man's Habitation.

Ver. 10. And called the dry Land, &c.] This is sufficiently explained, by what has been said upon Verse 5. and 8. only this may be added, That the word Eretz, Earth, in Arabick, signifies any thing that is low and sunk beneath, opposite to Schamaim, Heavens, which in that Language, as I noted before, signifies high and lifted up.

Ver. 11. And God said, Let the Earth bring forth grass, the Herb yielding, &c.] Or, rather, it should be translated, and the Herb yielding, &c. though the copula be omitted, which is usual in Scripture; particularly in Habak. iii. 11. the Sun, Moon, i. e. the Sun and Moon.

Moses having shown how the first Matter, (ver. 2.) and then the Elements of things as we call them, (ver. 3, 6, 9, 10.) were produced, he proceeds to the Production of more compounded Bodies. And here an account is given of all sorts of Vegetables, which are rang'd under three Heads; Grass, which comes up every Year without sowing; Herbs, bearing a Seed, which comprehends (as Abarbinel here notes) all sort of Corn, and whatsoever is sown; and Trees, which also bear Fruit. There are several kinds of all these; which some have cast into eighteen, others into six and thirty Classes; none of which could at the first spring out of the Earth, of it self, by the power of external and internal Heat, and of the Water mixed with it, (no, not so much as one single Pile of Grass) without the almighty Power and Wisdom of God; who brought together those Parts of Matter, which were fitted to produce them; and then formed every one of them, and determined their several Species; and also provided for their continuance, by bringing forth Seed to propagate their Species to the end of all things. And here it is very remarkable, how God had secured the Seeds of all Plants, with singular care: Some of them being defended by a double, nay, a treble inclosure.

Ver. 12. And the Earth brought forth Grass, and the Herb, &c.] These things did not grow up out of Seed, by such a long process, as is now required to bring them to maturity; but they sprung up in their Perfection, in the space of a Day, with their Seeds in them, compleatly formed, to produce the like throughout all Generations. Thus Moses gives a plain Account of the first Production of things, according to the natural Method: for supposing they had a Beginning, the Herb and the Tree must naturally be before the Seed they bear; as the Hen is before the Egg she lays. And to make a Question which was first, (as some of the Philosophers did) is very frivolous; because that Power which alone could produce the Seeds of all things, could as easily make the Things themselves, with a power to propagate their kind by Seed.

It is therefore most judiciously noted by Abarbinel, a learned Jew, That the Production of Plants in the beginning, differed from their Production ever since in these two things: First, That they have sprung ever since out of Seed, either sown by us, or falling from the Plants themselves; but at the beginning were brought out of the Earth, with their Seed in them, to propagate them ever after. And, Secondly, They need now, as they have done since the first Creation, the influence of the Sun, to make them sprout: But then they came forth by the Power of God, before there was any Sun, which was not formed till the next Day. Of this last Theophilus Antiochenus, long before Abarbinel, took notice, l. ii. ad Autolyicum, where he says, God produced things in this order; foreseeing the Vanity of Philosophers, who, saying nothing of him, made all things to be produced by the Sun, καὶ τῶν στοιχείων, out of the Elements. Porphyrus himself also (l. ii. περὶ ἀποχρῆς) could observe out of Theophrastus, That the Earth brought forth Trees and Herbs before Beasts, ἀνδρα μὲν γὰρ ἀπὸ τοῦ ζῶον ἀνέδραξε ἡ γῆ, &c. Which Eusebius remembers in his Præpar. Evang. l. i. c. 9. p. 28.

Ver. 14. Let there be Lights.] This is a different word from what we had, ver. 3. signifying, as Paulus Fagius observes, that which is made out of Light; luminous Bodies, whereby Light is communicated to us: The Hebrew Particle, Mem, before a Word, being used to express the Instrument of an Action. And so now we are to conceive, that the Light produced at first, having for three Days circulated about the Earth, and that near unto it, to further the Production of the things before-mentioned, was on this fourth Day distributed into several Luminaries, at a great distance from the Earth. So it follows; In the firmament of Heaven, in the upper Region, which we call the Æther, or Sky, where the Sun and the Planets are placed.

To divide the Day from the Night.] By a continued circular Motion, finished in four and twenty Hours;

Hours; in one part of which, by the presence of the Sun, the Day is made; and in the other part, by the Sun's absence, Night is made, in a constant succession.

And let them be for Signs and for Seasons.] That is, for Signs of the Times or Seasons; as Ger. Vossius expounds it, by the Figure of ἡ δὴ δαὶς. And by Times are meant, the Spring, Summer, Autumn, and Winter; and, by consequence, the Seasons for Ploughing, Sowing, Planting, Pruning, Reaping, Vintage, Sailing, &c. L. de Scientiis Mathematicis. c. 38.

And for Days, and Years.] By a speedy swift Motion round, in twenty-four Hours to make Days; and by a slower, longer Motion to make Years; and a grateful variety of Seasons in the several Parts of the Earth, which by this annual Motion are all visited with the Sun's Beams.

Ver. 15. And let them be for Light, &c.] i. e. Let them there continue to give constant Light and Warmth to the Earth: And so they do immovably.

Ver. 16. And God made two great Lights.] It is observable, that nothing is said to have been created, since the first Matter, out of which all things were made or formed. And the two great Lights, or Luminaries, Inlightners, (as the word signifies) are the Sun, which inlightens us by Day; and the Moon which inlightens us by Night. The Moon indeed is not so great as the rest of the Planets, (for it is the least of all, except Mercury;) but it affords the greatest Light to us; by reflecting the Beams of the Sun to us, in its absence; and thereby very much abating the disconsolate darkness of the Night.

He made the Stars also.] That is, the rest of the Planets, and their Attendants.

Ver. 17. And God set them in the Firmament of Heaven, &c.] By the repetition of this so often, Moses intended to fix in the Peoples mind this Notion; That tho' the heavenly Bodies be very Glorious, yet they are but Creatures, made by God, and set or appointed by his Order, to give us Light: And therefore he alone is to be worshipped, not they.

It is commonly taken notice of, that there is no mention of the Creation of Angels, in all this History; nor was there any need of it. For the ancient Idolatry consisting in the worship of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, (as appears from the very Names of the most ancient Idols in the Old Testament, such as Moloch, Astartoth, and the like,) which they believed to be eternal Beings: The great Design of Moses was to confute this Opinion, by representing them (over and over) as the Work of the Eternal God; which struck at the very Root of Idolatry. The worship of Angels was a later invention.

Ver. 18. And to rule over the day, and over the night.] Some have fancied, that the ancient Idolatry sprung from this word Rule: Men looking upon these glorious Lights, as having a dominion over them. Whence the Sun was called Baal, that is, Lord, or Governor, by the Eastern People; and Moloch, that is, King, by the Egyptians. But one word sure was not the ground of so foul an Error; when the scope of Moses was to shew, that these things were made by an higher Being, and made not to rule over Men, but over the Day and the Night; which the Sun makes when it rises and sets, by the order and appointment of God.

And God saw that it was good.] He was pleased with this Work, as suitable to the Ends for which he intended it. The first Light was good (ver. 4.) for the purpose to which it served; which was, by its heat, to agitate, rarify, and separate the Matter of the CHAOS, for the making of Air, and gathering together the Waters, and drying the Earth, and producing Grass, Herbs, and Trees; which made it necessary it should continue some Days near to the Earth, that it might powerfully penetrate into the Matter it was to digest: But, if it should have continued longer so near to the Earth, it would not have been good for it; because it would have burnt up all the Plants, that the Earth had brought forth; and, by its too scorching heat, have hinder'd the Production of those living Creatures, which were ready on the next Day to be made; or, at least, made the Earth unfit for their habitation. For the Air, which all living things, even Fishes themselves, need, (nay, the Plants also, which have Vessels for conveying Air to all their Parts,) would have been so very hot, that it would have afforded no refreshment to them: Therefore it was good that it should be advanced into the Firmament of the Heaven, and there embodied in those Luminaries, which, being removed further from us, give such a moderate heat, as is necessary for the preservation of us, and of all things living that dwell upon the Earth.

Ver. 19. And the Evening, &c.] Thus the fourth Day concluded.

Ver. 20. And God said, Let the Waters, &c.] Now God proceeded to form the lower sort of Animals, or living Creatures, viz. The Fish, and the Fowl; which are in many respects inferior to Beasts. And the Fishes are called moving (in the Hebrew, creeping) Creatures; because their Bellies touch the Water, as creeping things do the Earth. Both Fishes and Fowls were made out of the Waters; that is, out of such Matter as was mixed with the Waters, which contained in them many things besides simple Water: for the Sea and Rivers are still very richly furnished with various Compounds, for the nourishment of an innumerable multitude of Fishes. The great congruity that there is between Fish and Fowl in many particulars, will not let us doubt they had the same Original: For they are both oviparous, which makes them more fruitful than the Beasts of the Earth; neither of them have any Teats; they both direct, (and, as I may say, steer) their Course by their Tail, &c. See Ger. Vossius de Orig. & Progr. Idolol. L. iii. c. 78.

Bring forth abundantly.] That is, various sorts of both kinds; there being many hundred kinds of Fishes, and Birds, or Fowls; many of the latter of which live in the Water, (which shows their Original to have been from thence) and others of them live both in the Air and Water. The formation of these Creatures, is, in every part of them, very wonderful, especially in those parts whereby they are fitted to swim, and to fly. Which demonstrate a most wise Agent, by whose infinite Power they were so contrived, as to be able also to propagate their Kind.

Ver. 21. And God created great Whales.] The vastness of these Creatures, perhaps, made Moses again again use the word Create, (which he had not done since the beginning of the Chapter) not because they were made as the CHAOS was, out of Nothing; but because it required a greater Power to make out of the precedent Matter, moving things of so huge a Bulk, and of such great Agility, than to make any other thing hitherto formed.

The Hebrew word Tanim, which we translate Whales, comprehends several sorts of great Fishes, as Bochartus observes in his Hierozyic. P. i. L. i. c. 7. where he shows the prodigious bigness of some of them. But he should have added, that this Word also signifies Crocodiles, which, he himself shows, are set forth in Job xli. as the most astonishing Work of God. For Job Ludolphus, I think, hath demonstrated, that nothing but the Crocodile can be meant by this word Tanim, in Ezek. xxix. 3. and xxxii. 2. and some other places. Vid. L. i. Comment. in Histor. Æthiop. Cap. xi. n. 86.

And God saw that it was good.] Was pleased with the Structure of these several Creatures: Of the Birds, who were furnished with Wings to fly in the Air; and of the Fishes, whose Fins serve them to swim in the Water; and of Water-Fowl, whose Feet are formed so, as to serve for the same use; and some of them (such as dive under Water) covered so thick with Feathers, and those so smooth and slippery, (as the Learned and Pious Mr. Ray hath observed) that their Bodies are thereby defended from the cold of the Water; which cannot penetrate or moisten them. See Wisdom of God in the Creation, P. i. p. 135.

Ver. 22. And God blessed them, &c.] His blessing them, was giving them a Power to Multiply and Increase, till they had filled the Water with Fish, and the Air with Fowl. Which required a particular Care of Divine Providence, as Abarbinel observes; because they do not bring forth young Ones perfectly formed, as the Beasts do; but lay their Eggs, in which they are formed, when they are out of their Bodies. This, saith he, is a wonderful thing, That when the Womb, as we may call it, is separate from the Genitor, a living Creature like it self should be produced. Which is the reason, he fancies, that a Blessing is here pronounced upon them, and not on the Beasts, that were made the next Day. The ancient Fathers are wont to observe, That the first Blessing was given to the Waters, as a Type of Baptism. Theophilus ad Autolyc. L. ii. and Tertullian, de Baptismo, cap. 3.

And let Fowl multiply in the Earth.] There, for the most part, they have their Habitation and their Food; tho' some live upon the Water.

Ver. 23. See verse 19.

Ver. 24. And God said, Let the Earth bring forth.] Thus by a gradual process, the Divine Power produced Creatures still more Noble: The Matter being more digested and prepared in five Days time, than it was at first. I do not know whether there be any weight in the Note of Abarbinel, who observes that Moses here uses a new word, which we translate bring forth; to show the difference between Plants and Animals. The former of which spring out of the Earth indeed, but continue fix'd in it, and perish if they be separated from it: Whereas Animals, tho' made out of the Earth, and living upon it, have a separate existence, and do not still adhere to it.

After his kind.] Three sorts of living Creatures are immediately mentioned, which were formed out of such Matter as the Earth afforded, (not simple Earth, we must understand, no more than before simple Water; for it was impregnated with many other Principles;) the first of which, Bebemab, which we translate Cattle, always signifies the Flocks and Herds of tame Beasts, when it is distinguished from Chaja, which we translate in the end of the Verse, Beasts of the Earth, that is, wild Beasts: Between which two, he mentions a third kind of living Creatures on the Earth, which he calls Remesh, creeping things; because whatever Feet they have, they are so short and small, that they seem to the naked Eye to have none at all; but to crawl on their Bellies upon the Ground. Of all these three kinds, there are various sorts wherewith God hath replenished the Earth: And of every kind, some vastly great, and others very little; as Abarbinel notes even among Reptiles, there being Serpents of a prodigious length, and other creeping things far smaller than Ants.

Ver. 25. And God made, &c.] The Earth did not bring them forth by virtue of the Influence of Heaven, upon prepared Matter: But God framed them out of the Matter so prepared, and produced them in their full Perfection, after their several kinds.

And God saw it was good.] Was pleased with the great variety of these Creatures, and their compleat Structure, fitting them for their several uses.

Ver. 26. Let us make Man.] God not only reserved Man for the last of his Works; but doth, as it were, advise and consult about his Production. Not to signify any Deliberation within himself, or any Difficulty in the Work; but to represent to us the Dignity of Man, and that he was made (as Abarbinel glosses) with admirable Wisdom and great Prudence. To the same purpose S. Chrysostom here speaks. And see Greg. Nyssen. de Opificio Hominis, cap. 3. and Orat. i. on these Words; with Greg. Nazianzen. Orat. xliii. p. 699. who observes that God brought him into this World, as into a noble Palace, ready furnished with all manner of things. Which is the Notion also of Methodius: See Epiphanius Hæres. lxiv. n. 18. It is to be observed also, That God doth not say, Let the Earth bring forth Man, as he saith before, verse 24. of other Animals; for the same reason: To represent Man as a far more noble Work, than any other upon Earth. For tho' he was made (as we read in the next Chapter) of the Dust of the Ground; yet a greater Power and Skill was employed, in producing a Creature of such Beauty and Majesty.

Let us.] The ancient Christians look'd upon this as a plain intimation of a Plurality of Persons in the Godhead. Inasmuch that Epiphanius says, This is the Language of God to his WORD and only Begotten, at all the faithful believe; Hæres. xxiii. n. 2. and see Hæres. xlv. n. 4. and Hæres. xlvii. n. 3. where he says, Adam was παρακρίν ἔν τῷ Πατρὶ καὶ τῷ Υἱῷ, καὶ τῷ ἁγίῳ πνεύματι, formed by the Hand of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost. To which one cannot but incline, who considers considers how poorly the Jews expound this place: Who fancy a kind of Senate or Council of Angels, without whom God doth nothing, (which they ground upon Dan. iv. 14.) whereas there is not the least signification as yet of any such Beings; much less, that they had any hand in the making Man; who was not made in their Image, but in the Image of God. Yet thus Saturnilus foolishly expounded these Words, as Epiphanius, informs us, in the fore-named Hæres. p. 62. Edit. Paris. And Moses Gerundenfis still more foolishly imagines God spake to the Earth, that it should bring forth Man, as it had done other Creatures. But Maimonides, who magnifies that Saying of their Masters, (That God doth nothing without his Council) is forced to acknowledge, (More Nepoch. P. ii. cap. 6.) That it is not to be understood, as if he askt their Advice, or was assisted by their Judgment, but only that he used them as Instruments in the producing of every thing. Which is directly contrary to the very Words, which are not in the form of a Command, but of a Consultation before Execution. Others therefore think God speaks after the manner of Kings; who advise with their Council, but do things themselves: And are wont to speak in the Plural Number, when they declare their Pleasure. But I take this to be a Custom much later than the Days of Moses; when they spake as the King of Egypt doth to Joseph, Gen. xli. 41, 44. I am Pharaoh; and see I have set thee (not we have set thee) over the Land of Egypt. In which Style the King of Persia writes long after this, Ezra vi. 8. I Darius make a Decree.

All these poor shifts are a plain confession, that they found it very hard (as the Socinians do at this day) to give any account of this way of speaking, without granting a Plurality of Persons in the Godhead. And therefore Menasseh Ben Israel in his Conciliator, mentions one of their Doctors, who, in Berechith Rabba, says, That when Moses by God's Direction was about to write these words, Let us make Man, he cryed out, O Lord of the World, why wilt thou give Men occasion to err, about thy most simple Unity? To which he received this Answer, Write as I bid thee; and if any Man love to err, let him err. The same Story is told by Joseph Albo. Which shows that their Doctors have been long puzzled with this manner of Speech, which unavoidably suggested to their Thoughts, more than One Person in the Deity: Which till they believe, they are at a loss what to say about it.

In our Image, after our Likeness.] Two words (some think) to express the same thing: With this difference only, as Abarbinel explains it, That the last words, after our Likeness, gives us to understand that Man was not created properly and perfectly in the Image of God; but in a Resemblance of him. For he doth not say, in our Likeness (says that Author) as he had said in our Image, but after our Likeness: where the Caph of Similitude (as they call it) abates something of the Sense of what follows; and makes it signify only an approach to the Divine Likeness, in Understanding, freedom of Choice, Spirituality, Immortality, &c. Thus Tertullian explains it, Habent illas ubique lineas Dei, quæ immortalis anima, quæ libera & sui arbitrii, quæ præcia plerumque, quæ rationalis, capax, intellectus & scientia. L. ii. contra Marcion. cap. 9. And so Gregor. Nyssen. cap. 16. De Opific. Hom. Πάντες τῷ διανοεῖν καὶ σχεδιάζειν δύναμιν ἔχουσιν, &c. All have a Power of Considering and Designing, of Consulting and Fore-appointing of what we intend to do. Purity and Holiness likewise seem to be comprehended in this: As may be gathered from the Apostle, Coloss. iii. 10. For the new Man consists in Righteousness, and true Holiness, Ephes. iv. 24. But tho' he was created with a Faculty to judge aright, and with a Power to govern his Appetites, which he could controul more easily than we can do now; yet he was not made immutably good, (quia hoc soli Deo cedit, which belongs to God alone, as Tertullian excellently discourses in that place) but might, without due care, be induced to do evil, as we see he did. For an habituated, confirmed estate of Goodness, was even then to have been acquired by Watchfulness and Exercise: Whereby in process of time, he might have become so stedfast, that he could not have been prevailed upon by any Temptation, to do contrary to his Duty.

And let them have dominion, &c.] Some have thought the Image of God consisted in this alone. (See Greg. Nyssen. cap. 4. De Opific. Hom. p. 143.) Which rather follows upon Man's being made in God's Image, viz. An intelligent Being; which gave him Dominion over other things; that are not endued with such Understanding. I conclude this Note with a very pertinent Observation of his in that Book, cap. 16. That Moses speaks more magnificently of Man, than any Philosopher ever did: For they could say nothing of him beyond this, That he was Μικρὸς Κόσμος, a little World: But according to the Churches account, his greatness consists not in his Likeness to the created World, but in his being made κατ' εἰκόνα τῆς οὐκ κτίοντος εἰκόνος, after the Image of the Nature of the Creator of all things.

Over all the Earth.] Over all four-footed Creatures in the Earth, tho' never so wild; as Bochartus observes.

Ver. 27. And God created Man in his own Image.] From these words Origen gathers there is a great deal of difference between Εἰκὼν, Image, and ὁμοίωμα, Likeness; because, tho' God said, verse 26. Let us make Man in our Image, and after our Likeness, yet here he is said to have made him only in his own Image; and not, for the present, after his Likeness. For that, saith he, (Lib. iv. contra Celsum) is reserved to the other World; when, as St. John says 1 Epist. iii. 2. ὁμοιοῦμεν ἑαυτοῖς, we shall be like him. But this seems too curious. No doubt God made Man just as he designed, in such a compleat Resemblance of himself, that there is no Creature like to Man, no more than God hath any equal to himself: As some of the Hebrew Doctors explain this Matter. And therefore Moses repeats it again, In the Image of God created he him: To imprint upon the Minds of Men, a Sense of the great Dignity of Human Nature; which was foully debased by worshipping any Creature.

Male and Female created he them.] He made Woman the same Day he made Man; as he did both Sexes of all other living Creatures, and as he made Herbs and Plants with Seed in them to propagate their Species, on the same Day they were produced. It is plain by this also, That Woman as well as Man, was made in the Image of God. And it seems to be pertinently observed by Abarbinel, That Moses here again uses the word Create, (and that three times) to denote the Original of human Souls; which are not made out of pre-existent Matter, as our Bodies are, but by the Power of God, when they had no Being at all.

Woman

Ver. 28. And God blessed them, &c.] The former Part of this Blessing, be fruitful and multiply, God had bestowed before (ver. 22.) upon other Creatures: Unto which he adds two things here, Replenish the Earth, and subdue it. He gives them the whole Earth for their Possession, with a Power to subdue it; that is, to make it fit for their Habitation, by bringing under, or driving away wild Beasts. For, Secondly, he gives them the Dominion (unto which he designed them in their Creation) over all other Creatures; whether in the Water, Air, or Earth. And he speaks to them in the Plural Number; which is a Demonstration, that Man and Woman were both created, and received his Blessing, on the same Day.

Ver. 29. Behold I have given you, &c.] Here he assigns them their Food; and makes no mention at all of Beasts, but only of Plants and Fruits of the Earth. For Beasts being made by Pairs, in their several Species, (we may well suppose) as Man and Woman were, and not being yet multiplied; the killing of Beasts, Birds, and Fishes, would have been the Destruction of the Kind: Whereas there were Plants innumerable, and great Variety of Fruit for their Sustenance. And therefore here being no Grant made to them of Animals for their Food, tho' no Prohibition neither, it is very probable they abstained from eating Flesh till after the Flood, (when God expressly gave them every living thing for Meat, as much as the Herbs, ch. ix. 2.) unless it were upon some special Occasions: As, perhaps, when they sacrificed living Creatures; which they did in process of time, (iv. 4.) though not at the first.

Ver. 30. And to every Beast, &c.] Here he gives to the Beasts, and Fowl, and creeping Things, all Herbs for their Food, but saith nothing of Fruit; from which we cannot well think the Birds would abstain: And therefore they are included in the Phrase, of every green Herb.

Ver. 31. Very good.] From these Words Epiphanius confutes the Manichees, Hæres. lxvi. n. 18. where there is an Explanation of this Phrase (God saw that it was good) throughout this whole Chapter. Where it being said at the End of every Day's Work, God saw it was good; and particularly here on the sixth Day, before he had quite ended the Work of it, he saith so of the Formation of the Beasts, ver. 25. Abarbinel will have this to relate peculiarly to the Creation of Man and Woman. But the beginning of the Verse plainly shows that he speaks of every thing that he had made: And therefore their Doctors in Bereshith Rabba (whom he mentions) say a great deal better, That Man is meant in the first and principal place, when Moses says, God saw every thing that he had made; and behold, it was very good.

CHAP. II.

MOSES having given a short Account of the orderly Production of all Things, from the meanest to the noblest, explains more largely in this Chapter some things, which were delivered briefly in the foregoing, because he would not too much interrupt the Coherence of his Discourse about the Works of the Six Days. Particularly he relates how Eve was made; and also further illustrates the Production of Adam, &c.

Ver. 1. Thus the Heavens and the Earth.] i. e. the visible World.

Were finished.] Brought to that Perfection wherein we see them.

And all the Hosts of them.] That is, all Creatures in Heaven and in Earth; which are called Host, or Army, because of their vast Variety and excellent Order.

Ver. 2. And on the seventh Day, God ended his Work.] Or rather, had ended, (as it may be translated) for he did not work on the seventh Day: But, rested from all his Work which he had made; having so compleatly finished it, that there remained no more to be done. An Emblem of the Rest that we shall have, when we have done our Work faithfully, and left none undone, as Origen's Words are, L. vi. contra Celsum.

Ver. 3. And God blessed the seventh Day, and sanctified it.] As God sanctified Jeremiah in After-times from his Mother's Womb, (Jer. i. 5.) by ordaining him to be a Prophet; so he now determined and appointed the seventh Day, from the very Beginning of the World, to be observed in Memory of its Creation. And this setting it apart, and consecrating it to that holy Use, was his blessing it, or recommending it to be observed, as a Day of blessing and praising him, in all his Works of Wonder; and (I know not why I should not add) of his bestowing Blessings upon all his pious Worshipers.

There is no mention, indeed, made of Adam's, or Abel's, &c. observing this Day; which hath inclined many to conclude these Words to have been written by way of Anticipation: This Day being set apart in After-times by the Law of Moses for God's Service; but, in their Opinion, not till then. To which I cannot agree; because it seems to me far more reasonable to think, That God took care to preserve the Memory of the Creation in the Minds of Mankind; and the Worship of Him, the One only God, by whom it was created: Which could not be done by any means more effectually, than by setting apart this Day for that purpose. Which if he had not appointed, yet Men being made religious Creatures, I cannot but think they would have agreed upon some set Time for the Exercise of their Religion, as well as some set Place (tho' that be not mentioned neither) where to meet for Divine Service: And what Time more proper, wherein to honour their Creator with their Sacrifices, Praises, and Thanksgivings, than this Day? Which Pbilo well styles ὁ χρόνος γενέσεως, the Birthday of the World: Which was so much observed all the World over, (tho' they forgot the Reason) that the seventh Day, he observes, may be truly called ἑορτὴ Πάνδη, the Universal Festival, kept by all People. Josephus speaks to the same purpose; and there is a great deal more said by Aristobulus, a Peripatetick Philosopher, out of Hesiod, Homer, and others, in Euseb. Præp. Evang. l. xiii. c. 12. concerning the Sacredness of the seventh Day. Which tho' Mr. Selden (L. iii. de Jure N. & G. c. 17, &c.) endeavours to prove is meant of the seventh Day of the Month, not of the seventh Day of the Week; yet we may look upon that as a Remain of this ancient Tradition. Which, in time, Men forgot, as they did the most natural Duties; having so corrupted their Ways, (as we read Gen. vi. 10, 11.) that there was nothing good among the generality of them. And therefore no wonder if they did not regard the Service of God every seventh Day: To which I shall show in due place, Noah, the only righteous Man among them, had some regard. Which continued in the Family of Abraham after the Flood: Moses speaking of it, not long after their coming out of Egypt, (where it is likely they were not suffered to observe it, having no Time free from their intolerable Labours) as a Day known to them before the giving of the Law at Mount Sinai, Exod. xvi. 23, 25, 26.

Which is not to be understood, as if the Patriarchs before and after the Flood kept such a Rest, as God enjoined the Israelites by Moses: For that was proper to them, for a peculiar Reason; because they had been Slaves in Egypt; and therefore were commanded to keep the Sabbath, without doing any manner of work upon that Day, Deut. v. 15. Which is all the Christian Fathers mean, when they say the Patriarchs did not sabbatizare, keep the Sabbath as the Jews did. (See Tertullian adv. Judeos, c. 2, & 4. Irenæus, and others.) For in religious Offices I doubt not they observed the seventh Day, as a proper time for that sacred Hymn, which Galen himself (L. iii. de usu Partium) says we should all sing to the Creator of all; if we ourselves first know, and then tell others, οἱ θεοὶ μὲν ἐξ ἑαυτῶν, &c. how wonderful he is in Wisdom, how great in Power, and how rich in Goodness.

Because that in it he had rested from all his work.] This is the Reason why this Day was distinguished from the other Six; That a Remembrance of God's resting from all his Works on this Day might be preserved, by Mens laying aside their other Employments so long as to praise him solemnly, by whom this great World was made.

Which God created, and made.] Or, as the Hebrew Phrase is, created to make, i. e. rested from all the six Day's Work. For he created something at the first, out of which to make all the rest, in six Day's space; and now he ceased from all.

Ver. 4. These are the generations, &c.] That is, this is a faithful Account of the Original of the World. Which Moses here repeats, more deeply to imprint on the People's Mind, that the World was not a God, but the Work of God: which they were to acknowledge every seventh Day.

In the Day.] i. e. At that time (so Day often signifies) When the LORD God made the Earth and the Heavens. It is observed by Tertullian, That exinde Dominus qui retro Deus tantum, &c. from henceforward (ver. 7, 8, 9, 15, &c.) he is called Lord, who hitherto was called only God:

Of which he endeavours to give a Reason, Lib. adv. Hermog. cap. 3. The Hebrew Doctors observe, that Jehovah Elobim (Lord God) joined together, is the full and perfect Name of God: And therefore fitly reserved till this place, when the Works of God were perfected, and not before.

Ver. 5. And every Plant in the Field, before it was in the Earth, &c.] That is, before there was any Seed to produce them, God made them to spring up with their Seed in them; as was said before, in the first Chapter. And Moses here mentions these alone, because they were the first Productions out of the Earth; without which there had been no Food for living Creatures.

For the LORD God had not caused it to rain on the Earth, and there was not a Man to till the Ground.] Here are two Reasons to confirm, that Plants were not produced in the way they are now: for there had been no Showers of Rain, nor was there any Man to prepare the Earth to receive the Seed, (if there had been any) both which are necessary in the ordinary Method of Divine Providence, ever since the World was made. From hence some collect there were no Præadamites, (People before Adam) for then Moses could not have said, there was no Man to till the Earth.

Ver. 6. But there went up a Mist, &c.] Many think this will best cohere with what went before, by translating it, nor did there (taking the Particle אין not, from the foregoing Verse, as is usual) a Mist go up from the Earth. See Drusus in Levit. xi. 6. and Hottinger in Hexapl. Paris. p. 89. But I see no necessity of this; and think it more likely there did go up a Vapour or Steam out of the Earth, when it came reeking out of the Waters, (as was said upon Verse 9. of Chap. 1.) to moisten the Superficies of it; before any Clouds were raised, by the Power of the Sun, to give Rain.

Ver. 7. Out of the Dust of the Ground.] Not dry, but moist Dust, as the LXX have it, ἐκ ἀνδρωπον, χυβὴν ἀπὸ γῆς. From whence the Apostle calls him ἀνδρωπον χοῖνον, 1 Corinth. xv. 47. which teaches us this Dust was mix'd with Water: for so χῖς signifies; Limus, as the Vulgar Latin hath it. Which agrees with the Hebrew jatzar, formed; which is used concerning Potters, who make their Vessels of Clay, not of dry Earth. Diodorus Siculus seems to have had some Notion of this, when he saith Man was made out of the Slime or Mud of Nile. Upon which Original of Man's Body the ancient Fathers make many pious Reflections: But none better or shorter than that of Nazianzen's, who says it is to teach us, ἐν ὅταν ἐπαιρώμεθα διὰ τὸ εἶκόνα, διὰ τὸ χυβὸν συνελλόμεθα, that when we are apt to be lifted up because we are made after God's Image, the Thoughts of the Dirt out of which we were taken, may humble and lay us low.

And God breathed into his Nostrils the Breath of Life.] This being said of no other Creature, leads us to conceive not only that the Soul of Man is a distinct Thing, of a different Original from his Body; but that a more excellent Spirit was put into him by God (as appears by its Operations) than into other Animals. For though the simple Speech of inspiring him with the Breath of Life would not prove this, yet Moses speaking in the Plural Number, that God breathed into him Nischmath chajim, the Breath or Spirit of Lives, it plainly denotes not only that Spirit which makes Man breathe and move; but think also, reason and discourse.

And he became a living Soul.] This is the immediate result of the Union of the Soul with the Body. Which Eusebius, thus explains, L. vii. Præpar. Evang. cap. 10. Moses having laid the Foundations of Religion before-mentioned, viz. The Knowledge of God, and of the Creation of the World, proceeds to another Point of Doctrine most necessary to be understood, which is the Knowledge of a Man's self; to which he leads him by showing the Difference between his Soul and his Body: His Soul being an Intelligent Substance, made after the Image of God; his Body, only an earthly Covering of the Soul. To which Moses adds a third, πρὸν ζωῆς ἐνσπικλῶντα, καὶ συναπικλῶσθαι μιν, &c. A certain vital Breath, whereby the other two are united and linked together by a powerful Bond, or strong Tie. His Soul, it is manifest, did not come out of the Earth, or any Power of Matter; but from the Power of God, who infused it into him by his Divine Inspiration.

And this was the Original of Eve's Soul also, tho' it be not mentioned: For if her Soul had been made out of Adam, as her Body was, he would have said not only, She is Bone of my Bone, but Soul of my Soul; which would have mightily strengthened the Bond of Marriage, and exceedingly heightened conjugal Affection.

Ver. 8. And the LORD God planted.] Or, had planted; for it doth not seem to be a new thing.

A Garden.] A most pleasant Part of the Earth. Eastward.] Or, as others translate it, before, in the beginning, viz. On the third Day, when he made all Vegetables. And it cannot be denied that mikkedem may signify time, as well as place. But as the greatest Part of Interpreters, Ancient and Modern, take it here to signify Place; so Moses himself uses it in the following Part of this Book, iii. 24. xi. 2. xii. 8. xiii. 11.

In Eden.] A Country (as most understand it) so called, perhaps, from its Pleasure: τόπον διαφύσεων, διαγωγῆς ἀπὲς λαμπροτέρας, φουτοῖς παρὰ τοῖς, as Theophilus de Autolyc. speaks, L. ii. Where Eden was, there are two or three Places of Scripture that give some direction to our Search, 2 Kings xix. 12. Isa. xxxvii. 12. Ezek. xxvii. 23. which show there was a Country, that for many Ages after this, retained the Name of Eden: And that Eastward, as Moses here tells us, it was situated; that is, Eastward of Judea, or of the Desert of the Amorites, where he wrote these Books. For the Scripture calls those People, the Children of the East, who dwelt in Arabia, Mesopotamia, and Persia. But in what Country of the East Eden was, will be best understood from ver. 10.

And there he put the Man, whom he had formed.] He was formed, we must suppose, in some other Place; and conducted hither by God, in Token of his singular Kindness to him. Where he declared him, saith a Syriac Writer mentioned by Hottinger, (in his Dissert. de Hexaplis, Paris. p. 115.) an Heir of Paradise, and made him מלכה וכהנה ונביא a King, a Priest, and a Prophet, Ver. 9. And out of the Ground.] Of that Garden before-mentioned.

Made the LORD God to grow every Tree, &c.] The greatest Variety of the choicest Plants, Flowers, and Fruits: For Tree comprehends every thing that grows out of the Earth.

Pleasant to the sight.] He gratified Man's Eye, as well as his Taste and his Smell.

The Tree of Life.] So called, because there was a Virtue in it, as several of the ancient Fathers think, not only to repair the animal Spirits, as other Nourishment doth; but also to preserve and maintain them, and all the Organs of the Body, in the same equal Temper and State, wherein they were created, without any Decay; until Man should have been fit to be translated into another World. To this purpose Irenæus, St. Chrysostom, Theodoret, but especially Greg. Nazianzen speak, Ἐἰ δ' ἐν ἐμείναιμιν, &c. If therefore we had continued what we were, and kept the Commandment, we should have been what we were not by coming to the Tree of Life, ἀπαθανάττοντες καὶ Θεῷ πλησιάζοντες, being made immortal, and approaching nigh to God. Orat. xliii. p. 699. D. And why we should think it impossible or unlikely that God should make such a Fruit, I do not see. Nay, it seems necessary there should have been such a kind of Food; unless we will suppose God would have preserved Adam (had he continued innocent) from dying, by a continual Miracle: Which is a harder Supposition than the other.

But this Garden being also a Type of Heaven, perhaps God intended by this Tree to represent that immortal Life, which he meant to bestow upon Man with himself, Rev. xxii. 2. And so St. Austin in that famous Saying of his, Erat ei in cæteris lignis Alimentum, in isto autem Sacramentum, L. viii. de Gen. ad Lit. cap. 4. In other Trees there was Nourishment for Man; but in this also a Sacrament. For it was both a Symbol of that Life which God had already bestowed upon Man, (who was hereby put in mind, that God was the Author of his Being, and all his Enjoyments) and of that Life he was to hope for in another World, if he proved obedient.

In the midst of the Garden.] This signifies either its Situation, or its Excellence: For that which is most Eminent in any place, the Hebrews say is in the midst, xxiii. 10.

The Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil.] So called, as I take it, because God intended by this Tree to prove Adam and Eve, whether they would be good or bad: Which was to be made known, by their abstaining from its Fruit, or eating of it. It is generally thought indeed by Interpreters, (of which I leave the Reader to judge) that it had this Name afterwards; either because the Tempter pretended it would make them so wise, as to know all things, (for so Good and Evil may be expounded, ch. iii. 5. to signify as much as all things whatsoever) or because, in the Event, upon the eating of this Fruit, they did actually know by miserable Experience, (which they would not learn without it) the great Difference between obeying, and disobeying God's Commands. That is, they who did not sufficiently attend to their Duty, nor consider what it was to sin, and what the Effect of it would be; presently, upon the eating of this Fruit, reflected upon both. For they saw how grievous it was to incur God's Displeasure, by believing a Creature rather than Him; and by being so ungrateful as not to acknowledge knowledge his Bounty in all the Blessings they enjoyed; without thinking him envious in denying them one, as a Proof of their Obedience.

Some think it was so called, as a Caveat to them, not to study Craft and Subtilty; but to content themselves in a simple, plain way of life, (wherein God made them) without any Curiosity to know more than was needful for them. Which they think is confirmed by ch. iii. 6. She saw it was good to make one wife, i. e. cunning and wily.

Ver. 10. And a River went out of Eden, &c.] These words afford us such a Key to open to us the Place where this Garden was planted, that one can scarce doubt whereabouts it was; tho' the precise Spot of Ground be not marked out in this description of it. For it lay in the Country of Eden; and we are directed to find that out by this remarkable Circumstance, That a River went out of it. Which doth not signify that the Spring of the River was in Eden; but that the River run thro' that Country into the Garden, to water it. The Garden therefore, it is probable, was a part of the Province of Eden; and was water'd by that River which came from it. The only difficulty is to find what River this was. Our Countryman Mr. Carver, in his learned Discourse of the Terrestrial Paradise, chap. vii. endeavours to prove, that the two great Rivers, Euphrates and Tigris, having but one and the same Fountain in Armenia the greater, run along for some time in one Stream called Tigris: Upon which he thinks this Garden was seated, before this River parted into two Streams, Euphrates and Tigris. This he confirms out of the two Epistles of the Nestorian Christians written to Rome 1552, and translated by Mafius; where they call Tigris the River of Eden. And there are indeed some ancient Authors, particularly Lucan and Boëtius, who say that these two Rivers come out of the same Spring: But their Mistake arose, 'tis likely, from hence, That they sprung (as Strabo tells us) out of one and the same Mountain, viz. Nipates, which is a Part of Taurus: And Euphrates sprung out of the Northern Side of it, and Tigris out of the Southern; as Salmasius observes upon Solinus, p. 621, &c. Certain it is, that the best Authors, both Ancient and Modern, make them to have different Springs, from whence they hold different Courses, Euphrates towards the West, and Tigris towards the East: And do not make one River, till (after they have run through many Countries) they meet and join together about Apamia, according to Ptolemy. And then indeed they make for a long way but one great Stream: Which I take to be the River here mentioned by Moses, that run through the Country of Eden, which perhaps lay on both Sides of the River, as the Garden, it is plain by ver. 8. did on the Eastern Side of it; extending itself to the place where these united Rivers parted again. For so it follows.

And from thence.] i. e. Below the Garden.

It parted.] Or, was divided again, as it had been before into two other Streams. By which Words we seem to have found the Place where the Garden ended; but being not told where it began, nor how far it spread itself Eastward from the River side, I will not presume to say what Country or Countries it included. Certain it is there was a Country, as I observed before, called Eden in After-times, which was Part of the Kingdom of Assyria, 2 Kings xix. 12. And that Kingdom then comprehended not only the Country antiently called Assur, but Mesopotamia, and Babylonia, &c. In some part of which last Province it is probable this Garden was seated.

And became into four Heads.] He doth not say was parted into four Heads, but became into four Heads, (whose Names here follow) two before they united, viz. Tigris and Euphrates; and two after they again parted, viz. Pison and Gibon.

These he calls Heads, or Principal Rivers, as David Chytræus, I think, rightly understands it, quatuor illustria & magna flumina efficiebant, made four famous and great Rivers. For all Divisions from the main Stream are called the Heads of a Water; as Sir W. Raleigh observes out of Ulpianus. And it is indifferent whether the Water come out of a Fountain, or out of a River, or a Lake: For that Part of the River (suppose) where the Branch forakes the main Stream, is called the Head of that Branch; which becomes a new River. In like manner may Euphrates and Tigris be called the Heads of that River which they made at their meeting: As where they part again, the Beginnings (as the LXX translate the Word) of the other two Rivers, Pison and Gibon, are properly called the Heads of them.

Ver. 11. The name of the first is Pison, or Phison.] This is that Branch which runs Westward; and being nearest to the place where Moses wrote, on the other side of Jordan, is first mentioned by him. It is a long time since both this River and Gibon have lost these Names: The Greek and Roman Writers calling them still, after their parting, by the Names they had before they met, Euphrates and Tigris. But there was a Remainder of the Name of Pison preserved in the Easterly River called Pasitigris, which is the same with Oroatis, as Salmasius observes in his Exerc. Plinianæ in Solin. p. 701, 702: And is called (as Mr. Carver notes) by Xenophon simply Phycus; in which the Name of Phison is plainly enough retained. Which continued till the Time of Alexander the Great: For Q. Curtius, as he further notes, commonly calls Tigris itself by the Name of Phasis, and says it was so called by the Inhabitants thereabout. Which, in all probability, was at first the Name of this other River Phison; but lost by the many Alterations which were made, for a long time, in the Course of it, as Pliny tells us. For he says, the Orcheni, and other neighbouring Nations, made great and deep Cuts or Canals to carry the Water of Euphrates (meaning this River) into their Fields; and so it lost its Course, and run thro' Tigris and the Marshes into the Sea. Strabo saith the same, that from these διόρυγαι, as he calls them, deep Trenches, which carried the Water of Euphrates into Tigris, came the Name of Pasitigris; that is, Pison mixed with Tigris. See Salmasius in the fore-named Exercitationes, pag. 703. where he shows this River was not perfectly restored to its Course till the Times of Alexander the Great.

That is it, which compasseth the whole Land of Havilah.] By finding where this Country was, we certainly find the River Phison. Now Moses makes mention of two Havilah's; one descended from Cush, Gen. x. 7. and the other from Jocktan, ver. 29. The latter of these cannot be here meant, for his Posterity were planted Eastward; but the former, who were a more Western People, in that part of Arabia Felix which bordered upon this Stream. For the Ishmaelites (who inhabited Arabia Deserta) are described by Moses, xxv. 18. as bounded by Shur towards Egypt, and by Havilah in the way to Assyria. And Saul found Havilah in after-times in the very same situation, 1 Sam. xv. 7. And still, much later, Strabo mentions the Χαυρωτός (which are certainly the Posterity of Chavilah) among the People of Arabia. See Bochart's Phaleg. L. iv. c. 11.

Where there is Gold.] Nothing is more famous than the Gold of Arabia: Where Diodorus Siculus says it is digged up in great Lumps, as big as a Chestnut, L. ii. p. 93. Edit. H. Steph.

Ver. 12. And the Gold of that Land is good.] i. e. Is excellent: For the fore-named Author says, it is of such a flaming Colour, that it adds much to the Lustre of precious Stones that are set in it.

There is Bdellium.] The Hebrew word being Bedolach, some have thought Bdellium to come from thence, which is an Aromatick Gum. Others think Bedolach to be Crystal, others Amber; but Bochart rather thinks it signifies Pearl: Which he proves in his Hierozoic. P. ii. L. v. c. 25.) from the Country it self here mentioned, viz. Havilah, which he looks upon as that Part of Arabia, which lies upon the Persian Gulph: Where, at Catipha, there is a great Pearl-fishing. The Manna also wherewith the Israelites were fed in the Wilderness, is described Numb. xi. 7. to be round like Coriander-seed, and of the Colour of Bedolach. Now in his former Description, Moses says it was white, Exod. xvi. 14. which agrees to Pearl, as also doth roundness, but not to the sweet Gum called Bdellium: Of which see Salmasius in his Exerc. Plin. p. 1150.

And the Onyx Stone.] This Country also was famous for Precious Stones; as appears by the Report, which Nearchus (Alexander's Admiral) made of the Western Coast of the Persian Gulph, in Strabo, L. xvi. But Braunius (L. ii. de Vestitu Sacerd. Hebr. cap. 18.) thinks Schoham should rather be translated the Sardonyx. Whichsoever it be, Arabia was famous both for the Onyx and Sardonyx, as Salmasius observes out of Pliny, Ib. p. 562, 563.

Ver. 13. The Name of the second River is Gihon.] There are no footsteps of this Name remaining that I can find; but we are directed, by the Country it is said to compass, to take it to be the Eastern Stream that arose from the parting of Euphrates and Tigris; as Pison I said was the Western.

Compasseth, or, runneth along by the whole Land of Ethiopia.] Or Cush: Who was seated more Eastward than his Sons, Havilah, Seba, and the rest, (mentioned Gen. x. 6, 7.) upon the Borders of this River. For when People first began to spread themselves, they kept as near to great Rivers as they could; for the better Communication one with another, and affording mutual Succour and Assistance. It is probable that he gave Name to the Country of Susiana; which the Greeks called κίνα, and is now called by the Persians, Chuzestan, i. e. The Province of Chus. And when his Posterity multiplied, they went more Westward toward the Arabian Sea: From whence his Brother Mitzraim passed into Egypt. Our Translators follow the LXX in rendering the Hebrew Name Cush, by Æthiopia: Not meaning that in Africa, but this in Asia. For the Antients frequently mention a double Æthiopia, as many have observed; particularly Job Ludolphus, who herein justifies the LXX in great part, L. ii. Comment. in Hist. Æthiop. Cap. iii. n. 16.

Ver. 14. The Name of the third is Hiddekel.] Which River being called by Daniel x. 4. the great River, cannot be, as many have fancied, Nabarmateba: For that was but a Cut, made by Trajan to waft his Army out of Euphrates into Tigris, (as Ammianus Marcellinus tells us) and therefore Hiddekel is Tigris it self. Which, as Pliny says, was called Diglit, in those Parts where its Course was slow: and where it began to be rapid, it took the Name of Tigris. And so the Arabians call this River Deglat, and Degela, from the Hebrew word Hiddekel. Which Salmasius derives from Hadda, or Chadda, sharp pointed; and Kal, swift; because of its very quick and hasty Motion: And thence the Greeks he observes derive the Name of Tigris, ἀπὸ τῆς δῦναι, Exerc. in Solin. p. 694. Rauwolf in his Travels, P. ii. c. 9. says, That when he was at Caruch, on the Confines of Media, (which was about an hundred Years ago) Tigris was still called in their Language Hidekel.

Which goeth toward the East of Assyria.] If it make a great bend Northward, (as Pliny saith it doth about Apamia) it must needs run towards the East of Assyria, for some time. But this is not the Course of the River; and therefore the LXX translate the word Kidmath, which we english towards the East, simply toward: And it is certain Tigris did run by Assyria; for Nineveh, the chief City of Assyria, stood upon the East side of this River, as Bochart hath demonstrated in his Phaleg. L. iv. cap. 20.

The fourth River is Euphrates.] None doubt that the River called here in the Hebrew Perath or Phrath, is the same that hath been called for many Ages Euphrates. The Course of which was so well known in those Days, that Moses gives no description of it.

Ver. 15. And the LORD God took the Man.] After such a manner as he took David from the Sheepfolds, (Psal. lxxviii. 70.) by an extraordinary Motion. For as a Prophet was sent from God to anoint him; so God himself, I suppose, appeared to Adam in a visible Glorious Majesty, which the Jews call the SHECHINAH, (as was noted before, i. 3.) because it was a Token of God's special Presence, and by it he dwelt among his People. It seems to have been a very shining Flame, or amazing Splendor of Light, breaking out of a thick Cloud: Of which we afterward read very often, under the Name of the Glory of the LORD; which at first appeared to Moses, as a Flame of Fire out of the midst of a Bush, Exod. iii. 2. To this I cannot think our first Parents to have been Strangers; but look upon it as highly probable, that this Divine Majesty conducted Adam from the place where he was formed, into the Garden of Eden.

And put him.] Or, placed him there.

To dress it, and to keep it.] To preserve it by his Care and Labour, in the Condition wherein he found it. Theophilus Antiochenus thinks it is not without a Mystery, that God's putting Man into Paradise is twice mentioned, (here, and ver. 8.)

ver. 8.) to signify that after Man was cast out of one Paradise, he should still have a right to another: By being well instructed in his Banishment, and prepared for a Restitution, at the general Resurrection and new Creation. L. ii. ad Autolicum.

Ver. 16. And the LORD God commanded the Man.] This is a farther Indication, that the Divine Majesty appeared to Adam and spake to him, as he did to Moses out of the Flame in the Bush, saying,

Of every Tree in the Garden thou mayst freely eat.] A very liberal Concession; which was abundantly sufficient to demonstrate that it was not Envy (of which the Divine Nature is not capable) which moved their Creator to abridge our first Parents Liberty, in one particular.

Ver. 17. But of the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil, (why so called see ver. 9.) thou shalt not eat of it.] This small Restraint it was fit to lay upon Adam, to make him sensible, that tho' he had Dominion over all things, yet he was not their Lord, but a Servant of the most High: Who required this Abstinence in Token of his Subjection, and to prove his Obedience to him. This Account many of the Fathers give of it; particularly Tertullian, who calls this the Primordial Law; which was, quasi matrix omnium præceptorum Dei, (adv. Judæos, cap. 2.) including, as it were, in its Womb, all the Natural Laws of God. For, as in observing this Law he had testified his unspotted Love and Obedience to God; so in violating it, he threw off the Divine Government, and opposed his own Will to God's. But still some ask, Why should his Obedience be tried, in such an Instance as this? Not considering that an Experiment of it could scarce have been made in any of the Moral Precepts: Which there was no occasion to violate. For what should tempt him to Idolatry, or to take God's Name in vain, or to murder his Wife? How was it possible to commit Adultery, when there was no Body but he and she in the World? How could he Steal, or what room was there then for Coveting, when God had put him in possession of all things? It had been in vain to forbid that, which could not be done; and it had not been Virtue to abstain from that to which there was no Temptation; but from that which invited them to transgress. I speak in the Plural Number; because it must be remembered that this Prohibition was given not only to Adam but to Eve also, (iii. 1, 2.) an Account of whose Production immediately follows.

Theoph. Antiochenus in the place before-named, hath several pretty Reflections upon this Prohibition; and this among the rest: That Adam and Eve being but newly brought into the World, were in simplicity to be wholly ordered and governed by the Will and Pleasure of their Heavenly Parent; and not affect much Knowledge, (as not agreeable to their Infant State) but to grow up in it by degrees, and not ὡς ἡλικίας φρονεῖν, to aim at Wisdom above their Age. To which purpose Greg. Nazianzen also discourses in many places: Orat. xxxviii. pag. 619. Orat. xlii. p. 681. and Carm. Arcan. vii. p. 162. And indeed many excellent Meditations may be raised from hence; particularly, That Christians new-born should not be so greedy of Knowledge, as careful and solicitous of well-doing: For many have been ruin'd by early Speculations. Which, if one could pick any good Sense out of such stuff as the Valentinians uttered, I should think they intended to represent; when they said, The last of their Æons, whom they called Wisdom, labouring to comprehend the Βύθον, or Depth, (i. e. the Father of all) had like to have lost itself, till it was helpt by Ὁρίον, or Limit. That is, we are preserved by setting some Bounds to our Desires after Knowledge.

Thou shalt surely die.] In the Hebrew, dying thou shalt die; to show the certainty of it, as we rightly translate it. Which doth not signify, as appears by the Event, that he should instantly die, but become Mortal; lose the Immortality where-with he was invested, Gen. iii. 19. And, as Athanasius thinks, the doubting the Expression denotes, μὴ μόνον ἀποθνήσκειν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐν τῇ τοῦ θανάτου φθορᾷ διαμένειν, (L. de Incarn. Verbi) he should not only die, but remain in the Corruption of Death; as we should all have done, had not the Second Adam obtained for us an happy Resurrection.

I need not add, That Diseases, Sickneses, and Pains, the Forerunners of Death, are included in this Threatning.

Ver. 18. And the LORD God said.] Or, had said, as it is by some translated; the better to show that the foregoing Precept was given to both. And to say in this place, is as much as to resolve and decree: As Melancthon well explains it, in one of his Epistles: Dicere, hoc loco significat, miranda sapientia sancire, Et nobis hoc decretum tradere: to say here signifies to establish with wonderful Wisdom, and to deliver this Decree to us. L. i. Epist. 126. Where he again repeats it, The LORD said, that is, by his wise Counsel, and immutable Decree, he established this Order.

It is not good that the Man should be alone.] Uncomfortable to want Society, and unfit there should not be an increase of Mankind. Concerning which Plato hath left these wonderful Words, L. vi. De Legibus: This is the Encouragement to Marriage, not only that human Race may be perpetuated; but a Man may, παιδας παίδων δὲ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὑπέρταται ἀνδ' αὐτὸ παρορῶντας, leave Children behind him when he is gone, to serve God in his stead.

I will make him an help.] For all the Necessities and Uses of Life.

Meet for him.] In whose Company he shall take Delight; so the Hebrew Phrase, as before him, imports; being as much as, answerable to him, every way fitted for him; not only in likeness of Body, but of Mind, Disposition and Affection: Which laid the Foundation of perpetual Familiarity and Friendship. Or, as the Author of Cethber Shem Tobb, mention'd by Hackspan, interprets it, She shall always be ready to observe and serve him. For to stand before any one, in the Hebrew Language, signifies readiness to do what is desired. See more on ver. 25.

Ver. 19. And out of the Ground the LORD God formed.] Or, had formed, i. 20, 24.

Every Beast of the Field, &c.] The Ground here must be understood to comprehend the Water also, out of which the Fowl were made.

And brought them unto ADAM.] It is commonly thought that this Name of Adam, given to the first Man, signifies as much as red Earth. But Job Ludolphus hath made it far more probable, that it imports Elegant, or Beautiful. See his Histor. Æthiop. L. i. cap. 15. n. 17, 18. and his Commentaries upon that Chapter, N. 107. How the Beasts and Birds were brought to him, we are not told: But, it is likely, by the Ministry of Angels; who were perpetual Attendants upon the SCHECHINAH, or Divine Majesty.

that

To see what he would call them.] To exercise and improve his Understanding.

And whatever Adam called, &c.] God approved of it.

Ver. 20. And Adam gave Names, &c.] Or, tho' Adam gave Names to all Creatures; yet among them all, when they were brought before him, there was not a fit Companion found for him. It doth not follow from his giving Names, that he knew the Nature of all those Creatures: For the Names of them in Scripture (which they who are of this Opinion generally suppose were the Names given by Adam) are taken from their Voice, their Colour, their Magnitude, or some such external difference, and not from their Nature. Therefore this imposing Names upon them, denotes rather his Dominion, than his Knowledge. The Anonymous Author of the Chron. Excerpta before Job. Antiochenus Malala, says, That Adam imposed Names upon all Creatures, καὶ ἔκλυον ὅσα, by the Commandment of God, τὸ δ' αὐτῷ ὄνομα καὶ τῆς γυναῖκος αὐτῷ Ἀγγελῷ Κυρίου ἔπεν αὐτοῖς, but his own Name and his Wife's were told him by an Angel of the Lord.

Ver. 21. And the LORD God caused a deep sleep, &c.] Whereby he was made less sensible of the Pain, which otherwise he would have felt in the opening his Side; if his Mind had not been wholly intent upon something else. As it was in this Sleep, which was accompanied with an Extasy, (so the LXX translate this Word, and it is agreeable to what we read Job iv. 13.) wherein was represented to his Mind, both what was done to him, and the Mystery of it; as appears by ver. 23, 24. Vid. Epiphani. Hæres. xlviii. n. 4, 5, 6.

And he took one of his Ribs.] Tho. Bartholinus, a late famous Physician, thinks it probable that Adam had 13 Ribs on each Side, and that God took away one pair, with the musculous Parts that adhere to them; and out of them made Eve. For commonly Men have but 12 Ribs, tho' sometimes there have been found (as Galen and Riolanus upon him testify) those who have had 13, and, very rarely, some who have had but 11: As Bartholin himself observed in a lusty strong Man whom he dissected, Anno 1657, who had but 11 on one Side, and a small appearance of a 12th on the other. Histor. Anatom. & Medic. Centur. v. cap. 1. It is fit here to be observed, That God did not form Eve out of the Ground, as he had done Adam; but out of his Side: That he might breed the greater Love between him and her, as Parts of the same Whole. Whereby he also effectually recommended Marriage to all Mankind, as founded in Nature; and as the reunion of Man and Woman. It is likewise observable, that there is no mention here of his breathing a Soul into her, as into him: For Moses only explains what was peculiar to Eve, (which was her being made out of his Side) the rest is supposed in those Words, ver. 19. I will make him an help meet for him; which the vulgar La- tin rightly translates simile ei; like unto him. For so the Hebrew word Kenegdo is used by the Jewish Writers, particularly by Benjamin in his Itinerary; where speaking of the Jews at Ger-muda, and naming several, he says there were many more Kenegdem, like unto them. And so the word אֲנִי among the Greeks denotes likeness and similitude, as well as contrary. Of which see Const. L'Empereur, Annot. in Benj. Tudel. p. 138. The Woman therefore was in all things like him; only he made out of the Earth, she out of him: That he might cleave to her with the dearest Love and Affection. It was also said before this, i. 27. That both Man and Woman were made in the likeness of God.

And closed up the Fleish, instead thereof.] Made the Fleish as firm, as it was before.

Ver. 22. And the Rib, &c. made be Woman.] Which was as easy for the Divine Power to do, as to make the Man himself out of the Earth.

And brought her to him.] Not merely by conducting her to the same place where he was; but the Divine Majesty (which now appeared to Eve) presented and gave her to him, to be his Wife. God himself made the Espousals (if I may so speak) between them, and joined them together in Marriage.

Ver. 23. And Adam said, &c.] Now indeed I have found, what I could not see before among all God's Creatures, another self.

She shall be called Woman, &c.] Partake of my Name, as she doth of my Nature. For he called her Iffcha, as he was called Iffch. From whence Sepher Cosri and Abarbinel endeavour (in a very long discourse) to prove the Hebrew to be the Primitive Language. And Abarbinel observes the Christians to be of the same Opinion, quoting for a proof of it, St. Austin's Book, De Civitate Dei.

Ver. 24. Therefore shall a Man leave his Father and Mother, and cleave to his Wife.] Cohabit with her, rather than with his Parents, (if they cannot all dwell together) and be joined to her in the closest and most inseparable Affection: As if they were but one Person, and had but one Soul and one Body. That's the Meaning of the next Words.

And they shall be one Fleish.] Most intimately conjoined in entire and inseparable Love. Which arose from the singular Union of the Fleish of our first Parents; one of them being taken out of the other. From whence Maimonides and other Hebrew Doctors infer all mixture with Beasts to be contrary to Nature; who are neither one Fleish with us, nor one with another. For in this our Bodies, as well as our Souls, have a Preheminence above theirs; which were not made one Fleish after such a manner as Man and Woman were. They hence also conclude all incestuous Marriages, &c. to be unlawful, as may be seen in Mr. Selden, De Jure N. & G. Lib. v. cap. 2. Their Observation is more pertinent who take notice, That God creating and joining together but one Man and one Woman in the beginning; intended Mankind should be so propagated, and not by Polygamy. Which in process of time indeed became the general practice; but from the beginning it was not so, as our Saviour speaks in the Case of Divorces. Which he concludes, from these very words, were against the Divine Institution, Institution, which made two to be one Flesh, (Mat. xix. 5, 6, 8.) so he interprets these Words, (and St. Paul doth the same, 1 Cor. vi. 16.) they shall be one Flesh: And so doth Jonathan's Paraphrase, and the Samaritan Code, as Mr. Selden observes, in the place now named.

Ver. 25. And they were both naked, the Man and his Wife.] They did not yet find any necessity for Cloaths.

And they were not ashamed.] Did not blush; no more than little Children do, when they behold one another naked, and embrace with an innocent Affection. Besides, there were no Body but they two (who in effect were as one) to behold them: And therefore they had no more reason to blush, than a Man doth when he is naked alone by himself.

C H A P. III.

Eusebius observes, (L. vii. Præpar. Evang. cap. 9, 10.) That Moses having settled the great Doctrines of the Creation of the World, and the Dignity of Man, made in the Image of God; proceeds very wisely to instruct the Israelites, that there are none so happy, but without due Care and Watchfulness may become most miserable: There being Πονηρὸς δαίμων, (as his words are) a wicked Dæmon at every Man's Elbow, βδολαγῶν καὶ μισήγων καὶ τῆς ἀνθρώπων ἀρχῆς ἐπιβουλῶν σατειῶν, envious, a hater of those that are good, and from the beginning a wily underminer of Mens Salvation.

Now this following immediately after the relation of the formation of Eve, hath made some fancy, that our very first Parents fell the very same day they were made. And thus much, I think, must be supposed, That they did not continue very long in their happy State: For, if they had persisted stedfastly in their Duty, for a considerable time, they would have acquired such an habit of well-doing, as would not have been so easily lost. But that they continued longer than a Day, there are many Circumstances to induce us to believe. For it required some time for Adam to be acquainted with all other Creatures, and to impose Names upon them: And there being none of them a meet help for him, he slept some time, till Eve had taken her Beginning out of him. Whom, when he saw, he received, and own'd her for his Wife; and no doubt made more Reflections upon God's Wisdom, Power, and Goodness, than are set down in this sacred Story. They both also received a Command from God, not to eat of one Tree in the Garden: into which, when they were brought, we cannot but think they walk'd about it, and took such a view of it, as to be convinced, by the bountiful Provision God had made for them, they had no reason to complain of the small Restraint he laid upon them. All which could not be performed so speedily as some have imagined: for tho' God can do what he pleases in an instant, yet Man cannot; and God himself did not in one Day create the World. And, besides that some time was necessary for transacting all these things; it is not likely the Devil would immediately set upon Eve, as soon as the Command was laid upon them; but rather let it be a little forgotten.

And if the time be observed when he assaulted her, it will much confirm this Opinion, which was in the absence of her Husband; for that we cannot easily believe to have been upon the same Day they were created. The extraordinary Kindness they had one for the other, will scarce allow us to think it possible they should be so soon separated. It is plain also, God sanctified the Seventh Day before their Fall; which it is highly probable they spent in admiring and praising the Almighty Goodness.

Ver. 1. Now the Serpent.] Or, that Serpent (as some think it should be translated) which the Tempter made use of, as his Instrument to deceive.

Was more subtil.] The whole Species of Serpents is noted by Aristotle (L. i. Histor. Animal. c. i.) to be μάλιστα ἐπιβουλῶν, extremely insidious: But this was extraordinary wily. What sort it was, is not here expressed: But all agree there is now none like it; the Curse of God having degraded it. St. Basil in his Book of Paradise, (p. 627.) saith it was not a frightful Creature, as it is now, ἀλλὰ σεσημῆς καὶ ἡμερῶν, but mild and gentle: Not crawling and winding about, in a terrible manner, upon the Ground, ἀλλ' ὕψους ἐπὶ πόδαυ βεβηκώς, but lofty, and going upright upon its Feet. Several of the Jews have been of this Opinion; and our famous Mr. Mede inclines to it, Discourse xxxviii. p. 291, &c. But I take the Conjecture of another very Learned Person, now a Bishop of our Church, to be far more probable: Which I shall endeavour to strengthen. There were (and still are in the Eastern and Southern Parts of the World) Serpents having Wings, and shining very brightly, like to Fire. So we read, Isa. xiv. 29. of a flying fiery Serpent. Which fiery Serpents are called Seraphims, in Numb. xxi. 6, 8. and termed fiery, not merely with respect to their Venom, which made sore Inflammations in the Bodies of those who were bitten by them; but because they appeared shining like Fire, when they flew in the Air.

Whence Seraphim is the Name also of the highest sort of Angels, (called the Angels of the Presence) Isa. vi. 2, 6. who appeared, I suppose, in some such Form with flaming Wings. For otherwise, I cannot think Serpents would have been honoured as sacred things in so many Countries, as we find they anciently were, unless they had been the Symbols of Angels. The Devil therefore, I conceive, made use of some such Serpent, (but of a more surpassing Brightness than any now extant) that he might resemble one of the most illustrious Angels, who appeared sometimes in the like shape. Which moved Eve the more readily to hearken unto the Voice of the Serpent; taking it to be one of the heavenly Seraphims, which she had seen sometime, in such a splendid form, attend upon the Divine Glory, or Majesty: For the Angels always made a part of the SCHECHINAH. And thus, one would think, Tertullian understood this Matter, when he said in his Book De Præscript. Hæret. C. xlvii. Istum fuisse Serpentem, cui Eva, ut filio Dei, crediderat; this was the Serpent, to whom Eve gave Credit, as to the Son of God. Which if any one take to be the Words of the Hereticks he is there speaking of; yet those are not, which we find in his Book against the Valentinians, cap. ii. where where faith the Serpent was à Primordio Divinae imaginis prædo, an Usurper of the Divine Image from the Beginning. See Dr. Tenison of Idolatry, p. 365. To which that Passage in Epiphanius may be added, who mentions some Hereticks (who might have some Truth among them) that said the Woman listned to the Serpent, καὶ ἠκούσεν αὐτὸν ὁ ὄφις, and believed him, or was persuaded by him, as the Son of God, Hæref. xxxvii. n. 25. And, one would think, Rabbi Bechai had this Notion in his Mind, when he said (upon the 14th Verse of this Chapter,) this is the Secret (or Mystery) of the Holy Language, that a Serpent is called SARAPH, as an Angel is called SARAPH. For which he quotes the fore-named place, Numb. xxi. 6. and then adds, The Scripture calls Serpents Seraphim, because they were Toledoth hanacash hakadmoni, the offspring of this old Serpent: Understand this, (so he concludes, as our Saviour speaks in another Case, whoso readeth, let him understand) as a Matter of great concernment. Which can have no meaning, I think, but this; That the Devil (whom St. John also calls the old Serpent, Rev. xii. 9.) in this Serpent here spoken of, counterfeited a glorious Seraphim, and thereby seduced Eve to give Credit to him.

However this be, it is most reasonable to suppose, it was some beautiful Creature; by whom Eve thought an Angel, who wish'd them well, discoursed with her: For she was not so simple as to think that Beasts could speak; much less, that they knew more of God's Mind than herself. Nor doth it seem at all credible to me, that she could have been otherways deceived, but by some Creature which appeared so gloriously, that she took it for an heavenly Minister; who she thought, came to explain to them the meaning of the Divine Command.

Yea, hath God said.] This doth not look like the Beginning of a Discourse, but the Conclusion: As the Jews themselves have observed. And it is not improbable, that the Tempter before he spake these words, represented himself as one of the heavenly Court; who came or was sent, to congratulate the Happiness, that God had bestowed upon them in Paradise: which was so great that he could not easily believe he had denied them any of the Fruit of the Garden. He desired therefore to be satisfied from her own Mouth, of the Truth of what he pretended to have heard; or to know how they understood the Command of God. For so these words may be translated, Is it true indeed, hath God said, Ye shall not eat of every Tree? &c. Which is a very ancient Interpretation, and more probable than theirs, who would have the Hebrew Particles, apb ki, signify as much as ut ut: Altho' God hath said, ye shall not eat, notwithstanding ye shall not die. So they suppose he was going to add; but before he had spoken the latter part of the Sentence, Eve interrupted him saying, We may eat of the Fruit of the Trees of the Garden. This had been too gross, flatly to contradict what God had said: Whereas the Beginning of the Verse tells us, he went more subtilly to work.

Ver. 2. And the Woman said unto the Serpent, We may eat of the Fruit of the Trees of the Garden.] She seems to have understood him, as if he thought God had forbid them to eat of any Fruit in the Garden. And indeed the foregoing Question is ambiguous; like those Oracles of his which made him be called Ἀόξιας, (oblique or crooked) by the ancient Heathen; because they had two meanings. She truly therefore reports the Sense of God's Prohibition, in this and the following Verse. Tho' there are those who think, she pronounced these Words, We may eat of the Fruit; &c. with some Admiration, that they should be restrained from one Fruit, when God had most liberally granted them all the rest. The Reason of which she did not know, and showed her desire perhaps to understand it.

Ver. 3. But of the Fruit of the Tree which is in the midst of the Garden, God hath said, ye shall not eat of it, nor touch it, lest ye die.] Some fancy the Woman here began to prevaricate in two Things: First; In saying they might not touch it: Secondly, In saying only there was Danger, if they meddled with it, and not an absolute Threatning. Of which the Devil, they think, took advantage; and immediately assured her, there was no Danger at all. This last they grounded upon the Hebrew Particle pen, which we translate lest, and expresses a doubting. But I do not think either of these Observations are solid: For that Particle does not always imply a Doubt, as we may learn from the Second Psalm, the last Verse, and many other places: And the touching of the Fruit, signifies the plucking it off from the Tree, in order to eat it: Which was expressly forbidden.

Ver. 4. Ye shall not surely die.] You are under a mistake: Death will not be the certain Consequence of your eating this Fruit. For God is too good to inflict such an heavy Punishment for so small a Fault.

Ver. 5. For God, &c.] The Particle ki, which we translate for, signifies here as much as but, (as Abarbinel and others observe) just as in Psalm cxv. 1. So the meaning is, you shall be in no Danger, but quite contrary, be great Gainers by tasting of this Fruit: As God himself knows, who only keeps you in Awe by his Threatning, but will not be so severe as to execute it; when he sees you much improved, not impaired, by eating of it.

Then your Eyes shall be opened.] For you will immediately discover abundance of Things, whereof you are now ignorant.

And ye shall be as Gods.] Like unto us, the Angels of God: Who are frequently called Elohim, i. e. Gods in Scripture. Thus Maimonides understands it; Morè Nevoch. Part i. c. 2. and Onkelos, who translates it Princes, meaning Angels, who are called Ἀρχαὶ, Principalities, and Powers.

Knowing Good and Evil.] i. e. All manner of Things. Or, as some of the Hebrews understand it, know what is fit for you to do, without any Advice or Instruction, and without any Restriction, being subject to none; but enjoy freely what you please. For to know is sometimes as much as to enjoy, in the Scripture Language. So that according to this Interpretation, he promises them likeness to God himself; who is absolutely free, and subject to none.

But in this Suggestion the Devil proved, what our Saviour says of him, That he was a Liar from the beginning: For there are no less than four Lyes (as some reckon them) in these two Verses. Which makes it seem strange that Eve should give Credit to these Suggestions, which were very foolish:

It being incredible that God should envy them any thing, who had given them their Beings, and innumerable Blessings. I can give no account of it, but this: That when we are searching after the Reason of Things (as She, I suppose, was of this Prohibition) and cannot find it; if one be suggested to us, which never came into our Mind before, tho' in itself unlikely, we are ready to catch at it, and to be pleased with it. For when the Mind is weary with enquiring, it is satisfied with a false Reason, rather than have none. The Promise also of Knowledge was very tempting; especially of such Knowledge as he gave her hope would raise and advance her to a more noble Condition. And it is likely she thought an heavenly Minister (as she took him to be) might understand God's meaning better than herself.

Ver. 6. And when the Woman saw the Tree was good, &c.] This Verse gives a further account of that which seems very strange, the Disobedience of our first Parents. She look'd so long upon the forbidden Fruit, till she not only had an Appetite to it, as excellent Food, but was taken with its beautiful Colour; and was also strongly possessed, by the Persuasion of the old Serpent, that her Mind would be no less pleased than her Palate, by an increase in Knowledge and Wisdom. These were powerful Temptations, (expressed in these Words, good for Food, pleasant to the Eyes, and to be desired to make one Wife) and she could see no Evil in the Thing itself; it being the mere Pleasure of God, of which she did not apprehend the Reason, that made the eating of it a Crime. This Fruit also was planted, not in an obscure Place, but in the midst of the Garden, (Verse 3.) near to the Tree of Life: Which made it the more inviting, by its being always in her Eye, as well as very beautiful; and raised perhaps, the greater wonder in her, that God should forbid a Thing, which he had made so eminent for its Beauty. Hereupon she yielded, and (as it follows) took of the Fruit thereof and did eat.

And gave unto her Husband with her.] Who returned to her, it is likely, as she was eating the Fruit; and was soon persuaded to bear her company; for it immediately follows, and he did eat.

It is a question whether he debated the Matter with her, till he was satisfied with the Arguments that moved her to eat; or, his great Affection to her drew him in, to do as she did: Without any other Consideration, perhaps, than this; That he chose rather to die, than out-live one, whom he loved most passionately. To this last, the Apostle's words seem to incline, 1 Tim. iii. 14. Adam was not deceived: Tho' they do not necessarily signify, it must be confessed, That he was not seduced by the Tempter's Arguments; but only that Eve was first seduced, and then helped to seduce him. So that he might be wrought upon, both by those Arguments, and by his Affection also to his Wife: But could have been deceived by neither, had he not been first guilty of a great ἀμεροξία and παρρησία (as St. Chrysostom calls it) heedlessness and non-attention, arising from sloth and negligence. The Reflection which Gregor. Nazianzen makes upon her gazing upon the beautiful Fruit, is this; ἐδωκεν αὐτῇ ἐυχολαίαις ἐν ἡμῶς αὐτὴς βλέποντες, &c. Orat. xlvii. p. 700. D.

Ver. 7. And the Eyes of them both were opened.] Not in the Sense the Serpent promised, but a very much different: For they soon saw their Folly, and made sad Reflections upon what they had done.

And they knew (or felt) that they were naked.] A cold shivering seized on them; and they perceived also that they were strip of their intellectual Ornaments, (as Athanasius expounds it, contra Gentes, p. 4.) and blushed also at their bodily Nakedness, of which they were not before at all ashamed.

And they sewed Fig-leaves together.] Or, twisted the young Twigs of the Fig-tree, with the Leaves on them: Which are very broad in the Eastern Countries. Pliny reckons this among the Trees that have the largest Leaves, L. xvi. cap. 24. and cap. 26. where he saith, it hath folium maximum umbrosissimumque, the greatest and most shady Leaf of all other.

And made themselves Aprons.] A covering, which they girt about them.

Ver. 8. And they heard the Voice of the LORD walking in the Garden.] The Sound of the Majestick Presence, or the Glory of the LORD, approaching nearer and nearer unto the place where they were. For the walking may be refer'd to Voice, as well as to the Lord: Signifying that the Sound, as I said (for so Voice is often used in Scripture) of the Divine Majesty's approach, came still nearer, and made a louder Noise to terrify them. For thus the Word walk is applied to the Voice (i. e. Sound) of the Trumpet at the giving of the Law, when Moses says of it, (Exod. xix. 19.) הוֹלֵךְ וְהוֹק it walked or increased, and grew stronger.

Just so, I conceive, the Sound which the Motion of the SCHECHINAH made did at this Time. And that,

In the cool of the Day.] When the Wind began to rise, (so it is in the Hebrew, in the Wind of the Day) that is, towards the Evening, as most understand it: For then there was wont to be a gentle breath of Wind; as Aristotle observes of his Country, ὁ Ζέφυρος πρὸς τὸ δειλὸν πνεῖν, the West Wind was wont to blow towards the close of the Day. Which being a soft and gentle Gale, the Sound they heard was the more astonishing, which seemed to threaten a dreadful Storm.

Onkelos thus paraphrases the first Words, they heard the Voice of the WORD of the LORD: That is, of the Son of God; who appeared in very glorious Clouds; or, rather in a flaming Fire of such an amazing Brightness, that they were not able to endure the Sight of it. For so it follows:

Adam and his Wife hid themselves from the presence of the LORD God, &c.] It's plain by this there was the appearance of an extraordinary Presence: Which affrighted them, and made them run among the Trees of the Garden, i. e. into the Thickets, or closest Places they could find there.

I cannot but think the SCHECHINAH, or Divine Majesty, appeared quite otherwise than formerly; that is, not in so mild a Lustre as when when they were first acquainted with him; but in a more terrible burning Light, as if it would consume them. For so we read in after-times, that the same LORD who appeared unto Moses in a flame of Fire out of the midst of a Bush, (Ex. iii. 2.) came down in a more dreadful manner, at the giving of the Law, from Mount Sinai. When the Mountain was altogether on a smোক, (Exod. xix. 18.) because the LORD descended upon it in Fire: And that Fire so great, that it flamed unto the midst of Heaven, (Deut. iv. 11.) with darkness, clouds and thick darkness.

Ver. 9. And the LORD God called unto Adam.] As he did to Moses out of the Bush, Exod. iii. 4. and to Israel out of the midst the Fire, Deut. iv. 12.

And said unto him.] With a Majestick Voice, against which he could not stop his Ears.

Where art thou?] Why dost thou run into Convents, like the wild Beasts? Such Questions do not argue Ignorance in him that asks them; but are intended to awaken the Guilty to a Confession of their Crimes. As appears from iv. 10. Where is Abel thy Brother? Of whom Cain stubbornly refusing to give an account, the LORD said immediately, (to show he needed not to be informed) the Voice of thy Brother's Blood crieth unto me from the Ground.

Ver. 10. And he said, I heard thy Voice, and I was afraid, because I was naked, &c.] The very Sound of the approach of thy Presence so affrighted me, because I found I had lost my Innocency, that I hid myself from thee. This was a foolish and vain attempt; but as Guilt makes Men fearful, so that bereaves them of all Consideration.

Ver. 11. And he said, Who told thee that thou wast naked?] Divested of those noble Endowments, which I bestowed on thee?

Hast thou eaten? &c.] Transgressed my Commandment?

Ver. 12. And the Man said, The Woman whom thou gavest, &c.] I confess my Guilt; into which I was drawn by her whom thou gavest me for an help. Thus we are apt to excuse and palliate our Faults; by laying that Load upon others, with which we ought to charge ourselves.

Ver. 13. And the LORD God said unto the Woman, &c.] What moved thee to violate my Command?

And she said; the Serpent beguiled me.] My Weakness was deceived, by the Cunning of the Devil. Thus she also threw the blame upon another. But God, no doubt, convinced them both, of the Greatness of their Guilt, and the miserable Condition into which they were fallen by their Transgression; before he ended this Discourse with them. Which shows the infinite Mercy of the Creator of all, who would not abandon them, but sought after them, to save them, when they had lost themselves.

Ver. 14. And the LORD said unto the Serpent, Thou art cursed, &c.] It is observed by Tertullian, That tho' God inflicted Punishments on Adam and Eve, yet he did not curse them, as he did the Serpent, ut restitutionis candidatos, they standing fair for a Restitution to his Favour, l. ii. adv. Marcion. c. 25. And I may add, God did not begin with them; but first sentences the Serpent, before he proceeds to Judgment upon them: Which denotes that he (the old Serpent) was the great Offender, being the first Mover to Sin; which made his Crime more grievous than theirs.

Now to be curfed, is to be deprived of what was before enjoyed, and doomed to a miserable wretched Condition of Life: The particulars of which follow. The only difficulty is, Why the Serpent (literally so called) should be cursed, as it manifestly is, (tho' the Devil also, I shall show is intended) being but an Instrument which the Evil Spirit used; and had neither Will to sin, nor yet Understanding or Knowledge of what the Devil did. It is commonly answered, That this is no more than the Curse which God inflicted upon the Earth, (which was not capable of sinning) for Adam's Sake, ver. 17. But still the Reason of that Curse is enquired; which is evident enough: Man himself being punished by the Curse upon the Earth: which did not yield its Fruit so plentifully and so easily, as it had done before his Transgression. And the Reason of this Curse upon the Serpent, may be the better discerned by another Instance which we find Exod. xxi. 28. where an Ox which gored a Man or Woman, that they died, is ordered to be stoned, and his Flesh not to be eaten. This fure was to show the great Value God set upon Man's Life: Which he secured also by this Punishment: which moved all Owners to look well to their Beasts that might endanger it. Even so was the Serpent condemned, in Mercy to Adam and his Wife, (whom, it is manifest by what follows, God intended to restore into Favour) that they might be ever mindful of the Foulness of their Guilt, and excited to Repentance; by seeing a noble Creature (who was but the Instrument of it) so extremely debased into a most vile Condition.

Upon thy Belly shalt thou go.] This shews the Serpent was a more noble Creature before this Fact: But changed after it, from a flying Seraph (as the Word is Numb. xxi. 6.) into a foul creeping Serpent; not moving aloft in the Air, but crawling upon the Earth, and licking the Dust. So it follows.

And dust shalt thou eat, all the days of thy life.] There is no viler Food than this: Which doth not signify the Serpent should feed upon nothing else; but that creeping on the Ground it cannot but lick up much Dust together with its Food, whatsoever that be.

All this is literally the Curse of the Serpent: But as the Devil lay hidden under the Covert of the Serpent, tho' he be not named; so his Curse is intended in this Curse of the Serpent, tho' it be not separately mentioned. As appears by the following Verse, which has a peculiar respect to the Devil under the Name of the Serpent. And the Devil's Curse in general was this; to be thrust down further than before, from his ancient heavenly Habitation; and condemned to live in the lower smoaky Region of the Air: Where he hath lost all relish of Celestial Enjoyments, and pleases himself only in his vile Endeavours to make Mankind as wicked as himself.

Ver. 15. I will put Enmity between thee and the Woman, and between thy Seed and her Seed.] An irreconcilable Feud, throughout all Generations. Which is true of the Serpent, literally understood, between whom and Mankind there is such an Antipathy, that it discovers itself both in the natural and sensitive Faculties of them both.

Their Humours being poison to each other; and Man being astonished at the Sight of a Serpent more than any other Creature; and the Serpent in like manner at the Sight of a Man, especially (if Naturalists say true) of a naked Man. Thus Mr. Mede, Discourse xxxix. p. 295. But this is far more true and certain of the Spiritual Serpent, the Devil, and his Angels, (who joyned with him in his Apostacy) and the Woman and her Seed, in whom these Words are more literally fulfilled. For Maimonides justly admires, that the Seed of the Woman should be only mentioned, and not of Adam, (without whom she could have no Seed; which therefore must be his Seed) and that it should be said of her Seed, not of his, that it bruised the Serpent's Head. More Nevochim, P. ii. cap. 30. This, saith he, is one of the Passages in Scripture which is most wonderful, and not to be understood, according to the Letter; but contains great Wisdom in it. In which Words he wrote more Truth than he was aware; but was not able to unfold this hidden Wisdom, as we Christians, blessed be God, are able to do. For this Seed here spoken of is Christ, as both the Targums (that ascribed to Jonathan, and that called the Hierusalem) expound it; and as we are taught to understand it, by Gods Words to Abraham, when he renewed this Promise: In thy Seed (that is, Christ, saith the Apostle) shall all nations be blessed, Gen. xxii. 18. Gal. iii. 8. 16. For he vanquished the Devil, who had now vanquished Mankind. So it here follows,

It shall bruise thy Head.] i. e. That SEED of the Woman shall despoil thee of thy Power, (meaning the Devil) and abolish thy Tyranny. For in the Head of the Serpent (to which there is here an Allusion) lies his Strength: As Epaminondas represented to the Thebans, when he exhorted them to set upon a Band of Lacedæmonians, by showing them the Head of a vast Snake, which he had crushed, (ἡ κεφαλὴν τοῦ ὄφιδος συντεύσαι) saying, Look ye, the Body can do no hurt now the Head is gone: Meaning, that if they routed the Lacedæmonians, the rest of the Confederates would signify nothing. Polyæn. L. ii. Strateg. And therefore Mr. Mede has rightly interpreted the Serpent's Head, to signify the Devil's Sovereignty, (Discourse xxxv. p. 143. and xxxix. p. 298.) and that Sovereignty is the Power of Death: Which Headship of the Devil, the Seed of the Woman (that is, Christ the Lord) hath broken in pieces, and at last will utterly destroy, 1 Cor. xv. 25, 26.

There is a notable Example of this Enmity, in the struggle between Christ and the Devil for Empire, in Rev. xii. 7, 8. where Christ destroyed the Sovereignty of the Serpent in the Roman Empire so effectually, that there was no more place found for the Dragon and his Angels in Heaven; i. e. the Devil utterly lost his Sovereignty in that State: as Mr. Mede interprets it.

And thou shalt bruise his Heel.] This Victory over the Devil was not to be gotten without Blood: For the Devil did all that he was able to destroy this Seed. But that was impossible to be done; he could only assault his lower part, called here the Heel, (viz. His Body or Flesh:) Which, by his Instruments, he persecuted, despitefully used, and at last crucified. By which very means (so admirable was the Wisdom and Goodness of God) the Seed of the Woman conquered the Devil, as the Apostle shows Heb. ii. 14, 15. For it must be here noted, That Christ was properly and literally the Seed of the Woman, and not at all of the Man: Being born, without him, of a pure Virgin. The tender Mercy of God also must here be acknowledged; which gave our first Parents hope of a recovery, as soon as they were fallen: by making them this most gracious Promise. Which, tho' here something obscurely delivered, grew clearer and clearer, in every Age, till Christ came.

It cannot be denied likewise but that by Seed, may be understood (collectively) all the Faithful, who by the Power of their Lord, vanquished all the Power of their Spiritual Enemy. (See Luke x. 19.) Yet so, that we must confess, there was one Eminent Seed here primarily intended, by whom they overcome. Unto whom another Seed is not here opposed in this last part of the Verse, (as in the former part,) but the Serpent himself: Which points at a single Combat (as I may call it) between this promised Seed and the Devil. But if we will take in the other Sense also, understanding by Seed, Christ with all his Members, then the bruising their Heel signifies (as Mr. Mede expounds it) the Devil's deceit and guile in assaulting us unawares: As they do who come behind others, when they do not observe them, and catch hold of their Heel. For that this is an Emblem of guile and deceitful dealing, appears from the Story of Esau and Jacob; the latter of which had his Name from catching his Brother by the Heel at his Birth, which Esau took for an Indication of his beguiling him, as he did two times. See Discourse xxxvii. p. 184.

It is fit, I think, here to note further, (what the learned Mr. Allix hath observed,) That God in this Promise did a particular Kindness to our Father Adam: Who having been seduced by his Wife to eat the forbidden Fruit, it might have occasioned a Breach between them; had not God taken care to prevent it, by making this gracious Promise of a Redeemer, to depend upon his Union with his Wife: From whom he assures them, one should descend that should repair their Losses.

The Time likewise when this Promise was made is remarkable: Which was, before God had rejected Cain and preferred Seth to him; and long before any Restriction made to Noah's Family, or Sem's (who derived from him) that all the World might look upon the MESSEIAH as a common Benefit to all the Sons of Adam.

Ver. 16. Unto the Woman he said.] Next to the Serpent the Woman receives her Sentence, (as Mr. Mede well notes) because she was more in the Fault than Adam: Being guilty, as his Words are (Discourse xxxviii. p. 287.) both of her own personal Sin, and of her Husband's also, Whence it is that he, who had only sinned himself, and not caused others to sin, had his Judgment last of all. This should be a little more considered than it is, by all those, who not only do Evil themselves, but draw others into the same Guilt.

I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and conception.] i. e. Thy Sorrow in thy Conception: which includes all the Time of Womens going with Child; when they frequently nauseate all their Food; or have troublesome Longings; and endure many other things which are very grievous to them; especially especially when they are in danger to miscarry of their Burden.

In sorrow shalt thou bring forth Children.] Brute Creatures are observed to bring forth their Young, with far less pain, and difficulty, and danger, than Women commonly have in their Labour. Who after they are delivered of their Children, are still in danger, by many Accidents: especially when that stays behind which should follow the Birth, (as it sometimes doth from various Causes, noted by Bartholinus, in his Hist. Anatom. & Medic. Cent. v. Hist. xxxii. n. 3.) which occasions sore Torments, and puts their Lives in the greatest hazard.

And thy Desire shall be to thy Husband.] That is, it shall be subject to him; as the Vulgar Latin and Aben Ezra expound this Phrase: Which is so used, iv. 7.

And he shall rule over thee.] Have power to controul thy Desire. This looks like putting her more under the Will of her Husband, than was intended in her first Formation: Because she had not given a due regard to him; but eaten the forbidden Fruit, without staying to consult him and ask his Advice.

Ver. 17. And unto Adam he said, Because thou hast hearkened to the Voice of thy Wife, &c.] Been so weak as to mind her more than me.

Curst shall the Ground be.) It shall not bring forth so plentifully, nor so easily as it did.

For thy Sake.] Because of thy Sin; which shall be punished partly by its barrenness.

In sorrow shalt thou eat of it.] It shall cost thee a great deal of Labour and Toil, before thou reapest the Fruits of it.

All the Days of thy Life.] Every part of the Year, shall bring along with it new wearisome Labours.

Ver. 18. Thorns and Thistles, &c.] It shall cost thee abundance of Pains to root up the Thorns, Thistles, and unprofitable Weeds; which shall come up instead of better Plants.

And thou shalt eat the Herb of the Field.] Be content with such things as the common Field produces; instead of the delicious Fruits of Paradise. Here the Rabbins cry out, Mensura pro mensura, behold the Justice of God, who served Man in his kind. He was not satisfied with the choice Fruits of the Garden in which God put him; and therefore he took them from him, and sent him to eat the ordinary Food of Beasts; and that not without hard Labour. Maimon. More Nevoch. P. i. cap. 2.

Ver. 19. In the sweat of thy Face, &c.] Some conclude from hence, that the Earth brought forth before the Fall, without any Pains to cultivate it. And indeed there needed none; all things being produced at the first, by the Divine Power, in full Perfection. But what Labour would have been necessary in time, if Man had continued innocent, we do not know: Only these words signify, that less Toil would have served than Man must now take for their Sustainance.

Some of the Jews reckon up Nine Punishments besides Death, which God inflicted upon Adam; and as many upon Eve. See Pirke Eliezer, Cap. xiv. and Vorstius upon him.

Till thou return to the Ground.] i. e. Till thou diest, and mouldrest into Dust.

For out of it thou wast taken.] From whence thou wast taken, as it is explained, ver. 23. which shows the Particle ki is not always to be translated for; but sometimes whence, or whom, as iv. 23. God hath given me another Seed instead of Abel, כִּי הֵנִי whom Cain slew.

The rest of this Verse needs no Explication.

Ver. 20. Called her Name Eve.] Some think she was called Iffcha before, and now he changed her Name into Eve: In belief that God would make her the Mother of all Mankind; and of the promised Seed particularly; by whom (as D. Chytraeus adds) he hoped to be raised from the Dead, to immortal Life.

Mother of all living.] Of all Men that should live hereafter, or of him that should give Life to Mankind. So Havah may be interpreted, viva or vivificatrix: Because she was the Mother of all Mankind, or because Mankind now sentenced to death, were by her Seed to be made alive.

Ver. 21. Unto Adam and his Wife, did the LORD God make Coats of Skins, &c.] The first Cloaths of Mankind were of the Leaves of Trees, which they made themselves; being ready at hand, woven by Divine Art. The next were of the Skins of Beasts; which were much warmer, and better able to defend them from the Injury of Cold and Weather: and these were made by God's Direction. Who having made a most gracious Covenant with our first Parents, (ver. 15.) it seems not unreasonable to suppose, that he also signified to them, they should, for the confirmation of it, offer to him Sacrifices: By the Blood of which, Covenants were ratified in after-times, from this Example. For it is not likely, that the Beasts, of whose Skins these Coats were made, died of themselves: or, that they were killed merely for this Use, or for their Food. And therefore, what is so probable, as that, by God's Order, they were slain for a Sacrifice to him, (the better to represent to them their Guilt, and that the promised Seed should vanquish the Devil, and redeem them, by shedding his Blood) and that of the Skins of those Beasts God directed Coats to be made, to cloath them? But whether, by dressing them and making Leather of them; or, only by drying them, and letting the Hair still continue on them, we cannot tell. Certain it is, that this was a very antient sort of Cloathing; as we learn not only from Profane Authors, but from the Sacred: Particularly, Heb. xi. 37. The Jewish Doctors have carried this Matter so far, as to say, That Adam being a Priest, these were his Priestly Garments. The Skin indeed of the Burnt-Offering under the Law, is given to the Priest, Lev. vii. 8. but not to make him Cloaths: And Eve, if this were true, must have been a Priest also; for she had a Coat made of Skins, no less than Adam; who, they fancy, left this Coat to his Posterity. So that Noah, Abraham, and all the rest of the Patriarchs (as Abel they say did) sacrificed in the very same Coat; till Aaron was made High-Priest, and had special Garments appointed him by God. Among which, one being called by this very Name of כִּתְיֹה (Exod. xxviii.) it gave ground to this idle Conceit.

Ver. 22. Behold the Man is become, &c.] Man, in this place, includes Woman: And these words are generally thought to be spoken sarcastically; to reprove their great Folly, in thinking to increase their Knowledge, whether God would or no.

Like one of us.] These Words plainly insinuate a Plurality of Persons in the Godhead; and all other Explications of them, seem forced and unnatural: That of Mr. Calvin's being as disagreeable to the Hebrew Phrase, as that of Socinus to the Excellency of the Divine Nature. This I think, is well proved by Theodorick Hackspan, Disput. iv. De Locut. Sacris, n. 15. &c.

And now, lest he put forth his Hand, &c.] This seems an abrupt kind of Speech; something being kept back: As let us turn him out, (or some such-like Words) lest he take also of the Tree of Life, and live for ever. Which many of the ancient Fathers look upon as a merciful Dispensation that Man might not be perpetuated in a State of Sin. So Irenæus, L. iii. cap. 37. and Greg. Nazianz. Orat. xxxviii. p. 619. God thus ordered, ἵνα μὴ ἀθάνατον ᾖ τὸ κακόν, καὶ ζῆναι φιλανθρωπία ἢ πῦρ, &c. That Sin might not be Immortal; and the Punishment might be a Kindness. Which he repeats, Orat. xlii. p. 619. So Epiphanius also, Hæres. xxxvii. n. 1. When Man had spoiled himself, God unmade him, that he might make him better. And Methodius in his Hæres. xlv. n. 24, 25, &c. and 29. where he proceeds so far as to say, That Death was not sent upon Man, ἐν κακῷ πνί, out of any evil Design to him, but as a Mercy.

Ver. 23. Therefore God sent him forth, &c.] Or cast him out; and that with Reproach and Disgrace; as Aben Ezra observes the Hebrew Word, in this Form, to signify. And so cast him out, that he should not return again.

To till the ground, from whence he was taken.] This confirms what I said upon the Second Chapter, ver. 8. That Adam was made in another place, and thence brought into Paradise: From whence being now expelled, he was sent back to the Place, where he was first formed; there to labour in all the Toils of Husbandry. Tho' it must be confessed, these Words may signify no more, than those Ver. 19. of this Chapter, That he had his Original from the Earth: by the tilling of which he was put in mind of his return thither.

Ver. 24. So he drove out the Man.] (With his Wife) or as Aben Ezra translates it, After he had driven him out, he placed, &c. This Word נָשַׁב is that which the Hebrews properly use in Divorces: And therefore denotes, they think, that the Lord put him away from his Presence, as a Man did his Wife, to whom he gave a Bill of Divorce: Or as a Prince banishes a Subject that hath rebelled against him, whom he sends into Exile out of his own Country.

And he placed at the East of the Garden.] This shows the Entrance into Paradise, was from the East: At which Entrance Adam being cast out, it is likely he afterwards inhabited some of the Eastern Countries. Eutychius, Patriarch of Alexandria, saith a Mountain in India; which the Mahometans commonly call Sarandib, as Mr. Selden observes, L. i. De Synedr. cap. ii. p. 452. &c. but Aben Ezra's Conjecture seems more reasonable, That he dwelt in some Country not far from Paradise.

Cherubims.] Some of the heavenly Ministers, that waited upon the Divine Majesty: Who were called by this Name in Moses's Time, when he wrote this History in the Wilderness, after the giving of the Law. For the Glory of the LORD, I take it, here appeared at the Expulsion of Adam and Eve, in a most dreadful Manner, to deter them from attempting to come near this Place again, for fear of being consumed.

And a flaming sword.] Or, flame of a sword. Concerning which Maimonides thus discourses, P. i. More-Nevoch. cap. 4. Our wise Men understand by labat (flame) an Angel: According to that of the Psalmist, He maketh his Angels Spirits; his Ministers (lobet) a flaming Fire, Psalm civ. 4. That is, one of the Seraphims, or a flaming Angel, in the Form of a flying fiery Seraph, (or Serpent) whose Body moving in the Air, resembled the Vibrations of a Sword, was appointed, with the Cherubims, to guard the Entrance of the Garden. For the Cherubims and Seraphims, are frequently mentioned in Scripture, as Attendants upon the SHECHINAH or Divine Majesty: Which appeared here in great Glory, at the Passage into the Garden of Eden; as it did in after-times at the Door of the Tabernacle of the Congregation of Israel, to their great Astonishment.

Which turned every way.] Angels, says Maimonides, in the fore-named place, can turn themselves into all Forms and Shapes: Some of which strike greater Terror into those that behold them, than others do. But I take this Expression, not to signify Mutation of Shapes, but the Motion of the Angel: Which was so very swift and glittering, that devouring Flames seemed to come streaming out on every side.

To keep the way of the Tree of Life.] To secure the Passage into the Garden of Eden, where this Tree was; that none should dare to attempt a re-entrance: But Adam was so far from thinking of this, that, if the Eastern Traditions were to be credited, I should add, He plunged himself into the deepest Sorrow for a long Time; bewailing his Sin, begging Pardon, &c. till God dispatched an Angel to comfort him, and further assure him of his Favour. Which being but probable Conjectures, I say no more of such Matters. Nor can I assert with any degree of Confidence, what our great Primate of Ireland says in his Annals, That it seems to have been the tenth Day of the World's Age, when Adam was cast out of Paradise: In Memory of which Calamity, the solemn Day of Expiation, and the great Fast, was instituted in after-times, wherein all were to afflict their Souls, Lev. xvi. 29. This indeed is the Doctrine of the Jews, who say, The great Day of Expiation (which was on the tenth of September) was appointed and sanctified from the Creation of the World: But there is no other Authority for it.

It will be more useful, I think, to observe what Footsteps there are of these Things remaining in the Gentile World. I will mention but two. One of which is noted by Eusebius, who shows (L. xii. Præpar. Evang. cap. 11.) that Plato in his Symposium hath preserved the Memory of Paradise: His κῆπος Διός, Garden of Jupiter, being the same with this Garden of God, in which Man was at first placed. The other by St. Austin, who, says Pherecydes the Scholar of Pythagoras, called the Beginner of Evil, Ὁρίωνία: That is, a Dæmon in the Shape of a Serpent. So Heideggerus observes out of him, Exercit. iv. De Adamo & Eva, n. 82.

CHAP. IV.

Ver. 1. AND Adam knew Eve his Wife, &c.] After they were thrown out of Paradise; not before, (whatsoever some of the Jewish Doctors fancy to the contrary;) nay, as some will have it, after they had spent some time in Acts of Repentance, which is not an improbable Opinion.

I have gotten a Man from the LORD.] i. e. The promised Messiah; which she imagined would have been her First-born. For the Words of the Promise, (iii. 15.) might as well be expounded of the first Seed the Woman had, as of any of his Posterity.

Ver. 2. She bare his Brother Abel.] But gives no reason of his Name, which signifies Vanity; as she did of Cain's, which signifies Acquisition, or Possession. Nor is it said who gave this Second Son the Name of Abel: But it seems they made no account of him, in comparison with the First-born. Quod non posuerunt in eo spem factæ promissionis de Semine, ut in Cain, as Job. Fosterus judiciously speaks in his Lexicon, on the Word Hevel,) because they did not place in him their hope of the promised Seed, as they did in Cain.

And Abel was a Keeper of Sheep, &c.] The younger Son was a Shepherd, and the elder an Husbandman and Planter. For this last seems to have been Adam's chief Employment, both before and after his Fall (Gen. ii. 15. iii. 23.) and therefore either chosen by Cain in imitation of his Father, or put upon him by his direction, as the more noble of the two.

Whence the Eastern People gave him the Name of Abdalcarriths; which some mistook for another Son of Adam: But in truth was another Name of Cain, signifying "a tiller of the Field, as Mr. Selden shews, L. v. De Jure N. & G. cap. 8.

The Patriarchs indeed after the Flood, at least in Abraham's Family, chose to feed Cattle: But that was because it was less laborious, and more suitable to that unsettled Condition wherein they lived for many Years, removing like the antient Nomades, from one Country to another.

Ver. 3. In process of time.] In the Hebrew the Words are, in the end of Days: That is, in the conclusion of the Year, or after Harvest. So Days signify in many other places, particularly, Judg. xi. 4. where, after Days, is after a Year. This was a very seasonable Time to make their grateful Acknowledgments to God, who had given them a fruitful Year, and blessed them with Increase: Accordingly, God ordained in future times, that the Israelites should keep a solemn Feast, in the Year's end, to thank him for the Ingathering of their Fruits, Exod. xxiii. 16. xxxiv. 22. But in what Year of the World it was that Cain and Abel brought these Sacrifices, we have no means to know. It was, no doubt, when they were grown Men, and perhaps had more Brothers and Sisters besides themselves. See Ver. 17.

Cain brought of the Fruit of the Ground an offering unto the LORD.] These were the most antient Sacrifices among the Gentiles, both Greek and Roman, as their Authors tell us; and therefore it is most likely that Adam began with these Oblations of Herbs, Flowers, Frankincense, Meal, &c. in which Cain followed him, being of the same Profession, and provided with store of such things. Now, as there were some solemn Times of making their devout Acknowledgments to God, so I doubt not there were some set Places where they met for that purpose: For the Word in Hebrew for brought is never used about domestick or private Sacrifices, but always about those publick Sacrifices which were brought to the Door of the Tabernacle of the Congregation to be offered by the Priest: As Lev. iv. 4. He shall bring the Bullock to the door, &c. Which occurs all along, especially in the ninth Chapter of that Book.

And therefore, I suppose they brought these Sacrifices here mentioned to some fixed Place, looking towards the SCHECHINAH or Glorious Presence of God, at the Entrance of the Garden of Eden, from which Adam had been expelled; for there being no doubt some settled Place where they performed sacred Offices, it is most reasonable to think it had respect to the SCHECHINAH or Divine Majesty. Wherefore that appeared, there they appeared (as the Scripture speaks) before God: Because there he manifested his special Presence, which moved them to go thither to worship him, to give him Thanks, or to enquire of him, as we read Rebekah did, xxv. 22.

What kind of Sacrifices these were, is a Question among learned Men. The Talmudists are of opinion they were whole Burnt-Offerings, and that there were no other before the Law was given, (which I shall not now examine,) nor would the Jews, after the giving of the Law, permit the Gentiles to offer any other at their Temple.

It is their Opinion also, That Cain and Abel brought these Sacrifices to Adam, to be offered by him. For which I see no convincing Reason, but rather, they themselves seem to have offered them. And then, this Place effectually confutes their Opinion, who say the First-born were separated to the Office of Priesthood; for by these Words, it is plain the youngest sacrificed as well as the eldest. And so they did in following Ages, when we find Jacob performing the Office of a Priest, Gen. xxviii. 18. xlv. 1. Which proves their Opinion rather to be true, who say, That every Man antiently had the Power in his own Family to do the Office of a Priest, as Job did, i. 5. But when Families combined together under one Head, Prince, or Governor, he had the sole Right of Sacrificing devolved to him as their common Father. Thus Melchizedek was both King of Salem; and Priest of the most High God. All which was taken away by the Law of Moses, which permitted none to officiate among the Israelites, but the Family of Aaron; and no Sacrifices to be offered, but at the Tabernacle of the Congregation, Lev. xvii. 3, 4, 5.

It is a much harder Question, how they came to sacrifice at all, either Meal, or Beasts; since we read of no Command from God requiring them to bring him such Oblations: Which hath led some to conclude, That Men did this out of a grateful Inclination to return him some of his own Blessings, tho' they had no Directions from him about it. But if this were true, how came Abel to believe that his Sacrifice of a Beast would be so acceptable to God, as the Apostle says it was by Faith? Heb. xi. 4. That Faith had something else to warrant it than barely his own Reason. Adam, in all likelihood, had received some order concerning it; and began to sacrifice (as I noted before, iii. 21.) by direction from the SCHECHINAH, or Divine Majesty: From whence a Voice spake to him upon several Occasions, ii. 16, 17. iii. 8, 9, &c. This Order indeed is not recorded, no more than many other things which Moses in his short History omitted, (as Enoch's Prophecy, Noah's Preaching, the Peopling of the World, &c. see Versé 15.) but it doth not seem probable that Adam would have presumed to invent a way of Worship, by killing Beasts, and burning their Fat; especially since one cannot perceive any Inclination to it in Nature. And therefore Eusebius very judiciously resolves, in my Opinion, that this way of Worship was not taken up by chance, or by a human Motion, κατὰ θεῖον δ' ἐπίνοιαν ὑποβεβημένον, but suggested to them by a Divine Intimation, L. i. Demonstr. Evang. Cap. 10. Of which Plato, one would think, had some Notion, when he forbids his Law-maker (in his Epinomis) to make any alteration in the Rites of Sacrificing, because, ἡ δύνατον εἶναι τῇ θυντῇ ἢ τοῦτων αὐτῶν, it is not possible for our mortal Nature to know any thing about such Matters.

Ver. 4. And Abel be also brought of the Firstling of his Flock, &c.] Many have fancied from hence, that Cain's Guilt lay in this, that he did not bring the first of his Fruit, as he ought to have done, and as the Heathens ever did, or were bound to do by their Pontifical Laws, (as Mr. Selden observes, Chap. i. of his Hist. of Tythes) in their Premessum, i. e. the First-fruits of their Corn, or their Calpar, which was the richest of their Wine. For it is only said, he brought of the Fruit of his Ground, when Abel brought of the firstlings of his Flock. And Moses also adding, that Abel brought of the Fat thereof, that is, the very best; they think Cain's Fault was, that he brought not the fullest Ears of Corn, (which he kept for himself) but the lankest, or brought them with a niggardly Hand, or a grudging Mind. Thus Palladius in the Life of St. Chrysostom says, He was the first that tasted the First-fruits, and kept the best things for his own Belly. τῶν ἀπερχῶν ἀπεργύσατο πρῶτον, τῇ αὐτῇ λαμβεργία τὰ πρῶτιστα φυλάξας, p. 108. But there is no Certainty of this; and the Apostle to the Hebrews hath directed us to a better Account, xi. 4. Abel offered with a pious Mind; Cain without a due Sense of God, and sincere Affection to him: He offered the Fruit of his Ground, but did not devote himself to God. Therefore it follows,

The LORD had respect unto Abel and his Offering.] He graciously accepted them; and his Offering was accepted, because he himself was accepted. It is a Metaphor from those who when a Present is made to them, look kindly upon the Person that brings it, if they like him and his Present; or turn away their Faces, if they disdain them.

How God testified his Acceptance of Abel's Sacrifice, is the only Difficulty: Which the Jews say was by Fire coming from Heaven (or rather, I think, by a Stream of Light, or a Flame from the SCHECHINAH, or glorious Presence of God, to whom it was offered) which burnt up his Sacrifice. Thus Theodotion of old translated these Words, Ἀπέβλεψεν ἐπὶ τὰς θυσίας Ἀβὲλ, καὶ ἀνέστησεν, He looked upon Abel's Sacrifices, and set them on Fire. Which St. Hierom, and other ancient Writers approve. The Footsteps of which we meet withal in Gen. xv. 17. and Examples of it very many, in future times: When Moses offered the first great Burnt-offering according to the Law, Lev. ix. 24. when Gideon offered upon the Rock, Judg. vi. 21. and David stayed the Plague, 1 Chron. xxi. 26. and Solomon consecrated the Temple, 2 Chron. vii. 13. and when Elijah contended with the Baalites, 1 Kings xviii. 38, &c. Whence the Israelites wishing all Prosperity to their King, pray that God would accept (in the Hebrew, turn into Asbes) his burnt Sacrifice, Psal. xx. 4. And we find some Reliques of this among the Heathen: For when the Greeks went on Shipboard to the Trojan War, Homer represents Jupiter promising them good Success in this manner, Iliad. 2. v. 354.

Ἀστραπὴν ἐπὶ δεξιῇ ἐναίσια σήματα φαίνων.

by lightning on the Right-hand of them (as it may be translated) or shining graciously upon them, (as the ancient *Scholias*t expounds it) and making favourable Tokens appear to them. In like manner he gave the same Encouragement to the Trojans when they were going to set upon the Greeks, Iliad. x. v. 236, 237.

Ζεὺς δὲ σφὶν Κρονίδης ἐν δεξιᾷ σήματα φαίνων,
Ἀστράπηι —

Jupiter giving them good Signs, lightened upon them. And Thunder sometimes accompanying these Flashes of Lightning (as it did on Mount Sinai) Virgil makes him to have established Covenants in that manner, Æneid. xii. v. 200. where, after Æneas had called the Sun to witness, &c. Latinus lifts up his Eyes and Right-hand to Heaven, saying, Audiat hæc genitor, qui fœdera fulmine sancit.

Let the (Heavenly) Father hear what I say, who establishes Covenants with Thunder.

If such Passages as these were attended, no considering Man would think the Books of Moses to be of less antiquity than they pretend to; they opening to us the very Fountains of things, particularly of the Ancient Religion.

Ver. 5. But unto Cain and his Offering he had not respect.] He did not so much as shine upon his Sheaves, much less make them ascend up to Heaven in a Smoke; tho' he were the elder Brother, and brought his Offering first.

And

And Cain was very wroth.] This highly incensed him against Abel: When he should have made severe Reflections on himself, and considered what it was that provoked God to flight his Sacrifice; that so he might amend it, and procure his Favour. Unto which he had not a Title by his Birth-right, but by his Piety. It is possible indeed that Eve might have instilled an Opinion into him, that he being the First-born, was the Blessed Seed which God had promised. And then this may be conceived to have enraged him the more against his Brother; when he saw such a distinguishing mark of God's special favour to him in the very act of sacrificing. Which made him look upon Abel with a jealous Eye, and tempted him to kill him; that he might not supplant him in his Hope of being the Fulfiller of the Oracle before-mentioned, iii. 15.

And his Countenance fell.] He did not merely look dejectedly thro' Grief; but knit his Brows, and had a down-look, as we speak, lowring and cloudy: Like those who have evil designs in their Heads, and meditate nothing but Revenge.

Ver. 6. And the LORD said unto Cain, &c.] He did not intend wholly to cast off Cain, by refusing his Sacrifice, it is plain, I think, by this Question. Which was, in effect, to tell him, He had no Reason to be angry or out of humour; but only to become a better Man: And then God would have respect unto him also. So it follows,

Ver. 7. If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted, &c.] There are vast varieties in the Interpretation of this Verse, with which I shall not trouble the Reader, (See Theodorick Hackspan, L. i. Miscel. C. 4. Mercer, and L. de Dieu different from all, with Dr. Lightfoot) but only give the Sense of our Translation. If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? Canst thou doubt that I have an impartial Respect to true Goodness, wherefoever I find it?

But if thou doest not well, Sin (that is, the Punishment of Sin, as Ver. 13. xix. 15. and many other Places) lieth at the Door.] Is ready to follow the Offence.

And unto thee shall be his desire, and thou shalt rule over him.] He is still thy younger Brother, and shall be subject to thee, (See iii. 16.) and thou shalt be his Superior. So here are Three Things suggested to Cain, to appease his Anger against his Brother. First, That the Reason of his not being respected, was not in his Brother, but in himself: Who, if he would do well, as Abel had done, should find favour no less than he. Secondly, That there was no Reason, he that did ill should fare like him that did well; but quite contrary, should see the marks of God's Displeasure. And yet, Thirdly, This should not alter this civil right, nor give Abel any Authority over him: But he should still retain the Privilege of his Birth-right; and need fear no harm from his Brother, who was his inferior.

Ver. 8. And Cain talked with Abel his Brother.] Asked him in a friendly manner (as one Brother speaks to another) if he would walk into the Fields. This seems more likely to me, than that he told him how the LORD had chidden him, (as Aben Ezra interprets it) or that he disputed with him about the other World, and the Judgment to come, as others of them expound it. Which Mr. Selden very judiciously concludes to have arisen from Onkelos his Paraphrase on the foregoing Verse, which is this; If thou amend thy Worship (or Service of me) shalt thou not be pardoned? but if thou doest not amend it, thy sin shall remain to the day of Judgment, in which thou shalt be punished, if thou doest not repent. Upon which follows in some Editions of the Pentateuch, the Dispute which Cain had with Abel about the Day of Judgment, as a traditional Explication of this 8th Verse. L. vii. de Jure N. & Gen. Cap. 4.

When they were in the Field.] When he had drawn him from Company, and had him alone.

Cain rose up against Abel his Brother.] Assaulted him on a sudden; took him at an Advantage.

And slew him.] Gave him a stab; or some other way wounded him; so as to shed his Blood. Ver. 11.

Ver. 9. The LORD said unto Cain, Where is thy Brother?] Which is not spoken as if he was ignorant; but to awaken Cain, and make him sensible, that he knew what had passed.

And he said, I know not.] I can give no account of him.

Am I my Brothers Keeper?] Was he committed like a little Child, to my Care; to look after him, and see he took no harm? Rage made him rude; and not mind what he said, nor to whom he spake. Salvian indeed (L. i. de gubern. Dei) thinks this Speech proceeded from Atheism; and that, in those early Days the Opinion sprung up, which in his Time had infected many, Deum terrestria non respicere, &c. That God did not mind what we do on Earth: But the foulest Fact may be covered with a Lye. But this Conceit is confuted by the very question which is put to Cain.

Ver. 10. And he said what hast thou done?] Consider, what an heinous Crime thou hast committed; which cannot be concealed from me. For,

The Voice of thy Brother's Blood crieth, &c.] Calls for speedy and severe Vengeance. In the Hebrew it is Bloods, in the plural Number; because, say the Hebrew Doctors, he killed Abel and all his Posterity, which were in his Loins: According to what we read 2 Kings ix. 26. I have seen the Blood of Naboth, and the Blood of his Sons, (tho' we read of no body stoned but Naboth himself) saith the LORD, and I will requite thee in this Plat, &c. See Sanhedrim, Cap. iv. and Excerpt. Gemara, Cap. vi. N. 7. à Job Coch.

Ver. 11. And now thou art cursed from the Earth, which hath opened, &c.] I pass a Sentence of perpetual Banishment upon thee, from this Country; which hath drunk in the Blood of thy Brother. Hitherto Adam and his Children had lived together; but now, as Aben Ezra well observes, Cain was banished into a Region far off from his Father, who dwelt in the Neighbourhood of Paradise.

Ver. 12. And when thou tillest the Ground, &c.] And wherefoever thou shalt flee, the Earth, which thou tillest, shall be barren; and not bring forth answerable to thy Labour.

A Fugitive and a Vagabond shalt thou be in the Earth.] In that strange Country thou shalt have no rest; but wander up and down unquietly, and not know where to settle: Or as the LXX translate the Words, go about groaning and trembling, full of anguish in thy Mind, and with a continual shaking in thy Body. Thus St. Basil in his Homily against Drunkenness understood it, when he said, A Drunkard draws upon himself the Curse of Cain, Τῆς αἰνῆς τοῦ καὶν τοῦ ἀποκτείνοντος. Staggering and turned about uncertainly all his life long. Hen. Valesius thinks his Brother's Ghost haunted him whithersoever he went: Which made him run from place to place to avoid its Persecution. So he paraphrases these Words, (Annot. in L. iii. Euseb. Hist. Eccles. c. 6.) Umbra fratris tui quem occidisti, persequer te ubique, & aderit infesta. And so he interprets the foregoing Words, The Voice of thy Brother's Blood crieth to me from the Ground. Thy Brother, whom thou hast impiously slain, requires me to avenge him, and exact the Punishment of thee, which is due for his Murder. And indeed it was a Notion, not only among the Pagans, but among the Jews also, (as he shows) that the Ghosts of those who were murdered, persecuted their Murderers, and required Punishment of them.

Ver. 13. My Punishment is greater than I can bear.] This is too heavy a Punishment, for I sink under the Weight of it. Others interpret it, (as appears by the Margin of our Bible) My sin is unpardonable; or too great to be forgiven. Thus he, who at first was not so sensible of his Sin as to confess it, now thinks it to no purpose to beg Mercy.

Ver. 14. Behold, thou hast driven me this Day from the face of the Earth.] Banished me (as was said before, Verse 11.) from my own Native Country.

And from thy Face shall I be hid.] And more than that, I am banished from thy blessed Presence, (as appears from ver. 16.) and shall not have the Liberty to come before thy Glorious Majesty. With respect to which he may be said to have been excommunicated, tho' not in the full Sense of that Word, as Mr. Selden shows, L. i. de Synedr. C. ii. 446. 455, &c.

And I shall be a fugitive, &c.] Wandering up and down in unknown Regions.

And it shall come to pass, that every one that findeth me, shall slay me.] I shall be looked upon as a common Enemy: So that whosoever lights upon me, taking me for a dangerous Person, will kill me. To find another, in Scripture-Language, signifies to fall upon him by chance or unawares; without any precedent hatred: As Bochart observes from 1 Sam. xxiv. 14. and other places, L. ii. Hierozoic. P. i. cap. 21.

Ver. 15. And the LORD said unto him, Therefore who so slayeth Cain, &c.] Or, (as the Word we translate therefore may be rendred) not so: It shall not be as thou suspectest. But Lud. de Dieu gives many Instances where this word לכן is used as an Affirmative, signifying as much as surely. So the meaning is, Take it for a certain Truth, That if any Man slay Cain, he (that is, Cain) shall be avenged sevenfold; or rather, thro' seven Generations, God will punish the slaughter of Cain a long time: For the Number seven is ἀόριστος χρόνος, (as the Chronic. Excerpt. before Job. Antioch. speak) an Indication of an indeterminate, but great Number; signifying as much, as he shall endure many Punishments. For God intended the Life of Cain should be prolonged, in a miserable estate, as an Example of his Vengeance; to deter others from committing the like Murder.

And the LORD set a Mark upon Cain, &c.] What this Mark was, we must be content to be ignorant. Some think God stigmatized him with a Letter of his Name in his Forehead; (or rather, I should think, set such a Brand upon him as signified him to be accursed;) others, that, he looked most frightfully, so that every Body avoided him; or, that his Head shook continually, or (as others) he had a trembling in his whole Body; or, his Face, perhaps was blasted by Lightning from the Presence of the LORD. Certain it is, that it was some notorious Mark of God's Displeasure: Which made Men shun him. For we must not imagine there was no body in the World, at this Time, but Adam, Eve, and Cain: But consider that the Design of this Holy Book is not to give us a particular Account of the whole Race of Mankind descended from Adam, (who, no doubt, had a great many more Children than Cain and Abel; and they also had Children before this happened) but only of those Persons who were most remarkable; and whose Story was necessary to be known, for the understanding of the Succession down to Moses's Time. Accordingly we read, presently after this, that Cain had a Wife; and more than that, he built a City: Which supposes a great Company of People to inhabit it, Verse 17. And here, by the way, we need not wonder, there is no mention made of the Institution of Sacrifices; when the first peopling of the World is only supposed, not related.

Ver. 16. And Cain went out,] Not voluntarily, but by the force of the Divine Curse.

From the Presence of the LORD.] There was a Divine Glory, called by the Jews the SCHACHINAH, which appeared from the Beginning, (as I have often said before) the Sight of which Cain never after this enjoyed; but was banished from it: And God withdrawing his gracious Presence from him, (so St. Chrysostom) he was also forsaken by him, and put out of his special Protection. If Cain, after this, turned a downright Idolater (as many think) it is very like he introduced the Worship of the Sun, (which was the most ancient Sort of Idolatry) as the best resemblance he could find of the Glory of the LORD: Which was wont to appear in a flaming Light. And in after-times they worshipped Fire in the Eastern Countries; as the best Emblem of the Sun, when it was absent.

And dwelt in the Land of Nod.] At last he settled in a Country, which had the Name of Nod; from his wandering up and down like a Vagabond, till he fixed here. Where, it seems, he still continued restless, moving from one part of the Country to another, till, in Conclusion, he built a City, (for his Security, some think) as we read in the Verse following.

Some translate it, in the Land of Vagabonds: And R. Solomon fancies the very ground shaken under him, and made People run away from him, saying; This is the cruel Man, that killed his Brother.

On the East of Eden.] He still went Eastward from that Country, where Adam settled after he was thrust out of Paradise. See iii. 24. Which Junius thinks was in that tract of Ground where the Nomades afterwards dwelt, bordering upon Susiana. Which is far more probable than the Conceit of the Author of the Book Cofri (Par. ii. § 14.) who would have Cain's going from the Presence of the LORD nothing else but his Expulsion out of the Land of Canaan, where Adam dwelt after he was thrust out of Paradise: And consequently, the Land of Nod was not far from the Land of Canaan. Nothing can be more ungrounded than this; which overthrows also all that Moses saith of Eden, and the Garden planted there, from whence Adam went out on the East-side, and therefore not toward Canaan which was Westward.

Ver. 17. And Cain knew his Wife.] There hath been no mention hitherto of any Woman in the World but Eve, much less of Cain's having a Wife: And therefore it is uncertain whether this were a Wife he took before he killed his Brother, or after: It is most probable before; because we may well think all the World abhorred the Thoughts of Marriage with such an impious Murderer, whom God had also accursed. But whether it were before or after, I see no reason to conclude that this Wife was his Sister, there being Women enough in the World beside before this time, as was said before, ver. 15: For even in our Country, in the Age before us, there sprung from two Persons, Three hundred sixty seven Children within the space of eighty Years. And therefore, the World being now (when Cain slew Abel) an hundred and twenty eight, or an hundred and thirty Years old, according to Archbishop Usher, and Jac. Capellus's Chronology, we cannot but conceive there were a great Number of People in it, descended from all those Sons and Daughters which Adam begot, Chap. v. 4. We are not told how many, but some of the ancient Eastern Traditions (in Cedrenus) say he had thirty three Sons and twenty seven Daughters.

It is true indeed, That at the first Cain could marry none but one of his Sisters: Which was then lawful because absolutely necessary, but prohibited by God when that Necessity ceased. Of which the Eastern People were so sensible, that they took care to have it thought, that Cain and Abel did not marry those who were nearest a-kin to them, but those that were at some distance. For their Tradition is, That Eve, at her two first Births, brought Twins, a Son and a Daughter, viz. Cain with his Sister Azron, and Abel with his Sister Awin; as Suidas Patricides Patriarch of Alexandria reports. Now, such was their Caution, not to match with those that were nearest in Blood, but with those further off, as much as was then possible; Cain was not suffered to marry his Twin-Sister, nor Abel his: But Adam gave Awin to Cain, and Azron to Abel. I cannot vouch the Truth of this Story; which I mention only to show, That Mankind have had a Sense, that all possible Care should be used to avoid Marriages with the nearest Relations: For tho' this Story was derived perhaps from the Jews, yet it was believed by other People. See Mr. Selden, L. v. De Jure N. & G. c. 8. Whence Diodorus Siculus says, L. i. it was κοινὸν ἔθος τῶν ἀνθρώπων, the common use of Mankind, that Brothers and Sisters should not be joined in Marriage. And Plato (L. vii. de Legib.) calls such Marriages μὴ δαμῶς ὄντα καὶ ἀσέμινα, by no means holy, but hateful to God. For tho' they were not so in the Beginning of things, they became so afterwards: That being natural in one State of things (as Grotius well observes, Lib. De Jure B. & P. c. 10.) which is unnatural in another State.

And he built a City.] Not as soon as he came into this Country; but when he had a numerous Progeny, able to people it: And consequently, in his old Age. His End in building it, some think, was to cross the Curse of wandering to and fro: Others, to defend himself against those whom his guilty Conscience made him fear; or to secure the Spoils which by Force and Violence (as Josephus relates L. i. Antiq. c. 3.) he had taken from others. There are those who imagine, that when he attempted to build this City, he often broke off the Work, out of a panick fear: Such an one as Romulus felt after he had killed his Brother Remus.

And called the Name of the City after the Name of his Son.] Some think he declined his own Name, because he knew it to be odious everywhere. But it is more likely, it was for that reason which moved Men in after-times to do the same. For it hath been a very antient Usage for great Men to call the Cities which they built by the Name of their Sons, rather than their own; out of the great Love they bare to their Children. Thus Nimrod called Nineveh after the Name of his Son Ninus: Which the Psalmist notes as a Piece of the Vanity of Mankind, to call their Lands (that is, the Houses where they dwelt, as R. Solomon Jarchi interprets it) by their own Names, to be a lasting Monument of them and of their Family.

Enoch.] There were an ancient People called by Pliny, Heniochii; by Mela, Eniochi; and by Lucan, Enochii: Some of which lived so far Eastward, that Sir W. Raleigh fancies they might be the Posterity of this Enoch.

Ver. 18. And unto Enoch was born Irada, &c.] It is remarkable, that tho' Moses gives us some Account of the Descendants of Cain; yet he saith not a word of the Years that they lived, and carries their Genealogy but a little way. Whereas he deduces the Genealogy of Seth down to the Flood, and so to his own time, &c. And also relates particularly, (Chap. v.) to what Age the Life of his principal Posterity was prolonged. It seems, he look'd upon Cain's Race as such a reprobate Generation, that he would not number them in the Book of the Living: As St. Cyril speaks.

Ver. 19. Lamech took unto him two Wives.] By a small Transposition of Letters, Lamech being the same with Melech, which signifies a King, some of the Jews fancy him to have been a great Man: For none but such, they say, had two Wives in those ancient Times; tho' they hold it was lawful (as Selden shows, L. v. De Jure N. & G. cap. 6.) for any body that could maintain them to have had more. But it is more likely that Lamech was the first that adventured to transgress the Original Institution: Which was observed even by the Cainites till this time. When, perhaps, his earnest Desire of seeing that blessed Seed which was promised to Eve, might induce him to take more Wives than one: Hoping, by multiplying his Posterity, some or other of them might prove so happy as to produce that Seed. And this he might possibly persuade himself was the more likely, because the Right that was in Cain the First-born, he might now conclude was revived in himself: Who being the Seventh from Cain, had some reason to imagine the Curse laid upon him, of being punished sevenfold, i. e. for seven Generations, was now expired, and his Posterity restored to the Right of fulfilling the Promise.

Ver. 20. He was the Father.] The Hebrews call him the Father of any thing, who was the first Inventor of it; or a most excellent Master of that Art. Such was Jabal in the Art of making Tents, folding Flocks, and all other Parts of Pasturage: Which tho' begun by Abel, was not by him brought to Perfection: Or, if it were, Jabal was the first in the Family of Cain that was eminent in the following Inventions.

Of such as dwell in Tents.] Taught Men to pitch Tents; which were moveable Houses that might easily be carried from place to place, when there was occasion to remove for new Pasture. Under this is comprehended all that belongs to the Care of Cattle in their breeding, feeding, and preserving, as appears by what follows.

And of such as have Cattle.] In the Hebrew the Words are, and of Cattle. Where the copulative Vau, which we translate and, signifies as much as with: And so the Words are to be here translated, such as dwell in Tents, with Cattle. Thus Bochartus observes it is used, 1 Sam. xiv. 18, The Ark of God was at that time with the Children of Israel; as we, with the Ancients, truly translate it. And so it should be translated, Exod. i. 5, All the Souls that came out of Jacob's loins were seventy Souls, with Joseph. For Joseph is not to be added (as we seem to understand it) unto the Seventy, but made up that Number, as appears from Gen. xli. 27. So that the Sense of this whole Verse seems to be, That tho' Men fed Cattle before in good Pastures, yet Jabal was the first, that by the Invention of Tents, made the more desert Countries serviceable to them: Where, when they had eaten up all the Grass in one Place, they might in a little time take up their Tents, and fix them in another. To this purpose R. Solomon Jarchi. And in these Tents, it's likely, he taught them to defend their Cattle, as well as themselves, from Heat and Cold, and all other Dangers to which they were exposed in those desert Places.

Ver. 21. Father of such as handle the Harp and Organ.] The first Inventor of Musical Instruments, and that taught Men to play upon them. What Cinnor is, (which we translate Harp) see in Bochartus his Canaan, L. ii. cap. 7. p. 808. I believe the first Word includes in it all Stringed, the latter all Wind Musical Instruments.

It is possible that Apollo, or Linus, or Orpheus (for there are all these various Opinions) might be the Inventor of the Harp among the Greeks; but it was their Vanity that made them fancy such Instruments had their Original in their Country.

Ver. 22. Tubal-Cain.] The Arabians still call a Plate of Iron or Brass, by the Name of Tubal, (as Bochartus observes out of Avicenna, and others, L. iii. Phaleg. cap. 12.) who, as it follows in the Text, was.

An Instructor of every Artificer in Brass and Iron.] i. e. Found the Art of melting Metals, and making all sorts of Weapons, Arms, and other Instruments of Iron and Brass. Many think that Vulcan is the same with Tubal-Cain, (their Names being not unlike) particularly Gerb. Vossius, De Orig. Idolol. L. i. cap. 16.

His Sister's Name was Naamah.] Whom Vossius (Ib. cap. 17.) takes to have been the Heathen Minerva, or Venus. Her Name signifies Beautiful, or fair; one of a sweet Aspect: And the Arabians say, she invented Colours and Painting, as Jubal did Musick. See Elmacinus, p. 8.

Ver. 23. And Lamech said unto his Wives, &c. Hear my Voice, ye Wives of Lamech, hearken unto my Speech.] Something had preceded these Words, which was the Occasion of them: But it is hard to find what it was. Jacobus Capellus indeed (in his Historia Sacra & Exotica) hath a Conceit that Lamech was now in a vapouring Humour, being puffed up with the Glory of his Son's Inventions; to whose Musick and other Arts he endeavoured to add Poetry: Which he expressed in the following Words, that seem to him a Trafonical Hymn, wherein he brags what Feats he would do. For so he reads the Words, (with Aben Ezra) not I have slain, but I will kill a Man with one Blow of my Fist, &c. But I can see no warrant for this Translation without a violence to the Hebrew Text, and therefore we must seek for another Interpretation.

I have slain a Man to my wounding, &c.] These Words would have a plain Exposition, (which otherwise are difficult) if we could give credit to the Hebrew Tradition; which St. Hierom says several Christians followed: That Lamech being informed by a certain Youth, as he was hunting, that there was a wild Beast lay lurking in a secret Place, went thither, and unawares killed Cain who lay hid there; and then in a Rage at what he had done, fell upon the Youth that had occasioned this Mistake, and beat him to death. But as there is no Certainty of this, so it doth not agree with the next Verse; which seems to suppose Cain to be now alive: Therefore Lud. de Dieu, following Onkelos, reads the Words by way of Interrogation; Have I slain a Man? Or, so much as a Boy? that you should be afraid of my Life? It seems the Use of Weapons being found out by one of his Sons, and grown common, his Wives apprehended that some body or other might make use of them to slay him. But he bids them comfort themselves, for he was not guilty of slaying any body himself, and therefore might reasonably hope no body would hurt him.

And then the Meaning of the next Verse is easy.

Ver. 24. If Cain shall be avenged seven fold, truly Lamech seventy and seven fold.] If God hath guarded Cain so strongly, who was a Murderer, as to threaten great and long Punishments to those that slay him, he will punish them far more, and pursue them with a longer Vengeance, who shall slay me, being a guiltless Person.

There are divers other Interpretations, which I shall not mention, because this is most pertinent to the preceding Discourse.

Ver.

Ver. 25. Bare a Son.] The Jews think he was born a Year after Abel was killed.

And called his Name Seth.] Mothers antiently gave Names to their Children, as well as the Fathers. And Eve gave this Son the Name of Seth, because she looked upon him as appointed (so the Word signifies) by God, to be what Cain, she thought, should have been; till God rejected his Sacrifice, and he slew Abel. In whose room she believed God had substituted this Son, to be the Seed from whom the Redeemer of the World should come.

The Arabians say, (particularly Elmacinus, p. 7.) that Seth was the Inventor of Letters and Writing, (as Tubal was of Musick, and Tubal-Cain of Arms) which so much surpassed all other Inventions, that some (as Cedrenus tells us) called him a God; i. e. the highest Benefactor to Mankind. Which, if it were true, we might think that thence his Children were called the Sons of God, vi. 1. But it is most likely this Mistake arose from Symmacus's Translation of the last Words of the next Verse, which, if we may believe Suidas, was thus, Then began Seth to be called by the Name of God. For which there is no Foundation either there, or any where else in Scripture. For tho' it be said that Moses was made a God to Pharaoh, yet he is never simply called a God, as Jacobus Capellus well observes: Nor is any King, or Prince called by that Name particularly, in Scripture; tho' in general it says of them all, That they are Gods.

Ver. 26. To him also was born a Son.] When he was an hundred and five Years old, as we read, v. 6.

And he called his Name, Enos.] Signifying the weak and miserable Condition of Mankind; which he seemed, by giving him this Name, to deplore.

Then began Men to call upon the Name of the LORD.] This doth not import that Men did not call upon the LORD (which includes all his Worship and Service) before this time: But that now (as Jac. Capellus conceives) they were awakened, by the Consideration of their Infirmary before-mentioned, to be more serious and frequent in Religious Offices: Or, rather, (as others understand it) they began to hold more publick Assemblies: For Families being now multiplied, to which Religion was before confined, they joined together and met in larger Societies and Communion, for the solemn Worship of God by Sacrifices and other Religious Services. For, to call upon God, comprehends, as I said, all Religion; which consists in acknowledging him to be the LORD of all, in lauding all his Glorious Perfections, giving him Thanks for his Benefits, and beseeching the Continuance of them.

But it being scarce credible, that Publick Assemblies were not held long before this, (it being probable that even when Cain and Abel sacrificed, their Families joined together to worship God) it hath moved some Men of Note, (such as Bertram and Hackspan) to follow our Marginal Translation; then began Men, (i. e. the Children of Seth) to call themselves by the Name of the LORD: That is, the Servants or Worshipers of the Lord; in distinction from the Cainites, and such profane Persons as had forsaken him.

And indeed a great Number of the Jewish Writers, with whom Mr. Selden joins, in his De Diis Syris, Prolegom. 3. would have the Words expounded thus, to signify that Apostacy; then was there Profanation, by invoking the Name of the LORD. For the Word hockal, which we here translate began, signifying profaned, in Lev. xix. 12. (Thou shalt not profane the Name of the LORD thy God) they take Moses's Meaning to be, That the most Holy Name which belongs to the Creator and Possessor of Heaven and Earth alone, was now impiously given unto Creatures: Particularly to the Sun. And thus the Arabick Interpreter, in Erpenius's Edition, Then began Men to apostatize from the Worship of God. But a great Number of very learned Men have opposed themselves to this Interpretation, and with much Judgment: Moses being here speaking of the pious Family of Seth, and not of impious Cain's: And the Word hockal (as Hackspan observes) with the Preposition le following in the next Word, being constantly used in the Sense of Beginnings, not of Profanation. And therefore they content themselves with our Marginal Translation: Or else think that God was now first called upon by the Name of Jehovah: Or, that Liturgies, as we call them, or Publick Forms of Worship, were now appointed at set Hours: Or some other considerable Improvements made in Religious Offices. For the Arabian Christians represent this Enos as an excellent Governor; who, while he lived, preserved his Family in good Order; and when he died, called them all together, and gave them a Charge to keep God's Commandments, and not associate themselves with the Children of Cain. So Elmacinus.

CHAP. V.

Ver. 1. THIS is the Book of the Generations of Adam.] i. e. Here follows a Catalogue of the Posterity of Adam. So the Word Book signifies, Mat. i. 1. an Account of those from whom Christ the Second Adam came; as here, an Account of those who came from the First Adam. Yet not of all, but of the principal Persons, by whom in a Right Line, the Succession was continued down to Noah, &c. As for the Collateral Lines, which, no doubt, were very many, by the other Sons and Daughters which the Persons here mentioned begot, they are omitted: Because no more than I have said, was pertinent to Moses's Purpose.

In the Day that God created Man.] This is repeated again, not only to imprint on their Minds, that Adam was not produced, like other Men, by Generation, but by Creation.

In the likeness of God created he him.] This also is again mentioned, to remember Men how highly God had honoured them, and how shamefully they had required him.

Ver. 2. Male and Female created he them, &c.] Of different Sexes, to be joined together in Holy Marriage: As Moses had shown, Gen. ii. 22, 23, &c.

Called their Name Adam.] The common Name to both Sexes; like Homo in Latin, &c.

Ver. 3. And Adam lived an hundred and thirty Years.] This doth not assure us he had no Children dren but Cain and Abel till now, but only acquaints us with his Age when Seth was born.

And begat a Son in his own likeness, after his image.] Not so perfect as himself, when he was created; but with those Imperfections which impaired him, after he had eaten the forbidden Fruit; that is, inclined to Sin, and subject to Death. For his own Likeness and Image, wherein this Son was begotten, seems to be opposed to the Likeness and Image of God, wherein Adam was made, i. 26. which, tho' not quite lost, was lamentably defaced.

Maimonides will have this to refer to Seth's Wisdom and Goodness; he proving truly a Man like to his Father Adam: Whereas the rest before him proved rather Beasts. More Nevochim, Par. i. c. 7.

Called his Name Seth.] He intends to give here an Account of those descended from Seth alone, not of his Posterity by Cain, (who are only briefly mentioned in the foregoing Chapter, verses 17, 18.) because in Seth the Posterity of Adam were preserved, when all the Children of Adam perished in the Deluge.

Ver. 4. And he begat Sons and Daughters.] After the Birth of Seth he begat more Children, (as he had done, it's probable, many before) whose Names are not here recorded: Because Moses sets down only that Race of Men, from whom Noah and Abraham, (the Father of the Faithful) and the Messiah were derived.

Ver. 5. Lived nine hundred and fifty Years.] It is not reasonable to take a measure of the Length of the Lives of the Patriarchs by the Shortness of ours. For, as Josephus well observes, (L. i. Antiq. cap. 4. and out of him, Eusebius, L. ix. Præpar. Evang. cap. 13.) they being Men much beloved of God, and newly made by him, with a strong Constitution, and excellent Temper of Body, and using better Diet, the Vigor of the Earth serving at the first for the Production of better Fruits: All these things joined with their Temperance, constant Exercise and Labour, a sweet Temper of Air, their Knowledge in the Nature of Herbs and Plants, &c. might well contribute very much to as long a Life as is here mentioned. Which was but necessary also, (and therefore God's Providence took special Care of them) that the World might be the sooner peopled; Knowledge and Religion more certainly propagated, by the Authority of living Teachers; Arts and Sciences brought to a great Perfection, which could not have been effected in a short Life like ours. And therefore Josephus shows, that herein Moses hath the Testimony of all the Greeks and Barbarians also, who have wrote about ancient Affairs. Of Manethus (for instance) who wrote the Egyptian History; Berosus who wrote the Chaldean; Mochus, Hestæus, &c. who wrote the Phœnician; with a great Number of Greek Writers whom he mentions: who all say, Men anciently lived a thousand Years. None indeed came up to that full Sum, but some so near it, that they who were not exactly acquainted with the Sacred Story, might well speak in that manner.

And this ought not to seem incredible to us in these Days, when we consider how long several have lived in the later Ages of the World; as Pliny reports in his Natural History, L. viii. cap.

48. Nay, in Times nearer to us, there are Instances of this kind, as the Lord Bacon observes in his Hist. Vitæ & Mortis, and Bartholin, in his Hist. Anatom. Rariorum, Cent. v. Hist. 28.

But nothing is more remarkable than that which Gassendus reports in the Life of Nicol. Peireskius, L. v. That he received a Letter from Aleppo no longer ago than the Year 1636, of a Man then in Persia, known to several Persons worthy to be believed, who was Four hundred Years old: Idque ipsis omnino esse exploratum atque indubium: And the Persons who wrote this were fully assured of the undoubted Truth of it.

Such Instances indeed are rare; and there is one that thinks Men did not generally live to such a great Age in the old World. For Maimonides is of opinion that none attained to so many Years as are here mentioned, but only the particular Persons expressly named by Moses; all the rest of Mankind in those Days living only the ordinary Term which Man did in After-times. Or, in other Words, this extraordinary Length of Days was the Privilege only of these singular Individuals; either from their accurate way of living and Diet, or God's special Favour in reward of their eminent Virtue and Piety, More Nevoch. Par. ii. cap. 47. But Nachmanides (another great Jewish Doctor) opposes this with much Reason; for that their eminent Virtue was not the Cause they alone had this Privilege, appears by Enoch, the most holy Man of them all, who did not live to the Age of Four hundred Years. And as there is no ground to believe these were the only Persons who lived exactly temperate in all things; so it is manifest Moses doth not design to give us an Account of those that lived longest, but of those from whom Noah descended, and it is incredible that they alone should be very long-lived, and no body else, tho' descended from the same Parents.

Ver. 6. And Seth lived an hundred and five Years, and begat Enos.] We must not think he lived so long before he begat any Children: No more than that Adam had none till he was an hundred and thirty Years old, when he begat Seth, (ver. 3.) for we know he had Cain and Abel, and in all likelihood many others before. Therefore to explain this and other things that follow, ver. 18, and 28. which seem more strange (for Jared is said to have lived an hundred sixty two Years before he begat Enoch, and Lamech an hundred eighty two Years before he begat Noah) we must consider, as was noted, ver. 4. that Moses sets down only those Persons by whom the Line of Noah was drawn from Seth, and Abraham's Line from Noah, by their true Ancestors; whether they were the eldest of the Family or no. Seth it's likely had many other Children before Enos was born, as Noah, we may be confident had before he begat Sem, Ham, and Japhet: Which was not till he was five hundred Years old, ver. 32. As Lamech also had several before Noah was born: Tho' Moses doth not mention them; because he was here concerned only to inform us who was the Father of Noah.

Begat Enos.] The Arabian Christians, as I observed before, (iv. 26.) make him to have been a Man of singular Goodness.

Ver. 9. Begat Cainan.] The same Writers represent him to have been like to his Father; and say, he gave his Children a charge not to mingle with with the Seed of Cain. So Elmacinus. Yet there is but little difference between his Name, and that of Cain's; no more than between Irada and Jared, and some other of Sem's Posterity and Cain's. Which may teach us, says Jac. Capellus, (in his Histor. Sacra & Exotica) Ne fatale nescio quod omen nominibus propriis effingamus; that we should not fancy there is we do not know what fatal Omen in proper Names. The Wickedness of Judas Iscariot did not make the other Judas, called by that Name, to think the worse of it. And therefore Jared feared not to call his Son Enoch, by the very Name of Cain's eldest Son, iv. 17. And Metbuselab also gave his Son Lamech the Name of one of Cain's Grand-Children, iv. 18.

Ver. 12. Begat Mahalaleel.] This Name imports as much as a Praiser of God: Which Cainan imposed upon this Son of his, (as Jac. Capellus fancies) because he was born after he had lived ten Weeks of Years, (i. e. when he was Seventy Years old) in the Beginning of the Sabbatick Year: Which was the eighth Jubilee from the Creation. For, as there were Sacrifices, and a Distinction of clean Beasts and unclean; so he conceives there might be a Distribution of Years by Sevens or Weeks, (as they spake in after-times) from the very Beginning of the World. But there is no certainty of this: Nor of what the fore-named Arabian Writers say of this Mahalaleel, that he made his Children swear by the Blood of Abel, (so Patricides) not to come down from the mountainous Country where they dwelt, to converse with the Children of Cain.

He is mentioned also by the Mabometans, as Hottinger observes in his Histor. Orient. p. 20.

Ver. 15. Begat Jared.] The same Arabian Writers make him also a strictly pious Man, and an excellent Governor: But say, That in his Days some of Seth's Posterity, (about an hundred in number) notwithstanding all his Persuasions to the contrary, would go down and converse with the Children of Cain; by whom they were corrupted. And thence they fancy he was called Jared, (which signifies descending) either because they went down from the Holy Mountain, as they call it, where Seth's Posterity dwelt; or Piety, in his Time, began very much to decline. See Hottinger's Smegma Orient. L. i. cap. 8. p. 235, &c.

Ver. 18. Begat Enoch.] Whom the Arabians call Edris; and represent him as a very learned Man, as well as a Prophet: And especially skilful in Astronomy. See Hottinger, Histor. Orient. L. i. c. 3. and Smegma Orient. p. 240. The Greeks anciently had the same Notion of him, as appears by a Discourse of Eupolemus, which Eusebius quotes out of Alexand. Polyhistor. L. ix. Præpar. Evang. c. 17. where he says Enoch was the first who taught the Knowledge of the Stars, and that he himself was taught, δι' Ἀγγέλων Θεῶν, by the Angels of God; and was the same Person whom the Greeks call Atlas. Certain it is his Story was not altogether unknown to the ancient Greeks; as appears in what they say of Ἀνναξὶς or Κανναξὶς, which is the same with Enoch, whose Name in Hebrew is Chamoch. For Stephanus in his Book De Urbibus says, that this Annacus lived above Three hundred Years, and the Oracle told the People, that when he died they should all perish; as they did in the Flood of Deucalion: In which he confounds the History of Enoch and Metbuselab, as Bochart well observes, L. ii. Phaleg. c. 13.

Ver. 21. Begat Metbuselab.] Enoch being a Prophet, (as we learn from St. Jude) and foreseeing the Destruction that was coming upon the Earth by a Deluge, immediately after the Death of this Son of his, gave him this Name of Metbuselab, which imports as much. For the first part of it, Metbu, evidently carries in it the Name of Death; being as much as, he dies: and selab signifies, the sending forth of Water, in Job v. 10. And therefore Metbuselab, is as much, as when he is dead, shall ensue an emission or inundation of Waters, to the Destruction of the whole Earth. Which ingenious Conjecture of Bochartus, in his Phaleg. L. ii. c. 13. is far more probable than any other Account of his Name.

Ver. 22. Enoch walked with God after he begat Metbuselab.] Of all the rest Moses only says, they lived after they begat those Sons here mentioned; but of this Man, that he walked with God: i. e. was not only sincerely obedient to God, (as we suppose his Fore-fathers to have been) but of an extraordinary Sanctity, beyond the rate of other holy Men; and held on also in a long Course of such singular Piety, notwithstanding the wickedness of the Age, wherein he lived. And the very same Character being given of Noah vi. 9. it may incline us to believe, That as Noah was a Preacher of Righteousness; so Enoch being a Prophet, was not only exemplary in his Life, but also severely reprov'd the Wickedness of that Age, by his Word.

Ver. 24. And Enoch walked with God.] Persevered in that Course before-mentioned, to the End of his Days.

And was not.] He doth not say, that he died, (as he doth of the rest in this Chapter, both before and after) but that he was not any longer among Men in this World. For,

God took him.] Translated him to another place. Which plainly signifies the different manner of his leaving this World; insomuch that the Apostle saith, he did not see death, Heb. xi. 5. Which confutes the Conceit of Aben Ezra, and R. Solomon, and others, who would have this Word took to signify, that he was snatched away by an untimely Death. Contrary to the Opinion of their other better Authors, particularly Manachem; who in his Commentary on this Place saith; that God took from Enoch his bodily Cloaths, and gave him spiritual Raiment.

But whether he was translated we are not told. The Author of the Book of Ecclesiasticus, Chap. xlv. (according to the vulgar Translation) saith into Paradise. And upon this Supposition, the Æthiopick Interpreter hath added these words to the Text; God translated him into Paradise, as Ludolphus observes, L. iii. Commentar. in Æthiop. Hist. chap. 5. n. 40. And accordingly we find in the Calendar of that Church, a Festival upon July 25. called, Ascension of Enoch into Heaven, (for they were not so foolish as to understand by Paradise, a place upon Earth, but a heavenly Mansion) unto which he was advanced, δι' ἄρταν ἀριστῆς πλείωσιν, (as Eusebius, speaks, L. vii. Præpar. Evang. cap. 8.) because of his consummate Virtue.

And it is no unreasonable Conjecture, That God was graciously pleased to take him unto himself himself at this Time, to support and comfort Mankind in their State of Mortality, (Adam the Father of them all, being dead not above fifty-seven Years before) with the hope of a better Life, in the other World. For which Reason it is not improbable, that he was translated in some such visible manner, as Elijah afterwards was, by a glorious Appearance of the SHE-CHINAH, from whence some heavenly Ministers were sent to carry him above.

Ver. 25. Begat Lamech.] The same Name with one of Cain's Posterity, iv. 18. But, as he was of another Race, so he was the Grand-Child and the Father of the best Men in those Days, viz. Enoch and Noah.

Ver. 27. All the Days of Methuselah, &c.] What was wanting in the Days of his Father, God, in some sort, made up in his Age: Which was extended to the longest Term of all other Men. He died in the very Year of the Deluge, according to the import of his Name. See ver. 21.

Ver. 29. He called his Name Noah.] Which signifies Rest; or Refreshment, which proceeds from Rest and Quiet. Because, says he,

This same shall comfort us, concerning our work and toil of our hands.] He expected, some think, that he should be the blessed Seed, promised iii. 15. Or, that it should spring immediately from him. But the last words, toil of our Hands, seem to import some inferior Consolation, which he expected from Noah: And the Hebrew Interpreters generally expound it thus, He shall make our Labour in tilling the Earth, more easy and less toil-some to us. Which agrees to what follows.

Because of the Ground which the LORD hath cursed.] There was a general Curse upon it, for the Sin of Adam; and a particular upon some part of it, for the Sin of Cain: Now God, he foretels, would take them both off in great measure; and bless the Earth to the Posterity of this same Man: who perfected the Art of Husbandry, and found out fitter Instruments for plowing the Earth than had been known before. When Men being chiefly employed in digging and throwing up the Earth with their own Hands, their Labour was more difficult: Which now is much abated, because the Pains lie more upon Beasts than upon Men. And indeed Noah is called, ix. 20. Isch baadamah, a Man of the Ground (which we translate an Husbandman) one that improved Agriculture, as other famous Men have done Pasturage, and found out other Arts, iv. 20. &c.

In the same place also (ix. 20.) we read that Noah planted a Vineyard: With respect to which, if he was the first Inventor of making Wine, he might well be said here, to comfort them concerning their work and toil of their hands: Wine chearing the Heart, and reviving the Spirits of Men, that are spent with Labour.

But if the last Words of this Verse be expounded of the LORD's cursing the Ground, by sending a Flood upon it, as Enoch had foretold; then Noah is here called their Comforter, with Respect to his being the Restorer of the World, after it had been dispeopled by that Inundation. And so Jacobus Capellus, not unreasonably interprets them to have relation to both Curses, à maledictione, quam Terræ inflixit, & inflikturus est Deus. He shall give Men rest from the Curse which God hath inflicted, and intends further to inflict upon the Earth. Histor. Sacra & Exot. ad A. M. 1053.

Ver. 32. And Noah was five hundred Years old.] See ver. 6. where I have said enough, to shew it is not reasonable to think he had no Children till this Age of his Life.

And Noah begat Shem, Ham, and Japhet.] Here ends the Line of Adam, before the Flood. For tho' these three were married, as appears (vii. 13.) before the Flood came; yet they either had no Children, or they did not live: For they carried none with them into the Ark.

It doth not follow that Shem was the eldest of these three, because he is here and every where else in this Book, mentioned first: For I shall show plainly in its due Place that Japhet was the eldest. (x. 21.) Scaliger indeed would have this a settled Rule, that, Hunc Ordinem Filii in Scriptura habent, quem illis natura dedit. That Children are placed in Scripture, according to the Order which Nature hath given them. But it is apparent from many Instances, that the Scripture hath regard to their Dignity otherways, and not to the Order of their Birth. As Abraham is mentioned before Nabor and Haran, merito excellentiæ, with respect to his excellence (as St. Austin speaks) to which God raised him, tho' he was not the eldest Son of Terah, Gen. xi. 28. Thus Jacob is mentioned before Esau, Mal. i. 2. and Isaac before Ismael, 1 Chron. i. 28. Thus Shem's Eminence in other Respects placed him before Japhet, to whom he was inferior in the Order of Nature: As appears even from their Genealogy both in Gen. x. and 1 Chron. i. where Shem's Posterity are placed below those of both his other Brothers.

CHAP. VI.

Ver. 1. When Men began to multiply.] To increase exceeding fast; for they were multiplied before, but not so as to fill the Earth. Or the Word Men may be limited to the Children of Cain, (See ver. 2.) who now began to be very numerous.

And Daughters were born to them.] In great numbers: For Daughters no doubt they had before; but now so many more Daughters than Sons, that they had not Matches for all: No, tho' we should suppose they followed the Steps of Lamech, (iv. 19.) and took more Wives than one.

Ver. 2. The Sons of God.] There are two famous Interpretations of these Words, (besides that of some of the Ancients, who took them for Angels.) Some understand by the Sons of God, the great Men, Nobles, Rulers, and Judges, whether they were of the Family of Seth or of Cain: And so indeed the word Elohim signifies in many places, Exod. xxi. 6. xxii. 28, &c. and the ancient Greek Version, which Philo and St. Austin used, perhaps meant no more, where these Words are translated, οἱ ἄγγελοι τοῦ Θεοῦ, The Angels of God, his great Ministers in this World; who in after-times were mistaken for Angels in Heaven. These great Persons were taken with the Beauty of the Daughters of Men, i. e. of the meaner sort; (for so sometimes Men signifies, Psal. xlix. 2, &c.) and took by Force and Violence, as many as they pleased; pleased; being so potent as to be able to do any thing with Impunity. For they that should have given a good Example, and punished Vice, were the great Promoters of it.

But there are other ancient Interpreters, and most of the later, who by the Sons of God understand the Posterity of Seth, who were the Worshippers of the true God. iv. ult.

They saw the Daughters of Men.] Converſed with the Daughters of Cain. So Tho. Aquinas himſelf interprets it, Part i. Q. 51. Art. 3. ad 6.

That they were fair.] Being exceedingly taken with their Beauty.

And they took them Wives.] Made Matches with them, and perhaps took more than one a-piece.

Of all that they choſe.] Whomſoever they liked, (ſo the Word choſe is uſed in many Places, Pſal. xxv. 12, &c.) without regard to any thing elſe but their Beauty. Some of the Hebrews by Daughters underſtand Virgins, which they diſtinguiſh from Naiim, Wives or married Women; whom they alſo took and abuſed as they pleaſed. But there is no Evidence of this. The plain Senſe is, that they who had hitherto kept themſelves (unleſs it were ſome few, See Verſe 15.) unmingled with the Poſterity of Cain, according to a ſolemn Charge which their godly Forefathers had given them, were now joined to them in Marriage, and made one People with them. Which was the greater Crime, if we can give any credit to what an Arabick Writer ſaith, (mentioned firſt by Mr. Selden in his Book de Diis Syris, Cap. 3. Proleg. & de Jure N. & G. L. v. C. 8. f. 578.) that the Children of Seth had ſworn by the Blood of Abel, they would never leave the mountainous Country which they inhabited, to go down into the Valley where the Children of Cain lived. The ſame Author (viz. Patricides, with Elmacinus alſo) ſays, that they were inveigled to break this Oath, by the Beauty of Naamah before-mentioned, iv. 22. and the Muſick of her Brother Jubal. For the Cainites ſpent their Time in Feaſting, Muſick, Dancing, and Sports: Which allured the Children of Seth to come down and marry with them. Whereby all manner of Impurity, Impiety, Idolatry, Rapine and Violence filled the whole Earth, and that with Impunity, as Eusebius obſerves, L. vii. Præpar. c. 8. This Moses here takes notice of, that he might give the reaſon, why the whole Poſterity of Seth, even thoſe who ſprang from that holy Man Enoch (except Noah and his Family) were overflown with the Deluge, as well as the Race of Cain: Becauſe they had defiled themſelves with their curſed Affinity, and thereby were corrupted with their wicked Manners.

Ver. 3. And the LORD ſaid.] Reſolved with himſelf.

My Spirit.] Either ſpeaking by his Prophets, ſuch as Enoch had been, and Noah was: Or working inwardly in all Mens Hearts.

Shall not always ſtrive with Man.] Chide and reprove them, and thereby endeavour to bring them to Repentance; but proceed to puniſh them. There are ſeveral other Interpretations, which may be ſeen in all Commentators: Which to me ſeem more forced than this.

For that he alſo is Fleſh.] For that beſides his wicked actions, he is grown wholly fleſhly in his Inclinations and Affections. He favours nothing but carnal Things; and conſequently is incurable. Or as others expound it, even the beſt of them (the Children of Seth) are become fleſhly Men.

Yet his days ſhall be an hundred and twenty years.] I will not deſtroy Mankind preſently; but have Patience with them ſo long, that it may appear I would willingly have ſaved them.

Ver. 4. There were Giants in the Earth.] Men of vaſt Stature and Strength, which tempted them to oppreſs others by Violence: For ſo ſeveral of the Ancients tranſlate the Hebrew Word Nephilin by Blawit, Violent Men, who carried all before them by main force: Tyrants who filled the World with Rapines and Murders, and all manner of Wickedneſs, having Society with the Devil, (as Eusebius underſtands it, L. viii. Præpar. c. 8.) in infernal Arts, which they introduced. Joſephus calls them ὄλεις καὶ πανὶ ὁπορώπιος καλῆς, inſolent Contemnors of all the Laws of God and Man. Which made Origen look upon them only as impious Atheiſts: But, no doubt, the extraordinary Bulk and Strength of their Body is alſo intended.

In thoſe days.] i. e. Before the Sons of God married with the Daughters of Men. For theſe Giants were produced by thoſe who went down and mixed with the Poſterity of Cain in the Days of Jared; As both Elmacinus and Patricides underſtand it.

And alſo after that, when the Sons of God came in to the Daughters of Men, and they bare Children to them.] The Word Children is not in the Hebrew: and it better agrees with what goes before to tranſlate it, even they bare Giants unto them. Beſides thoſe which were before, there was a new Race of Gigantick Perſons begot by the Sons of God on the Daughters of Men.

The ſame became mighty Men.] Of great Power, as well as Strength of Body.

Which were of old.] This may refer either to what goes before, or to that which follows.

Men of renown.] Of great Undertakings, and adventurous Actions: Which got them a great Name in ancient Time. But they were no leſs famous for their Wickedneſs, than for their valourous and great Exploits; for by their means all Mankind were over-run with Impiety, as it follows in the next Verſe.

Ver. 5. God ſaw the wickedneſs of Man that it was great, &c.] All ſorts of Wickedneſs in an high degree overſpread the whole Earth.

And that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart, &c.] And that there were no hopes of their amendment; their very minds being ſo ſet upon Wickedneſs, that they thought of nothing elſe but how to ſatiſfy their Luſts. In the Margin it is, their whole Imagination, i. e. all the deſigns and Contrivances of all the Men of that Age, and this continually, Day and Night, were only Rapine, Filthineſs, and all manner of Evil.

Ver. 6. And God repented, &c.] God can neither properly repent, nor be grieved: But ſuch Expreſſions ſignify he reſolved to do, as Men do; who when they repent of any thing, endeavour to undo it. And ſo it here follows,

Ver. 7. The LORD ſaid, I will deſtroy Man whom I have created, &c.] Tho' they be my Creatures, I am reſolved to have no Pity upon them, but to aboliſh them, and all Things elſe upon the Earth. For that Sort of Punishment which God intended, would in its own Nature sweep all away.

For it repenteth me that I have made them.] See ver. 6. This represents how highly God was offended, that he would leave nothing of the old World remaining, but only to preserve the Seed of a new one.

Ver. 8. But Noah found grace, &c.] This single Person God resolved to spare, because (as it follows) he continued untainted in the midst of an universal Contagion.

Ver. 9. These are the generations of Noah.] An Account of his Family. Or, as Paulus Fagius (who upon xxxvii. 2. expounds the Word we translate Generations, to signify Events) These are the things which befel Noah and his Family. Which way soever we expound this, the next Words are inserted by a Parentesis as a Character of Noah, who was,

A just Man.] Free from that Violence, which the rest committed.

And perfect in his generations.] Not guilty of any of those other Sins, which every where abounded.

And Noah walked with God.] Not only did well, but was addicted (as we speak) to it; continuing constant in the Way of Righteousness.

Ver. 10. And Noah begat three Sons, &c.] Vid. x. 1.

Ver. 11. The Earth also was corrupted before God.] The Jewish Doctors say, That by corruption is always understood either filibines (or forbidden mixtures) or else Idolatry. Some take the first to be here meant, and then the next words, Filled with Violence, denote their perverting of Justice, taking Bribes, and oppressing Men by open force. But others think it better by corruption to understand Idolatry: And then this Generation is accused of the two highest Crimes that can be committed; the one of which is between Man and his Neighbour, and the other between Man and God. The highest Degree of the former is, when they that fit in Judgment make Unrighteous Decrees: Which R. Solomon thinks is principally meant in these Words, the Earth was filled with Violence. See Mr. Selden, L. v. de Jure N. & G. c. 9. later end. However we understand the Words, they point at some special enormous Sins, which are only comprehended in general Words before.

Ver. 12. God looked upon the Earth, &c.] No Fruits of God's Long-suffering appearing, he resolved to visit Men for their Wickedness: Which had rather increased than been lessened, by his forbearing them One hundred and twenty Years: Which now, we must suppose, drew near to an end, ver. 13. The Observation of some of the Hebrew Doctors perhaps is too curious, which is this: That the Name of Jehovah, which we translate LORD, is used, ver. 3. where the first mention is made of this Matter; for it betokens the Clemency of the Divine Majesty; till the One hundred and twenty Years were out, and then Moses uses the Word Elohim, which is a Name of Judgment; the Time of which was come.

For all Flesh, i. e. all Men, had corrupted his way upon earth.] Wholly departed from the Rule of Righteousness; or had made their Way of Life abominable throughout the whole World.

Ver. 13. The end of all flesh is come before me.] I am determined to make an end of, i. e. to destroy, all Mankind shortly. So it follows,

I will destroy them with the Earth.] i. e. With all the Beasts and the Fruits of the Earth. Or, from the Earth, as it is in the Margin.

Ver. 14. Make thee an Ark.] This Vessel was not in the Form of one of our Ships, or Boats: For it was not made sharp forward to cut the Waves, but broad like a Chest; and therefore had a flat bottom, with a Cover or a Roof. We do not find it had any Rudder, being steered by Angels.

Of Gopher-Wood.] There are various Opinions about Gopher, which some take for Ceder, others for Pine, &c. but our learned Nic. Fuller in his Miscellanies hath observed, that it is nothing else but that which the Greeks call κυπάρισσος, the Cypress-Tree. For taking away the Termination, Cupar and Gopher differ very little in their Sound. Bochartus hath confirmed this, and shown that no Country abounds so much with this Wood, as that Part of Affyria which was about Babylon: Where Arrianus says, Alexander built a Navy of these Trees, τέτων ἰδὺν τῶν δένδρων ἐνμελειαν ἰδὺν ἐν τῇ χερσὶ τῆς Ἀσσυρίαν, &c. (L. vii.) for there is great Plenty of these Trees alone in the Country of Affyria; but of other fit for making Ships, there is great Scarcity. Strabo saith the same, L. xvi. from whence Bochart thinks it probable, that Noah and his Children lived in this Country before the Flood; for it is not likely that such a vast Bulk as the Ark, was carried far from the Place where it was made: And the Mountains of Ararat, which he will have to be the Gordiean Mountains, are upon the Borders of Affyria Northward; which way the Wind blew (if there were any) in all likelihood; the Rain coming from the South Sea. L. i. Phaleg. c. 4.

Rooms shalt thou make.] Little Cabins or Cells; to sever the Beasts from the Birds; the clean Beasts from the unclean; and to preserve their several sorts of Food.

And shall pitch it, &c.] So the Arabick Translation expressly, pitch it with pitch. For the bitumen which was plentiful thereabouts (which others think is here meant) was of the same Nature, and served for the same use with Pitch: being very glutinous and tenacious, to keep Things close together. But not only the Chinks were filled with it; but the whole Body of the Ark seems to have been all over daubed with it.

Within.] To give a wholesome Scent, some think, among so many Beasts.

And without.] To make the Ark more glib and slippery, to swim in the Water more easily.

Ver. 15. And this is the fashion, &c.] There are those who take these for Geometrical Cubits; every one of which contains Six of the common. But there is no need of such: For taking them for common Cubits, containing each only one Foot and an half, it is demonstrable there might be room enough in the Ark, for all Sorts of Beasts and Birds, with Noah's Family, and their necessary Provision. See ver. 20.

Ver. 16. A Window shalt thou make to the Ark.] To let in the Light into the several Apartments: For which should we conceive, that one great Window might be so contrived as to be sufficient; I do not see how that would exclude many many little ones, here and there, for greater Convenience.

And in a Cubit shalt thou finish it above.] That is, finish the Ark; which had a Cover, it is plain from viii. 13. and was made shelving, that the Rain might slide off.

And the Door of the Ark shalt thou set in the side thereof.] But on what side, or whereabouts on the side, is not certain. It is probable on one of the long sides, and in the middle of it. Patricides calls it the Eastern side.

With lower, second, and third Stories, &c.] That Arabian Author, and Pirke Eliezer (Cap. 23.) place Noah and his Family in the uppermost Story, the Birds in the middle, and the Beasts in the lowest. But they forgot to leave a place for their Provision: And therefore, they make a better Distribution, who think the Beasts were bestowed in the lower Story, and that the third served for the Birds, with Noah and his Family: The second, between them both, being left for the Stores that were to be laid in of Meat and Drink for them all. The creeping things, some think, might well live in the space between the lower Story and the bottom of the Ark.

Ver. 17. And behold I, even I, do bring a Flood of Waters, &c.] i. e. They shall unavoidably be all swept away; for I my self will bring a Deluge upon them: Not an ordinary Flood, but one of which I will appear to be the Author. All Nations, it plainly appears by such Records as remain, had heard something of this Flood. Lucian, in his Dea Syria, tells a long Story of it out of the Archives of Hierapolis very like to this of Moses, only puts the Name of Deucalion instead of Noah. Plutarch mentions the Dove sent out of the Ark. And so doth Abydenus, mentioned by Eusebius, (L. ix. Præpar. Evang. c. 12.) speak of Birds in general, which being sent out, returned again to the Ship, finding no place to rest in but there only. Josephus mentions a great many more; not only Berosus the Chaldean, but Hieronymus Ægyptius who wrote the Ancient Phœnician History, Mnaseas, Nicholaus Damascenus, with many others. St. Cyril also, L. i. against Julian, quotes a Passage out of Alexander Polyhistor, wherein is part of the Story; only he calls Noah by the Name of Xisuthros, (as Abydenus calls him Seisthrus) in the Dialect of the Assyrians, as some conjecture. And now it appears that the Americans have had a Tradition of it, (as credible Authors, Acosta, Herrera, and others inform us) which saith, The whole Race of Mankind was destroyed by the Deluge, except some few that escaped. They are the Words of Augustin Corata, concerning the Peruvian Tradition. And Lupus Gomara saith the same from those of Mexico. And if we can believe Mari. Martinus's History of China, there is the like among the People of that Country.

Ver. 18. And with thee will I establish my Covenant.] I will make good the Promise I have made thee, to preserve thee and all that are with thee in the Ark. For so the word Covenant is sometimes used: And it is reasonable to think God made him such a Promise; which is plainly enough implied in ver. 8. Or, otherwise, we must understand this of the Covenant about the promised Seed, iii. 15. which he saith he will stablish with him; and consequently preserve him from perishing.

Thou, thy Sons, and thy Sons Wives with thee.] This Passage shows the Ark was not an hundred Years in building, as some have imagined: For none of these Sons were born an hundred Years before the Flood; and we must allow some Years for their growth, till they were fit to take Wives. Compare v. 32. with vii. 6. And if we observe how Sem, tho' he had a Wife before the Flood, yet had no Children, (for Arphaxad his first Child was not born till two Years after the Flood, xi. 10.) it will incline us to think, that Noah received the Command for building the Ark, not long before the Flood came.

Ver. 19. Two of every sort.] i. e. Of unclean Beasts, as it is explained, vii. 2.

They shall be Male and Female.] To preserve the Species. Lucian, in his Book of the Syrian Goddess, where he describes the Flood, saith, all Creatures went into the Ark, ἑξ ἑκὺντα, by pairs.

Ver. 20. Of Fowls after their kind, &c.] In such Numbers as is directed afterward, vii. 3. Which seems to some to be so very great, there being many sorts of living Creatures, that they could not possibly be crowded into the Ark, together with Food sufficient for them. But such Persons never distinctly considered such things as these. First, That all those which could live in the Water are excepted: And so can several Creatures besides Fishes. Secondly, That of the Species of Beasts including also Serpents, there are not certainly known and described above an hundred and fifty, (as Mr. Ray hath observed) and the Number of Birds about five hundred. Thirdly, That there are but a few Species of very vast Creatures, such as Elephants, Horses, &c. And, Fourthly, That Birds generally are of so small a bulk, that they take up but a little room. And, Fifthly, That if we suppose creeping Insects ought to be included, they take up less, tho' very numerous. And, Lastly, That less Provision would serve them all, when they were shut up close, and did not spend themselves by Motion; and besides, were in a continual confused Agitation, which pall'd their Appetites. From all which, and many more Considerations, it is easy to demonstrate there was more than room enough, for all sorts of Creatures that God commanded to be brought into the Ark; and for their Food, during the time they stayed in it.

Two of every sort shall come unto thee, &c.] In the foregoing Verse he had said, Two of every sort shalt thou bring into the Ark. Which he might think impossible; for by what means should he get them all together? Therefore here it is explained in these words, they shall come unto thee; by the Care of God who made them, and moved them to it. R. Eliezer (c. 23. of his Pirke) is commonly censured for saying, The Angels that govern every Species of Creatures brought them thither. But (setting aside the Opinion of Angels peculiarly presiding over every kind of Creature) I see no Incongruity in affirming that God, by the Ministry of his Angels, brought them to the Ark; but it is rather agreeable to the Holy Scriptures, which represent the Divine Majesty, as employing their Service in all Affairs here below.

Ver. 21. Take unto thee of all Food that is eaten, &c.] Either by Man or Beast; Food suitable to every Creature. Among which, tho' there be many that feed on Flesh; yet other Food, as several Histories testify, will go down with them, when they are accustomed to it. See Philoftratus, L. v. c. 15. Tzetes Chil. v. Hist. 9. Sulpit. Severus, De Monacho Thebaid. Dial. i. c. 7.

Ver. 22. Thus did Noah, according to all that God commanded him, &c.] i. e. He made the Ark of such Dimensions, and laid up Provisions for all Creatures, as he was directed. This he did when the hundred and twenty Years drew towards an end. See Ver. 18.

C H A P. VII.

Ver. 1. COME thou and all thy House into the Ark.] When the Time of God's Patience was expired, he required him to enter into the Ark which he had prepared; and unto which all sorts of Creatures were gathered.

For I have seen thee, &c.] I have observed thee sincerely obedient when all the rest of the World were impious.

Ver. 2. Of every clean Beast, &c.] The Distinction of Beasts clean and unclean being made by the Law of Moses, hath given some a colour to say he wrote this Book after they came out of Egypt and received the Law; which made him speak in that Style. But it may be answered to this, That tho' with respect to Men's Food the Distinction of clean and unclean Creatures was not before the Law, yet some were accounted fit for Sacrifice, and others not fit from the Beginning. And then clean Beasts, in this place, are such as are not rapacious; which were not to be offered unto God. In short, the Rite of Sacrificing being before the Flood, this Difference of Beasts was also before it. The only Question is how Men came to make this Difference? Some imagine that they considered the Nature of Beasts, and by common Reason determined that ravenous Creatures were unfit for Sacrifice: But it is more likely that they had Directions from God for this as they had for Sacrificing. Which, tho' they be not recorded, yet I think, are rather to be supposed, than imagine Men were left in such Matters to their own Discretion. Abarbinel indeed here says, That Noah out of his profound Wisdom discerned clean from unclean: And if he had stopped here, and not added, That he discerned the Difference from their Nature, he had said the truth: For, he being a Prophet, may be thought to have had Instructions from above about such Matters; tho' others, who first were taught to sacrifice, had them before him.

By Sevens.] Seven Couple, it is most probable, that they might have sufficient for Sacrifice when they came out of the Ark, and if need were, for Food if other Provision did not hold out: At least for Food, after the Flood, when God enlarged their former Grant, ix. 3.

Ver. 4. For yet seven Days, &c.] So much time he gave him for the disposing himself, and all things else in the Ark.

Ver. 5. And Noah did according unto all that the LORD commanded him.] He had said the same before, vi. 22. with respect to the Preparation of the Ark and Provision of Food; and now repeats here again with respect to his entering into it himself with all other Creatures: For so it follows, ver. 7, 8, &c.

Ver 6. Noah was six hundred Years old, &c.] Current, as we speak, not complete, as appears by comparing this with ix. 28, 29. where he is said to have lived three hundred and fifty Years after the Flood, and in all nine hundred and fifty: Whereas it should have been nine hundred fifty one if he had been full six hundred Years old when the Flood began.

Ver. 10. And it came to pass after seven Days, &c.] As he had said, ver. 4.

Ver. 11. In the second Month.] Of the Year, not of the six hundredth Year of Noah's Life; i. e. in October; for anciently the Year began in September: Which was changed among the Israelites, in memory of their coming out of Egypt, into March, Exod. xii. 2.

The seventeenth Day of the Month.] Which was the Beginning of our November.

All the Fountains of the great deep were broken up, &c.] Here are two Causes assigned of the Deluge: First, The breaking up the Fountains of the great Deep. And, Secondly, The opening of the Windows of Heaven.] By the great Deep, is meant those Waters that are contained in vast Quantities within the Bowels of the Earth; Which being pressed upward by the falling down of the Earth, or some other Cause unknown to us, gushed out violently at several Parts of the Earth, where they either found or made a vent. For that's meant by breaking up the Fountains of the great Deep: The great Holes, or rather Gaps that were made in the Earth; at which those subterraneous Waters burst out. This joined with the continual Rains for forty Days together might well make such a Flood as is here described. For the Rain came down not in ordinary Showers, but in Floods; which Moses calls opening the Windows, or Flood-gates of Heaven: And the LXX translate Cataracts. Which they can best understand who have seen those Fallings of Waters in the Indies called Spouts; where Clouds do not break into Drops, but fall with a terrible Violence in a Torrent. In short, it is evident from this History, that the Waters did once cover the Earth, (we know not how deep) so that nothing of the Earth could be seen, till God separated them, and raised some into Clouds, and made the rest fall into Channels which were made for them, and commanded dry Land to appear, Gen. i. 2, 7, 10. Therefore it is no wonder if these Waters were raised up again by some means or other, to cover the Earth as before, especially when the Waters above the Firmament came down to join with those below, as they did at the Beginning.

This some wise Heathen look'd upon as a possible thing. For Seneca treating of that fatal Day (as he calls it, L. iii. Nat. Quest. c. 27.) when the Deluge shall come, (for he fancied it still future) questions how it may come to pass: Whether by the force of the Ocean overflowing the Earth; or by perpetual Rains without intermission; or by the swelling of Rivers, and the opening of new Fountains; for there shall not be one Cause alone of so great a Mischief; but all these things concur, concur, uno agmine ad exitium humani generis, in one Troop to the Destruction of Mankind. Which last Resolution, he thinks, is the Truth, both there and in the last Chapter of that Book; where he hath these remarkable Words: Where hath not Nature disposed Moisture to attack us on all sides when it pleases? Immanes sunt in abdito lacus, &c. 'There are huge Lakes which we do not see; much of the Sea that lies hidden; many Rivers that slide in secret: So that there may be Causes of a Deluge on all sides, when some Waters flow in under the Earth; others flow round about it, which being long pent up overwhelm it; and Rivers join with Rivers, Pools with Pools, &c. And as our Bodies sometimes dissolve into Sweat, so the Earth shall melt, and without the help of other Causes shall find in itself what will drown it, &c. There being on a sudden, every where, openly, and secretly, from above, and from beneath, an Eruption of Waters.' Which Words are written as if they had been directed to make a Commentary upon Moses.

Ver. 12. And the Rain was upon the Earth forty Days, &c.] It continued raining so long without any Intermission.

Ver. 13. In the self-same Day, &c.] In that very Day, when the Rain began, did Noah and his Family, &c. finish their going into the Ark. Which could not be done in a Day or two, but required a great deal of time; and now he had compleated it, the very last Creature being there bestowed: For it is likely he put in all other things first, and then went in himself with his Wife and Children and their Wives; who were no sooner entred, but the Waters brake in upon the Earth from beneath, and came down pouring from above.

Ver. 16. The LORD shut him in.] Or shut the Door after him; closed it so fast that the Waters could not enter, tho' it was not pitched as the rest of the Ark. How this was done we need not enquire: It is likely by an Angelical Power, which, I supposed before, conducted the several Creatures into the Ark.

Ver. 17. And the Flood was forty Days upon the Earth, &c.] After forty Days Rain, the Waters were so high, that they bare up the Ark so that it did not touch the Earth.

Ver. 18. And the Waters prevailed.] By more Rain which fell after the forty Days, the Inundation grew strong and mighty, (as the Hebrew word signifies) so strong, that the Waters bore down Houses and Trees, as some expound it.

And were increased greatly.] He said before, ver. 17. they were increased, but now, that they were greatly increased: Which must be by more Rain still falling on the Earth, tho' not in such uninterrupted Showers as during the forty Days.

And the Ark went upon the Face of the Waters.] Moved from place to place as the Waters drove it.

Ver. 19. And the Waters prevailed exceedingly upon the Earth.] This is an higher Expression than before, signifying their rising still to a greater pitch by continued Rains.

And all the high Hills that were under the whole Heaven were covered.] There were those anciently, and they have their Successors now, who imagined the Flood was not universal, ἀλλ' οὐ ὅτι οἱ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, but only there where Men then dwelt; as the Author of the Questions

Ad Oribodoxos tells us, Q. 34. but they are confuted by these Words, and by other Passages, which say all Flesh died. For the Truth is, the World was then fully peopled, as it is now; and not only inhabited in those Parts of it, as may be easily demonstrated, if Men would but consider that in the space of one thousand six hundred and fifty six Years, when Men lived so long as they then did, their Increase could not but be six times more than hath been in the space of five thousand Years since Mens Lives are shortned, as we now see them. Therefore it is a strange Weakness to fancy, that only Palastine, Syria, or Mesopotamia, or some such Country was drowned by the Flood, no more of the Earth being then inhabited: For those Countries could not have held the fortieth Part of the Inhabitants which were produced between the Creation and the Flood; no, all the Earth was not more than sufficient to contain them; as many have clearly proved.

Plato says, there were in his days, Παλαιοὶ λόγοι, ancient Traditions, which affirm'd there had been sundry Destructions of Mankind by Floods, as well as other ways: In which βραχὺ π τῶν ἀνθρώπων λείπειναι γίνετο, a small parcel of Mankind were left. And particularly he saith concerning Floods, That they were so great, that only σμικρὰ ζώοντα, some very little Sparks of Mankind were saved, and those, upon the Tops of Mountains: And the like he saith of Beasts, That σπάνια πάντα, very few of them were left to support the Life of Mankind, L. iii. De Legib. p. 677. Edit. Seran. But this appears to have been an imperfect Tradition, the higher Mountains having been covered with the Waters, as well as the low Countries; and that, all the Earth over. Which need not seem strange, if we consider what was said before upon ver. 11. And withal observe that the Diameter of the Earth being seven thousand Miles, and consequently from the Superficies to the Center, no less than three thousand five hundred Miles, it is not incredible, (as Sir W. Raleigh discourses, L. i. c. 7. §. 6.) that there was Water enough in the great Deep, which being forced up from thence, might overflow the loftiest Mountains; especially when Water came pouring down also from above so fast that no Words can express it. For there is no Mountain above thirty Miles high, upright; which thirty Miles being found in the Depths of the Earth one hundred and sixteen times, why should we think it incredible that the Waters in the Earth (three thousand five hundred Miles deep) might be well able to cover the space of thirty Miles in height? It would help Mens Unbelief, if they would likewise consider the vast Inundations which are made yearly in Egypt only from the Rains that fall in Æthiopia: And the like Overflows yearly in America of the great River Orinocoque, whereby many Islands and Plains, at other times inhabited, are laid twenty Foot under Water, between May and September.

Ver. 20. Fifteen Cubits upwards did the Waters prevail, &c.] Moses doth not here plainly say, that the Waters prevailed fifteen Cubits above the highest Mountains; tho' I do not see but there might be Water enough heaped up by the fore-mentioned means to cover them so high; and the whole Verse be thus interpreted, The Waters prevailed prevailed fifteen Cubits upwards after the Mountains were covered. Otherwise, by the high Hills in the Verse before, we must understand only such single Hills as are in several Countries; and by Mountains in this Verse, those long Ridges of Hills (such as Caucasus and Taurus, &c.) which stretch themselves many hundreds of Miles thro' a great Part of the Earth, See viii. 5.

Ver. 24. And the Waters prevailed upon the Earth an hundred and fifty Days.] These Words seem to me to import, That whatsoever short Intermissions there might be, yet the Rain continued an hundred and fifty Days. Otherwise, it is hard to explain how the Waters increased more and more, as it is said, ver. 17, 18, 19. Besides, had the Rain ended, as we commonly suppose, at forty Days end, the Waters could not have prevailed an hundred and fifty Days, but would have sunk much before that time by reason of the Declivity of the Earth: And yet they were so far from falling, that (as Mr. Ray hath observed in his pious and learned Discourse of the Dissolution of the World) the tops of Mountains were not seen till the beginning of the tenth Month; that is, till two hundred and seventy Days were passed.

C H A P. VIII.

Ver. 1. AND God remembred Noah, &c.] Took compassion upon him, and heard his Prayers, which we may well suppose he made for himself and for all Creatures that were with him. Thus the word remember is used, xix. 29. xxx. 22. The Hebrew Doctors here again took notice of the word Elohim, (see vi. 12.) which is the Name for Judges; and observe that even God's Justice was turned to Mercy. Justice itself was satisfied, as Sol. Jarchi expresses it.

And God made a Wind to pass over the Earth, &c.] Some gather from hence, that during the fall of the Rain, there was no Storm or violent Wind at all, but the Rain fell down-right. And consequently the Ark was not driven far from the Place where it was built; it having no Masts or Sails, but moving as a Hulk or Body of a Ship without a Rudder upon a calm Sea. Philo indeed (in his Book De Abrahamo) gives a quite different Description of the Deluge; representing the incessant Showers to have been accompanied with dreadful Thunder and Lightning, Storms and Tempests. But there is not a word in this Story to countenance it.

This Wind, it is very probable, was the North-Wind which is very drying, and drives away Rain, (Prov. xxv. 23.) which came perhaps out of the South, as I have said upon iv. 14. Thus Ovid represents it in the Flood of Deucalion, where he saith, Jupiter Nubila disjecit, nimisque Aquilone remotis, &c.

And the Waters asswaged.] This drying Wind, and the Sun, which now began to shine with great Power, made the Waters fall. For, if the Second Month, when the Flood began, was part of our October and November, then the Flood abated (after an hundred and fifty Days) in the Beginning of May, when the Summer came on apace.

Ver. 2. The Fountains also of the Deep.] There was no farther irruption or boiling up of the Water out of the Bowels of the Earth.

And the Rain from Heaven was restrained.] So that the Rains ceased at the end of an hundred and fifty Days.

Ver. 3. And the Waters returned from off the Earth continually, &c.] The Waters rowling to and fro by the Wind, fell by little and little; and after the end of the hundred and fifty Days began to decrease. So the Vulgar Latin well translates the latter end of this Verse, were abated, i. e. began sensibly to decrease.

Ver. 4. And the Ark rested in the seventh Month, &c.] Of the Year, not of the Flood.

Upon the Mountains of Ararat.] i. e. Upon one of the Mountains, as xix. 29. God overbrow the Cities in which Lot dwelt, i. e. in one of which he dwelt, Judg. xii. 7. Jephtha was buried in the Cities of Gilead; i. e. in one of the Cities. For there was no one Mountain called by this Name of Ararat; but it belonged to a long Ridge of Mountains like the Alps or Pyrenean, which are Names appertaining, not to one, but to all. And Sir W. Raleigh, I think, truly judges that all the long Ridges of Mountains which run thro' Armenia, Mesopotamia, Assyria, Media, Susiana, &c. i. e. from Cilicia to Parapontus, are called by Moses Ararat, as by Pliny they are called Taurus. And that Author thinks the Ark settled in some of the Eastern Parts of Taurus, because Noah planted himself in the East after the Flood, (and it is likely did not travel far from the Place where the Ark rested) as appears, he thinks, from Gen. xi. 2. where we read his Posterity, when they began to spread, went Westward, and built Babel. The common Opinion is, that the Ark rested in some of the Mountains of Armenia, as the Vulgar Latin translates the word Ararat, i. e. saith St. Hierom, upon the highest part of Taurus. But Epiphanius (who was before him) saith, upon the Gordizean Mountains; and so Jonatban, and Onkelos, and the Nubienian Geographer; and many others mentioned by Bochartus, who is of this Opinion as having the most Authority: Many of which say, That some Relicks of the Ark were remaining upon these Mountains; which (as Theodoret observes upon Isa. xiv. 13.) were accounted the highest in the whole World. V. Phalæg. L. ii. c. 3. and L. iv. c. 38.

There were such Remainers of this History among the ancient Scythians, that in their Dispute with the Egyptians about their Antiquity, they argue it partly from hence, that if the Earth had ever been drowned, their Country must needs be first inhabited again, because it was first cleared from the Water; being the highest of all other Countries in the World.

Thus their Argument runs in Justin, L. ii. c. 1. where he hath given us a brief Relation of it, (if we had Trogus, whom he epitomizes, it's likely we should have understood their Tradition more perfectly) in this manner: If all Countries were anciently drowned in the Deep, profecto editissimam quamque partem, we must needs grant the highest parts of the Earth were first uncovered of the Waters that run down from them; and the sooner sooner any part was dry, the sooner were Animals there generated. Now Scythia is so much raised above all other Countries, that all the Rivers which rise there, run down into the Mæotis, and so into the Pontick and Egyptian Sea, &c.

Ver. 5. And the Waters decreased continually until the tenth Month.] For the Summer's Heat must needs very much dry them up when there was no Rain.

In the tenth Month were the tops of the Mountains seen.] This shows, the Mountain on which the Ark rested, was the highest, at least in those Parts; because it settled there above two Months before the tops of other Mountains were seen: And perhaps the Ark, by its weight, might settle there, while the top of that Mountain was covered with Water; which, it's possible, might not appear much before the rest.

Ver. 6. At the end of forty Days.] Forty Days after the tops of the Mountains appeared, i. e. on the eleventh Day of the eleventh Month; which was about the end of our July.

Ver. 7. He sent forth a Raven.] For the same end, no doubt, that the Dove was sent forth; to make discovery whether the Earth were dry: For, if it were, the smell of the dead Carcases, he knew, would allure it to fly far from the Ark: Which it did not, but only hover'd about it, as it follows in the next Words:

Went forth to and fro.] In the Hebrew more plainly, going forth, and returning. That is, it often went from the Ark, and as often returned to it. For after many flights, finding nothing but Water, it still betook itself unto the Ark; either entering into it, or sitting upon it; till at last the Waters being dried up, it returned no more; that is, Fifty Days after its first going forth, ver. 13. All which time it spent in going out and coming back. Bochart indeed approves of the Greek Version; which makes the Raven not to have returned: For which he gives some specious Reasons, (L. ii. c. 12. p. 2. Hierozoic.) and hath such of the Hebrews to countenance him, as R. Elieser, who saith, (Pirke, c. 23.) That the Raven found a Carcase of a Man upon a Mountain, and so would return no more.

But the next words (which in the Greek and Hebrew are both alike) confute this Translation.

Until the Waters were dried up from the Earth.] Which make this plain and easy Sense, in connexion with the foregoing, (as they run in the Hebrew) that while the Earth continued covered with Water, the Raven often flew from the Ark, but finding no convenient place to rest in, returned thither again till the Ground was dry. Whereas according to the Greek, we must suppose the Raven to have returned to the Ark, when the Waters were dried up from the Ground. Which is very absurd: For if it had sometime sat upon a Carcase floating in the Waters, before they were dried up, or upon the top of some Mountain which already appeared, what should make it return when all the Waters were gone every where, and not rather while they remained upon the Ground?

Ver. 8. Also he sent forth a Dove.] As a proper Creature to make further Discoveries: Being of a strong flight, loving to feed upon the Ground, and pick up Seeds, and constantly returning to its rest from the remotest places. These two Birds, (the Raven and the Dove) some imagine were sent forth upon one and the same Day, or but a Day between, as Bochartius conjectures. But this doth not agree with ver. 10. where it is said, Noah stayed yet other seven Days, and then sent out the Dove again: Which relates to seven Days preceding; which seem to have passed between the sending out of the Raven and of the Dove.

Ver. 9. The Dove found no rest, &c.] For tho' the tops of the Mountains appeared, yet they continued muddy, as some conceive; or, they were so far off, that the Dove could not easily reach them.

Ver. 10. And he stayed yet other seven Days.] It appears by this, that on the seventh Day Noah expected a Blessing rather than on another Day; it being the Day devoted from the Beginning to Religious Services. Which he having (it is likely) performed, thereupon sent out the Dove upon this Day, as he had done before, with hope of good Tidings.

Ver. 11. And, lo, in her Mouth was an Olive-leaf, (or Branch the word signifies) pluck'd off.] Bochart thinks the Dove brought this out of Affryia, which abounds with Olive-trees, and lay South of Ararat, the Wind then blowing towards that Country from the North. (See Hierozoic. L. i. c. 6. p. 2.) where he shows out of many Authors, that not only Olive-trees, but some other also, will live and be green under Water. All the difficulty is, how the Dove could break off a Branch (as the Vulgar translates it) from the Tree. But it is easily solved, if we allow, as I have said before, that now it was Summer-time, which brought new Shoots out of the Trees, that were easily cropt.

So he knew the Waters were abated.] The tops of Mountains were seen before, ver. 5. but now he understood the Waters had left the lower Grounds. Yet not so left them that the Dove would stay; the Earth, it is likely, remaining very chill.

Ver. 12. And he stayed yet other seven Days.] See Ver. 10. The Observation there being confirm'd by what is repeated here.

Returned not again to him any more.] There wanting neither Food, nor a Nest wherein to repose itself. By which Noah understood the Earth was not only dry and fit to be inhabited, but that it was not quite spoiled by the Flood, but would afford Food for all Creatures.

Ver. 13. Noah removed the Covering of the Ark.] Some of the Boards on the top. For he could see further by looking out there, than if he look'd out at the Door, or the Window, which gave him a prospect but one way.

The face of the Ground was dry.] Quite freed from Water, but yet so soft and muddy, that it was not fit to be inhabited, as appears by his staying till almost two Months more before he thought fit to go out. So the following Verse tells us.

Ver. 14. In the second Month, &c.] If their Months were such as ours, twelve of which make Three hundred sixty five Days, then Noah staid in the Ark a whole Year and ten Days, as appears by comparing this Verse with vii. 11. But if they were Lunar Months, which is most probable, then then he was in the Ark just one of our Years : Going out on the Three hundred and sixty fifth Day after his entrance into it.

Was the Earth dried.] Perfectly dried, so that no moisture remained ; and Grafs, it is likely, was sprung up for the Cattle.

It need not seem a wonder, that Moses gives so punctual and particular an Account of this whole matter, and of all that follows ; for he lived within Eight hundred Years of the Flood : And therefore might very well know what had been done within that Period, and easily tell how the World was peopled by the Posterity of Noah. Which could not but be fresh in memory, when Men lived so long ; that not much above three Generations had passed from the Flood to Moses. For Shem, who saw the Flood, was contemporary with Abraham ; as he was with Jacob ; whose great Grand-child was the Father of Moses.

Ver. 16. Go forth out of the Ark.] Tho' he saw the Earth was fit to be inhabited, yet he waited for God's Order to go out of the Ark, as he had it for his entering into it.

Thou and thy Wife, &c.] I do not think the Observation of some of the Jews is absurd, who by comparing this Verse with vii. 13. make this Collection : That while they were in the Ark the Men did not cohabit with their Wives, it being a time of great Affliction ; and therefore they kept asunder in separate Apartments. So R. Eliezer, in his Pirke, Cap. xxiii. where R. Levitus thus gathers it : When they went into the Ark it is said, vii. 13. Noah and his Sons entered, and then Noah's Wife and his Sons Wives : Behold, saith he, here the Men are put together, and the Women together. But when they come out it is here said, Go forth, thou and thy Wife, and thy Sons, and thy Sons Wives with thee ; lo, here they are coupled together, as before they were separated. And so we find them again, Verse 18. where it is said, Noah went forth and his Wife, &c.

Ver. 17. Bring forth every living Creature, &c. that they may breed, &c.] One would think by this, that no Creature bred in the Ark no more than Men, but now are sent forth to breed and multiply in the Earth.

Ver. 20. And Noah built an Altar to the LORD.] We never read of any built before this time : Tho' we may reasonably conclude there was an Altar upon which Cain and Abel offered, in the place appointed for Divine Worship.

Offered burnt-offerings.] He restores the ancient Rite of Divine Service, which his Sons and their Posterity followed. Some think these Burnt-offerings had something in them of the Nature of a Propitiatory Sacrifice, as well as Eucharistical, which they certainly were, for their Deliverance from the Flood. Their Reason is taken from what follows.

Ver. 21. The LORD smelled a sweet savour.] That is, as Munster understands it, he ceased from his Anger and was appeased. So the Syriack also, and Josephus, L. i. Antiq. c. 4. But it may signify no more, but that his Thankfulness was as grateful to God, as sweet Odours are to us.

And the LORD said in his Heart.] He determined, or resolved in himself. The Vulgar understands this, as if the Lord spake comfortably to Noah, (which in the Hebrew phrase is, speaking to one's Heart) and said,

I will not again curse the Ground any more.] i. e. After this manner, with a Deluge.

For the imagination of Man's Heart is evil from his Youth.] Such a proclivity there is in Men to evil, that if I should scourge them thus, as often as they deserve, there would be no end of Deluges. But the Words may have a quite different sense, being connected with what went before in this manner : I will not curse the Ground any more for Man's sake, tho' he be so very evilly disposed, &c.

Those Words, from his Youth, signify a long radical Corruption, as appears from many places, Isa. xlvii. 12, 15. Jerem. iii. 25. Ezek. xxiii. 8, &c. Sol. Jarchi extends it so far as to signify, from his Mother's Womb.

Ver. 22. While the Earth remaineth.] While Men shall inhabit the Earth.

Seed time and Harvest, &c.] There shall not be such a Year as this last has been : In which there was neither Sowing nor Reaping, nor any distinctions of Seasons, till the Rain was done.

Day and Night shall not cease.] One would think by this Expression, that the Day did not much differ from Night ; while the Heavens were covered with thick Clouds, which fell in dismal Floods of Rain.

CHAP. IX.

Ver. 1. AND God blessed Noah and his Sons, &c.] The Divine Majesty appeared now to Noah and his Sons ; to assure them of his Favour and Protection, and to renew the Blessing bestowed upon Adam, (as after a new Creation) saying, Increase and multiply.

Ver. 2. The fear of you, &c.] He seems also to confirm to them the Dominion which God gave to Adam, at first, over all Creatures, i. 26.

Ver. 3. Every moving being that liveth shall be meat for you, &c.] Here the first Grant made to Mankind concerning Food is enlarged, as St. Basil observes, ἡ πρώτη νομοθεσία ἥτις κατὰν ἀνθρώποις συνεχώρησε. The first Legislation granted to them the use of Fruits, but now of all living Creatures ; which they are as freely permitted to eat of, as formerly of all the Fruits of the Garden. For God seeing Men to be ἀπειθεῖς, contumacious, as Greg. Nyss. expresses it, (Tom. i. p. 157.) ὅτι πάντων ἡ ἀνθρώποις συνεχώρησε, He conceded to them the enjoyments of all things. This is the general sense of the Jews, and of the Christian Fathers, and of the first Reformers of Religion. They that would have this only a Renewal of such an old Charter, are of a later standing, and can shew us no Charter, but are led by some Reasonings of their own, not by the Scripture ; unless we will admit such a Criticism upon Gen. i. 30. as seems to me very forced. And they would have this also understood only of clean Creatures : But I do not find any ground for the distinction of clean and unclean Creatures, with respect to Food, but only to Sacrifice, as was said before.

The reason why God now granted the liberty to eat Flesh, Abarbinel thinks, was because otherwise there would not have been Food enough for Noah and his Sons : The Fruits of the Earth, which before were abundant, being all destroyed ; so that for the present there was not sufficient for their sustenance. Others think the the reason of it was, because the Fruits of the Earth were not now so nutritive as they had been before, the salt Water of the Sea very much spoiled the Soil.

Ver. 4. But flesh with the life thereof, &c.] Here is one Exception to the foregoing large Grant, that the Blood of Beasts should not be eaten: Just as at the first, one Fruit in the midst of the Garden was excepted, when all the rest were allowed. The Hebrew Doctors generally understand this to be a Prohibition to cut off any Limb of a living Creature, and to eat it while the Life, that is, the Blood, was in it: Dum adhuc vivit, & palpitat, seu tremit, as a modern Interpreter truly represents their Sense. Which is followed by many Christians. See Mercer, Musculus, especially Mr. Selden, L. vii. c. 1. De Jure N. & G. Who thinks, as Maimonides doth, That there were some People in the Old World so fierce and barbarous, that they eat raw Flesh, while it was yet warm from the Beast out of whose Body it was cut: And he makes this to have been a part of their idolatrous Worship. (See More Nevochim, Par. iii. c. 48.) But supposing this to be true, there was so few of these People, we may well think, (for he himself saith it was the Custom of the Gentile Kings to do thus) that there needed not to have been a Precept given to all Mankind, to avoid that, unto which Human Nature is of itself averse.

St. Chrysostom there expounds this, of not eating things strangled: And L. de Dieu of not eating that which died of itself: For Nephefs in Scripture signifies sometimes a dead Carcase. But it is manifest, it was not lawful for all People to eat such things; for God himself orders the Israelites, to give that which died of itself to a Stranger, or to sell it to an Alien, Deut. xiv. 21. And therefore the simplest Sense seems to be, that they should not eat the Blood of any Creature: Which was a positive Precept, like that of not eating of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil. And the reason of it, perhaps, was, that God intending in After-times to reserve the Blood for the expiation of Sin, required this early abstinence from it, that they might be the better prepared to submit to that Law, and understand the reason of it: Which was, that it was the Life of the Beast, which God accepted instead of their Life, when they had forfeited it by their Sins.

And there is another plain reason given of this Prohibition immediately after it, that they might be the more fearful of shedding the Blood one of another, when it was not lawful so much as to taste the Blood of a Beast.

Ver. 5. And surely.] Or rather, for surely, as the LXX. the Vulgar Latin, and a great number of learned Men expound the particle Vau as a Causal, not as a Copulative, in this place. So that the Sense is this: Therefore I command you to abstain from the Blood of living Creatures, that you may be the farther off from shedding the Blood of Men. For that is so precious in my account, that I will take care he be severely punished, by whom it is shed; yea, the very Beast shall die that kills a Man. So it follows,

At the hand of every Beast will I require it.] Not as if Beasts were to blame if they killed a Man, (for they are capable neither of Vice nor Virtue) but this was ordained with respect to Men, for whose Use Beasts were created. For, First, such Owners as were not careful to prevent such Mischiefs were hereby punished: And, Secondly, others were admonished by their Example to be cautious: And, Thirdly, God hereby instructed them that Murder was a most grievous Crime, whose Punishment extended even to Beasts: And, Lastly, the Lives of Men were hereby much secured, by the killing such Beasts as might otherwise have done the like Mischief hereafter. See Bochart in his Hierozoic. P. i. l. i. c. 40.

At the hand of every Man's Brother, &c.] And therefore much more will I require it at the hand of every Man: Whom he calls Brother, to show that Murder is the more heinous upon this account, because we are all Brethren. Or the Meaning may be (as some will have it) that tho' he be as nearly related as a Brother, he shall not go unpunished.

Ver. 6. Who sheds Man's Blood.] He repeats it over again, to enact this Law more strongly: Or, as the Hebrews understand it, he spake before of the Punishment he would inflict himself upon the Murderer, and now of the Care we should take to punish it.

By Man shall his Blood be shed.] That is, by the Magistrate or Judges. For God had kept the Punishment of Murder in his own Hand till now; as we may gather from the Story of Cain, whom he banished, but suffered no body to kill him; but here gives authority to Judges to call every body to an account for it, and put them to death. They that would see more of the Sense of the Jews about these and the foregoing Words, may read Mr. Selden de Jure N. & G. L. i. cap. 5. and L. iv. cap. 1. and de Synedriis, L. i. cap. 5.

I will only add, that they rightly conclude, that as Courts of Judicature were hereby authorized, so what was thus ordained against Murder, by a Parity of Reason, was to be executed upon other great Offenders, there being some things which are no less dear to us than Life; as Virginal Chastity, and Matrimonial Fidelity, &c.

For in the Image of God made he Man.] Notwithstanding the Sin of Man, there remained so much of the Image of God in him, as intitled him to his peculiar Protection.

Ver. 7. And ye, be ye fruitful, &c.] You need not doubt therefore of the Blessing I now bestowed upon you, (Verse 1.) for you see what Care I take of the Preservation, as well as the Propagation of Mankind.

Ver. 9. I will establish my Covenant with you.] Because Beasts cannot Covenant, most understand by that Word simply a Promise; as Jer. xxxiii. 25. But there is no need of this Explication, the Covenant being made directly with Noah, including all other Creatures, who were to have the Benefit of it.

Ver. 10. From all that go out of the Ark, to every Beast of the Earth.] That is, it shall extend not only to those which now go out of the Ark, but to all their Breed in future Ages.

Ver. 11. And I will establish my Covenant with you, &c.] Doubt not of it; for I tell you again, I will faithfully keep this solemn Promise.

Any more be a Flood to destroy the Earth.] That is, the whole Earth; for particular Inundations there have been often.

Ver. 12. And the LORD said, This is the Token of the Covenant, &c.] I do not only give you my Word, but a Token or Sign that I will keep it.

Ver. 13. I do set my Bow in the Clouds, &c.] Most think this doth not signify there never had been a Rainbow before the Flood; for since there was both Sun and Clouds, it is likely, say they, there was a Rainbow also: Only now it was appointed for a Sign, which it was not before. But as this Opinion hath nothing in Scripture to enforce it, so Grounds in Nature there are none to warrant it; unless we will assert this manifest Untruth, That every disposition of the Air, or every Cloud is fitly disposed to produce a Rainbow. They are the Words of that great Divine Dr. Jackfon (Book i. upon the Creed, c. 16.) who adds, That if other natural Causes, with their Motions and Dispositions, depend upon the final (as Scripture Philosophy teaches us) they who acknowledge the Scripture, have no reason to think that either the Clouds or the Air had that peculiar Disposition before the Flood which is required to the production of the Rainbow: When this wonderful Effect had no such use or end as it hath had ever since; for it was appointed by God, to be a witness of his Covenant with the new World; a Messenger to secure Mankind from Destruction by Deluges. Now, if it had appeared before the Flood, the Sight of it after the Flood would have been but a poor Comfort to Noah and his timorous Posterity: Whose Fear lest the like Inundation might happen again, was greater than could be taken away by a common or usual Sign. The ancient Poets had a better Philosophy (tho' they knew not the Original of it) when they feigned Iris to be the Daughter, or (as we would now speak) the Mother of Wonderment Θαύμαργος ἑκγονον the Messenger of the great God Jupiter, and his Goddess Juno: Whom Homer (as he observes) represents as sent with a peremptory Command to Neptune not to aid the Grecians; by the swelling we may suppose, of Waters, which much annoyed the Trojans.

My Bow.] It is called His, not only because he is the Author of all things, which have natural Causes, as there are of this, but because He appointed it to a special end, as a signification and assurance of his Mercy towards Mankind.

Ver. 14. When I bring a Cloud over the Earth.] i. e. When there are great Signs of Rain, which come out of the Clouds.

That the Bow shall be seen in the Cloud.] Not always, but at certain times; often enough to put Men in mind of this Promise, and stir up their Belief of it. For it doth as it were say, I will not drown the Earth again, tho' the Clouds have thickened as if they threatened it. Common Philosophy teaches us, that the Rainbow is a natural sign there will not be much Rain after it appears; but that the Clouds begin to disperse. For it is never made in a thick Cloud, but in a thin: So that if it appear after Showers which come from thick Clouds, it is a token that now they grow thin. But the God of Nature chose this to be a sign, that he would never let them thicken again to such a degree to bring a Deluge upon the Earth. And indeed the admirable Form or Composition of this glorious Circle (as the Son of Sirach calls it, Ecclus. xliii. 12.) bent by the Hands of the most High, doth naturally excite one to look beyond the material and efficient Cause of it, to the final, as the fore-named Author speaks. And now that we have Moses's Commentary upon it, we may see in the mix'd Colours of the Rainbow, these two things; the Destruction of the old World by Water, and the future Consumption of the present World by Fire; whose flaming Brightness is predominant in the waterish Humour.

Ver. 15. And I will remember my Covenant, &c.] Look upon it as a Token of my Faithfulness to my Word.

Ver. 16. I will look upon it, that I may remember, &c.] This is spoken after the manner of Men; the more to confirm their Belief, that God would not go back from his Word.

Ver. 17. And God said, This is the Token, &c.] As the Promise is repeated twice, to express its Certainty, ver. 9, 11. so is the Token of it as oft repeated for the same reason, ver. 12. and here, ver. 17.

Ver. 18. And the Sons of Noah, &c.] They are here again named, with respect to what follows: But not in their order, as shall be proved in its proper place, (x. 21.) for Japhet was the Eldest.

And Ham is the Father of Canaan.] This Son of Ham is here alone mentioned, because he was concerned in the following wicked Fact of his Father: And his Posterity were those wicked People whose Country God gave to the Israelites.

Ver. 19. And of them was the whole Earth overspread.] By this it appears, that tho' Noah lived above three hundred Years after he came out of the Ark, yet he begat no more Children; or if he did, none of them lived to have any Posterity.

Ver. 20. Began to be an Husband-man.] To improve the Art of Husbandry; which was understood before, but he much advanced it: There being nothing in old time, which the greatest Men thought more worthy their Study; as we see by the Romans themselves, till they were corrupted by the Luxury which their Conquests brought in among them.

And he planted a Vineyard.] There were Vines here and there before the Flood, but Noah seems to have been the first that made a Vineyard, and put them in order: And the first, perhaps, that invented Wine-Presses to press out the Juice of the Grapes and make Wine. If he was not the Inventor of these two, (planting of Vineyards, and making Wine) yet we may well allow him to be the Improver of them, as he was of Husbandry.

Ver. 21. And he drank of the Wine, and was drunken.] Being unacquainted with the strength of the Liquor, (as several of the Fathers, as well as of the Jewish Doctors think) or else being old and unable to bear its strength: As Epiphanius understands it; see Hæres. lxiii. n. 3. For it is manifest from what follows, that this hapned a great while after the Flood; Ham having a Son; nay more than one, for Canaan was not his First-born.

And

And he was uncovered in his Tent.] The Heat of the Weather, or of the Wine, perhaps, made him throw off the Clothes: Or he was negligent, being not himself.

Ver. 22. And Ham the Father of Canaan, &c.] There are some Circumstances, which follow, that make the Opinion of the Hebrew Doctors not improbable, that Canaan first saw Noah in this indecent Posture, and made sport with it to his Father; who was so far from reproving him, as he ought to have done, that he also did the same.

And told his two Brethren without.] In the Street, publickly before the People, he proclaimed his Father's Shame, and mock'd at it: For it is hard to think that God curst him merely for his Irreverence, but there was something of Derision join'd with it, and perhaps of Profaneness and Irreligion; in laughing (we may conceive) at the promise of the Messiah, which it is likely, he heard his Father often speak of; but now thought him incapable to beget. For Ham is generally thought to have been an impious Man; and some take him to have been the first Inventor of Idols after the Flood; nay, of Magick, which he learnt of the wicked Cainites before the Flood. Thus Gaspar Schottus, L. i. de Magia, cap. 3. prolegom. where he endeavours to show he was the same with him whom the Persians call Zoroaster.

Ver. 23. And Shem and Japhet took a Garment, &c.] A great Argument of their Piety, and dutiful Affection to their Father, which God therefore greatly rewarded.

Ver. 24. And knew what his younger Son had done.] Finding himself covered with Clothes that were not his own, he enquired, it is likely, how it came about; and was informed how he had been abused by one of his Sons, and honoured by the other.

His younger Son.] Some make this an Argument that Canaan was the first that made himself merry with his Grandfather; and is here called his younger or little Son (nothing being more common than to call those the Sons of another, who were his Grand-Children, as Cousin-Germans are called Brothers) for Ham was neither little, nor his younger Son; but the middlemost, as he is always placed. Nor doth it seem at all pertinent to the Matter, to mention the Order of his Birth, but very fit if he spake of his Grandson to distinguish him from the rest. And what follows is a farther Proof of it.

Ver. 25. Curst be Canaan, &c.] If what I said before, (ver. 22, 24.) be allowed, it makes it easy to give an account why Canaan is curst rather than Ham, because he was first guilty. Ham indeed was punished in him; but he had other Sons, on whom the Punishment did not fall, but only on this; for which I can find no reason so probable as that before-named. Which, if it be not allowed, we must have recourse to an harsh Interpretation, and by Canaan understand Canaan's Father, as some do.

A Servant of Servants.] That is, the basest and vilest of Servants. See the next Verse.

Ver. 26. Blessed be the LORD God of Shem.] The LORD was the God of Shem, after a peculiar manner, just as he was the God of Abraham, because of the gracious Covenant made with him:

VOL. I.

For God settled his Church in the Family of Shem, and Christ was born of his Posterity; and he himself, in all likelihood, kept up the Worship of the true God, and opposed Idolatry. In short, to be the God of Shem, was to bestow all manner of Blessings upon him; which Noah here prophesies to him, by blessing the LORD for them; whom he acknowledges to be the Author of them, out of his special Grace and Favour towards him. For he was the younger Brother of Japhet, as I shall shew, x. 21. Thus Jacob interprets this Phrase, xxix. 19, 20.

And Canaan shall be his Servant.] This was fulfilled eight hundred Years after, when the Israelites (who were descended from Shem) took possession of the Land of Canaan, subduing thirty of their Kings, killing most of their Inhabitants, laying heavy Tributes upon the Remainder, and using the Gibeonites (who saved themselves by a Wile) tho' not as Servants to them, yet as mere Drudges for the service of the Tabernacle. Whose Name David is thought to have changed into Netthinim, (Ezra viii. 20.) People who had voluntarily surrendered themselves, (as they did to Josbua, when he had discovered their Fraud) to do what he would with them. Solomon also made all the Remainers of the People of Canaan subject to servile Labours, when all the Israelites were free, as is plainly signified, (2 Chron. viii. 7, 8, 9.) And see Joseph. Antiq. L. viii. c. 2. Thus as the Blessing promised to Abraham was not fulfilled in his own Person, but in his Posterity many Generations after his Death, so this Curse upon Cham did not take place till the same time: The Execution of God's Curse upon the one being his conferring of a Blessing upon the other.

Ver. 27. God shall enlarge Japhet.] i. e. His Habitation; for God gave him for his Possession all the Isles of the Sea Westward, and those Countries near to them, as Spain, Italy, Greece, Asia the Less, &c. as Bochart hath observed in his Phaleg. L. i. c. 1. Who further notes, That in the Hebrew word for enlarge, there is a plain allusion to Japhet's Name, as there is to many others in Scripture; Noah, ver. 29. Judab, Dan, Gad, &c. xlix. 8, 16, 19. They that translate this word persuade, (as it is in the Margin) did not consider that it is commonly taken in a bad Sense, when it is used for deceiving and seducing; and that it governs, as Grammarians speak, an Accusative Case, and not a Dative, (as it doth here) when it signifies to allure or persuade. In short, this is a Promise of a very large Portion to Japhet's Posterity in the Division of the Earth. Which was but necessary; for that part of the World which bends to the North being assigned to him, vast Regions were requisite for such a numerous Offspring as was likely to come from him: The Fruitfulness of People being wonderfully great in cold Climates. And accordingly, besides all Europe, and the Lesser Asia, there fell to the share of his Posterity Media, part of Armenia, Iberia, Albania, and the vast Regions towards the North, which anciently the Scythians, now the Tartars, inhabit: From whom the People of the New World (as we call it) seem to be derived; the Scythians going thither by the Streights of Anian. Of which, more upon x. 32.

Moses hath not told us what were the Names of any of their Wives; but the Greeks have given to Japhet's Wife the Name of Κλυμένη, (as Hesiod calls her) because she was the Mother of so many famous Nations. So Vossius, L. i. De Orig. Idolol. c. 18. And Campanella's Observation in this Verse is, That all Empires descended from the Sons of Japhet, L. De Monarchia Hispan. c. 4. Which may be true of the great Empires, but the Egyptians seem to have been the first considerable Princes, and Nimrod was of the Race of Ham.

And he shall dwell in the Tents of Shem.] i. e. His Territories shall be so dilated, that in future times he shall possess some of his Brother's Countries: Which is also prophesied of, Numb. xxiv. 24. where it is said, they of Cittim shall afflict the Children of Assur and Eber; i. e. afflict the Assyrians and the Hebrews, who were the Posterity of Shem. And so both the Greeks and the Romans did, who invaded and conquered that Part of Asia which belonged to Shem. The Chaldee Paraphrast gives a Spiritual Interpretation of this Passage, which is very apt, That the Gentiles should come into the Church, which was of the Family of Shem. And it is very remarkable, (which is observed by our Mr. Mede, B. i. Discourse 48.) That all the Offsprings of Japhet are at this day Christians, Magog only excepted, (i. e. the Turks) whom God seems to have reserved, as he did some of the Canaanites in the Land of Israel, to prove and punish us withal. Our learned N. Fuller gives a quite different Interpretation from all these, making God the Subject of this Speech, not Japhet; and thus translates it: God shall dwell in the Tents of Shem; among them shall be the Schechinah or the Divine Majesty. But this doth not agree with what follows.

And Canaan shall be his servant.] The Greeks and Romans, descended from Japhet, conquered Canaan: And whatsoever Relicks there were of them any where, (for instance at Tyre, built by the Sidonians; at Thebes, by Cadmus; at Carthage, by Dido;) they were all cut off by the Greeks or Romans. It is observed by Campanella, That none are descended from Cham but Slaves; and Tyrants, who are indeed Slaves; Cap. 4. De Mon. Hispan. But Mr. Mede's Observation is more pertinent, (in the forenamed Discourse, p. 358.) There hath never yet been a Son of Cham that hath shaken a Scepter over the Head of Japhet. Shem hath subdued Japhet, and Japhet subdued Shem; but Cham never subdued either. Which made Hannibal, a Child of Canaan, cry out with amazement of Soul, Agnosco fatum Carthaginis, I acknowledge the Fate of Carthage. Livy, L. xxvii. in fine.

Ver. 28. And Noah lived after the Flood three hundred and fifty Years.] Which was of great Advantage for the certain Propagation of the Knowledge of those things before related, and of those that follow in the next Chapter. For he died not above two and thirty Years before Abraham was born.

CHAP. X.

Ver. 1. NOW these are the generations of the Sons of Noah, &c.] As he had often before mentioned the three Sons of Noah, so now he mentions them again, being to give an Account of their Children, by whom the Earth was peopled after the Flood. And he reckons them in the same Order he had always done, (vi. 10. vii. 13. ix. 18.) first Shem, then Ham, and last of all Japhet. But it is observable, that in the next Verse he gives an Account first of the Sons of Japhet, who was indeed the eldest. There is great use of this Genealogy, as Maimonides shows, (Par. iii. More Nev. c. 50.) because the Doctrine of the Creation of the World, which is the Foundation of the Law, (i. e. of Religion) would not have been so easily believed, if Moses had not given an Account of the Succession of Mankind from the first Man to the Flood; and from the Flood to his own time: Shewing from whom all Nations were derived, and how they came to be dispersed.

Shem is named first of Noah's Sons, because the Blessed Seed was to spring out of his Family, in which the true Religion was preserved: Which was soon lost in the Posterity of the other two; among whom their Names remained in great Honour. For,

Ham was the Heathen Jupiter, who was called Hammon in Egypt, which, it will appear, was part of Ham's Portion, and is called the Land of Ham, as every one knows, in many places of the Psalms. And accordingly, the same Country is called by Plutarch Χημία.

Japhet also seems to have been the same with Japhetus, whom the Greeks own to have been their Father. Nor do they know any Name of greater Antiquity; which made them give it to decrepit Persons, (as many, particularly Bochart, have observed) and it became a Proverb in that Country, Older than Japhetus. Whom their Poets feign to have attempted War against Jupiter, because of the Diffensions which the unlikeliness of their Manners begat between them. Which seems to be nothing but the Story in Chapter ix. of this Book, ver. 22. For Ham, as I said, is the Heathen Jupiter.

Ver. 2. The Sons of Japhet.] Were seven; the eldest of which, Gomer, had three Sons; and the fourth, Javan, had four: Whose Names we have in the following Verses.

Gomer.] It is hard, at this distance, to find what Country was peopled by his Posterity; but Bochartus in his Pbaleg. hath made such probable Conjectures, about this and all that follow, from other Scriptures, and from neighbouring Places, and the Relicks of their Names in ancient Geographers, and such-like things, that they carry a great appearance of Truth in them. Our famous Cambden (in his Account of the first Inhabitants of Britain) thinks that the Cimbri and Cimmerii descended from this Gomer, who gave them their Name; and that the old Britans came from him, because they call themselves Kumero, Cymro, and Kumeri; which seems to denote them the Posterity of Gomer. But this, as also the Notion of Ludov. Capellus in his Chron. Sacra, p. 104. (who, if this of Mr. Cambden be not accepted, propounds another, of the Comari and Cbomari, a People in Scythia (mentioned by Ptolemy) within the Mountain Imaus, near Bactriana.) is confuted by what we read in Ezekiel, who makes Gomer to have been a Neighbour of Torgamab, Ezek. xxxviii. 6. And Torgamab was a Nation that usually went to the Marts of Tyre, xxvii. 14. and consequently were not seated in the furthest Part of the North, but, as will appear afterward, not very far from Tyre. And in some Countries thereabouts we must seek for Gomer, who, it is likely, gave Phrygia its Denomination: For a Part of it was called Κατακαυμένη, by Diodorus and Hesychius, because it looked as if it were burnt. Such was all the Country about Cayster, Mæander, and the City Philadelpbia. Now, this is the very Signification of Gomer: For, in the Hebrew, Gomer is to consume; and so the Chaldees and Syriacs frequently use it; whence Gumra or Gumro is a Coal. And Phrygia is of the same signification, (for φρυγία in Greek is to torrify) which being the Name of part of the Country, in time became the Name of the whole.

Magog.] The second Son of Japhet, was in all likelihood the Father of the Scythians; which is the Opinion of Josephus, Theodoret, St. Hierom, and others: For all that is said in Scripture about Magog exactly agrees to them; as Bochartus hath shown at large out of Ezekiel, L. iii. Phaleg, c. 13.

Madai.] From him the Country of Media took its Name; where he and his Children settled: And it is the farthest Country Eastward where any of the Posterity of Japhet inhabited. What is the Name of this Country at present, is not easy to tell; the ancient Name and Limits of Countries so remote being quite worn out of memory. But it is no improbable Conjecture of Bochartus (L. iii. c. 14.) That the ancient Sarmatæ took their Name from this Man, Sear or Sarmadai, being in Chaldees, as much as the Relicks of Madai or the Medes. Dr. Jackson, I think, hath well observed, (Book i. c. 16.) that Scythia or the North Part of Asia Minor, and other Parts adjacent, were inhabited by the Sons of Japhet before they came into Greece, (where the next Son settled) or the other Parts of Europe.

Javan] Planted himself in Greece; under which Word is comprehended not only Acbaia and the rest of the Countries thereabouts, but even Macedonia and the Nations neighbouring to it towards the West; the Sea that washes them being called the Ionian Sea. And indeed the Hebrew word יָוָן taking away the Vowels, may be either read Javan or Ion. From whence the Iones, whom Homer calls Jaones, which is near to Javan; which a Persian in Aristophanes's Acharnenses pronounces Jaonau: As Grotius observes, Annot. in L. i. de V. R. C. Hence Daniel calls Alexander, who came out of Macedonia, the King of Javan, viii. 21. And the Chaldees Paraphrase hath here instead of Javan, Macedonia. See Bochart, L. iii. c. 3.

Tubal and Meshech.] These two are constantly joined together by Ezekiel in many places, xxvii. 13. xxxii. 26, &c. Which is a sign these two Brothers planted themselves not far from one another. And no Conjecture seems so probable as that of Bochartus, who takes those to be the People whom the Greeks call Moschi and Tibareni: Who are as constantly joined together in Herodotus, as Moschech and Tubal are in Ezekiel; and none need wonder that Tubal was changed into Tuber, and then into Tiber: For nothing was more common among the Greeks, than to change the Letter L into R, as Βελιάς for Belial, and Φιχώς for Phicol, &c. The Moschi inhabited the Mountains called Moschici, North-East of Cappadocia, and all the Mountains (as Bochart thinks) from the River Phasis to the Pontus Cappadodicus. The Tibareni were in the middle between the Trapezuntii and the Inhabitants of Armenia the Less. So Strabo describes them, who was born not far from these Countries, and had reason to know them. Nor is this a new Opinion of Bochart's that the Tibareni came from Tubaal: For Epiphanius in his Ancorats, mentions among the Descendants of Japhet, Τιβαιοὺς, together with the Chalybes and Mossynæci; whom our Broughton follows.

Tiras.] Or, Thiras, the youngest of the Sons of Japhet, possessed Thrace and Mysia, and the rest of Europe towards the North. For Θρᾷξ is Thiras or Thras, by the change of the Letter Samech into Xi: Which in the Greek Alphabet (received from the Phœnicians) answers to the Letter Samech; so that some of the Hebrews write Thracia with an s, Thrasia: And a Thracian Woman is called by the Greeks themselves Θρᾷσσα and Θρᾷσσα: Which comes very near to Thiras. And that great Man Bochartus says a great deal more to confirm this; which was the Opinion, he shows, of many of the Ancients, Phaleg, L. iii. c. 2. And in late times, of Ludovicus Cappellus; who adds, that possibly Tros and Troas were derived from this Thiras.

Ver. 3. And the Sons of Gomer.] Now follows an Account of those that descended from the eldest Son of Japhet. Askenaz was the eldest Son of Gomer, whose Posterity settled in Bitynia, (where we find the Foot-steps of his Name, in the Sinus Ascanius, and Ascanius Lacus and Amnis) and in Troas, and the Lesser Phrygia: In which is a Country and a City called Ascania, and Ascania-Insula. Into which Country the Offspring of Askenaz brought Colonies from Gomer or the Greater Phrygia; and extended themselves to the Sea. Which being called by the People upon the Coast, Ascenaz, was pronounced by the Greeks, Ἀξενῶ. Which being an odious Name in their Language, signifying inhospitable, they changed it into the contrary, and called it Εὐξενῶ, the Euxine Sea. See more in the forenamed Author, L. iii. c. 9. Ludov. Cappellus happened upon the same Conjecture. Riphat, or Diphat, as it is written in 1 Chron. i. 6. whose Posterity Josephus thinks to have inhabited Paphlagonia: Which is a Country near to Phrygia, upon the Euxine Sea: And there are Remainders of the Name in several places, both ways written, with Resh, or with Daleth, as Bochart shows, L. iii. c. 10. Mela places the Riphaei in this Country, as Grotius observes, Annot. in L. i. de V. R. C.

Togarmab.] His Posterity, it is manifest, settled Northward of Judæa, by that place in Ezekiel, xxxviii. 6. where the Greek Scholiast saith, some hereby hereby understand the Cappadocians and Galatians. And indeed, Cappadocia lies near to Gomer or Phrygia, with whom Togarmab is wont to be joined: And in respect of Judæa, it lies Northward; and was most famous for excellent Horses; which the Prophet saith came from Togarmab, Ezek. xxvii. 14. The Greek Interpreters constantly write it Torgama, or Thorgama; from whence the Name of the Trogmi or Trocmi may well be thought to be derived: Who, Strabo saith, L. xii. lived near Pontus and Cappadocia: And it appears by Ptolomy, they possessed some Cities in Cappadocia itself. This People are called by Stephanus, Trocmi, and in the Council of Chalcedon, Trocmades, or Trogmades; for their Bishop is often mentioned, Επίσκοπος Τροκμαδῶν. See Bochart in the same Book, Cap. 11.

Ver. 4. And the Sons of Javan.] Having told us what Sons Gomer had, he informs us who had descended from Javan: Who had four Sons that gave Names to four Provinces.

Elisabab] His First-born inhabited Peloponnesus: In which there was an ample Country, called by the Antients, Elis; and one Part of it called by Homer, Alisium. I omit the other Arguments whereby Bochartus proves this to be the Part of the Earth, where Elisabab's Posterity settled, not far from their Father Javan. Nay, Ludovicus Capellus, p. 105. Chron. Sacra, thinks the Αἰολαῖς, Æoles, and the Country Æolia had its Name from thence.

Tarshish] (Or Tarsis) Neither peopled Cilicia, where we meet with a like Name, nor the Coast about Carthage, as some of the Antients thought, but, as Eusebius, and from him, our Broughton, and lately Bochart, have observed, from him came the Iberi in Spain. Θαρσῖς ἐξ Ἰβήρας. Which Name of Iberi came, as Bochart thinks, from the Phœnicians, who called the Bounds and utmost Limits of any thing Ebrim or Ibrim; a Word often used in the Syriack Version of the Psalms and the New Testament. From whence it is not unlikely the Spaniards were called by this Name of Iberi, because they were thought to possess the utmost Ends of the Earth Westward. However, we may well think Tarshish to be Spain, or that Part of it which was most frequented by the Phœnicians, viz. about Gades and Tartessus, as Bochartus, I think, hath proved by evident Arguments fetch'd chiefly from what Ezekiel says of Tarsis, (xxvii. 12.) and comparing it with this Country, L. iii. Phaleg. c. 7.

Kittim.] The same Author hath proved by solid Arguments, and by good Authority, that from him came the People who inhabited Italy: In which there was anciently many Footsteps of this Name. For there was in Latium itself a City called Keria, as Halicarnassus tells us: Which was one of those seven great and populous Cities taken by Coriolanus; as Plutarch, in his Life, tells us. There was a River called Keròs; about Cumæ, mentioned by Aristotle as turning Plants into Stones. And the very Name of Latines answers to Chittim: For most say it comes à latendo, being formed to express this ancient Scripture Name. For Chetema in Arabick (which is a Branch of the Hebrew Tongue) is to bide, and Chetim is bidden, and lament; and so no doubt it was anciently used in Hebrew: For what better Sense can we make of those Words of Jeremy ii. 22. thy iniquity, נִכְחָה, is bidden or laid up with me: According to an usual Expression in Scripture, Deut. xxxii. 34. Job xxi. 9. Hos. xiii. 12. where there are Words of the like import with this. That famous Man Bochart saith a great deal more to assert this, L. iii. c. 5.

Dodanim.] He is called Rhodanim, in 1 Chron. i. 7. By whom the Greek Interpreters understand the People of Rhodes, (and so do several of the Antients) but the Name of that Island is much later than Moses's time; and therefore it is better to understand hereby, that Country now called France, which was peopled by the Posterity of this Son of Javan: Who, when they came to this Coast, gave Name, as Bochart conjectures, to the great River Rhodanus; where it is likely they first seated themselves, and called the adjacent Coast Rhodanusia: Which had anciently in it a City of the same Name, mentioned by Stephanus; and said to be seated in Massalia, in tractu Massiliensi, where now stands Marseilles. See Bochart, L. iii. c. 6. These Dodanites are never mentioned in any other Places of Scripture, which makes it the more difficult where to find them: But this Account seems more probable than that of our learned Mede, who places them in Epirus, (where there was a City called Dodona) and part of Peloponnesus: All which, and several Countries thereabout, seem to be comprehended under the Name of Javan.

Ver. 5. By these were the Isles of the Gentiles divided.] By the word Isles we commonly understand Countries compassed round about by the Sea. But there were not such Islands enough to contain the Sons of Japhet, (tho' these were part of their Portion) and therefore we must seek for another Sense of this Word. Which the Hebrews use (as Mr. Mede hath observed) to signify all those Countries divided from them by the Sea; or, such as they used not to go to but by Sea. See Book i. Disc. 47. Many Places testify this, Isai. xi. 10, 11. xl. 15. Jer. ii. 10; &c. Now, if Moses wrote this Book in Egypt, as he thinks it probable, they commonly went from thence to Phrygia, Cappadocia, Paphlagonia, by Sea, as well as to Greece, Italy, &c. To Media indeed, he thinks, they did not use to go by Sea, and therefore makes this an Objection against Madia being the Father of the Medes: For their Country cannot be called an Isle. But the far greater Part of the Regions peopled by the Sons of Japhet being such as he confesses the Hebrews call Isles, Moses might well say the Isles of the Gentiles were parted among them, tho' Media be comprehended, which was not such an Isle. But there is no need of all this, if we take the word we translate Isle, for a Region, Country, or Province. And so it plainly signifies, Job xxii. 30. Isai. xx. 6. where in the Margin we translate it Country. And then the word Goim, which we render Gentiles, signifies a Multitude of People; as it doth often in Scripture; particularly, Gen. xvii. 4; 16. And so we translate it, Nations, in the last words of this Verse; and in the last Clause of this Chapter, by these were the [Goim] Nations divided in the Earth. Which may serve to explain this Phrase here; which we may thus interpret, by these, or among these, were divided the Regions of the People or Nations Nations (descended from Japhet) in their Lands ; in the several Countries which they possessed.

Divided.] It appears by the following Words, (according to his Language, Family, and Nation) this great Division of the Earth was made orderly, and not by a confused irregular Dispersion, wherein every one went whither he listed, and seated himself where he thought good. This, Mr. Mede thinks is also suggested in the very word we translate divided ; which signifies not a scattered, but a distinct Partition.

Every one after his Tongue, or Language.] The same is said, ver. 20. and ver. 31. of the Posterity of Cham and Shem. Which signifies they did not all speak the same Language, but doth not prove that every one of the fore-mentioned People, had a Language peculiar to themselves, distinct from the rest, and not understood by them. As when Abasuerus is said to have caused Letters to be written to an hundred twenty seven Provinces, according to their Language and their Writing, (Esth. viii. 9.) it doth not prove there were so many several sorts of Writing, and so many several Languages in his Empire ; but only that to each of them was directed a Letter in that Language which they spake.

After their Families, in their Nations.] The Particle in denotes, as Mr. Mede observes, Families to be subordinate to Nations, as Parts to a Whole. Families are Parts of a Nation, and a Nation is an Offspring containing many Families : So here was a twofold Order in this Division. First, They were ranged according to their Nations ; and then every Nation was ranked by his Families. So that every Nation had his Lot by himself ; and in every Nation, the Families belonging to it had their Portion by themselves. The Number of Nations descended from Japhet were seven, according to the Number of his Sons, who were all Founders of several Nations. But the Number of Families is not here entirely set down : For Moses names only the Families of Gomer and Javan ! Whose Children perhaps are rather to be look'd upon as Founders of Nations ; and therefore mentioned by Moses, when the Posterity of the rest are omitted.

Ver. 6. And the Sons of Ham.] Having given an Account of the Sons and Grand-sons of Japhet the eldest Son of Noah, he next proceeds to the Sons of Ham the second Son of Noah, which were Four : And gives an Account also of every one of their Sons and of some of their Grand-sons.

Cush] Gave Name to a Country very often mentioned in Scripture ; which most of the Ancients take for Æthiopia, and so we commonly translate the word Cush. But if by Æthiopia they meant that Country South of Egypt, and not an Eastern Country, (which may be a question) Jonathan is rather to be followed, who here paraphrases it Arabia. For Cush is the same with Chusan, (only the latter is a Diminutive) which is made the same with Midian, Habak. iii. 7. And so Moses's Wife is called a Chushite, (we render it Æthiopian) for she was a Midianite, Exod. ii. 16, 31. and therefore was of Arabia, not of Æthiopia : And so we should translate it, (Numb. xii. 2.) an Arabian Woman. And there is a Demonstration of it in Ezek. xxix. 10. that Cush cannot be Æthiopia ; for when God saith he will make Egypt desolate, from the tower of Syene, to the Border of Cush, if we should understand by Cush the Country of Æthiopia, it would be as if he had said, from Æthiopia to Æthiopia. For every one knows Syene was the Border of Egypt towards Æthiopia : And therefore here being two opposite Borders, it is manifest that Cush, which is the opposite Term to Syene, cannot be Æthiopia but Arabia, which bounded that Part of Egypt which is most remote from Æthiopia. A great Number of other Arguments out of Scripture evince this ; which Bochartus hath collected, L. iv. Pbaleg. c. 2. and Philip. Beroaldus asserted the same thing before him.

Mizraim,] The Father of them who inhabited Egypt, whose Metropolis [Alcairo] the Arabians at this day call Mefer ; and the first Month among the ancient Egyptians was called Mesori ; and Cedrenus calls the Country itself Mestra, as Grotius observes in his Annot. in L. i. de V. R. C. and Lud. Cappellus in his Chronol. Sacra, p. 109. And this word Mizraim being of the Dual Number, (which shows it to be the Name of the Country rather than of a Person) denotes two *Egypt*s, as Bochart observes : For so there were, the higher and the lower. All that Country was called the higher, where Nile runs in one Stream : The lower was that, where it is divided into many ; which the Greeks call Delta, from its triangular Form.

Pbut.] All Africa was divided between Mizraim and Pbut, as Bochartus observes. For all Egypt, and several other Parts of Africa, as far as the Lake Tritonides, (which divides Africa into two almost equal Parts) fell to Mizraim. The rest beyond that Lake to the Atlantick Ocean was the Portion of Pbut. Of which Name there are some Footsteps in the City Putea, which Ptolomy, L. iii. c. 1. calls Πύτης ; and the River called Pbut, mentioned by Pliny, as Grotius notes ; and a Country, which St. Hierom in his time says was called Regio Pbutensis ; which lies not far from Fez. Another Name of Africa is Lub, which we often meet withal in Scripture ; whence the Name of Lybia. Concerning which, and a great many other Proofs that Pbut was planted in Africa, see the famous Bochartus, L. iv. Pbaleg. c. 33.

Canaan.] The youngest Son of Ham, every one knows, gave Name to that Country which God gave afterwards to the Israelites. Which the Phœnicians who descended from the Canaanites called Χαν, by a Contraction of the word Canaan, as many have observed out of Eusebius, L. i. Præpar. c. 10. who quotes Sanchuniathon and Pbilo-Biblus for it. It is so certain that the Phœnicians had their Original from the Canaanites, that the LXX use their Names promiscuously. For example, Sual is called, Gen. xli. 10. the Son of a Canaanitish Woman : Whom in Exod. vi. 15. they call the Son of a Phœnician Woman. And so in the New Testament, the Woman whom St. Matthew calls a Woman of Canaan, xv. 22. St. Mark calls a Syrophœnician, vii. 26. We never indeed find the Phœnicians called Canaanites by the Greeks : For their Posterity being ashamed (as we may suppose) of that Name, because of the Curse pronounced upon Canaan, chose to be called rather Syrians, or Assyrians, or Sidonians, or Phœnicians. For Syria, which was a common Name to a great many People round about, was at first proper to them; from the Metropolis of Phœnicia, which was Tyre, in Hebrew, Sor or Sur; from whence Surim, and thence the Greek Συρί. They that would see more of this, may read the fore-named Author, L. iv. Phaleg. c. 34.

Canaan,

Ver. 7. In this Verse Moses acquaints us, what People descended from the eldest Son of Ham, viz. Cush, who had five Sons: And the fourth of them had two.

Seba.] There were four Nations, that had the Name of Seba or Shebab, as Bochart observes, L. ii. c. 25. Three of them are mentioned here in this Chapter. The first of them, this Son of Cush, is written with Samech, all the rest with Schin, viz. the Grand-son of Cush, who was the Son of Raamah or Rbegma, in the end of this Verse. The third was the Son of Jocktan the Son of Shem, ver. 28. And the fourth was a Grand-child of Abraham by his Son Jokshan, xxv. 3. They that descended from the three first of these, were a People given to Trade; from the fourth came a People addicted to Robbery. The first, the second, and the fourth, were seated near the Persian Sea; the third near the Arabian: Whence Pliny saith the Sabæans stretched themselves to both Seas, L. v. c. 28. For all these four People were comprehended under the Name of Sabæans, tho' very different one from another. But it may be doubted whether the Sabæans, who descended from Jokshan the Grand-child of Abraham, did live near the Persian Sea. And I shall shew upon xxv. 3. that Bochart himself thought otherwise upon further Consideration.

And as for this Seba, he was the Father of a People in Arabia called Jemamites, as Alcamus an Arabian Writer tells us: Whose Words are, A certain Man called Saba, gathered together the Tribes of the Jemamites: i. e. He was the Founder of the People called by that Name from a famous Queen of that Country called Jemama. See Bochartus, L. iv. c. 8. where he shews where they were situated: And that they are the Sabæans, who are said by Agathercides to have been a very tall proper People, mentioned, Isa. xlv. 14.

Havilah] Or Chavilah. There were two Havilahs also: One, the Son of Cush here mentioned; another, the Son of Jocktan, ver. 29. From this Havilah seem to have come the People called Chaulothæi by Eratothenes: Who were seated in Arabia Felix (as Strabo tells us) between the Nabathæi and the Agræi, i. e. the Hagerens. By Pliny they are called Chavelei, (which come nearest to the Hebrew Name) who were seated in that Part of the Country which lay towards Babylon; as appears by this, that in the Scripture the Wilderness of Sbur (nigh Egypt) and Havilah are opposed, as the most remote opposite Bounds of Arabia. Thus the Ismaelites are said to have dwelt from Havilah to Sbur, Gen. xxv. 18. that is, before Egypt, è Regione Egypti, over-against Egypt, as Bochart translates it: That is, Havilah bounded them on the North-East; and Sbur on the South-West; which Sbur was near to Egypt. And so Saul is said to have smitten the Amalekites from Havilah to Sbur, &c. 1 Sam. xv. 7. where we translate the last Words, over-against Egypt.

Sabta] Or Sabtha, (whom the Ancients call Sabatha or Sabathes) seems to have been settled in that part of Arabia Felix called Leanites, upon the Persian Sea; where there was a City not far distant from the Sea, called by Ptolomy, Σαβδα: From whence they sent Colonies over the Sea into Persia, as Bochart shews by several Arguments, L. iv. c. 10. For there is an Island on that Coast called Sophtba, and a People called Messabathæ or Massabathæ upon the Confines of Media; from the Chaldean word Mesa, (which signifies middle) and Sabatha; as if one would say, the Mediterranean Sabtæ.

Raamah,] Or, as the Ancients pronounce his Name, Rbegmah, was situated in the same Arabia, upon the Persian Sea. Where there is a City mentioned by Ptolomy's Tables Rbegama; in the Greek Text expressly Ῥῆγμα, Regma. And so Stephanus mentions both Ῥῆγμα πῆλις, and κίλη Ῥῆγμα, about the Persian Gulph.

Sabtecha] Or, Sabtecha, as some read it, was the youngest Son of Cush, except Nimrod, who is mentioned by himself. It is hard to find the place of his Habitation: But the rest of the Sons of Cush being seated about the Persian Sea, (except Nimrod, who, as Moses tells us, went to Babylon) Bochartus thinks it reasonable to seek for him in that Part of Caramania, where there was a City called Samydace, and a River, Samydachus: Which he thinks may have come from Sabtecha, by the change of the Letter B into M, which was very frequent in Arabia and the neighbouring Countries. For Merodach is also called Berodach, in the Book of Kings: And in the Chaldee Paraphrase, Basan is called Batbnan and Matbnan: And Abana (the famous River of Damascus) is expounded Amāna: And Mecha, and Beccha, are the same City among the Arabians. In like manner Sabtecha or Sabithace, might be changed into Samydace. Now, into Caramania there was a short Cut over the Straights of the Persian Gulph out of Arabia. I see nothing any where more probable than this Conjecture of that very learned Man, L. iv. Phaleg. c. 4.

And the Sons of Ramah; Sheba, and Dedan.] He gives an account of none of Cush's other Son's Posterity, but only of this, whose two Sons were seated near him and one another. For the younger of them, Dedan, seems to have left his Name in a City now called Dadan, hard by Rbegma, upon the same Shore, Eastward. And from this Dadan the Country now hath its Name: Of which Ezekiel speaks, xxvii. 15. as Bochart shews plainly, L. iv. c. 6. And Sheba (or as others read it, Seba or Saba) his elder Brother, was seated in the same Country not far from Dedan, where Pomponius mentions a People called Sabæi; and Arrianus speaks of a great Mountain not far off, called Sabo, from this Saba; whose Posterity easily passing over the Straights beforementioned, into Caramania, might possibly give Name to a City there which Ptolomy calls Sabis: And Pliny mentions a River of the same Name; and Dionys. Periegetes speaks of a People called Saba. Of whom the Scripture seems to speak in those places where Sheba and Seba are joined together, Pf. lxxii. 10. The Kings of Sheba (i. e. of this Country) and Seba shall offer Gifts. And sometimes Sheba and Raamah (for Rhegma) are joined, Ezek. xxvii. 22. where the Prophet speaks of this Sheba the Son, or Rhegma; who brought those precious Commodities there mentioned, out of Arabia; they lying very commodiously for Traffick upon the Persian Gulph. And these are the People also mentioned, ver. 23. of that Chapter, with sundry other Nations, who lived upon Tigris and Euphrates, which run into the Persian Sea; and therefore it is reasonable to think that Sheba's Posterity lived near the same Sea.

Ver. 8. And Cush begat Nimrod.] Besides all the fore-mentioned, he also begat this Son; whom Moses distinguishes from the rest, and mentions him alone by himself, because he was the most eminent among his Brethren, tho' born the last; a mighty Commander, as Moses here describes him. Thus in the Title of Psal. xviii. it is said, David was delivered out of the hand of all his Enemies, and out of the hand of Saul: Who is particularly mentioned by himself, because he was his chief Enemy. Sir W. Raleigh thinks he was begotten by Cush, when his other Children were become Fathers; and so being younger than his Grand-sons, he is named after an Account is given of every one of them.

Nimrod.] The Author of the Chronicon Alexandr. thinks he was the same with Ninus: But Vossius rather takes him for him whom the Greek Writers call Belus, that is, Lord: And that Ninus was his Son, so called from the very thing itself, Nin in Hebrew signifying a Son, L. i. de Idolol. cap. 24. The same Chronicon saith that Nimrod taught the Assyrians to worship the Fire: And both Elmacinus and Patricides affirm the same. See Hotting. Smegma Orient. L. i. c. 8. p. 272. Which if it be true, I doubt not was as an Emblem of the Divine Majesty, which used to appear in a glorious Flame. Ur a City of Chaldæa seems to have had its Name from the Fire which was there worshipped: And that Ur also from whence Abraham came, the Hebrews fancy had the same Original; for their Fable is, That Abraham was thrown into the Fire, because he would not worship it, and by the Power of God delivered, as St. Hierom tells us in his Questions upon Genesis.

He began to be a mighty one in the Earth.] He was the first great Warrior and Conqueror; so Gibbor is to be understood; not for a Giant, or Man of great Stature, but for a potent Person: And as some will have it, a more severe Governor than they had been who only exercised Paternal Authority. For he was the first that put down the Government of Eldership, or Paternity (as Sir Walter Raleigh speaks) and laid the Foundation of Sovereign Rule.

Ver. 9. He was a mighty Hunter.] Or rather, mighty in Hunting: For the word tzid doth not signify a Hunter, but Hunting. Which shows by what means he came to be so great a Monarch. He hardened himself to Labour by this Exercise (which was very toilsome) and drew together a great Company of robust young Men to attend him in this Sport: Who were hereby also fitted to pursue Men, as they had done wild Beasts. For this was look'd upon in all Ages, as the rudiment of Warfare, (as Bochart shews out of a great many Authors, L. iv. cap. 12.) all the Heroes of old, such as Nestor, Theseus, Castor, Pollux, Ulysses, Diomedes, Achilles, Aeneas, &c. being all bred up to hunting, as Xenophon informs us. And it was not without some such reason, that noble Families carry in their Coats of Arms (as Ensigns of their valorous Achievements) Lions, Bears, Tigers, &c. from their killing such-like fierce Creatures. For it must be farther noted, That in this Age of Nimrod, the Exercise of Hunting might well be the more highly esteemed, and win him the Hearts of Mankind; because he delivered them, by these means, from those wild Beasts, whereby they were much infested, and very dangerously exposed, while they were but few, and lived scattered up and down, in the open Air, or in Tents but weakly defended. The destroying of wild Beasts, (and perhaps of Thieves whom he hunted also) was of great service in those times, and made many join with him in great designs which he had at last, to subdue Men, and make himself Master of the People who were his Neighbours, in Babylon, Susiana, and Assyria. The Memory of this Hunting of his was preserved by the Assyrians (who made Nimrod the same with Orion) who joined the Dog and the Hare (the first Creature perhaps that was hunted) with his Constellation. This Mr. Selden observes in his Titles of Honour, Part i. cap. 1. where he farther notes, that he is to this day called by the Arabians, Algebar, the mighty Man, or the Giant: From the Hebrew Gibbor here in the text.

Before the Lord.] i. e. To the highest degree. For so a great City to God, is a very great City, Jonah iii. 3. and a Child very beautiful is called אֶחָדָה לַיהוָה, fair to, or before God, Acts vii. 20. Or the meaning may be, he was truly so, not only in common opinion. For that is said to be before God, which really is; because God cannot be deceived by false appearances.

Wherefore it is said, even as Nimrod the mighty, &c.] i. e. Thence came the common Proverb: Which Moses alludes as a proof of the Truth of what he delivered. Nothing being more usual in his days than for Men to say when they would express how exceeding great any Man was, He is like Nimrod, the mighty Hunter before the LORD. Thus common Sayings are quoted in other places, nothing being more notorious than such Proverbial Speeches, Numb. xxi. 27. 1 Sam. x. 12.

It is not improbable that Nimrod is the same with him whom the Greeks call Bacchus; whose Conquests in the East, as far as India, are nothing else but the Expeditions of Nimrod and his Successors. The very Name of Bacchus imports this, which was made out of Bar-Chus the Son of Cush, as Dammasek, (i. e. Damascus) was out of Darmasek. Many other Arguments for this are collected by Bochartus, L. i. Phaleg, cap. 2.

Ver. 10. The beginning of his Kingdom was Babel.] (See xi. 5, 8.) Which, according to the Gentile Writers, was built by Belus, (the same with Nimrod, who was called Belus, as I noted before from Baal, because of his Dominion and large Empire, over which he was an absolute Lord.) They that say, his Son Ninus (or, as Philo-Byblius, his Son Babylon) was the Builder, may be thus reconciled with the fore-mentioned Opinion, that Belus began it, and his Son much augmented it. See Voss. L. i. De Idol. c. 24. & L. vii. c. 9. There are those that say it was built by Semiramis, but as they have it only from Ctesias, who is not to be relied on against Berosus and Abydenus, who wrote the History of that Country out of the ancient Records, and say Belus built it; so if it be true, we must understand it of her rebuilding it after it was decayed, or adding greater Splendor to it. And this also must be understood not of the Wife of Ninus, for it is a question whether he had any Wife of that Name: Or if he had, she was different from her whom the Greeks so much magnify, who lived almost two thousand Years after the Son of Belus, as Salmasius observes (Exercit. in Solin. p. 1228.) out of Philo-Byblius.

And Erec, &c.] Having built Babel, which he made the chief City of his Kingdom, he proceeded to build three Cities more in the same Country. Which, they that think he won by Conquest, imagine also that he made Babel the Head City, because he won it first; and then the other. And all this, say some, before the Dispersion we read of in the next Chapter: Which others think happened after the Dispersion. Erec seems to have been the City which Ptolemy calls Arecca, and Ammianus, Arecha; which lay in the Country of Sufiana upon the River Tigris. Whence the Areccæi Campi in Tibullus, as Salmasius observes in his Exercit. in Solinum, p. 1194. From whence Huetius thinks the Country below it was called Iroque, mentioned by Alferganus and other Arabian Writers.

Acchad.] It is an hard matter to give any Account of this City; but the LXX calling it Archad, from the Chaldee Idiom, which is wont to change the Daghes, which doubles a Letter, into R, (as Darmasek for Dammasek, i. e. Damascus; and by the same reason, Archad for Acchad) the Footsteps of his Name may be thought to remain in Argad, a River of Sittacene in Persia. For nothing is more common than to change ch into g.

Chalne.] It is sometimes called Chalno, Isai. x. 9. and Channe, Ezek. xxvii. 23. From whence the Country called Chalanitis, (mentioned by Pliny and Strabo, Polybius and Dionys. Periegetes) may be well thought to have taken its Names: Whose chief City was called Chalne, or Chalone, (which is the same) and afterwards changed by Pacorus King of Persia into Ctesiphon.

Ver. 11. Out of that Land went forth Assur.] This Translation is not so likely as that in the Margin, He went out into Assyria. For Moses is speaking of what Nimrod the Son of Cush did, and not of the Sons of Shem, among whom Assur was one. Nor is it agreeable to the order of the History to tell us here what Assur did before there be any mention of his Birth, which follows, ver. 22. Besides, it was not peculiar to Assur the Son of Shem, that he went out of the Land of Shinar: For so did almost all Men who were dispersed from thence. Add to this, that Assyria is called the Land of Nimrod by Micah, v. 6. They shall waste the Land of Assyria with the Sword, and the Land of Nimrod with their Lances; or, in the entrance thereof, as we translate it. Therefore it is very reasonable to take Assur here, not for the Name of a Man, but of a Place, as it is frequently: And expound the word Assur, as if it were Leassur into Assur; as beth in 2 Sam. vi. 10. is put for lebeth: Other Examples there are of this, 2 Sam. x. 2. 1 Chron. xix. 2. By going forth into Assur, Bochart thinks is meant Nimrod's making War there: For so the Hebrew Phrase go forth imports, in 2 Sam. xi. 1. Psalm lx. 12. Isai. xliii. Zac. xiv. 3. So Nimrod went forth into Assyria, which belonged to the Children of Shem; but was usurped, he thinks, by this Son of Cush, who had no right to it but what he got by his Sword. If this be true, Mr. Mede's Observation which I mentioned upon ver. 27. of the foregoing Chapter, [That the Posterity of Cham never subdued either those of Japhet, or Shem,] must be understood of such large Conquests as they two made over one another, and over him.

And builded Nineveh.] Which Nimrod so called from his Son Ninus: The very word Nineveh being as much as Ninus's Habitation, גִּין נֹחַ. Thus Cain built a City, and called it not by his own but his Son's Name, iv. 17. This was the chief City of Assyria, and flourished in great Glory till it was utterly razed by the Medes, and never again rebuilt. It stood on the East-side of Tigris.

Reboboth.] There was a City of this Name upon Euphrates, which was famous for the Birth of Saul one of the Kings of Edom, Gen. xxxvi. 37. which the Arabians call Rababath-Melic, i. e. Rababath of the Kings, a little below Cercusium, at the Mouth of the River Chaboras. But this being too far distant from Nineveh, (to which this and the two following Cities were Neighbours) Bochart's Conjecture is not unreasonable, That this is the City which Ptolemy calls Birtba, on the West of Tigris, at the Mouth of the River Lycus. For in the Chaldee Tongue Streets are called Birtba; and that is the signification of Reboboth, as the Margin of our Bible will inform the Reader.

Calab or Calach] Seems to have been the chief City of the Country called Calachene, about the Fountain of the River Lycus: Which Strabo often mentions.

Ver. 12. And Resen, &c.] The fore-named great Man conjectures this to have been the City which Xenophon calls Larissa, situate upon the Tigris: Which Moses might well call a great City. For so Xenophon says it was, and describes the height of the Walls to have been an hundred Foot, the breadth five and twenty, and the compass of it eight Miles about. The Greeks found it in Ruins, and uninhabited, when they came into those Parts; being destroyed by the Persians, when they spoiled the Medes of their Empire. And it is possible, as Bochart goes on, the Greeks asking whose City that was, and the Assyrians answering, Leresen, i. e. Resen's, (adding; as is usual, le, the Note of the Genitive Case) they might thence call it Larissa. Such a Mistake, he shows, there is in the Vulgar Translation of the Bible, which takes this Particle le for part of the Name. For, in 1 Chron. v. 26. where it is said the King of Assyria carried the Israelites to Halab, the Vulgar says unto Labelab: Whereas it is certain from 2 Kings xvii. 6. that it should be unto Halab, or Helab. However, it is reasonable to think that these words, this is a great City, belongs to Resen, not to Nineveh: Whose Greatness as well as Babylon's was very well known; and therefore these words seem to be added to denote Resen to be a great deal bigger than the two before-named, *Rebobo*th and Calab. See Bochart, L. iv. c. 23.

They that think Nimrod settled his Kingdom in Babel before the Dispersion by Confusion of their Languages, imagine that he made this Expedition into Affyria, (where he built Nineveh, and the rest of the Cities here mentioned) after they were forced to leave off their vain-glorious Building at Babel, and to disperse themselves into other Countries.

Ver. 13. And Mizraim (the second Son of Cham) begat Ludim.] By whom we are to understand the Æthiopians, as Bochart hath proved by many Arguments, (which I shall not mention) and therefore understands by these words, that the Æthiopians were a Colony of the Egyptians, L. iv. Phaleg. c. 26. For it appears by Diodorus that they were near of kin, having many things common to both Nations; which he reckons up, and are sufficient to persuade those who consider them, that they had the same Original: The only difference among them being this, which of them was of greatest Antiquity. The Egyptians fancy'd they were the first of all Men; and the Æthiopians pretended that they living more Southerly, had a stronger Sun; which contributed more efficaciously to natural Generation: And that Egypt was a Country thrown up by the Mud which Nilus left, and so got out of the Sea. But Moses hath determined this Controversy in these words, and by the rest of his History; which shows that the first Men after the Flood came from the Mountains of Armenia, which is in the North; and consequently they went to the Southerly Countries by degrees, thro' Affyria, Babylon, Syria, and Egypt, into Æthiopia. And their Discourse is ridiculous about the Original of Egypt, unto which we see nothing added by the Nile, in many Ages.

Ananim.] Our Broughton takes these to be the Numidians, among whom he finds Anubis. Others take them for the Anaitæ in Æthiopia. But these Ananims being derived from Mizraim, we are rather to seek them about Egypt: And the Opinion of Bochart is probable; that they are the Nomades, who lived about Ammon and Nasamonitis; and called Ananii, from Anam, which signifies a Sheep among the ancient Egyptians, as it doth among the Arabians. For the Nomades fed Sheep, as Herodotus tells us, and lived upon them, (whereas they abstained from eating Cows or Swine) and their Garments also, as he tells us, were of Sheep-skins.

Lebabim.] These are thought to be the Lybians; but that being a Name which belongs to the greatest part of Africa, it cannot be well thought that so great a Portion fell to this Son of Mizraim, or that so many People were descended from him. Therefore Bochart with great reason thinks the Lebabæi were not all the Lybians; but those whom Ptolomy, Pliny, and others call Lybiægyptii, because they lived next to Egypt on the West of Thebais, in a sandy, adust Soil, burnt by excessive Heat; from whence he thinks they had the Name of Lebabim. For Lebaba signifies both a Flame and Heat: As in Joel i. 19. The flame (Lebabab in the Hebrew) or scorching heat, hath burnt all the trees of the field.

Naphtubim.] These seem to be the People of Nephtuab; and what that is we may learn from Plutarch; who in his Book De Iside & Osiride, says the Egyptians call the Countries and the Mountains that lie upon the Sea, Neptun; which may incline us to think that the Naphtubim were those People that lived upon the Shore of the Mediterranean in Marmarica: For the People upon the Red-Sea belonged to Arabia, not to Egypt. It is not improbable that from hence came the Name of Neptune, who originally was a Lybian God, and known to none but that People.

There was a City called Nepata by Pliny, which Grotius thinks may explain this Name: But it was in Æthiopia; and Moses is speaking of the Sons of Mizraim.

Ver. 14. And Patrusim.] Who were the Inhabitants, it's likely, of Patros: Which was a part of Egypt, tho' represented sometime in Scripture as a Country distinct from it: Just as Thebais is in some Authors said to be, whereas it was the Upper Egypt. Bochart hath brought a great many Arguments to prove this: Particularly from Ezekiel xxix. 14. which shows clearly that Patros belongs to Egypt: For the Prophet foretelling that God would bring again the Captivity of Egypt, he saith he would cause them to return into the Land of Patros, into the Land of their Habitation, or Nativity: That is, into Thebais, which Nebuchanezzar had principally afflicted, carrying most of the Inhabitants of Thebes into Captivity. This seems a more probable Account of the Patrusim than theirs who take them to be the Pharusi, (as Grotius doth) or Phautusi; who were a People of Æthiopia.

Castubim or Castubim.] These were the Colchi, who tho' they lived far from Egypt, from whence they are said here to descend, yet there are a great many Arguments, that they had their Original from that Country. For several ancient Authors say so, as Herodotus, Diodorus, Strabo, and Ammianus; all of great Credit. And there are many Reasons whereby Herodotus proves it (as Bochart shows in his admirable Work, often mentioned, L. iv. Phaleg. c. 31.) they agreeing in so many things, especially in their Manners and Language, that one can scarce have any doubt of it. These People were seated at the East End of the Euxine Sea.

Out of whom came Philistim.] They were the Offspring of the People of Colchis, as will appear in what follows.

And Capthorim.] These were a People near to Colchis, as appears from hence; that the Philistim, who are said here to come from Castubim, in other places are said to have come from Capthor, Jer. xlvii. 4. Amos ix. 7. And Moses himself relates how the Avims nigh to Gaza (a famous City of the Philistim) were driven out by the Capthorim, Deut. ii. 23. All the Ancients therefore are in the right, who take the Capthorim for the Cappadocians: Yet, not all the Inhabitants of that Country, (part of which was possessed by other People, as was said before) but that part of Cappadocia which was next to Colchis, viz. about Trapezund, where Colchis ended. For there we find the City called Side, and the Country Sidene, mentioned by Strabo. Now, Side in Greek (as Bochart ingeniously observes) signifies the same with Caphtor in Hebrew, viz. Malum punicum: And therefore in all likelihood, the same Country was called by the Hebrews Caphtor, and by the Greeks Sidene.

What invited the Caphtorim out of Egypt into this Country is hard to tell at this distance of time. But Strabo thinks it was the Fame of the Gold wherewith this Country abounded. And as this drew them thither, so perhaps the coldness of the Country, very much different from that wherein they were born; or else their Neighbours the Scythians and Mesech and Tubal (viz. the Moschi and Tibareni) who dwelt near them, and might be troublesome to them, made them think of returning back again. And in their way thro' Palestine they fell upon the Avim, whom they dispossessed of their Country, and settled there (Deut. ii. 23.) by the Name of Philistim.

Ver. 15. And Canaan.] Now follows an Account of the Posterity of Ham's youngest Son.

Sidon] Was his First-born; who was the Founder of the famous City called by his Name, Sidon: Which Trogus saith was so called from plenty of Fish on that Coast. And so the present Name of it, Said, signifies Fishing or Fishery: As the Town in Galilee called Bethsaida, is as much as the place of Fishing: For that Sea upon which it lies, the Hebrews say, abounded with Fish. However, the Sidonians came from this Son of Canaan; and some of them (if he did not found it himself) called the City by this Name in memory of him. It was far more ancient and famous than Tyre: For we read of it in the Books of Moses, and Jessua, and the Judges: But nothing of Tyre till the Days of David. Nor doth Homer mention Tyre; tho' he speaks of Sidon and the Sidonians in many places.

Heth,] His second Son, was the Father of the Hittites, or the Children of Heth, often mentioned in Scripture; who dwelt about Hebron and Beer-sheba, in the South of the Land of Canaan. They were a very warlike People, and struck a Terror into their Neighbours: From whence the word Hittite seems to be derived, which signifies fright and sudden Consternation; such as came upon the Syrians, when they thought the Kings of the Hittites were coming against them, 2 Kings vii. 6. This was the Country of the Anakims. For from Arba, who was an Hittite, descended Anak; and from him those three Giants, Abiman, Sbesbai, and Talmi, and the rest of the Anakims, Numb. xiii. 22, 23. Josh. xv. 13, 14.

Ver. 16. The Jebusite.] This People, who were situated near to the former, descended from Jebus the third Son of Canaan; and were a very warlike People also. For they kept Jerusalem and the Fortrefs of Zion, to the times of David, notwithstanding all the Power of the Benjamites. And when David besieged it, they mock'd at his Attempt, 2 Sam. v. 8.

And the Emorite.] They came from Emor, the fourth Son of Canaan, and are commonly called Amorites; who possessed the mountainous Parts of Judea: And many of them passed over Jordan, and making War upon the Moabites and Ammonites, seized upon Bashan and Heshbon, and all the Country between the Rivers of Jabbok and Arnon, Numb. xiii. 29. Josh. v. 1. In memory of which Victory, some Canaanite Poet made a Triumphant Song, which Moses hath recorded, Numb. xxi. 27. What a mighty People these were we learn from Amos ii. 9.

Gergasite.] There was a Remnant of this People about Gerasa or Gadara, beyond Jordan in our Saviour's time, Matth. viii. 28. Mark v. 1. Luke viii. 26. And they were called perhaps by this Name from the fat, clayey Soil of the Country where they lived; for Gargas in Hebrew is white Clay.

Ver. 17. And the Hivite or Hevite.] They lived in and about Mount Hermion, as we read, Josh. xi. 3. which being towards the East of the Land of Canaan, they are called Kadmonites, i. e. *Oriental*s or Easterlings, Gen. xv. 19. The Gibeonites and Sichemites were Colonies from them, (Josh. xi. 19. Gen. xxxiv. 2.) who dwelt more Westward: The former of them, Neighbours to Jerusalem, and the latter to Samaria.

Arkite.] This People Bochart thinks inhabited Mount Libanus, where Ptolemy and Josephus mentioned a City called Arca or Arce: In which, he thinks, was the Temple Veneris Arcbitides, worshipped by the Phœnicians, as Macrobius tells us, L. i. Saturn. c. 27. Pliny also mentions Arca among the Cities of the Decapollitan Syria, and saith it was one of those who had a Royal Jurisdiction, under the Name of a Tetrarchy, as Salmasius observes in his Exerc. in Solin. p. 576.

Sinite.] St. Hierom saith, that not far from Arca there was a City called Sin; where we may suppose these People to have dwelt. But Bochart rather by the Sinites understands the Peleusians, whose City was called Sin; which is of the very same signification with Pelusium.

Ver. 18. And the Arvadite.] These People are the same with the Aradii, who possessed the Island called Aradus upon the Coast of Phœnicia, and part of the neighbouring Continent: Where a Place called Antaradus, opposite to the Island, was seated. Strabo and others speak of this Island, and mention another of the same Name in the Persian Gulph, (as Salmasius observes upon Solinus, p. 1023.) whose Inhabitants said, they were a Colony from this Island I now speak of, and had the same Religious Rites with these Arabians; who were very skilful in Navigation, and therefore joined by Ezekiel with Zidon, xxvii. 8. where he makes them also a warlike People, ver. 11.

Zemarite.] They who make these the same with the Samaritans, do not observe that these Names are written quite differently in the Hebrew: And that the Samaritans so much spoken of in Scripture, had their Names from Somron. And therefore Bochart thinks these are the Samarites mentioned by St. Hierom; who says they inhabited the noble City of Edeffa in Calosyria (it should be the City of Emesa or Emisa which was in that Country, but Edeffa is in Mesopotamia, beyond Euphrates) and so both the Chaldee Paraphrases have here for Zemarite, Emisæi. But I do not see why we should not rather think this Son of Canaan (Zemarus) from whom the Zemarites came, was the Founder of the City of Zemaraïm (Josh. xviii. 22.) which fell to the Lot of the Tribe of Benjamin.

Hamathite.]

Hamathite.] These were the Posterity of the last Son of Canaan; from whom the City and Country of Hamath took its Name. Of which Name there were Two; one called by the Greeks Antiochia, the other Epiphania: The former called the Great, Amos vi. 2. to distinguish it from this, which St. Hierom says in his time was called Epiphania, and by the Arabians (in the Nubian Geographer) Hama. This is the City which is meant when we so often read that the bounds of Judæa were to the Entrance of Hamath, Northward, Numb. xiii. 21. xxxiv. 8. and other places. For it is certain they did not reach to Antiochia, but came near to Epiphania.

Afterwards were the Families of the Canaanites spread abroad.] In process of time they enlarged their bounds: For they possessed all the Country, which lies from Idumæa and Palestine, to the mouth of Orontes: Which they held for Seven hundred Years, or thereabout. Moses indeed confines the Land of Canaan in narrower bounds toward the North, (as hath been said) but we must consider that he describes only that part of Canaan, which God gave to the Israelites for their Portion. Now there being Eleven Nations who had their Original (as appears from this and the foregoing Verses) from so many Sons of Canaan; we do not find that the First, and the Five last were devoted by God to destruction, as the rest were. For we read nothing of the Zidonians, Arkites, Sinites, Aradites, Zemarites, and Hamathites, among those Nations, upon whom the Sentence of Excision was pronounced by God, and their Country bestowed upon the Israelites. But we read of Two others not here mentioned, who made up the Seven Nations, whom God ordered to be cut off, viz. the Perizzites, and those who were peculiarly called Canaanites, who sprang from some of the fore-named Eleven Families; but we do not know from which. We shall meet with it in the xv. Chapter of this Book.

Ver. 19. And the border of the Canaanites, &c.] Here Moses describes the Bounds of that Country, which was given by God to the Jews.

From Sidon.] i.e. The Country of Sidon, which extended it self from the City so called towards the East, as far as Jordan, or near it. This therefore may be look'd upon as the Northern Bounds of the promised Land.

As thou comest to Gerar unto Gaza, &c.] These and all the rest belong to the Southern Bounds: For these two were Cities near to the Philistines. We often read of Gaza; and Gerar was famous for Abraham's and Isaac's sojourning there, (Gen. xx. i. xxvi. i.) and for the overthrow of the Cushites, 2 Chron. xiv. 13.

Sodom and Gomorrha, &c.] These Four Cities are famous for their destruction, by Fire and Brimstone from Heaven.

Even unto Lashab.] Or Lasa, which St. Hierom takes for Callirrhoe, as doth Jonathan also: A place famous for hot Waters, which run into the dead Sea. But Bochartus (L. iv. Phaleg, c. 37.) doubts of this, because Callirrhoe was not in the Southern Part of Judæa, as Lashab was: He propounds it therefore to consideration, whether it may not be a City of the Arabs called Lusa: Which Ptolemy places in the middle way, between the dead Sea, and the Red.

Ver. 20. These are the Sons of Ham, after their Families, &c.] This is sufficiently explained by what was said upon verse 5. where Moses concludes his account of the Sons of Japhet. Only it may be observed in general, that these Four Sons of Ham and their Children, had all Africa for their Portion, (Mizraim having Egypt, and Phut the rest) and no small part of Asia, which fell to the share of Cush and Canaan.

Ver. 21. Unto Shem also, the Father of all the Children of Eber.] That is, of the Hebrew Nation, whom Moses would have to know from what an illustrious Original they sprung; and therefore breaks off the Thread of its Genealogy, to give a short touch of it. I can give no reason so likely as this, why he calls Shem the Father of Eber's Children, rather than of any other descended from him. He having told them before, that Ham was the Father of Canaan, (ix. 22.) whom God cursed, and at the same time blessed Shem; he now tells them, that this blessed Man was the Father from whom their Nation was descended; that they might comfort themselves in their noble Stock, and believe Canaan should be subdued by them.

The Brother of Japhet the Elder.] Scaliger translates these words Shem the Elder Brother of Japhet: But the he which is prefixt to Gadol, i. e. Greater, plainly directs us to refer the Word Greater or Elder to him who was last spoken of, viz. Japhet: Who may be plainly proved to have been the Eldest Son of Noah; from this observation, That Noah was Five hundred years old, before any of his Three Sons, Shem, Ham, and Japhet were born, v. 32. When he was Six hundred Years old, he entered into the Ark with them, vii. 11. And when he came out, two Years after the Flood, Shem begat Arphaxad, being then an Hundred Years old, xi. 10. and consequently Noah was Six hundred and two. From whence it follows that Shem was born when Noah was Five hundred and two Years old: And therefore Japhet must be two Years older than he; for Noah began to have Children when he was Five hundred. But God preferred Shem before him; giving hereby an early demonstration (of which there were many Instances afterward) that he would not be confined to the order of Nature in the disposal of his Favours; which he frequently bestowed upon the Younger Children: As he did upon Jacob, and in after-times upon David, who was the youngest and meanest of all his Father's Children.

Even unto him were Children born.] Perhaps he was the last of his Brethren that married; and then Moses shews in the following Verses, had Five Sons: the Progeny of two of which are mentioned, but the rest passed over in silence.

Ver. 22. Elam] Was the First-born; from whom came the Elamites, mentioned Acts ii. 9. Whose Metropolis was the famous City of Elymais. They lay between the Medes and Mesopotamians (as Bochart shows, L. ii. Phaleg, c. 2.) and were a very warlike and fierce People, as Isaiab, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel testify. The Susians were a neighbouring People, but different from them: And therefore when Daniel says Sushan was in the Province of Elam, he takes Elam in a large sense; as Pliny and Ptolemy also do, who mention Elamites mites at the mouth of the River Eulæus (Ulai in Daniel) which was below Susiana. See Salmasius Exerc. in Solin. p. 1193, 1194. And thus Josephus may be allowed to say, the Elamites were Περσῶν ἀπαιχῶν, the Founders of the Persians, who were a distinct People from them, tho' often comprehended under this Name of Elam.

Asbur.] From whom came the People called at first Affyres, and afterward Affyrians: Which was a Name as large as their Empire, comprehending even Syria itself; which in several Authors is the same with Affyria. But in proper speaking it was only that Country, whose Head was Nineveh, called sometimes Adiabene, and Aturia or Affyria.

Arpaxad.] Many, following Josephus, make him the Father of the Chaldees. But I find no good Reason for it; and it seems more probable that the Chaldees (in Hebrew, Chasdim) came from Chesed one of Abraham's Brother's Sons, Gen. xxii. 22. which St. Hierom positively affirms. Therefore it is more reasonable to think Arpaxad gave Name to that Country, which Ptolemy calls Arrapachitis, which was a Part of Affyria.

Lud] Seems to have given Name to the Country of Lydia, which lay about Meander; and included in it Mysia and Caria, which lay on the South side of that River. Which having the most Windings and Turnings in it, of any River in the World (for it returns sometimes towards its Fountain) the Phœnicians call this Country, and another, viz. Ethiopia, that lay upon the Nile (which next to Mæander is, the most crooked of all Rivers) by the Name of Lud: Which in their Language signified bending, or crooked. See Bochart. L. ii. Phaleg, c. 12.

Aram.] From whom sprung the Syrians, whose Name anciently was Aramæi; the Children of Aram. A Name not unknown to the antient Græcians; for Homer mentions the Ἀραμῆες in his second Book of Iliads; and so doth Hesiod; and Strabo also saith, that many understood by the Arimi, the Syrians. And the Syrians at this day call themselves Aramæans. But Syria being so large a Name, that ancient Authors extend it to all those Countries that lay between Tyre and Babylon, we must not take all the People of them to have been the Posterity of Aram. For it is evident some of them descended from Canaan, others from Asbur, others from Arpaxad. Therefore those are to be thought to have come from him, to whom the Name of Aram is prefix'd or subjoined, as Aram-Nabarrim, and Padan-Aram (i. e. the Mesopotamians) Aram-Soba (the People of Palmyra, and the neighbouring Cities) Aram-Damasek (situated between Libanus and Anti-Libanus, whose chief City was Damascus) and perhaps Aram-Maacha, and Aram-Bethrehab; which were Places beyond Jordan, one of which fell to the Share of Manasseh, the other of Asher.

Ver. 23. And the Children of Aram, &c.] The four Persons that follow in this Verse are called the Sons of Shem, 1 Chron. i. 17. Nothing being more ordinary in Scripture, than to call those the Sons of any Person who were his Grandsons, xxix. 5, &c.

Uz.] Or Utz, the First-born of Aram, is generally said to have been the Builder of Damascus: The Valley belonging to which, is by the Ara- bians at this day called Gaut, and Gauta, which differs from Utz in the Letters, but not in the Pronunciation: it being common to pronounce the Letter Ajin by our G, as in the words Gaza and Gomorrhah. Accordingly the Arabick Paraphrast for Utz hath here Algauta. There were two other Uz's besides this, one the Son of Naber (Abraham's Brother) Gen. xxii. 21. whose Country was Ausitis in Arabia Deserta; the other was of the Posterity of Edom, Gen. xxxvi. 28.

Hull.] Or Cbul. Grotius observes out of Ptolemy, that there was a City in Syria called Cholle, which he thinks might be founded by this second Son of Aram. But Bochart more probably conjectures that his Posterity possessed the Country called Cholobetene, which was a Part of Armenia. For the Armenians, and Arabians, and Syrians were much alike, as Strabo saith, in their Shape of Body, Speech, and Manner of Life. And there are divers Cities, which Ptolemy places in this Country, that begin with Hol or Chol; as Cholus, Choluata, Cholana: And Cholobetene (the Name of the Country) which in their Language is Cholbeth, signifies as much as the House or Seat of Chol.

Gether.] It is hard to give any account of the Country where his Posterity settled, unless they gave the River Getri its Name, which the Greeks call Kerteim; which runs between the Carduchi and the Armenians, as Xenophon tells us. This is Bochart's Conjecture, which is a little nearer than that of Grotius, (Annot. in L. i. de V. R. C.) who explains this by the City Gindarus in Ptolemy, and the People called by Pliny, Gindareni, in Cælo-Syria. But after all, it may seem as probable that Gadara, the chief City of Peræa, which Ptolemy places in the Decapolis of Cælo-Syria, had its Name and Original from this Gether.

Masbi.] Who is called Mesech, in 1 Chron. i. 17. seated himself, as Bochart thinks, in Mesopotamia, about the Mountain Masius, (which is Grotius's Conjecture also) from whence there flowed a River which Xenophon calls Maica. The Inhabitants of which Mountain Stephanus calls Masieni; and perhaps the Moschemi, whom Pliny speaks of, between Adiabene and Armenia the greater, were descended from this Masbi or Mesech.

Ver. 24. And Arpaxad begat Salab.] Having given an account of the Posterity of Shem's youngest Son, he now tells us what People descended from his third Son.

Salab.] In Hebrew Shelab. His Father being born but two Years after the Flood (xi. 10.) seems to have given this Name to his Son, to preserve the Memory of that dreadful Punishment, that his Posterity might not incur the like by their Sins. For Sela signifies the letting forth of Waters, Job v. 10. He is thought to have been the Father of the Susiani: The chief City of their Country, next to Susa, being called Sela, as we find in Ammian. Marcellinus: Either because he was the Founder of it, or in Memory of him.

And Salab begat Eber.] The Father of those from whom came the Hebrew Nation, (as was said before, Verse 21.) Abraham being descended from him in the Sixth Generation. All other Derivations of the Name of Hebrew have great Objections lie against them; but this hath none that I can see; and is more agreeable to the Gram- mar of that Language, in which all such Names ending in Jod (as עֲדִי doth) are noted to come either from a Place, or Country, or People, or Author: Therefore since there is no Country or Place from which the Name of Hebrew can be derived, it is most reasonable to deduce it from the Author of this People, Heber. And it is authorized by that Speech of Balaam, Numb. xxiv. 24. Where as by Asbur is meant the Affyrians, so by Heber, in all reason, we are to understand the Hebrews.

Ver. 25. Peleg.] Either he, or some of his Posterity in memory of him, it is not unlikely, gave Name to a Town upon Euphrates, called Phalga; not far from the Place where the River Chaborus runs into it: Upon which Cbarrab stood, built by Charan the Brother of Abraham.

For in his Days was the Earth divided.] The great Disperſion, which we read of in the following Chapter, fell out juſt when he was born; which made his Father call him by this Name, ſignifying Division and Separation. Which it appears, by the Account given of his Anceſtors, (xi. from verſe 10 to 16.) happened in the hundred and firſt Year after the Flood. In that Year the Tower of Babel and their Language were confounded; upon which neceſſarily followed the Separation here mentioned. The Age that preceded from the Deluge to this Division is called by the ancient Poets, the Golden Age, (as Bochart obſerves, L. i. Phaleg, c. 9.) becauſe the Earth not being divided, they enjoyed all things in common. And Noah (whom they called Saturn) governing them, not as Kings do their Subjects, but as Parents their Children; not ſo much with Fear and Dread, as with Love and Reverence to his fatherly Authority; it made the World ſo happy as it hath not been ſince.

Joktan or Jektan.] The Brother of Peleg, had a numerous Offspring, of thirteen Sons; all ſeated in the inmoſt Parts of Arabia Felix. So the Arabians, it is certain, derive their own Original: Who in this may as well be credited, as the Europæans who derive themſelves from Japetus, or Japhet, and the Africans from Cham or Hammon. They call him Cabtan, (as our Mr. Pocock, as well as others, obſerves) by which Name the Arabick Paraphraſt upon this place explains that of Jektan. And this Cabtan they ſay expreſſly was the Son of Eber, the Son of Salah, &c. From whence the Name of Catanitæ, a People in Arabia Felix mention'd by Ptolemy, and a City in the Territory of Mecha, ſtill retains the very Name of Jektan, being called Baiſath-Jektan, i. e. the Seat or Habitation of Jektan, in the Arabian Geographer. See Mr. Pocock's Notes upon Abul-Farajus concerning the Original of the Arabians, p. 38, 39.

Ver. 26. Almodad.] The eldeſt Son of Joktan, ſeems to have given Name to the People whom Ptolemy calls Ἀλμοδαῖοι, in the middle of Arabia Felix, near the Original of the River Lar, which runs into the Persian Gulph. The Greeks, who knew little of this People, who lived a great way from the Sea, might eaſily miſpronounce their Name; calling them Allumæote, inſtead of Almodæi.

Sheleph, or Saleph] = Was, it is likely, the Father of the Salapeni. For ſuch a People there were, mentioned by Ptolemy, who calls them Σαλαπῆνοι: who were remote from the reſt, about the Neck of Arabia, not far from the Spring of the River Betius.

Hatzermaveth.] Tho' the Arabians write this Name with the very ſame Letters, yet it ſounds among them thus, Hadramuth, or Cadramuht. Which the Greeks pronounce divers ways, becauſe of the ambiguous Sound of the two Letters, Tzadi and Cbeth: For ſometimes he is called Aſarmoth, (ſometimes without an A) Sarmoth, and Armoth, and Atermoth, as Bochartus hath obſerved; who thinks the Country called Chatramitis or Atramitis, Chatramotis or Atrimotis, to have been peopled by the Children of this Hadramuth, as the Arabians pronounce this Name Hatazmaveth. Ἀδραμύτα, Salmaſius ſhows, is the Name of a City or Place, and Ἀδραμύτης, of a People or Nation. Exercit. in Solin. p. 489. And the ſame People he obſerves (p. 490.) are called by Artemidorus, Ἀρτεμιδοῦς, whoſe Country was that Part of Arabia which abounded with Frankincenſe, Myrrh, Caffia, and Cinamon, as Theophrastus tells us. And Strabo calls them (as he there notes) χαλερωῖται, and Uranius in Stephanus χαλερωῖται: So differently was this hard Word pronounced. Who were ſo famous, that Eufſebius Antioch, Eufebius, and others, make this Hatzermaveth the Father of the Arabians, and Epiphanius derives their Language from him; which they (as was ſaid before) derive from Jektan himſelf; looking upon the Dialect of Chadramites as barbarous. See Bochartus, L. ii. Phaleg, c. 16. where he obſerves that Hatzermaveth in Hebrew ſignifies the Entrance of Death, and Hadramuth in Arabick, the Region of Death. Becauſe the Air of that Country was very thick and foggy, (and conſequently unwholſome) as Arrianus relates; who ſaith, that the Frankincenſe and Myrrh were therefore gathered only by the King's Slaves, and by condemned Perſons.

Jerab, or Jerach.] From whom came the People called Jerachæi, who lived near the Red-Sea; called by Agatharcides and others, Ἀλιλαῖοι, Alilæi: Which is the very ſame in Arabick with the other in Hebrew. For Hilal is the Moon in that Language, as Jerach is in Hebrew. And the Nubienſian Geographer mentions a People about Mecha, who at this day are called Bene-bilal, the Children of Jerach, as the Hebrews would have expreſſed it. It ſeems they are come more towards the Eaſt, when anciently they dwelt in the South. Ptolemy mentions alſo an Island, upon the Coaſt of the Alilæi, which he calls Ἰερακίων νῆσος: But it doth not ſignify the Iſle of Hawks, (as the Greeks fancied, who imagined all theſe old Words to come from their Tongue) but of the Jerachæi.

Ver. 27. Hadoram.] He ſeems to have fixed his Seat in the utmoſt Corner of Arabia towards the Eaſt, where there was a People, whom Pliny calls Drimati: A Name eaſily made from Hadoramus. And the extreme Promontory of that Country is called by the Greeks Corodamon, by tranſpoſing the Letters D and R from Hadoramus. I can find nothing more likely than this Conjecture of that great Man Bochartus, who hath out-done all that went before him in this Argument, L. ii. Phaleg, c. 20.

Uzal.] Abraham Zacbut, as he also observes, says the Jews (who in his time dwelt there) called the chief City of Aljeman, by the Name of Uzal. Now the Kingdom of Aljeman or Jeman is the South-part of Arabia Felix; as the very Name of Jeman imports, which signifies both the Right-hand and the South.

Diklah.] Both in the Chaldee and Syriack Languages Dikla signifies a Palm, or a Grove of Palms: Which led Bochartus to conclude that the Minæi, a People of Arabia Felix, whose Country abounds with such Trees, were the Posterity of this Diklah. Both Pliny and Strabo mention them. And this is far more probable than the Conjecture of Ludovicus Capellus, That the Country of Dangala in Æthiopia, near Egypt, might have its Name from this Man: for that is too remote from the rest of this Man's Posterity: and so is Δικαλίων mentioned, as he observes, by Herodotus, Chronolog. Sacra, p. 108.

Ver. 28. And Obal.] Which in the Arabick Pronunciation is Aubal, as Cocah, a Star in Hebrew, is in Arabick Caucab, &c. The Posterity of this Aubal or Obal, Bochart thinks, passed over the Streights of the Sinus Arabicus, out of Arabia Felix, into Arabia Triglodytica; where we meet with this Name in the Sinus Abalites, (which others call Aualites) and in a great trading Town called by Arrianus Ἀουαλίτης; and in a People who lived in that Sinus, called by Ptolemy Ἀουαλίῃ and Ἀδελίῃ, I believe it should be Ἀουαλίῃ from this Obal.

Abimael.] Which the Arabians pronounce Abimāl, i. e. the Father of Mali, or the Malitæ; a People in Arabia next to the Minæi before-mentioned. Theophrastus saith, Mali is the Metropolis of a Country in Arabia the Spicy: From whence the People called Malitæ, whom Ptolemy calls Manitæ, by an usual Change of the Letter L into N, as Nabonidus, is the same with Labonidus, &c. And it is probable that Mali is the Contraction of Abimali: Nothing being more common than in compound Names to omit the first part. As Sittim, Numb. xxv. 1. for Abel-Sittim, xxx. 49. Hermion very often for Baal-Hermion, Judg. iii. 3. Nimrim for Beth-Nimrim, and Salem for Jerusalem.

Sheba.] From whom came the Sabæans, who sometimes comprehend a great many People, but here are to be taken strictly for those upon the Red-Sea, between the Minæi and the Catabanes: Whose Metropolis, which stood upon an high Mountain full of Trees, is called by ancient Authors Saba and Sabai, Sabo and Sabas, as Salmasius shows out of Stephanus, Agatharcides, and others; who say that this City was πλεονέκτιστον, much the fairest of all in Arabia. Exerc. in Solin. p. 491, 492, &c. In later Times this Name was changed into Mariaba, the ancient Name being lost, as the same Salmasius there observes, p. 497, & 1118. Which Pliny saith signifies as much as Dominos omnium, the Lords of all: For from Rabba, to rule, comes Marab, which signifies in their Language (as Bochart observes) the Seat of those that rule; that is, the Royal City where their Kings lived. The Nubiensian Geographer saith, the Queen of Sheba came from hence to hear the Wisdom of Solomon.

Ver. 29. And Ophir.] Which the Arabians pronounce Aupbir, signifying abundance: Gold being found there in such Plenty, that they exchanged it for Brass and Iron, giving a double or triple Proportion of Gold for them. Bochart thinks he gave the Name of Ὀυφῆν to an Island in the Red-Sea, mentioned by Eupolemus in Eusebius: And observes that there were two Ophirs, one belonging to India, whither Solomon's Ships went once in three Years, (which he takes for Taprobana, now Zeilan) and the other belonging to Arabia, where the Posterity of this Ophir, here-mentioned, settled. Whose Country he takes to have been near to the Sabæans, their Brethren; which Stephanus and Ptolemy call Cassanitis. The same in sense for Ophir; for Cbojan is a Treasure, which the Arabians write Chazan, from which comes the word Gaza, for abundance of Riches.

Havilah, or Chavilah.] See Ver. 7. where we had this Name before, among the Sons of Cush; from whom the Havilah here spoken of is very different: Giving Name, it is probable, to the Country which the Nubiensian Geographer calls Chaulan: And says it was a Part of Arabia Felix, nigh also to the Sabæans; which he accurately describes. See Phaleg, L. ii. cap. 28.

Jobab.] The Father of the Jobabites, near to the Sachalites, as Ptolemy expressly says; if instead of Jobaritæ in him, we should read Jobabitæ, as Bochartus corrects the Passage with great Reason. And thinks also the Reason of this Name to be plain: For Jebab in Arabick signifies a Desart; and there are many such in the Country of the Jobabites, above the Sinus of Sachalites.

Ver. 30. And their dwelling was from Mesha, &c.] This Conclusion confirms what hath been said, that all the thirteen Sons of Joktan were seated in Arabia Felix, except Obal; who went, it's likely, after Moses's Time, over into Abalites; the Passage being short cross that Streight before-mentioned, (Ver. 28.) which was not above four or five Miles broad. For Arabia Felix lies between the Red-Sea and the Persian Gulph. Now Mesa, or Musa, or Muzā, was a famous Port-Town in the Red-Sea, which the Egyptians and Ethiopians frequented in their way to the Country of the Sapharites in the East; from whom they brought Myrrh, Frankincense, and such like things. Ptolemy's Tables plainly show this, That from Musa the Sapharitæ lay directly Eastward; and Saphar was the Metropolis of the Country at the foot of the Mountain Climax: which, anciently, it's likely, was called Sapbar, from the City at the bottom of it. And thus we are to understand Moses when he says here, that Sepher was a Mountain of the East; not Eastward from Judea, but from Mesha which was in the West. See Bochart, l. ii. Phaleg, c. 30. where he observes that the Arabick Paraphrast (of the Paris Edition) takes Mesha to be Meccha, and instead of from Mesha to Sepbar, saith from Meccha to Medina. Which is nearer Truth than their Opinion, who place the Children of Joktan about Copetes, upon the Coast of India. But he shows that some of the Children of Cush settled between Meccha and Medina; and it sufficiently appears that Joktan's Children dwelt in the inmost Part of Arabia Felix, and are the genuine Arabians.

Ver. 31. This is explained, Ver. 5.

Ver. 32. By these were the Nations divided after the Flood.] They and their Descendants shared the whole Earth among them, as it is said expressly, ix. 18. Of them was the whole Earth overspread. But according to the foregoing Account we find only three Parts of the Earth, Europe, Asia, and Africa, possessed by the three Sons of Noah and their Children. Which hath made some so bold as to say, there were other People in America, who were not drown'd by the Flood. And one of their Reasons why it was not peopled from any of the other three Parts of the Earth is, that we can give no Account how Lions, Bears, Wolves, Foxes, and such-like Creatures should get thither: For none, sure, would carry them by shipping, though Men themselves might, by that means, pass over into those Regions. But this Difficulty is not so great as they make it. For it is manifest, That though the Continent of America was found full of such Beasts, when the Spaniards first came thither; yet none of the Islands, tho' very large, which lay remote from the Land, had any Lions, Tygers, or such-like Creatures in them. Which is a Demonstration, that these Creatures were not originally from that Part of the Earth; for then the Islands would have been furnished with them, as well as the Continent; just as they are with all sorts of Vegetables: And consequently, the Continent itself was stored with these Creatures from some other Part of the Earth. Which might be done by some Neck of Land not yet discovered, which joins some Part of Europe, or Asia, to the Continent of America. Or, if there be no such Neck of Land now extant, yet there may have been such a Bridge (as we may call it) between the Northern Parts of Asia, or Europe, and some Northern Part of America; or, between the South-East Part of China, or the Philippine Islands, and the Southern Continent of that other Part of this World, tho' now broken off (as many suppose England to have been from France) by the Violence of the Sea, or by Earthquakes, which have made great Alterations in the Earth. And truly, he that observes (as that great Man the Lord Chief Justice Hales speaks, in his Book of the Origin of Mankind, §. ii. c. 7.) the infinite Number of Islands lying between the Continent of China and Nova Guinea, the most contiguous to each other, hath probable Reasons to believe, that these were all formerly one Continent, joining China and Nova Guinea together, tho' now by the Irruption of the Sea crumbled into many small Islands.

CHAP. XI.

Ver. 1. AND all the Earth,] i. e. The Inhabitants of the Earth; as 1 Kings x. 24. all the Earth is explained, 2 Chron. ix. 23. all the Kings of the Earth.

Were of one Language.] In the Hebrew of one Lip; which is one Instrument of Speech comprehending the rest. Their Mouth formed the same Words. So it follows,

And of one speech.] Or Word, as the Hebrew hath it. Some distinguish these two so subtilly, as to say they had not only the same Language, but the same manner of Pronunciation, which is often very different in the same Language. The Heathens themselves acknowledge there was but one Language anciently, (see Josephus, and out of him Eusebius, L. ix. Præp. Evang. c. 14, 15.) which in all likelihood was the same that had been from the Beginning, which Adam himself spake. For Metuselah, the Grandfather of Noah, lived some time with him, and spake, we may well suppose, the same Language that he did. And we cannot but think the same of Noah, who propagated it among his Posterity till this Time. But whether this was the Hebrew or no, we cannot be certain. The Chaldees Paraphrasts and the Hebrew Writers generally say it was; and most Christian Writers have been of their Opinion: Infomuch that R. Gedaliah, upon these words, saith, The wise Men among the Christians have searched what was the first Tongue; and all the World confesses that from Adam to the Flood they spake the Holy Language. Which it is not to be thought we have now entire and pure, but that a considerable Part of it still remains in the Bible. As may be proved by no contemptible Arguments; particularly this, that Shem the Son of Noah was for some time contemporary with Abraham, who descended from him; and in whose Family continued the same Language which they both spake, unto Moses his Days.

VOL. I.

They that have fancied there were more Languages than one at this Time, grounded their Mistake upon those Words, Gen. x. 5, 20, 31. where the Sons of Noah are said to have had the Earth divided among them, according to their Tongues. Not considering that he speaks of this very Division, of which he is going to give an account; and briefly mentioned there, ver. 25. For the thirteen Sons of Joktan, immediately after mentioned, (who had their Share in the Division) were not in Being when their Uncle Peleg was born; as the most learned Primate Usher hath demonstrated in his Annals, A. M. 1757.

Ver. 2. As they journeyed from the East.] He doth not speak of all the Posterity of Noah, who after the Flood planted in the East, much less Noah himself; but of a great Colony of them, who when the East was much peopled, chose to go Westward. By the East, most understand Armenia, where they suppose the Ark rested, and Noah with his Sons planted. But this hath great difficulty in it, for the Mountains of Armenia lay North of Shinar, or Affyria, and not East. Which Bochart solves in this manner: Affyria being divided into two Parts, one on this side, the other on the further side of Tigris; they called all that Part beyond Tigris, the East Country, tho' a great Part of it towards Armenia was really Northward; and that Part on this side they called West, tho' some of it lay to the South, L. i. Phaleg, c. 7. But there is no need of the help of this Solution, the Mountains of Ararat running a long way Eastward; from which when Noah and his Sons descended, they settled, it's likely, in Countries which were very much Eastward of Affyria.

They found a plain.] They continued to dwell in the mountainous Countries of the East, where the Ark rested, till they grew very numerous, and wanted room; and then descended into the Plain, and some of them went Westwardly into the Land of Shinar, that pleasant Plain (as Mr. Mede fancies) where God at the Beginning had placed the first Father of Mankind, Adam.

Shinar.] By this Name we are to understand not only that Part of Assyria where Babylon stood, but all that Country which bordered upon Tigris unto the Mountains of Armenia; from whence Noah and his Sons are supposed to have descended when the Earth was dry, and not to have gone far from thence at first till they were multiplied; and then some of them came into this Country, which Noah had inhabited before the Flood. Thus Bochart in the place before-named. But there is no Certainty the Ark rested in Armenia; it might be further Eastward, upon some other Part of that long Ridge of Mountains, called Ararat: From whence they descended when the Earth was dry, and dwelt in the lower Grounds, which were warmer and more fruitful than the Mountains.

But that from the East Mankind were propagated, is apparent from the Increase of Arts and Sciences, which, as Dr. Jackson observes, (Book i. c. 16.) were in some measure perfected there, (in Times as ancient as any prophane History can point us unto) and thence derived as from a Center, to more remote Parts of the World. The Ripeness of Literature, civil Discipline, and Arts, among the Eastern People, before they did so much as bud forth in Greece or Italy (I may add Egypt either) is a Demonstration, that these were the Stock, and the other but Slips or Branches transplanted from thence. Nay, the State and Grandeur of those Eastern Countries, before Greece or Italy, or any other Western People grew into the fashion of a Kingdom, shows, that the Eastern People were the Heirs of the World, and other Nations but as Colonies from them.

Ver. 3. They said one to another.] i. e. Consulted together.

Go to.] And stirred up one another to lay all their Hands to this Work.

Let us make Brick.] In that low and fat Soil there was no Stone, as intimated in the next Words, and they had Brick for Stone. No body doubts but this is a true Translation of the Hebrew word Labenab: For Herodotus, and Justin, and many others, describe the Walls of Babylon as made of such Materials. What Chemar is (which was the Cement to join the Bricks together) doth not so plainly appear. We translate it Slime; following herein a great many of the Hebrews: particularly Kimchi, who says it is Mortar made of Sand and Lime. But there is much reason to think it was that which the Ancients called Ἀσφαλτος, a kind of Pitch, (as Kimchi himself acknowledges some understand it) which is described by Authors as a very glewy thing, and therefore used by Noah, by God's Direction, about the Ark. There was great Plenty of it in Assyria, as Theodoret here observes, from some Fountains which vomited it up with the Water. And so Strabo and Dion affirm, that it was very fit for this purpose; and Herodotus says expressly, that the Walls of Babylon were cemented with it; and so do many others, both Greek and Roman Authors, mentioned by Bochartus, L. i. Phaleg, c. 13. And it is very observable, that Arrianus faith, L. vii. The Temple of Belus in the midst of the City of Babylon, of a vast Bigness, was made of Brick, cemented with Asphaltus.

Ver. 4. And they said, Go to now.] At the first perhaps they spake only of building themselves Houses; but now they laid their Heads together, and consulted to make a huge Monument of their Greatness.

A City and a Tower.] Some fancy one thing to be expressed in two words: A City and a Tower, being a City with Turrets. But both this Verse and the next express them so severally, that we ought to think them to have been distinct. Yet, that the Tower was Part of the City, is plain by Verse 8. where it is said, they left off to build the City, making no mention of the Tower: Which was contained in the City, as a Part of it; and may well be thought to have been the Acropolis, (as the Greeks speak) a strong Place in the highest Part of the City, such as we call a Citadel. For the Scripture by a Tower, means some Fortrefs to keep out an Enemy, which was wont to be built in the midst of the City, that it might command every Part of it.

Some fancy the Temple of Belus, before-mentioned, was afterward built where this Tower stood; and was nothing else but the Tower perfected for another Use. Or, rather, a Temple was built round about the Tower, which stood in the midst of it, as Herodotus describes it, L. i. Ἐν μέσῳ δὲ τῆς πόλεως σέβας, &c. in the midst of the Temple was a strong Tower, &c.

Whose top may reach up unto Heaven.] i. e. To the Clouds. As much as to say, an exceeding high Tower. For the same is said of the Walls of the Cities of Canaan, Deut. i. 28. ix. 1. and therefore can mean no more here. And is an usual Phrase in Scripture; as when the Psalmist says, They that sail upon the Sea are sometime lifted up to Heaven, cvii. 25. which is a Language that other Authors speak; for Homer mentions a Fir-tree which was ἑκατομύχνης, extended to Heaven, i. e. very tall. Which I note to show the senseless Spite of Julian the Apostate, who endeavoured to discredit this sacred Story, by the poetical Fiction of the Giants warring with Heaven: As if there were no more Truth in the one than in the other. But St. Cyril in his fourth Book against him truly observes, That in Scripture, this Phrase, eis ἑκάνδρ, to Heaven, is put ἀντὶ τῆς ὕψους, for that which is highly elevated, as this Tower was. Which being half a quarter of a Mile in Breadth and Length, had another Tower stood upon it; and a third upon that, and so on, μεχρὶ τῆς οὐρανόπρητον, (as Herodotus speaks) till there were Eight Towers in all: which made it of a vast height.

Let us make us a Name, &c.] Here he plainly acquaints us with their Intention in building this City and Tower: Which was to be a perpetual Monument of their Fame; to spread it far and wide while they were alive, and that their Names might live in this Monument when they were dead: All Posterity saying, Such and such Persons were the Founders of the First and Mother City of the World. So David is said to have got himself a Name, 2 Sam. viii. 13. i. e. extended his Fame by his great Achievements. And God is said to do the same, Isai. lxiii. 12, 14. Therefore there was no occasion for assigning other Reasons for the building of this Tower; when Moses gives one so clearly. That which hath been commonly fancy'd is, That they might secure themselves against another Inundation: From which they were secured by the Divine Promise, (if they would believe it) together with the addition of a Sign to it, ix. 12. And, if they did not believe it, why did they come down from the Mountains into the plain Country, to build this Tower; which might more rationally have been erected upon the top of the highest Mountains, if their meaning had been by this means to preserve themselves from future Floods? If there were any other meaning besides that mentioned by Moses, I should think that most probable which I find in Dr. Jackson, (Book i. on the Creed, c. 16.) That it might be a Refuge wherunto they might resort, and continue their Combination: Something of which seems to be intimated in the next words: There is a Conjecture also made by a most worthy Friend of mine, a good while ago, Dr. Tennison, then Bishop of Lincoln, in his Book of Idolatry, (which is not inconsistent with these) That this Tower was consecrated by the Builders of it to the Sun, as the cause of drying up the Waters of the Deluge, (or rather, as the most illustrious and nearest resemblance of the Schechinah, as I noted on Chap. iv.) and that it was intended as an Altar whereon to sacrifice to it. But it is propounded only as a Conjecture: Which those Jews seem also to have had in their minds, who by the word Shem, (Name) understand God: As if their meaning were, Let us make us a God; and raise him a Temple. And perhaps future times did convert it to that use.

[Left we be scattered abroad upon the Face of the whole Earth.] Here they speak as if they feared a Dispersion; but it's hard to tell from what cause, unless it were this, That Noah having projected a Division of the Earth among his Posterity, (for it was a deliberate business, as I noted upon x. 5.) these People had no mind to submit unto it; and therefore built this Fortrefs to defend themselves in their Resolution of not yielding to his design. Thus the most learned Usher, ad A. M. 1757. But what they dreaded, they brought upon themselves by their own vain attempt to avoid it: And now there is no memory preserved of the Names of those that conspired in this attempt. Thus what Solomon saith, was long before verified, Prov. x. 24. The fear of the Wicked shall come upon him. But this Evil by God's Providence was attended with a great Good: For by this Dispersion the whole Earth was peopled, and the foundation laid of several great Nations and Kingdoms.

Ver. 5. And the LORD came down to see, &c.] This is an accommodation to our conceptions; and means no more but that by the Effects, he made it appear that he observed their Motions and knew their Intentions.

[Which the Children of Men builded.] It is generally agreed that Children of Men in Scripture, is opposed to Children of God: As bad Men and Infidels are to the Good and the Faithful. Which gives us to understand, that neither Noah, nor Shem, nor Arphaxad, Salah, or Heber were engaged in this Work, but some of the worse sort of People who degenerated from the Piety of their Ancestors. It is probable some of the Race of Ham; who it's likely carried much of the Spirit of Cain with him into the Ark: Otherwise he could not have behaved himself so vilely towards his Father after they came out of it. For that terrible Judgment, it seems, had not reformed him; and then it is no wonder if he grew more wicked after it was over. Josephus and others take Nimrod (his Grandchild) to have been the ἀρχηγός, as his Word is, Ringleader of this Crew who combined in this design. But I take it to be more probable that he came and settled here after the Dispersion. For there being not much above an Hundred Years between the Flood and this time, it is not likely such a great Kingdom could be erected in that space, as we read of, Gen. x. 10. And therefore he grew so great after this Dispersion, when he came out of Arabia, or some neighbouring Country, and settled here in Babel: Which was called by this Name upon occasion of the Confusion of Languages, and had it not before. Which is an Argument that what we read, x. 10, 11. must be understood to have happened after this time. But if all this be true, that some of Cham's Race began this design, which other bad People were too much disposed to follow, and that they who retained the true Religion (from whom Abraham descended) were not of the number, it is credible that they escaped the Punishment here mentioned (in the next Verses) retaining still their ancient Seat, and the ancient Language also; which continued in the Family of Heber, and was called Hebrew.

Ver. 6. And the LORD said, &c.] This Verse expresses only a Resolution to spoil their Project, and the necessity of so doing.

Ver. 7. Let us.] The Rabbins fancy this is spoken to the Angels. But it is beyond the Angelical Power to alter Mens Minds so in a moment, that they shall not be able to understand what they did before. Therefore God spake to himself: And this Phrase suggests to us more Persons than One in the Godhead. In short, none but He who taught Men at first to speak, could, in an Instant, make that variety of Speech which is described in the next Words. Novatianus therefore anciently took it, that this was spoken by God to his Son.

[Confound their Language.] The Word Confound is to be mark'd: For God did not make every one speak a new different Language, but they had such a confused remembrance of the Original Language which they spake before, as made them speak it very differently; so that by the various Inflections, and Terminations, and Pronunciations of divers Dialects, they could no more understand one another, than they who understand Latin can understand those who speak French, Italian, or Spanish; tho' these Languages arise out of it.

And yet it is not to be thought, there were as many several Dialects as there were Men, so that none of them understood one another; for this would not merely have dispersed Mankind, but destroyed them, it being impossible to live without Society, or to have Society without understanding one another: For if the Father could not have understood the Son, nor the Husband his Wife, there could have been no comfort in living together. Therefore it is likely that every Family had its peculiar Dialect; or rather the same common Dialect (or way of speaking) was given to those Families, whom God would have to make one Colony in the following Dispersion. Unto which Dispersion they were constrained by their not being able to have such familiarity as they had before with every body, but only with those who understood their particular Speech.

Into how many Languages they were divided, none can determine. The Hebrews fancy into LXX. which Opinion hath much prevailed, being grounded upon the foregoing Chapter: where the Descendants from the Sons of Noah are just so many. The Greek Fathers made them LXXII. because the Greek Version adds two more, (Elisa among the Sons of Japhet, and Cainan among the Sons of Shem) and the Latin Fathers follow them. But this is a very weak Foundation, it being apparent that many of the Sons of Canaan used the very same Language in their Country, and so did Javan and Elishab in Greece: And in other places so many concurred in the use of the same Speech, that scarce Thirty remain of the Seventy to be distinct, as Bochart hath observed. See Selden, L. ii. de Synedr. c. 9. Sect. iii.

Ver. 8. So the LORD scattered them.] Broke their combination by making them speak several Languages, which cut off the common Bond of one Society. For as the Unity of one common Language (to use the Words of Mr. Mede, p. 362.) had knit all Mankind into one Community: So God in his Wisdom saw that plurality of Languages was the best means to force them into a plurality of Societies.

Abroad from thence.] Into all the Regions of the North, South, and West: The East being inhabited before by Noah, and such of his Offspring as abode with him. Which is not to be understood as if they were immediately scattered into the remotest places from Babel; but first into the neighbouring Countries, and by degrees into those which were further off, according as their Families increased.

How long this Dispersion happened after the Flood, cannot be certainly determined: But we can demonstrate it was not much above 100 Years. For Peleg (in whose days this came to pass, x. 25.) was born but an hundred and one Years after, as was observed before upon that place. Now, some think this Division was made just at his Birth; which St. Austin takes to have been the reason why his Father called him Peleg, quia tunc ei natus est, quando per linguas terra divisa est; because he was then born to him, when the Earth was divided by their Languages. But the Text doth not make this out; for it only says, in his Days the Earth was divided. And the Thirteen Sons of Joktan (Peleg's Brother) who had their share in this Division, being not then born, we must conclude that if this Division began at Peleg's Birth, it was not finished till some Years after. Elmacinus says in the Fortieth Year of Peleg's Age; the Hebrews generally say at his Death. See Hottinger's Smegma Orient. p. 62. and 166.

And they left off to build the Tower.] I see no reason to believe that God overturned it by a terrible Tempest, as Epiphanius expresses it, τὸν πύργον ἀνέμων βολῇ ἀνέσχεσεν. Which is the Opinion of Josephus, L. i. c. 5. Antiq. and Abysdenus, mentioned by Eusebius, L. ix. c. 4. Præpar. Evang. and divers others of the Ancients. Nor is there any ground for what others say, (particularly Benjamin Tudel, in his Itinerary, p. 77.) that it was burnt by Fire from Heaven. For Moses doth not intimate that it was either burnt, or overturned, but only that they desisted from their Enterprize; which naturally ceased when they could no longer join to carry on the Building. Which may rather lead us to think that the City and Tower stood long after this: And that Bochart's Conjecture is not unreasonable, That it was the very Tower which was afterwards consecrated to Belus, described by Herodotus, L. i. For it is evident, that tho' this City and Country lay waste for some time, Men being frightened by the confusion of their Languages from living there; yet Nimrod, a bold Man, came and made this the Seat of his Empire; and, it is very probable, carried on that Work which was broke off by the Dispersion. For it is not said, Gen. x. 10. that he built Babel, (as he did Nineveh, and other Cities, ver. 11.) but only that it was the beginning of his Kingdom, the Head City, where he made his residence.

Ver. 9. Therefore is the Name of it called Babel.] Which signifies in Hebrew, Confusion: So frivolous is their Conceit, who make it to have been called by this Name, from Babylon, the Son of Belus. All the Difficulty is, to know who called it by this Name. Some think the Children of Heber, in whose Family the original Language continued: But it may be as rationally conceived, that in the confusion of Languages, all retained some of the ancient Words, and particularly this, by which they all commonly called this Place.

Confound the Language of all the Earth.] That is, the Language of all those People who were in this Western Colony; not the Language of Noah, and his Plantation more Easterly, who kept, as I said, the primitive Language.

Scatter them abroad upon the face, &c.] This Dispersion was so ordered, that each Family and each Nation dwelt by itself: Which could not well be done, as Mr. Mede observes, but by directing an orderly Division: Either by casting of Lots, or chusing according to their Birthright, after Portions of the Earth were set out according to the number of their Nations and Families: For otherwise, some would not have been content to go so far North as Magog did; and others suffered to enjoy more pleasant Countries.

Ver. 10. These are the Generations of Shem.] It appears from the foregoing Chapter, that these here mentioned, were not all the Persons who descended from him; but these were the Ancestors of Abraham, whom Moses derives by these from Shem.

Ver. 11. Lived after he begat Arphaxad, five hundred Years.] So that as he had seen Metubelab and Lamech before the Flood, he might also see, not only Abraham, but his Son Isaac, who by this Account was one and twenty Years old when Shem died.

Ver. 14. Begat Eber.] Who was the Father of those from whom came the Hebrew Nation: Abraham being descended from him in the sixth Generation.

Generation. And that Nation being called Eber, Numb. xxiv. 24. and the Children of Eber, Gen. x. 21. it is not reasonable, as I observed before, to seek for any other Derivation of the Name of Hebrews.

Ver. 16. Peleg or Phaleg.] It is not unlikely that either he, or some of his Posterity in memory of him, gave Name to a Town upon Euphrates called Phalga; not far from the place where Chaborus runs into it, upon which Haran (or Charrab) stood, built by Haran, Abraham's Brother.

Ver. 18. Reu, or Ragau] (As some pronounce the Hebrew word) gave Name to a Field near Affyria; Judith i. 5. or, as Tobit saith, in Media: Where Strabo mentions a City called Raga, and so doth Stephanus, πάγος πάλος ἐν Μεδία. In the hundred and thirtieth Year of his life, if we may believe Elmacinus, (p. 29.) Nimrod began to reign in Babylon: And in his days also he says, the Egyptian Kingdom began. Which need not seem strange, tho' scarce two hundred Years were passed since the Flood, when we consider the vast increase of People in these Ages, from a few Planters, within such a compass of time: And likewise the extraordinary fruitfulness which God after the Flood bestowed upon them for the Peopling of the Earth. For he says twice to Noah and his Sons, immediately after they came out of the Ark, Increase and multiply, ix. 1, 7. and replenish the Earth. From this Antiquity of the Egyptian Kingdom it is, that the later Pharaohs called themselves the Sons of ancient Kings, Isai. xix. 11.

In Reu's time also both the Egyptians and Babylonians now began to make Images and worship them, if Patricides may be credited. See Hotting. Smegma Orient. cap. 8. n. 16.

Ver. 20. Begat Serug.] From whom (Bochartus thinks) some of his Descendants might call the City Sarug: Which the Arabian Geographer says was near to Charræ or Haran. He first began to celebrate every Year the Memory of famous Men, after they were dead; and commanded them to be honoured as Benefactors; if we may believe Suidas, in the word ζέφυχ, and Damascen, and a long Roll of other Authors mentioned by Jacobus Geusius, Par. i. c. 2. De Victimis Humanis.

Ver. 22. Begat Nabor.] The same Writers say, That Idolatry increasing much in his days, there was a great Earthquake (the first that had been observed) which overturned their Temples, and broke their Images in Arabia.

Ver. 24. Terab.] Whom they make to have been an Idolatrous Priest, but to have repented, and been converted to the Worship of the True God. See Verse 31.

Ver. 26. And Terab lived seventy Years, and begat Abraham, Nabor, and Haran.] i. e. He was seventy Years old before he had any Children; and then had three Sons one after another: Who are not set down in the order wherein they were born. For Abraham's being first named doth not prove him to have been the eldest Son of Terab, no more than Shem's being the first named among Noah's three Sons proves him to have been the first-born, ix. 18. For there are good Reasons to prove that Abraham was born sixty Years after Haran; who was the eldest Son, having two Daughters married to his two Brothers, Nabor and Abraham: Who seems to be the youngest, tho' named first, both here and in the next Verse, because of his Pre-eminence. See Verse 32.

Ver. 28. Haran died before his Father, &c.] In his own Country, (as it here follows) out of which he did not go, as the rest of his Family did.

In Ur of the Chaldees.] That part of Mesopotamia which was next to Affyria is called the Land of the Chaldees. For Ur, as Abarbinel observes, was in Mesopotamia; lying in the way from Tigris to Nisibis. And therefore St. Stephen makes Mesopotamia and the Land of the Chaldees the very same, Acts vii. 2, 4. Eupolemus indeed, as Bochart notes, places this Ur, from whence Abraham came, (Verse 31.) in Babylon: But Amianus speaks of an Ur in Mesopotamia, situated as before-mentioned; which we have reason to think was the place from whence Abraham came, because from thence to Canaan the way lay straight thro' Charran (or Haran) but it did not do so, if he came from Babylon. And no good Account can be given why he should go about thro' Mesopotamia and Charran, when there was a shorter way thro' Arabia, if he came from Babylon.

Ver. 29. The Father of Isaac.] i. e. Of Sarai, whom Abraham married; she being his eldest Brother's Daughter, Sister to Lot. For Haran had three Children, Lot, ver. 27. and Milcab, whom Nabor married, and Sarab, whom Abraham married: That is, Haran dying, the two remaining Brethren married his two Daughters. For if we should understand any body else by Isacab but Sarab, there is no account whence she descended: Which Moses sure would not have omitted, because it very much concerned his Nation to know from whom they came, both by the Father's, and the Mother's side. It is no wonder she should have two Names; one perhaps before they came out of Chaldaea, and another after.

Ver. 31. Went forth from Ur of the Chaldees.] See what was said, Verse 26. unto which I have nothing to add but this, That this Country was so famous for Superstition, that the Chaldaeans in Daniel's time were reckoned as a distinct sort of Diviners from Magicians, Astrologers, and Soothsayers or Sorcerers, (Dan. ii. 2, 10. iv. 7. v. 11.) And it is likely, from some such sort of Men, Terab and his Family learnt the Worship of Idols, Josh. xxiv. 2. But tho' he had been an Idolater, yet it may be probably concluded from his leaving Ur of the Chaldees, with an intention to go to Canaan (as it is here said) that now he was become a Worshipper of the True God. For what should move him to it but Obedience to the Divine Direction which Abraham received, (as we read in the next Chapter) to which he would not have agreed, if he had not believed in God: As Lot it is plain did, whom he took along with him. That word is much to be remarked, which makes him the principal Agent in their Removal, Abraham himself being governed by his Motion: For Moses says, He took Abraham, and Lot, the Son of Haran, &c. And tho' Nabor did not now go along with his Father to Haran, (being left behind perhaps to look after some concerns) yet afterwards he followed him, with all his Family. As appears from Chap. xxvii.

43. and the following Chapter. And he also forsook Idolatry; for Rebekah his Grand-child was married to Isaac, and his great Grand-children, Rachel and Leah, nay, their Father Laban, seem to have been Worshippers of the True God, (tho' with a mixture of some Superstition) for he makes mention of Jehovah upon several occasions, Gen. xxiv. 31, 50, 51.

And they came unto Haran.] It is possible that Terab going from Ur to Canaan, and staying in this place called the City χδίσαι, (Charræ) after the Name of his Son Haran, (or Charan) who died a little before, ver. 28. For both the Greek and Roman Writers call a City, famous for the Death of Crassus, by the Name of Charræ; situate on a River of the same Name. It is likely from Abraham's Brother were derived both the Name of the River and of the City, which the Arabians to this day call Charan or Charran.

And dwelt there.] It is plain he intended to go to Canaan, and not to settle here: But being arrested by the Sickness of which he died, could go no further.

Ver. 32. And the days of Terab were two hundred and five Years.] Moses doth not sum up the Years of any Man's Life mentioned in this Chapter, (as he doth in Chap. v.) but only of Terab's. Which he doth on purpose that we may know when this new Period of Time began, (of Abraham's leaving his own Country, and thereby becoming the Father of the Faithful) which we are not to count from the time when Terab began to have Children, (ver. 26.) but from the time of his Death; immediately after which Abraham went on towards Canaan. See Usser. Chronol. C. iii. and C. vii.

From this also we learn when Abraham was born: For if seventy five Years (which was Abraham's Age when his Father died, and he went from Haran, xii. 4.) be subducted from two hundred and five, it is manifest that he was born when his Father was an hundred and thirty Years old; that is, threescore Years after his Brother Haran, as I said on ver. 26.

C H A P. XII.

MANY ancient Authors speak of Abraham, as Josephus observes, and out of him, Eusebius; who names others also, L. ix. Præpar. Evang. c. 16, 17, &c. All that I shall note is, That one great Design of Moses being to lead the Jews to understand the Genealogy of this noble Ancestor of theirs, he hastens to it; Relating other Matters briefly, but spending many Pages about him. For he comprises, for instance, the History of the World from the Creation to the Flood, containing One thousand fix hundred fifty six Years, in the Compass of six Chapters: But bestows on the History of Abraham nineteen Chapters, tho' it contain no longer space of time than an Hundred and seventy five Years.

Ver. 1. Now the LORD had said unto Abraham.] While he lived in Ur of the Chaldees; from whence it is certain he called him while his Father was alive, xi. 31. We are not told how he spake to him; for here is no mention (as Maimonides observes, P. ii. c. 41.) of his speaking in a Dream, or a Vision, or by the Hand of an Angel, but only simply and absolutely, that the LORD said unto him. By a Voice, when he was awake, I suppose, from the Sebechinab or Divine Majesty: For St. Stephen saith expressly, the God of Glory appeared to him, before he dwelt in Charran, Acts vii. 2.

Get thee out of thy own Country, &c.] Which began a good while ago to be infected with Idolatry, (See xi. 18, 22.) some of Shem's Posterity forgetting the Creator of All, and worshipping the Sun as the great God, and the Stars as lesser Gods. So Maimonides in his More Nevoch. P. iii. c. 29. where he saith the Zabii relate in one of their Books, (which he there names) That Abram contradicting their Worship, the King of the Country imprison'd him, and afterward banished him into the utmost parts of the East, and confiscated all his Estate. A Tale invented to take away from him the Honour of his voluntary leaving his Country, and to discredit this Sacred History, which tells us he directed his Course quite another way, towards the West. Abarbinel and others will not have this Call of God to Abram to have been when he was in Ur, but after they came to Haran; to which he fancies Terab came, because of some misfortunes he had in Ur. But this is invented to contradict St. Stephen, Acts vii. 2. with whom Aben Ezra agrees, who expounds these words of his calling out of Ur. For it is hard to find any other reason why he designed to go to Canaan, (xi. 31.) the place whither he went after Terab was dead.

Into a Land that I will shew thee.] He had the Divine Direction, it seems, all along, to conduct him in his Journey. But it argued, as the Apostle observes, a great Faith in God, that he would follow him, not knowing the Country to which he would lead him.

Ver. 2. And I will make of thee a great Nation.] First, by multiplying of his Posterity; and then by making them a select, peculiar People, whom he distinguished by his Favours from all other Nations. So it follows,

I will bless thee.] Bestow many Benefits both Temporal and Spiritual upon thee.

And make thy Name great.] Make him famous throughout the World; as he is to this day, not only among the Jews, but among Christians and Mahometans. So Maimonides observes, that all Mankind admire Abraham, even they that are not of his Seed.

And thou shalt be a Blessing.] Others shall be the better for thee; as Lot was, and the King of Sodom, &c. Or, as the Hebrews understand it, thou shalt be so prosperous, that when Men would wish well to others, they shall use thy Name, and say, The Lord bless thee as he did Abraham.

Ver. 3. I will bless them that bless thee, &c.] The highest Token of a particular Friendship, which he here contracts with Abram (who is called the Friend of God) in promising to espouse his Interest so far, as to have the same Friends and Enemies that he had. Which is the form wherein Kings and Princes make the strictest Leagues one with another.

And curse them that curse thee.] Maimonides will have it, (in the place before-named) that the Zabæans loaded Abram with all manner of Curfes and Reproaches, (when he was sent out of their Country) which he bearing patiently, God turned upon themselves.

And

And in thee shall all the Families of the Earth be blessed.] Which was most eminently fulfilled in Christ. And here it must be remark'd, that this Promise of blessing all the World in Abram, was made to him before he received Circumcision; while he was in Ur of the Chaldees, and before he had any Issue (for Sarai was barren, and had no child, xi. 30.) and therefore before any Preference of Isaac to Ismael, or any Distinction made between his Posterity and the rest of Mankind, in token that they were all concern'd in this Promise, whether descended from Abram or not; in short, this Promise only limits the Birth of the Messiah to the Seed of Abram, but declares that his Benefits should be common to all other Nations.

Ver. 4. So Abram departed, &c.] Having staid some Time in Haran, where his Father fell sick and died, he prosecuted his Journey from thence to Canaan after his Father was dead. So St. Stephen tells us expressly, Acts vii. 4. from thence (i. e. from Charran) when his Father was dead he remov'd him into this Land, &c. It was a wonderful Effect of Abram's Faith (I observ'd before) to move him to leave his own native Country and go to Haran; but it was still a greater, after he had travelled a long way from Ur hither, to go three hundred Miles more from hence to Canaan, a Country of which he had no Knowledge, nor had sent any Body before him to discover it, taking his Journey thro' the dangerous and barren Desarts of Palmyrena, and having nothing to support him but only the Promise of God, which made him climb over the high Mountains, either of Libanus, Hermon, or Gilead; for in that Part of the Country he entered, as Sir W. Raleigh hath observed. See ver. 5.

And Lot went with him.] He might conclude perhaps, that Abram being called in a special manner out of Chaldea, was thereby distinguish'd from the rest of Shem's Posterity, and that he joining with him in obeying the same Call, might claim the Privilege of fulfilling the Promise of the Messiah no less than Abram.

And Abram was seventy and five Years old when he departed out of Haran.] See xi. ult.

Ver. 5. And all the Souls they had gotten (Hebr. had made) in Haran.] i. e. all the Slaves born in their House, or bought with their Money; the Chaldee Paraphrast interprets this of the Profelytes they had won to God, for such only would Abram carry with him; and some of the Hebrew Doctors are so nice as to say, that Abram instructed the Men, and Sarai the Women, in the true Religion; concerning which he wrote a Book (if we may believe Maimonides, de Idolol. c. 1.) and left it to his Son Isaac. We read also in Pirke Eliezer, c. 25. that he took a House which fronted Charran, where, according to the ancient Piety, he kept great Hospitality; and inviting those that went in or came out of the Town to refresh themselves if they pleased, set Meat and Drink before them, saying, There is but one God in the World.

And into the Land of Canaan they came.] We are told before, xi. 31. that Terah went forth to go to this Country, but could not reach it, as Abram did, who enter'd into it at the North Part of it, as appears from the following Part of the Story, where we read he went to Sichem, &c. and ver. 9. went on still towards the South.

Ver. 6. Sichem unto the Plain of Moreh.] Or, as Mr. Mede, following the LXX will have it, the Oak of Moreh; understanding by Oak, not only one single Oak, but a Holt, or Grove of Oaks. See xiii. 18. where, I suppose, he intended to have fix'd his Dwelling, had not the Temper of the People who inhabited that Country made it inconvenient.

And the Canaanite was then in the Land.] It was very pertinent to Moses's Design, speaking of Abram's Passage thro' this Country, to tell who was at that Time possess'd of it; but it is dubious whether he meant by the Canaanite a particular People descended from Canaan, as he doth xv. 21. or in general, all the Nations which the Israelites afterwards destroy'd; it seems to me the first of these is meant, and that by Land he means only that Part of the Country where Sichem lay, which was then possess'd by this particular People; for in the next Place that Abram went to, it is said, the Canaanite and the Perizzite dwelled then in the Land (xiv. 7.) i. e. in that Part of the Country; where we do not read what Entertainment Abram met withal; but I take it, as an Argument of Abram's great Faith, that he would adventure among such a rough and fierce People, who had no Kindness for the Posterity of Shem upon an old Score; and, if the ancient Tradition in Epiphanius be true, upon a fresh Account; for he saith (Hæref. lxvi. n. 84.) that this Country called Canaan did really belong to the Children of Shem, by virtue of the Division made among the Sons of Noah, but the Children of Canaan had dispossessed them; so that these Words, the Canaanite was then in the Land, signifies they had already invaded this Country, before Abram came thither; to whom God promising to give it, he only restored the Posterity of Shem (from whom Abram descended) unto that which the Children of Ham had wrongfully seized.

By all which it is easy to see how frivolous their Reasons are who from this Place conclude Moses did not write this Book, because these Words seem to signify the Writer of them liv'd after the Canaanites were thrown out of this Land, which was after Moses's Death.

If these Men had not a greater Inclination to cavil than to find out the Truth, they would rather have said the Meaning is, the Canaanite was possess'd of this Part of the Country in Abram's Time, though thrown out of it by Jacob's Sons (Gen. xxxiv.) before the Times of Moses; which is another way of explaining these Words; against which I see no Objection but this, that their Prince is called an Hivite, xxxiv. 2. to which there is an Answer, ver. 30. which shews the People were partly Canaanites.

Ver. 7. And the LORD appeared unto Abram.] As he had done before (ver. 1.) but now it is likely in a more glorious manner, to establish him in Faith and Obedience.

And said unto him, &c.] There was a Voice came from the Schechinah, or divine Glory, which now appear'd to him, and told him this was the Coun-

Country he intended to bestow upon his Posterity. It is very remarkable that he no sooner entered Canaan, but God renewed his Promise to him, made before he came out of his own Country.

And it is further observable (as we shall see in the following Story) that Abram's Obedience was constantly rewarded in kind, according to the Quality of the Service he perform'd; though in Quantity the Reward far exceeded the Service. Thus having left his own Country and Father's House (which was the first Trial of his Obedience) God promises to give him the whole Land of Canaan, and to make his Posterity a mighty Nation. See xvii. 6. xxii. 16.

And there be built an Altar, &c.] This was so glorious an Appearance, that it mov'd him to offer up a solemn Sacrifice to God, for which he built an Altar here in Sichem; and it being the first that he built in this Country, it made this become the first Place that was established for Publick Worship after the Israelites conquered the Land of Canaan; for here was the Sanctuary of God in Josbua's Time, near this very Grove where Abram first pitch'd his Tent, and built an Altar, Josb. xxiv. 1, 25, 26. It continu'd famous also in After-times, as appears from Judg. ix. 6.

Ver. 8. And he removed from thence unto a Mountain, &c.] Tho' the Lord here appeared to him, yet he did not think fit to trust himself among the Canaanites (who were the chief of the wicked Nations that possessed this Land) or he thought fit to see the rest of the Country which God promised to give him, and therefore came hither, which was about twenty Miles further Southward.

And there be built an Altar.] Upon the Mountain, where they anciently chose to sacrifice, rather than in other Places; and it is likely God again appear'd to him here, to encourage and strengthen him against all his Fears; which made him build a new Altar, and offer Sacrifices of Thanksgiving to God, to implore his continued Favour.

And it is observable, that the Promise which God made in the former Place, ver. 7. he renewed again in this, and more at large, after he came out of Egypt, xiii. 3, 4, 14, 15, 16.

On the East of Bethel.] So it was called in After-times.

Ver. 9. And Abram journeyed, &c.] He did not think fit to fix yet in the fore-named Place, but made a further Progress into the Southern Parts of the Country; yet after he had been in Egypt (the Story of which follows) he returned to this Place.

Ver. 10. A Famine in the Land.] Of Canaan.

He went down.] Egypt lay low in comparison with Canaan.

To sojourn.] Not to dwell there, for he doubted not of God's Promise to him, of possessing the Land which he had left.

Ver. 11. Thou art a fair Woman, &c.] She was now threescore Years old, but having comely Features, and being of a fair Complexion (in comparison with the Egyptians, who were fallow) she seemed to be younger than she was.

Ver. 12. They will kill me.] Knowing them to be a libidinous People, he was afraid they might be tempted to make him away, that they might have his Wife.

Ver. 13. Say thou art my Sister.] He himself upon another Occasion explains in what Sense she was so, xx. 12. therefore he teaches her not to tell a Lye, but to conceal the Truth.

Ver. 15. Pharaoh.] The Egyptian Kingdom began about three hundred Years before this (in the Days of Ragau, xi. 18. if the Arabian Writers say true) and now was grown to be very powerful, by the means of some King of this Name, which (it appears by this Place) was very ancient, and continu'd to be the Name of all the Kings of Egypt till the Captivity of Babylon, and we know not how much longer; just as Ptolemy was their Name after the Times of Alexander, and Cæsar and Augustus were the Names of all the Emperors of Rome, and Candace of all the Queens of Æthiopia. And the like may be observed in several other Countries. Ludolphus takes Pharaoh to be a compound Word, signifying as much as Father of the Country; for that is the Meaning of Phar-ot in the Æthiopic Language, as Pharmut is Mother of the Country.

The Princes also, &c.] The Courtiers who studied to gratify their Prince's Pleasure.

Was taken into Pharaoh's House.] Into the House of the Women, it is probable (for the Egyptian Kings were now, as I said, very great; like those of Persia in After-times) intending to make her one of his Concubines.

Ver. 16. And he had Sheep and Oxen, &c.] By the Gift of the King, besides those he had of his own before.

Ver. 17. And he plagued Pharaoh, &c.] Some of the Hebrews think they had grievous Ulcers in the secret Parts, which made both him and his Servants incapable to enjoy either her or any one else.

His House.] His Courtiers partake of the Punishment, because they were Partners in the intended Sin.

Ver. 18. Why didst thou not tell me, &c.] Some think he speaks this subtilly to Abram, to see what he would say, not knowing yet that she was his Wife; or that his Priests and wife Men had consulted the Oracles about the Cause of their Plagues; but the simplest Account is, that Sarai being interrogated about it, confessed the whole Truth; whereupon he expostulated thus with Abram, who being silent, he took it for granted that indeed she was his Wife.

Ver. 19. Now therefore behold thy Wife, &c.] He disclaims all Intention of abusing another Man's Wife (so virtuous they were in those Days) but would have made her his own (as he saith in the foregoing Words, I might have taken her to me to Wife) that is, a secondary Wife, as the Manner was in those Days; for it is not likely he had no Wife at all before.

Ver. 20. Pharaoh commanded his Men concerning him, &c.] Gave strict Orders none should hurt him, or any thing belonging to him, but but conduct him safely, whither he had a mind to go. And accordingly the next Words tell us they did.

They sent him away, &c.] Not with Violence, but gave him a safe Conduct: Sending him away, perhaps, with a Guard for his Security. Such was the Generosity of the Egyptian Princes in those Times.

C H A P. XIII.

Ver. 1. I NTO the South.] Into the Southern Part of Canaan, where he had been before, xii. 9.

Ver. 2. Very rich, &c.] His Riches were increased since he went into Egypt, by the Bounty of Pharaoh, xii. 16. And, (if we could believe Josephus, L. i. Antiq. c. 8.) by the Rewards he had for teaching them several Pieces of Learning, which he brought out of Chaldea. The Author of Schalsch. Hakkab. quotes Eusebius's Præpar. Evang. L. ix. c. 4. to prove this. And indeed, I find Eusebius quoting Josephus in the sixteenth Chapter of that Book; who says he taught Arithmetic and Astrology, of which the Egyptians were ignorant before: And in the seventeenth Chapter Eupolemus, who says that Abram was familiarly conversant with the Egyptian Priests at Heliopolis, (when he went thither by reason of the Famine in Canaan) and taught them many things; particularly the Cælestial Sciences, which he calls Astrology, i. e. the Knowledge of the Stars.

Ver. 3. Unto Bethel, &c.] Which was the second Place wherein he dwelt, after his first Entrance into Canaan, xii. 8.

Ver. 4. Unto the place of the Altar, &c.] This seems to intimate that the Altar itself was either fallen or thrown down. Some think demolished by Abram himself, when he left the Place; others by the Canaanites when he was gone.

And there Abram called on the Name of the LORD.] Commended himself, and all he had, to God's Protection, who had promised to bestow this Country upon him. Perhaps he built the Altar again, and offered Sacrifice thereon.

Ver. 5. And Lot also, &c.] God had blessed him likewise as a faithful Companion of Abraham in his Travels, and Partaker also of his Faith.

Ver. 6. The Land was not able to bear them, &c.] There was not sufficient Pasturage for them both in that Part of the Country.

Ver. 7. And there was a strife, &c.] Wealth commonly breeds Contentions. Yet here was no Difference between the Masters, but between their Servants; each endeavouring to get the best Pastures, and the best watering Places for their Flocks.

And the Canaanite and the Perizzite, &c.] This Part of the Country was inhabited by the People peculiarly called Canaanites, and by the Perizzites, (a very rugged and barbarous Nation, see xv. 20.) among whom Contention would have been dangerous, at least very scandalous.

Ver. 8. Abram said to Lot.] The best, the wisest, and Men of greatest Experience in the World, are most inclined to Peace; and most yielding in order to it.

Let there be no strife between me and thee, &c.] There had been none yet; but their Servants Quarrel might have proved theirs at last.

And between my herdsmen, &c.] And here signifies or; as xix. 12. Exod. xij. 5.

For we are Brethren.] Near Kinsmen, whom the Hebrews call Brethren.

Ver. 9. Is not the Land before thee?] There is room enough, though not here, yet in other Parts of the Country: Now, since we cannot remain together, take thy choice which way thou wilt go, &c. A wonderful Condescension in Abram, to let the younger, and least in Estate, please himself. And he did not desire Lot to leave the Country, but only to settle himself in what Part of it he liked best; that he might be near to help him, as he did afterwards.

Ver. 10. Behold all the Plain of Jordan, &c.] A fruitful and pleasant Country, well watered by the Streams of Jordan; which in many windings and turnings run through it, and at some times overflowed it, which made the Ground very rich. And therefore Moses compares this Plain to the Garden of Eden, (as most understand those words, the Garden of the LORD) which was well watered by a River running through it; and to the Land of Egypt which is satiated by the overflowing of Nile, as this was by the overflowing of Jordan.

As thou comest to Zoar.] These Words are not to be referred to the Land of Egypt, immediately foregoing, (from which Zoar was at a great distance) but to those Words in the beginning, a Plain well watered every where; even to the utmost Skirts of it, which was Zoar.

Ver. 11. And Lot chose him all the Plain of Jordan.] He was invited by the Richness of the Soil, without regard to the Manners of the People; which proved afterwards a great Affliction to him.

And Lot journeyed East.] For the Plain of Jordan lay East from Bethel, where they now were.

Ver. 12. And Abram dwelt in the Land of Canaan, &c.] In that Part of the Country where the People peculiarly called Canaanites (Ver. 7. and xii. 6.) were seated: Otherwise, if the Land of Canaan be taken largely, the Plain of Jordan was also a Part of it.

Ver. 13. The Men of Sodom were wicked, &c.] Their Sins were grown ripe for Punishment, having been brought (as it were) before the LORD, and sentenced at his Tribunal to the Judgment which shortly after befel them.

Ver. 14. And the LORD said unto Abram, &c.] It is likely the LORD appeared again to him, (as he had done formerly, xii. 7.) after Lot was separated from him: Both to comfort him in his Absence, by renewing his Promise in larger Words; and to assure him that his Posterity, not Lot's, should inherit this Country.

Lift up thine Eyes, &c.] He dwelt now, it is likely, upon the Mountain which was on the East of Bethel, (where he pitched his Tent before he went into Egypt, xii. 8. and returned to it when he came from thence, Ver. 3. 4. of this this Chapter) which gave him the advantage of a fair and long Prospect of the Country every way.

Ver. 15. For all the Land thou seest, &c.] That whole Country, some Parts of which he saw a great way, in every Quarter of it, and all the rest contiguous to them, were hereby assured to him.

For ever.] It doth not signify strictly Time without End, but a very long Period. The Jews indeed say that this word Olam, when it is written full, as they speak, that is, with Vau, denotes Eternity; tho' without Vau they confess it signifies only a long time: But this small Observation is quite overthrown by many Examples to the contrary. For, Exod. xv. 18. where the Lord is said to reign for ever, this word Olam is without a Vau, and yet denotes Eternity. And Deut. xv. 17. where it is said, he shall be thy Servant for ever, it is written with a Vau, and yet denotes only a Term of fifty Years at the most.

Ver. 16. I will make thy Seed as the Dust of the Earth, &c.] More than could be contained in that Land.

Ver. 17. Arise, walk through the Land, &c.] He would have him, for his Satisfaction, go and view it all more nearly, in every Part of it. Or, he gives him leave (if he desir'd to understand more fully both the Quality and Quantity of the Inheritance he bestowed on him) to go and survey it: Promising he would protect and preserve him in his Perambulation. Nay, some look upon this, as giving him a Warrant to take possession of the Country, tho' he should not yet enjoy it.

Ver. 18. Then Abram removed his Tent.] To a Place about twenty-four Miles from Bethel, where he was before.

And dwelt in the Plain.] Here the Word we had before, xii. 6. is in the Plural Number, and is taken by many for Oaks, i. e. for an Oaken Grove: So the Arabick Interpreter. The LXX translate it, μαεζ ἢ δρυῖν, by the Oak, in the singular Number; for there seems to have been one Oak more eminent than the rest, under which Abraham pitched his Tent, and built an Altar unto the LORD.

This is confirmed by xviii. 1. compared with Ver. 8. And indeed the Ancients very much revered an Oak, and therefore planted this Tree very frequently. Jacob buried the Idolatrous Trumpery of his Family under an Oak, (xxxv. 4.) which was by Schechem, where the Place of publick Worship seems to have been fix'd in Josua's Time, Josh. xxiv. 1, 26. The Angel of the LORD also appeared to Gideon under an Oak, Judg. vi. 11, 19, 25. ix. 6. And of all other Trees, an Oak was held most Sacred by the Heathens, particularly by the Druids. See Pliny, L. xvi. c. 44. Max. Tyrus, Dissert. 34. And Pausanias in his Account of Arcadia says, the Ancients made the Images of their Gods of Oak, being the most durable Wood.

This Oak some fancy was in being in the Time of Constantine, and there was great resort to it. See Sozomen, L. ii. c. 4. Here Abram dwelt a long time, and many great things passed here, before he removed to any other Place.

Mamre.] Was the Name of a Man among the Amorites, as appears from the next Chapter, ver. 13.

Which is in Hebron.] Or, rather, by or near Hebron, (for so the Particle Beth is often used) which was a very ancient City, built seven Years before Zoar, i. e. the famous City of Tanis in Egypt, Numb. xiii. 22. It was called Arba, or Kirjath-Arba at the first, xxiii. 2. but in Moses's time Hebron. There are those indeed who say it was not called Hebron till the Time of Josua, who gave it to Caleb for his Portion, Josh. xv. 13, 15. And thence conclude this Passage was not wrote by Moses, but put in by some other Hand after his Time. But I see not the least Proof of this Assertion, that Caleb was the first who gave it this Name. His Grandson, mentioned i Chron. ii. 42, 43. may rather be thought to have taken his Name from this Place, than to have given a Name to it. Besides, there have been two Occasions of giving one and the same Name, as appears by what is said of Beerseba, xxi. 31. xxvi. 33. And therefore this City might have the Name of Hebron in Moses's Time, and it might be confirmed in Josua's.

CHAP. XIV.

Ver. 1. AND it came to pass, &c.] It is very easy to give an Account of this War, which the Kings of the East made upon the Kings of Sodom and Gomorrab, &c. if what was said before, xii. 6. be admitted; that the Canaanites had invaded the Rights of the Children of Shem, and gotten Possession of a Country belonging to them; which they now endeavoured to recover, (as they had attempted before, ver. 4.) For Elam, of which Chedorlaomer was King, descended from Shem, Gen. x. 22.

Amraphel King of Shinar.] i. e. King of Babylon, as it is commonly understood. But it cannot well be thought that so potent a King, as he is supposed to have been in those Days, should need any Associates in a War against such petty Princes, as those mentioned ver. 2. Or, that the King of Edom (whose Quarrel this was, as appears from ver. 4.) should not be able of himself to grapple with them: Or, that the Kings of Sodom and Gomorrab, &c. durst have adventured, with a handful of People in comparison, to rebel against him, after he had brought them under his Subjection. Therefore we must either take Amraphel to have been some small Prince in the Country of Shinar, i. e. Assyria; or, if he were King of Babylon, that Monarchy was not very great in the Days of Abram. And we must also look upon the rest as Names of some particular Places (like Sodom and Gomorrab) over which Arioch and Chedorlaomer reigned, who were such Kings as those in Canaan when Josua conquered it; or else Commanders of Colonies, which they had led out of Assyria and Persia, and settling thereabouts, endeavoured to enlarge their Plantations; as the manner was in those and in succeeding Times, when the Captains of a Troop, Troop, and Leaders of a small Body of Men, were called Princes or Kings.

Arioch king of Ellasar.] There was a City (mentioned by Stephanus de Urbibus) called Ellas in Cælo-Syria, on the Borders of Arabia, where Arioch perhaps commanded.

Chedorlaomer king of Elam.] Concerning this Country, see x. 22. where Chedorlaomer was either Governor of some little Province, or City; or a Commander of some Troop of that Nation.

Tidal king of Nations.] Some take Gojim in this place, which we translate Nations, for a Country, or City. But it is more agreeable to the common use of the word in Scripture to take it to signify a People, who either wanted a fixed Habitation, or were gathered out of sundry Regions.

Thus part of Galilee being inhabited by a mixed People of divers Countries, was thence called Galilee of the Nations, or Gentiles, Matth. iv. 15. There were also, as Sir W. Raleigh observes, several petty Countries which adjoined to Phœnicia, (viz. Palmyrena, Batanea, Apamena, Laodicene, &c. which lay towards Mesopotamia on the North, and Arabia on the East) over which we may suppose Tidal reigned. Eupolemus, an ancient Greek Writer, relating this Story, calls them Armenians, who made this inroad upon the Phœnicians, as Eusebius tells us out of Alexander Polyhistor. L. ix. Præpar. Evang. c. 17.

Ver. 2. These made war with Bera king of Sodom, &c.] They were Lords of the Country called Pentapolis, or Five Cities. Which were so small, that there was no need to bring a great King from beyond Tigris, with such a mighty Monarch as he of Babylon is thought now to have been; and several other Nations between these Kings and Euphrates, to subdue their petty Province. It had been madness also for these Kings to resist such powerful Armies as the Eastern Kings are commonly supposed to have brought against them. And therefore I think it reasonable, by the Kings in the first Verse, to understand some such petty Princes as these mentioned in the second.

Ver. 3. Valley of Siddim.] The five Cities stood in this goodly Valley, which now is the Salt-Sea or Lake, since the overthrow of these Cities by Fire and Brimstone from Heaven. Some will not have Siddim a proper Name, but translate it ploughed Lands, in which this Valley was very rich.

Ver. 4. Twelve Years they served Chedorlaomer, &c.] This shows he was the Principal in this War: And if he had been King of all that Country called Elam, we cannot think he would have passed thro' so great a part of the World, as Affyria, Mesopotamia, and part of Arabia, to conquer five Towns. All whose Riches could not countervail the Charge, tho' he had sent only one of his Lieutenants with a small Force to bring them under.

Ver. 5. Smote the Rephaims.] In their way to Sodom they subdued these warlike People, who, it is likely, opposed their Passage into Pentapolis. And these Rephaims, it appears by xv. 20. were a part of Canaan's Posterity, situated (as one may gather from Josh. xii. 4. xiii. 12.) on the other side Jordan, in Bashan, or Batanea.] They were of a Giant-like Stature: And therefore the LXX here, and in other places, instead of Rephaim, have Giants.

Astharoth-Karnaim.] It is plain from the fore-named place, and from Deut. i. 4. that Astharoth was a place in Bashan. Whether so called, because the Goddess Astarte, i. e. Diana or Juno, was here worshipped, no body can resolve. They that are of this Opinion fancy that Karnaim, which in Hebrew signifies two-horned, denotes the New Moon. But this word may as well note that Astharoth was a City in the form of a Half Moon.

And the Zuzims.] Another warlike People thereabouts; who, some think, are the same with the Zamzummims, Deut. ii. 20.

The Emims.] It appears from Deut. ii. 9, 10, &c. that these were also a Gigantick People, and near Neighbours to the Horites, mentioned in the next Verse. For the Emims possessed Ar and the Field of Kirjath-Jearim; and the Horites possessed Mount Seir, till the former were driven out by the Moabites, and the latter by the Children of Esau: And then the Country of the Emims was called Moab, and the Country of the Horites was called Edom.

Ver. 7. And they returned.] From the Conquest of the fore-named People.

And came to En-mishpat.] Fell upon this Country, which was called afterward by this Name; because God here judged the Israelites for their Murmurings and Contention with Moses. From whence also it was called Kadesh; because here the Lord was sanctified among them, Numb. xx. 13.

All the Country of the Amalekites.] The Country which was afterwards possessed by the Amalekites; who were not yet in being: For they were the Descendants of Esau, as Moses shows, Gen. xxxvi. 16.

And also the Amorites, who dwell in Hazezon-Tamar.] Which is the same with En-Gaddi, near the Dead-Sea, 2 Chron. xx. 2.

Ver. 20. Full of Slime-pits.] Into which they hoped their Enemies might fall, and so be broken: Which made them draw up their Army, and wait for them in this place.

And the Kings of Sodom and Gomorrah fled.] Were routed, as we now speak. Of the word Slime, see xi. 3.

And fell there.] i. e. A great slaughter was made of their Armies: For they themselves escaped, as appears by the following part of the Story: Some will have it, that many of them fell into those Slime-pits, in which they hoped to have seen their Enemies plunged. But the simplest Sense is, many of them were slain, and the rest, as it follows, escaped to the Mountain. But made such ill use of their Preservation from being killed with their Fellows, that they only lived to suffer a greater Vengeance.

Ver. 11. And they took all the Goods, &c.] This is a further proof that Chedorlaomer, and the rest of his Confederates in this War, were but petty Princes, (like the Kings of Sodom and Gomorrah, &c.) for having broken the Army of the five Kings, they rested contented, and march'd away with the Prisoners and Booty, but took not one of their Cities: Which, if they had been such great Kings as is imagined, they would have certainly sack'd, and perhaps burnt, if they had not thought fit to keep them. But we read, ver. 17. the King of Sodom still reigned after this Victory, and went out of his City to meet Abram.

Ver. 12. And they took Lot, &c.] Who is here called his Brother's Son, and ver. 14. and 16. Abram's Brother. This was the Foundation of Abram's Quarrel with the Four Kings; whose War was just against the King of Sodom and his Confederates, but they unjustly seized upon Lot, and his Goods; who was but a Sojourner in that Country, and had no hand in their Revolt.

Who dwelt in Sodom.] In the Country of Sodom, where he hired some Ground for his Cattle; but it is not likely he yet dwelt in the City, (for then he had not been taken Captive) but afterwards, for more security, betook himself thither.

Ver. 13. Told Abram the Hebrew.] So called from his Ancestor Heber, as was before observed. To which may be added, that if he had been called by this Name, as many think, only from his passing over the Euphrates, (which the LXX took to be the reason when they translated it, περὶ τὸν ποταμὸν) it would not have defended to all his Posterity, who did not come from beyond the River: so little a thing as that would not have given a Name to a whole and eminent Nation, who are usually denominated from some eminent Progenitor.

And these were confederate with Abram.] The three fore-named Families were near Neighbours to Abram; who, it is likely, farmed (as we now speak) some Ground of them; and so entered into a League of mutual Defence, having the same Interest. I should think also, that having the Priest of the most High God not far from them, ver. 18. they were good, pious People, (rather than conclude, as I find some do, that they were utter strangers to the true Religion) which made Abram more forward to embrace, if not to court their Friendship. For the Sins of the Amorites being not yet full, (xv. 16.) there might be some remainders of true Piety among them: And it is no argument, that because these three Families were of that Nation, they were wicked Idolaters.

Ver. 14. Armed his trained Servants.] Drew forth a select number of his Servants, whom he had instructed to handle Arms, in case of any Assault by Robbers or injurious Neighbours. We read before, xii. 5. of the Servants they brought with them from Haran; and now they were more increased, as their Cattle were, (xii. 16. xiii. 2, 6.) so that he might well make a little Army out of them.

And pursued them to Dan.] As far as that place where one of the Heads or Springs of Jordan breaks forth, called Dan, as Josephus relates, where he speaks of this very History, L. i. Antiq. c. 10. This plain and short Account of this Dan overthrows the Argument which Cavillers draw from hence to prove that Moses did not write this Book.

Ver. 15. And he divided himself against them, he and his Servants by night.] The Vulgar Latin here reads, His Companions being divided, he fell upon them by Night: Minding rather the sense than the words. For here is no mention of any but Abram and his Servants: Tho' it appears by the last Verse of the Chapter, that his Confederates before-mentioned, ver. 13. Aner, Eshcol, and Mamre, joined with him in this Expedition. Which they managed with great Judgment, (for Stratagems in War were never wanting from the Beginning) Abram and his Servants making one Troop or Battalion, (as they now speak) and the Confederates making three more. Who dividing themselves, fell upon the Four Kings in the four Quarters of their Camp, that they might the more distract them, and make them apprehend their Forces to be more numerous than indeed they were. They were put also into the greater Confusion, because this Assault was made in the Night, when perhaps they were buried both in Wine and in Sleep.

Unto Hobab.] Which lay in the Vale between Libanus and Antilibanus, called by Amos, i. 5. the Valley of Aven and Beth-Eden, or the Seat of Pleasure. In this Vale was Damascus seated.

Ver. 16. He brought back all the Goods, &c.] All the Prey, whether in Money, Cattle, or other things, which the Four Kings had carried away.

The Women also, and the People.] It seems they had carried away all the People of Pentapolis who did not flee to the Mountains, or fenced Cities; and Women, in those days, were a special part of their Booty.

Ver. 17. Went out to meet him.] To congratulate his Victory, and to desire his People might be restored to him.

At the Valley of Shaveth.] This seems to have been a pleasant Place, wherein the King (that is, Melchizedec, I guess by what follows) took delight; whence it was called the King's-Dale: In which the King of Sodom met Abram, and Melchizedec entertained him with Bread and Wine.

Ver. 18. And Melchizedec.] The Jews generally say this was Shem the Son of Noah: But we have reason to look upon this Opinion as proceeding from their Pride and Vanity: Which could not endure to think the Father of their Nation had any Superior in another Nation, especially among the Canaanites. And therefore they will have Abram to have been blessed by his great Ancestor Shem, to whom also he paid Tithes: Which is a fancy so plainly confuted by the Apostle to the Hebrews, that it is strange any Christian should follow it. For he saith expressly, that Melchizedec was not γενεαλογούμενος ἑαυτῶν, vii. 6. his Descent or Pedigree was not counted from them: Which is not true of Shem. Nor could Shem be said to be without Father or Mother, whose Genealogy is evident from Adam. Nor was Shem's Priesthood, if he had any, of a different Order from Levi's; who was in his Loins, as well as in the Loins of Abram. And therefore it could not be said that Levi paid him Tithes in the Loins of Abram, but it would be as true that he received Tithes in the Loins of Shem: For, according to this Interpretation, he was in the Loins both of him that received Tithes, and of him that paid them; and so the whole Argumentation of the Apostle falls to the Ground. But setting aside these and other Christian Reasons, (which are strongly urged by Bochartus, L. ii. Phaleg, c. 1.) there is no Cause, that we can discern, why Moses should call Shem (whom he so often mentions) by any other Name than his own: Nor is it likely Shem reigned in the Land of Canaan, which now was in the possession of his Brother's Son: Nor could Abram be said to sojourn there as in a strange Country, if his noble Ancestor, Shem, had been a King there. Nor is this an ancient Opinion among the Jews, at least not constantly believed: For Josephus says expressly, that Melchizedec was Χαναανὸν Δυναστὴς, a Potentate of the Canaanites, L. vii. De Bello Jud. c. 18. And yet it was so common, that it went to the Samaritans, as Epiphanius tells us, Hæres. lv. n. 6. (tho' not to the Arabians, who say he was the Son of Peleg. See Hotting. Smegma Orient. 256, 269, 306.) and many Christians have embraced it, merely, (as far as I can discern) because they would not acknowledge any good Man to have been then among the Canaanites. Some Hereticks held him to be μεγάλω τινα Δυναμιν, as Epiphanius tells us in the place fore-mentioned, Numb. I. Which was the Opinion of Hieracas, a great Scholar and famous Physician in Egypt, Hæres. lxxvii. n. 3. And some of the Church took him to have been the Son of God himself, who then appeared to Abram, ἐν ἰδέα ἀνθρώπου, in the form of a Man. Hæres. lv. n. 7. But the plain truth is, he was a King and Priest (for those two Offices anciently were in the same Person) in that Country, where Men were not as yet wholly degenerated, and fallen from the true Religion.

Christian

King of Salem.] It is a great Error to think that this Salem was the same with Jerusalem. For it is plain, as Bochart observes, (L. ii. Phaleg, c. 4.) that Salem was in the way which led from the Valley of Damascus unto Sodom: Which we learn from this very place of Scripture. And so St. Hierom says, that he learnt from the Jews in his time, that it was seated on this side of Jordan: And it retained its Name in our Saviour's days, as appears by the Story of John's baptizing near Salem, Joh. iii. 23. Several of the Fathers are of the same Mind, quoted by Mr. Selden in his Review of the History of Tithes, p. 452.

Brought forth Bread and Wine.] This he did as a King, not as a Priest: For it was not an act of Religion but of Hospitality. Thus Heathens themselves understood this History, as we find by Eupolemus, (quoted by Eusebius, L. ix. c. 17.) who saith he received Abram as they were wont to do Strangers, in a City called Argarizin, which he interprets, the Mount of the most High. We know not in what Language it so signifies, or whether it be misprinted for Harellon: But I think the plain Sense is, that he treated Abram and his Followers, by causing Provisions to be brought forth for their Refreshment after the Fight. For Bread and Wine comprehend all sorts of Provision for their Repast: As to eat Bread with another, in this Book, is to feast with him, xliii. 25. And thus Tertullian it is certain understood it; who saith expressly, he brought them forth to Abram, and offered them to him, and not to God, L. adv.

Judaicos, c. 3. And Epiphanius observes, that the word in the Greek is not κατένευκε, but ἐξέβαλε; not be offered, but brought out. So it seems his Copy had it.

Ver. 19. And he blessed him.] This he did as a Priest, (which Office is just before mentioned) as he did the other as a King.

Blessed be Abram of the most High God.] He prayed God to confirm the Blessing which he had pronounced upon him.

Possessor of Heaven and Earth.] Rather Creator, as the LXX and Vulgar Latin translate it. See Dr. Spencer, L. i. De Leg. Hebr. c. 4. §. 10. and Lud. de Dieu before him, in his Notes on this Place, and Hotting. Smegma Orient. p. 87. By this and the next Verse, wherein he gives Glory to the most High God for Abram's Victory, it is apparent that he was a Worshipper of the One Only True God, and Maker and Governor of all things. To whom he also ministered in the Office of a Priest, who blessed Men in his Name.

And he gave him.] i. e. Abram gave to Melchizedec, as the Apostle expresses it, Hebr. vii. 2. But the words are so doubtful as they lie here, that Eupolemus (in the place above-mentioned) thought Melchizedec had bestowed Gifts upon Abram.

Tithes of all.] He doth not say of what all; but that which goes before leads us to think he means Tithes of all the Spoil, which he had taken from Chedorlaomer, &c. For he had nothing else there to tithe, unless it were the remainder of the Provision he had carried along with him in this Expedition: All the rest of his own Estate being many Miles off, at Mamre. And thus Josephus interprets it, δικαίω τῆς λείας, the Tithe of what was gotten by War. And thus the Apostle himself seems to expound it, Hebr. vii. For having said, Verse 2. he gave him the tenth part of all, when he comes to argue from this, he calls it the tenth part of the spoils, Verse 4. And indeed it was a very ancient Custom to offer to God (whose Priest Melchizedec was) the tenth part of what they took in War. Diodorus Siculus reports it of the Greeks, and many Authors of the Romans. From whence we cannot infer, that they gave only Tithes of such things, but rather, that these were extraordinary Acknowledgments of God's Mercy to them; which it was usual to make out of those Possessions which he had blessed them withal. For why should they give Tithe of the Spoils, if they were not wont to pay Tithe of other things? And therefore St. Chrysostom makes this Reflection upon this Practice of Abram, that it should teach us to be willing and ready to offer unto God, ἀπρχάς, the First-fruits of all that he hath bestowed on us. This is confirmed by the Story of Jacob; which, together with this of Abram, shows plainly, the Custom of paying Tithes was before the Law of Moses; and that not only of the Spoils of War, but of their Flocks, Corn, and other Fruit, which Jacob vowed unto God, xxxviii. 22. See there.

Ver. 21. Give me the Persons, &c.] A truly generous Disposition becoming a King; to love the Persons of his Subjects better than their Goods.

good Account also of Jacob's Wives contending so earnestly, as they did, for his Company.

Ver. 4. Her Mistress was despised in her Eyes.] Hagar began to take upon her, as if she had been Mistress of the House; at least much more favoured by God, who had made her fruitful: Which was accounted a great Blessing and Honour in those days; especially in a Family that had no Heir.

Ver. 5. My wrong be upon thee.] Thou art the cause of this Injury (or these Affronts) which I suffer, by being too indulgent to my Maid, and not repressing her Insolence. Or, it is incumbent on thee to see me redressed of the Wrong that is done me. See Lud. de Dieu.

The Lord judge between me and thee.] Sometimes this Phrase signifies an Appeal to God, as the Avenger of Wrongs: But here it seems only to denote her committing the Equity of her Cause to the Judgment of God.

Ver. 6. Behold, thy Maid is in thy hand.] Is subject unto thee.

Do with her as pleases thee.] Use her as thy Maid, and not as my Wife.

And when Sarai dealt hardly with her.] Beat her perhaps; or imposed on her too much, or too servile, Labour.

She fled from her Face.] Run away, to avoid her cruel usage.

Ver. 7. And the Angel of the LORD, &c.] This is the first time that we read of the appearance of an Angel. By whom Maimonides will scarce allow us to understand more than a Messenger, (More Nevoch. P. ii. c. 42.) But some Christians go so far into the other extreme, as to understand hereby the Eternal ΛΟΓΟΣ, or Son of God. It seems to me more reasonable to think, that tho' the Schechinah, or Divine Majesty, did not appear to her, as it had often done to Abram; yet one of the heavenly Ministers, who were Attendants upon it, and made a part of its Glory, was sent to stop her Proceedings. And a great Favour it was, that the LORD would dispatch such a Messenger after her, who was sufficient to do the Business.

In the way to Shur.] She was flying into Egypt, her own Country, (upon which the Wilderness of Shur bordered) and only rested a while at this Fountain to refresh herself.

Ver. 8. And he said, Hagar, Sarai's Maid.] He takes notice of her being Sarai's Maid, rather than Abram's Wife; to put her in mind of her Duty, and that she could not honestly leave her Mistress without her Consent: For so it follows in the next Verse.

Ver. 9. Return to thy Mistress, and submit, &c.] It is the same Word here translated submit, with that Ver. 6. where it is rendred dealt hardly: Signifying that she should be patient, and endure the Hardship of which she complained, (or suffer herself to be afflicted by her.)

Ver. 10. I will multiply, &c.] I will make thee partaker of the Promise I have made to Abram, xv. 5. The Angel delivers this Message to her in the Name of God, who sent him.

Ver. 11. Behold, thou art with Child, &c.] Do not doubt of what I say; for thou art with Child of a Son, who shall be the Father of a great People. This Promise was renewed to Abram in the next Chapter, xvii. 20. and we find was performed xxv. 12.

Shalt call his Name Ishmael.] Some of the Jews take notice of the Honour which was here done him; in calling him by his Name before he was born: There being but Six, they say, who were thus distinguished from others; the two first were the Sons of Abram, (Ishmael and Isaac) and the last was the Messias.

The LORD hath heard thy affliction.] Thy Complaint under the Affliction thou hast endured from thy Mistress, and here in the Wilderness. This Passage shows it was an Angel which appeared and spake to her from the LORD, and not the LORD himself.

Ver. 12. A wild Man.] The Hebrew word Phere here joyned with Man, signifies a wild Ass: And so is well translated by Bochart, tam ferus quam Onager, as wild as a wild Ass. Which loves to ramble in Deserts; and is not easily tamed, to live in society.

His Hand shall be against every Man, &c.] He shall be very warlike: and both infect all his Neighbours, and be infected by them.

He shall dwell in the presence of his Brethren.] Be a Nation by himself; near to all his Brethren, whether descended from Isaac, or from the rest of Abram's Sons by Keturah: Who tho' annoyed by him, shall not be able to dispossess him. This is such an exact Description of the Posterity of Ishmael, throughout all Generations, that none but a Prophetick Spirit could have made it; as Doctor Jackson truly observes, (Book i. on the Creed, c. xxv.) Wildness being so incorporated into their Nature, that no change of Times hath made them grow tame.

Ver. 13. She called the Name of the LORD that spake to her.] By his Angel, for she look'd upon the Presence of the Angel, as a Token of the divine Presence, tho' she saw it not in its full Glory.

Thou God seekest me.] Takest Care of me, where-soever I am.

For she said, Have I also here looked after him that seeketh me?] There are various Interpretations of these Words: The plainest is that of De Dieu: Who observes that the word Halom always signifies Place, not Time; or, that which is done in any Place, and so we translate it by the word here. But there he makes a stop after that word by way of admiration, in this manner: And even here also! Or, even thus far! It had been less wonder, if God had taken Care of me in my Master's House; but doth he follow me with his Favour even hither? This is wonderful. And then the next words, (have I looked after him that seeketh me) carried this sense, Have I beheld God, who taketh Care of me? What a Favour is this that he would so far condescend to me? It ought never to be forgotten; therefore she called his Name, Thou God seekest me.

Ver. 14. Beer-labai-roi.] Some would have this refer both to Hagar, and to God; in this manner: The Well of her that liveth, and of him that seeketh (i. e. who preserves me in Life). So it was an acknowledgment that she owed her Life and Safety to God.

Ver. 15. Abram called his Son's Name, &c.] Hagar having told him at her return the foregoing Story, he gave his Son this Name, in Obedience to the Angel's Command, Verse 11.

Ver. 16. Fourscore and six Years old.] He was seventy five Years old when he came into Canaan, xii. 4. and had been ten Years there when he took Hagar to Wife, (ver. 3. of this Chapter) and therefore was then eighty five Years old; and consequently eighty six the next Year when Ismael was born.

CHAP. XVII.

Ver. 1. WHEN Abram was ninety nine Years old.] Thirteen Years after Ismael's Birth.

The LORD appeared to Abram.] In a visible Majesty; to satisfy him that the Promise made, (xv. 4, 5.) should not be fulfilled in Ismael.

I am the Almighty God,] Or, All-sufficient. This is the first time we meet with this Name: Which was most fitly used here, when he speaks of a thing very difficult to be done; but not beyond the Power of God, who can do all things, and needs none to assist him.

Walk before me.] Go on to please me.

And be thou perfect,] Till thou hast compleated thy Faith and Obedience.

Ver. 2. And I will make my Covenant, &c.] Establish and perform my Covenant: For it was made before, and now only confirmed by a Sign or Token of it, ver. 11.

Ver. 3. Abram fell on his Face.] Being astonished at the Brightness of that Majesty which appeared to him, ver. 1.

Ver. 4. As for me, behold, my Covenant, &c.] Be not afraid, for it is I, who am constant to my Word, and now again engage myself unto thee.

Thou shalt be a Father of many Nations.] Not only of Jews, and Ismaelites, and others, but in the Spiritual Sense, of all the Gentile World.

Ver. 5. Neither shall thy Name, &c.] Abram is commonly interpreted, high Father; and Abraham, the Father of a Multitude. So the very Text expounds the reason of this Name: For a Father of many Nations have I made thee. There are many ways of making out this meaning, but none seems to me so plain as that of Hottinger's; who makes it a composition of Ab, (a Father) and the old word Rabam, which still in Arabick signifies a great number. Smegma Orient. Cap. viii. §. 19.

Ver. 6. And I will make thee exceeding fruitful, &c.] I observed before, xii. 7. that Abram's Obedience was constantly rewarded in kind, &c. of which here is a new proof. For upon his submission to be circumcised, (wherein his Obedience was next tried) which might seem to weaken the Power of Generation, (as Maimonides affirms it doth, More Nevoch. P. iii. c. 49.) God promises that he would make him so exceeding fruitful, that Nations and Kings should proceed from him: As there did both by Israel, Edom, and Ismael, from whom the Saracens came, &c.

VOL. I.

Ver. 7. An everlasting Covenant.] The word Olam, which we translate Everlasting, hath often a limited signification, to the end of such a Period, (as Exod. xxi. 6. a Servant for ever, is till the Year of Jubilee) tho' with respect to the thing signified, this Covenant is absolutely everlasting; and continues now that the Sign is abolished. The next words tell us what was signified in this Covenant of Circumcision.

To be a God unto thee, &c.] I think Maimonides hath truly observed, that in Circumcision they covenanted with God to have no other God but him: Or, in his Phrase, they covenanted concerning the belief of the Unity of God, More Nev. P. iii. c. 49. who promised to be their God; that is, to bestow all manner of Blessings upon them, and at last to send the Messiah.

Ver. 8. And I will give thee, &c.] Here he again renews his Promise, (xii. 7. xiii. 15. xv. 18.) and confirms it by this Covenant, to give him that Land, wherein he was at present a stranger, and to put his Seed in possession of it.

An everlasting possession.] If they did not forfeit it by their disobedience to him.

Ver. 9. Thou shalt keep my Covenant therefore, &c.] Now follows Abraham's part of this Covenant, which was mutual between God and him.

Ver. 10. This is my Covenant.] Which the next Verse explains, by the Sign or Token of the Covenant. As the Paschal Lamb is called the Pasover of the Lord, Exod. xii. 11. That is, the Memorial of the Angel's passing them by, when he killed the Egyptian Children, xiii. 9. But Circumcision was such a Sign, that they entered thereby into a Covenant with God to be his People. For it was not a mere Mark, whereby they should be known to be Abraham's Seed, and distinguished from other Nations, but they were made by this, the Children of the Covenant, and intitled to the Blessings of it. Tho', if there had been no more in it but this, That they who were of the same Faith, as Maimonides speaks, should have one certain Character, whereby they should be known and joined one to another, without the mixture of any other People, it had been a very wise appointment. And this Mark was very fitly chosen, because it was such a Token, as no Man would have set upon himself and upon his Children, unless it were for Faith and Religion's sake. For it is not a Brand upon the Arm, or an Incision in the Thigh, but a thing very hard, in a most tender part: Which no body would have undertaken, but on the forenamed Account, P. iii. More Nev. c. 49.

It may be proper here to add, That Covenants were antiently made in those Eastern Countries, by dipping their Weapons in Blood, (as Xenophon tells us) and by pricking the Flesh, and sucking each other's Blood, as we read in Tacitus: Who observes, (L. i. Annal.) that when Kings made a League, they took each other by the Hand, and their Thumbs being hard tied together, they prick'd them, when the Blood was forced to the extreme parts, and each Party lick'd it: Which he saith was accounted, Arcanum fœdus, quasi mutuo cruore sacramentum, cratum, a mysterious Covenant, being made sacred by their mutual Blood. How old this Custom had been we do not know: But it is evident, God's Covenant with Abraham was solemnized on Abraham's part, by his own and his Son Isaac's Blood, and so continued thro' all Generations, by cutting off the Fore-skin of their Flesh; (as it follows in the next Verse) whereby, as they were made the select People of God, so God, in conclusion, sent his own Son, who by this very Ceremony of Circumcision, was consecrated to be their God and their Redeemer.

Ver. 11. Ye shall circumcise the Flesh of your Foreskin.] i. e. The Fore-skin of your Flesh: For that Member which is the Instrument of Generation is peculiarly called by the Name of Flesh in many places, Lev. xv. 2. Ezek. xvi. 26. In which part of the Body, rather than in any other, God appointed the Mark of his Covenant to be made; that they might be denoted to be an Holy Seed, consecrated to him from the beginning. The Pagans made Marks in several parts of their Bodies, (some in one, some in another) whereby they were consecrated to their Gods: But the Character which God would have imprinted upon his People was in one peculiar part and no other, (from which they never varied) viz. in that part which served for the Propagation of Mankind. Of which some have given Natural, others Moral Reasons; but the most plain and obvious is, That it might be an apt Token of the Divine Covenant made with Abraham and his Posterity, That God would multiply their Seed, and make them as the Stars of Heaven. xv. 5. It is probable also, that this part was chosen rather than any other, to make them sensible that this was a Divine Sacrament: For nothing but God's Institution could at first engage Men to lay that part bare which Nature hath covered.

It is of late indeed made a Question by some learned Men, whether this were the Original of Circumcision: Which they fancy the Jews borrowed from the Egyptians, and not the Egyptians from the Jews. Certain it is, That not only the Egyptians, but several other Nations, did very anciently use Circumcision. Now it is improbable, say they, that the Egyptians (who seem to have had it the most early of all Nations, who sprang not from Abraham) would borrow this Custom from the Hebrews, whom they perfectly hated, (Shepherds being an abomination to them, xlvi. 34.) and therefore they give themselves the liberty to say, That God did not now enjoin Abraham a new thing, when he ordered him to be circumcised, but only made this a Sign of his Covenant with him, which it was not with other Nations. But unless it can be proved that Circumcision was in use before Abraham's time, (which doth not appear from any good Authors, tho' such as Celsus were so bold as to affirm it, as we find in Origen, L. v.) such Arguments as these will not persuade us to believe that it came from the Egyptians or any other Nation: But they had it, if not from the Hebrews, yet from the Posterity of Ismael, or other People descended from Abraham.

Who being highly beloved of God, it is not credible, that God would set the Mark of Ham's Race upon him and his Posterity; much less make it the Token of his Covenant with them. See J. Ludolphus, L. iii. Comment. in Histor. Ethiop. C. i. n. 5. The only Authority upon whom the Broachers of this Novelty rely, is Herodotus; who in his Second Book, Cap. 104. says, 'The People of Colchis and the Egyptians were the only Nations that were circumcised, ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, from the beginning: 'The Syrians and Phœnicians who live in Palestine acknowledging they had this Rite from 'them.' Which is just such a Tale as he tells in the Second Chapter of that Book, that the Egyptians were the first Inhabitants of the Earth, unless perhaps the Phrygians. This Opinion proceeded from their own vain Conceit, which made them loth to confess they received Circumcision from any other People. Tho' I think there is a convincing Argument of it in Moses himself; who tells us in Chapter x. 14. that the Philistim came from the Castuchim, i. e. the People of Colchis, as that People came originally from Egypt. (So Herodotus himself, Diodorus, and abundance of other credible Authors testify.) This, it appears by what I noted there, was before the time of Moses, nay, before Abraham: For the Philistim had a King among them in his days: As we read in this Book, xx. and xxvi. Now these Philistim were an uncircumcised People, and therefore the People of Colchis no doubt were so also, when they went out of their Country, and drove the Avim out of Palestine. And consequently the Egyptians had no such Rite among them when the Castuchim came from Egypt; but put a gross cheat upon Herodotus when they made him believe they had been circumcised, ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, from the beginning. And in like manner they imposed upon him, who told him, the Inhabitants of Palestine, (whom he calls Syrians and Phœnicians) confessed they received Circumcision from the Egyptians. For there were no Inhabitants of Palestine circumcised but the Jews, who always professed they received it from Abraham; who, we may be confident, was the first Person in the World that was circumcised, there being nothing to induce any body to use such a Rite, unless they had been directed to it by God, as Abraham was: From whom the Ismaelites received it; and from them the Arabians: And from those Countries, or from Abraham's Children by Keturah, it was derived (as seems most probable to me) to the Egyptians: From whom the People of Colchis, who knew themselves to be an Egyptian Breed, embraced it; in imitation of their famous Ancestors. But, after Abraham's time, who found no such Rite among the Philistim, a Colony of theirs; to whom, in all likelihood, they would have communicated it, as the Egyptians did to them, if it had been then used in that Country.

Ver. 12: And he that is eight days old, &c.] Maimonides thinks that if Circumcision had not been performed in their Infancy, it might have been in danger to have been neglected afterward. For an Infant felt not so much Pain as an adult Person would have done, in whom the the Flesh is more compact, and his Imagination stronger. The Parents also (especially Fathers) have not so strong an Affection to a Child when he is newly born, as they have when he is grown up: And so more easily submitted to this harsh Rite, at their first appearance in the World, than they would have done after they were more endeared to them. But the Child could not be circumcised before the eighth Day after his Birth, because till then he was look'd upon as imperfect, and not yet sufficiently cleansed and purged: For which reason Beasts were not accepted by God till seven Days were past after their Birth, Exod. xxii. 30. See More Nevoch. P. iii. cap. 49.

And, as the Child was not to be circumcised before the eighth Day, so he was not (unless perhaps in case of great weakness) to be kept uncircumcised beyond that Day. On which, if the Parents did not cause it to be circumcised, the House of Judgment, as the Jews speak, were bound to do it. And if they did not (being ignorant perhaps of the neglect) the Child when he came of age, (i. e. was thirteen Years old) was bound himself to get it done. If he did not, the Judges (if it were known to them) were obliged to take care of it: As Mr. Selden observes, L. i. de Synedr. cap. 6. p. 96, 97.

Ver. 13. He that is born in thy House, or bought with Money, must needs be circumcised.] Not whether they would or no: For Men were not to be compelled to Religion; which had been a Profanation of this Covenant. But Abraham was to persuade them to it; and, if they consented not, to keep them no longer in his House, but to sell them to some other People. So Maimonides expounds it in his Book of Circumcision, Cap. i. which is true both of Servants born in the House, and bought with Money: But as for the Children of these Slaves, they were to be circumcised whether their Parents would or no: Because they were the possession of their Masters, not of their Parents. For which cause, when the Parents were set free, their Children were left behind, as their Masters Goods, Exod. xxi. 4.

Ver. 14. That Soul shall be cut off from his People.] That is, if when he came to the Age of thirteen Years, he did not cause it to be done.

What it is to be cut off, is very much disputed. The simplest Sense seems to be, he shall not be accounted one of God's People. But the Hebrew Doctors generally take this to have been a Punishment inflicted by the Hand of Heaven, i. e. of God: Tho' they be much divided in their Opinions about it. Of which Mr. Selden treats at large in L. vii. De Jure N. & G. c. 9. and De Synedr. L. i. c. 6. and more briefly, L'Empereur in his Notes upon Cbron. l. Bertram De Republ. Jud. p. 351. Some say it was the shortening of the Man's Life; others say it was the making him childless, so that his Family and Name perished in Israel. Maimonides would have it the extinction both of Soul and Body, like a Brute. And Abarbinel takes it for the loss of the Happiness of the World to come. Some Christians would have it to be Excom- munication: Which cannot be, because such a Person was never a Member of the Church, which he was to be made by Circumcision. The first of these Opinions seems more probable than the rest: For God himself saith of several Offenders, to whom he threatens this Punishment, I will cut him off, and I will set my face against him, Lev. xvii. 10. xx. 5, 6. xxiii. 30. Yet in other places, it must be confessed, this Cereth, or Cutting off, signifies more largely a Punishment by the Judge, and not by the Hand of God. And therefore the signification of it must be determined by the Matter with which it is joined. Thus the violation of the Sabbath is threaten'd with cutting off, Exod. xxxi. 14. which was to be done by stoning him: And so were incestuous Persons, Blasphemers, Idolaters, and others, to be judicially cut off by the Rulers.

Ver. 15. Sarah shall be her Name.] The same Letter is added to her Name, that was to Abraham's, and for the same reason; for in the next Verse it is said, she shall be a Mother of Nations.

Ver. 16. Give thee a Son also of her.] Here now the promised Seed is determined to spring from Sarah. See xvi. 2.

Ver. 17. Abraham fell on his face.] Worshiped God with the humblest Reverence.

And laughed.] Not doubting of the Promise, (for the Apostle tells us quite contrary, Rom. iv. 19.) but out of the exceeding great Joy where-with he was transported; and the Admiration wherewith he was surprized. Which produced the following Questions:

Shall a Child be born unto him, who is an hundred Years old? &c.] As if he had said, Strange! that I and Sarah at this Age should have a Child. What joyful News is this! Accordingly the Chaldee translates the word laughed, he rejoiced.

Ver. 18. O that Ishmael might live before thee!] In his Posterity; as appears by God's Answer to this Petition, Verse 20.

Ver. 19. Call his Name Isaac.] He had this Name from Abraham's, not from Sarah's Laughter: For that was after this; and proceeded not from the same Cause with Abraham's.

Ver. 20. I have heard thee.] He shall have a numerous Posterity. See Doctor Jackson's First Book on the Creed, c. 26. where he shows how the Hagarens grew a mighty Nation: And at last (when they were called Saracens) became the Scourges of all these parts of the World.

Ver. 21. But my Covenant will I establish with Isaac.] The great Blessings I have promised in the Covenant I have made with thee, shall come to thy Posterity by Isaac, not by Ishmael: Particularly the Messiah.

Ver. 22. And God went up from Abraham.] That visible Majesty wherein he appeared to him, (ver. 1.) called often, in after-times, the Glory of the L O R D, went up to Heaven from whence it came.

Ver. 23. Ishmael was thirteen Years old, &c.] From hence it was that the Saracens, descended from him, did not circumcise their Children till they they were thirteen Years old. So it was in the days of Josephus, L. i. Antiq. c. 13. And the Saracens in Spain and Africk observed the same Custom.

Ver. 26. In the self-same day.] The Jews will have this to be the same with the great Day of Expiation, instituted in Moses's time: So that God every Year remembred, say they, the Covenant of Circumcision. But this is an ungrounded Fancy.

Ver. 27. And all the Men of his House.] Maimonides understands by the Men of his House, those whom Abraham had converted from Idolatry, and made Profelytes to the true Religion. So do others among the Jews (see his Treatise of the Worship of the Planets, C. i. §. 9.) But it is more proper to understand by the Men of his House, all his Family in general: Who were either (as it follows) born in his House, (and therefore it is likely, were bred up in the true Religion, and so easily persuaded to receive the Mark of Circumcision) or bought with his Money; who submitted to Abraham's Arguments, not to his Authority; for Religion is to be chosen, not compelled.

C H A P. XVIII.

Ver. 1. AND the LORD appeared to him.] The Glory of the LORD, or the Divine Majesty, which the Jews call the Schechinah, as it had done lately, xvii. 1. And as the LORD then appeared to establish his Covenant with him by Circumcision, so some of the Jews imagine he again appeared to visit, comfort, and heal him, now that he was very sore of his Circumcision. Or rather, I should think, to testify by his illustrious Manifestation of his Glory, (ver. 2.) his high Approbation of Abraham's ready Obedience to so harsh a Command. So the Jews themselves esteem it, and therefore think that by receiving it, Abraham fulfilled that Precept, which goes just before it, xvii. 1. be thou perfect. Which may have some Truth in it if rightly understood: For his Faith and Obedience grew more perfect by submitting to this Command, and was completed when he sacrificed his Son.

However this be, I think it is plain from Verse 10. that this Appearance of the Divine Majesty was not long after the former.

In the Plain,] Or, the Oaks, of Mamre; mentioned before, xiii. 18. This Place continued famous till the time of Constantine; both Jews, Gentiles, and Christians, meeting here once a Year, not only for Traffick, but for Religion: Christians here calling upon God; and there being a Altar here also, on which the Gentiles sacrificed, and invoked the Angels. Of which Superstition Constantine being informed by his Mother, he caused that Altar to be demolished, and a Church to be built in its place. See Sozomen. L. ii. cap. 4. Euseb. in vita Constant. L. iii. cap. 53.

And he sat in the Tent door,] To observe what Strangers passed that way.

In the heat of the Day.] In the Afternoon, when Travellers sought for Places of refreshment.

Ver. 2. And he lift up his Eyes, and looked.] Having fallen down on his Face, (I suppose) and worshipped the Divine Majesty, as he did, xvii. 17. he beheld, when he rose up again.

And lo, there stood three Men by him.] Three Angels in the shape of Men, (for so the Apostle to the Hebrews calls them, xii. 2. and so Moses himself calls two of them, xix. 1.) who were part of the Heavenly Retinue, as I may call it, waiting upon the Divine Majesty, mentioned in the Verse foregoing. There is a Maxim among the Jews, that no Angel performs two Ministries, (that is, is sent on two Messages) nor are two Angels sent upon one Embassy, (as Maimonides speaks, More Nevoch. P. ii. c. 6.) and therefore they think these three Angels were dispatched for different Purposes; one of them, and the Principal, to bring a Confirmation of the Birth of Isaac; another, to bring Lot out of Sodom; and a third, to overthrow the Cities of Sodom and Gomorrab. And therefore when one of these Angels had delivered that Message to Abraham, there were but two that went to Sodom, xix. 1. and Lot speaks to one of them, as taking a particular Care of him, ver. 19. &c. and then it is said, The Lord rained Fire and Brimstone from the Lord out of Heaven, verse 24. That is, that Angel of the Lord, who was set by the LORD of Heaven and Earth over that Work. Some of them indeed assign another Work for one of them, (as we find in that Title of the Talmud called Bava-Metzia, c. 7.) but they agree in the main Notion, That they had different Offices with which they were intrusted. But some Christians, and those of great Authority, have made a question whether they were all created Angels; one of them at least, seeming to be the LORD of all. Nay, St. Cyril in his first Book against Julian, thinks there was a Representation of the Blessed, Individed Trinity; for Abram speaks to them, ver. 4. ὁς εἰς ὄντας οἱ τρεῖς, as if the three were but one. But St. Hilary's Opinion (and Eusebius's, L. v. Demonstr. c. 9.) is more likely, That the Son of God only appeared with two Angels attending on him: Which many think is evident from verse 22. and 25. of this Chapter. Yet, I think, another Account may be given of those Verses; and if we should make that an Argument that one of them was the increated LORD, another of them must be so also: For he is called likewise by the Name of Jehovah, Gen. xix. 24. See St. Austin, L. ii. de Trin. cap. 11. and L. iii. cap. 11. where he confutes the fore-named Opinion.

And when he saw them, he ran to meet them.] Was forward to invite them to refresh themselves with him: For he took them to be considerable Persons, as appears by what follows:

And bowed himself towards the Ground.] After the manner of the Eastern People; in token of the Respect and Honour he had for them. For this was a Civil Action (not Religious) it is manifest by this: That he did not know them to be Angels, but only Persons of Quality,

(as

(as we now speak) their Aspect and Habit, I suppose, being extraordinary.

Ver. 3. My Lord, if now I have found, &c.] One of them appeared more Honourable and Superior to the other two; and therefore he makes his address to him, as the chief: praying him, if he thought him worthy of such a Favour, to honour him with their Company.

Ver. 4. And wash your Feet.] i. e. To wash your Feet. For this was performed by Servants, and not by the Guests themselves.

And rest yourselves under the Tree.] In an Arbour under a great Tree; where they were wont to eat for coolness sake. See Dr. Hammond upon Psalms cxxviii. 3. St. Hierom sometimes calls this Tree an Oak; sometimes a Turpentine-tree, (as J. Filescus observes, L. i. Select. cap. 13.) unless we will say, that he thought Abraham dwelt under the one, and entertained them under the other. And so Eusebius, L. v. Demonstr. Evang. c. 9. expressly relates it, That God appeared to him under the Oak, where he dwelt: And that he entertained the Angels under a Turpentine-tree, which was had in great Honour in his Time.

Ver. 5. I will fetch a morsel of Bread.] Or rather a Loaf of Bread, as de Dieu shows the Word imports; under which is comprehended all necessary Provision at a Meal.

And comfort ye your Hearts.] Refresh yourselves.

For therefore are ye come to your Servant.] Divine Providence hath directed you to come this way, at this time of day, that I may have an opportunity to entertain you hospitably.

Ver. 6. Make Cakes upon the Hearth.] Many interpret it upon the Coals, or hot Embers; according to what we read, 1 Kings xix. 6. But Bochartus thinks the word there signifies, as it doth here, upon hot Stones. Others will have it, that they were laid upon the Hearth, and covered with hot Embers, (P. i. Hierozoic. L. iii. c. 34.) and so they prepare them at this Day, as Leon. Rawwolf. tells us in his Travels, P. ii. c. 9. where he saith, That as he went through a Country that lies between Mesopotamia and Media, a Woman presently made them Cakes, about a Finger thick, and of the bigness of a Trencher; which she first laid upon hot Stones, and turned them often, and then threw Ashes and Embers over them: which, he says, were very favourable.

Ver. 7. A Calf tender and good.] Which was a noble Entertainment in those Countries.

Ver. 8. And he took Butter.] Though we read of Cheese in Homer, Euripides, Theocritus, and others; yet they never mention Butter: Nor hath Aristotle a word of it, (as Bochart observes, Hierozoic. P. i. l. ii. c. 41.) though he hath sundry Observations about Cheese: For Butter was not a thing then known among the Greeks; though we see by this and many other places, it was an ancient Food among the Eastern People.

And he stood by them.] Waited upon them, and ministered to them. For he did not stand unmoveable, but as Servants do that attend upon the Table, who, as there is occasion, bring or take away, &c. See P. Fagius on Deut. i. 38.

Ver. 9. And they said unto him, Where is thy Wife?] One of them (the rest signifying some way their Consent) ask'd him for his Wife; not being ignorant, but to introduce the following Discourse.

In the Tent.] In her Apartment: for Women had their Apartments by themselves.

Ver. 10. And he said.] The Principal of the three Angels; or, rather the LORD himself, as it is explained, ver. 13. For, as Theodorick Hackspan judiciously observes, this Appearance of the Divine Majesty was different from the foregoing: Not being immediate by himself alone, like that xvii. 1. nor merely mediate by an Angel, like that xvi. 7, 10, 11, 12, &c. but mixed, the LORD himself (ver. 1.) being conjunct with the Angels, whom he employed in this Embassy.

I will certainly return to thee.] To fulfil the Promise which I made thee, xvii. 19.

According to the time of life.] Nine Months hence; which is the time of perfecting the Life of a Child in the Womb. This appears to be the Sense from ver. 14. where he calls it the time appointed, or a set time.

In the Tent door, which was behind him.] The Angels sat with their Backs to Sarah's Tent: Unto the Door of which she was come to listen, having heard that they ask'd for her.

Behind him.] This shows the Truth of what Hackspan notes, That this was a mixt Apparition: For this word him plainly relates to the Angel, whose Words were in truth the LORD's who was there present. For as he observes in another place, (Disput. ii. de Nominibus Divinis, n. 15.) the Scripture relates these Matters so, that sometimes it mentions the principal Cause, whose Words are related; sometimes only the secondary Cause: In which latter Case it must be understood, That when the Words exceed the Dignity of the Minister, the LORD himself spake them. For the Sacred Writers mind more by whose Authority any thing is spoken, than by whose Ministry: So that it is not much material from whose Mouth any Message comes; but what is said must be attended. This will be made plainer, when I come to Gen. xxii. 11, 12, &c.

Ver. 11. It ceased to be with Sarah after the manner of Women.] She was no longer capable of Conception, according to the ordinary Course of Nature.

Ver. 12. Laughed within herself.] Not as Abraham for Joy, but out of Incredulity: Not thinking it possible for an old Woman to conceive by an old Man. And her smiling at this was the more excusable, because she did not know them to be Angels of the LORD, but took them only for some great Men.

Ver. 13. And the LORD said.] The Divine Majesty (mentioned ver. 1.) said, Why doth she not believe my Messenger? The Angel spake these Words; but the Words were the LORD's (not his) who was now present with the Angels, and in a little time appeared without them, ver. 17, &c.

Ver.

Ver. 14. At the time appointed will I return to thee.] Take it from myself, that what hath been told thee by them shall be effected.

Ver. 15. Sarah denied.] Fear (as it follows) put her into a Confusion; so that she did not mind what she said: Otherwise she would not have denied, what she might well think they knew. Therefore she is only made sensible of her Fault by a simple Affirmation of what she denied, without any further Reproof.

Nay, but thou didst laugh.] The Person that speaks, seems to have turned to her, and said, Do not deny what I know to be true.

Ver. 16. Looked toward Sodom.] As if they intended to travel that way.

And Abraham went with them to bring them on the way.] A piece of Civility like the former: Having entertained them, he accompanied them so far as to direct them in the Road to Sodom.

Ver. 17. And the LORD said.] The Divine Majesty, mentioned ver. 1. began now to discourse plainly and openly with him; not by the Ministry of Angels, but by himself. For, I take it, the three Angels had now left Abraham alone; who returning towards his Tent, saw the Glory of the LORD, and heard him speak what follows.

Shall I hide from Abraham, &c.] These Words seem to have been spoken to Abraham: Otherwise, how came he to expostulate with the LORD, as he doth ver. 23, &c. unless we will conceive, (as we may) ver. 20, 21. to be the Declaration of God's Intention to destroy Sodom; and these Words and the next, to be his Resolution within himself to acquaint Abraham with that Intention?

Ver. 18. Seeing that Abraham shall surely, &c.] This is one Reason why the Divine Majesty resolves to acquaint Abraham with his intended Proceedings: Because he had already revealed to him greater things, and made him most gracious Promises.

Ver. 19. For I know, &c.] This Verse contains another Reason; because he knew Abraham would approve himself so faithful to him, that he would not fail to enjoy all that he had promised.

To keep the way of the LORD.] Is to persist in the true Religion and Worship of God.

To do Justice and Judgment.] Includes in them all those Virtues which were opposite to the Sins of Sodom.

Ver. 20. Because the Cry.] Of their Sins: Which are said to cry; First, to show the enormous Greatness and Impudency of them: For, grandis absque dubio clamor est, qui a terra ascendit ad caelum, as Salvian speaks. And, Secondly, to show that the Goodness of God could no longer bear with them; their Sins compelling him, as one may say, to punish them. For, Deus eos noluerit perdere, sed ipsi extorserint, ut perirent. They not only called, but cried to him for Vengeance, as he also speaks, L. i. de Gubern. Dei, p. 19, 20. Edit. Baluzii; and L. iv. p. 75. L. v. p. 113.

Of Sodom and Gomorrah.] As they were the principal and greatest Cities, so they were the most wicked, and led the rest into all manner of Impiety: Who therefore also perished with them.

Very grievous.] Not to be tolerated any longer. There are prodigious Stories related of the Wickedness both of their Judges and of the People, in the Gemara Sanhedrim, cap. xi. which are there alledged as an Explication of this Verse.

Ver. 21. I will go down now, &c.] He uses the Language of a good Judge, (Verse 25.) who never passes Sentence, much less executes it, till he hath examined the Cause.

Whether they have done altogether, &c.] Whether they are come to the highest pitch of Wickedness; or (as de Dieu) whether they are so resolved to go on in Sin, that there is no hope of them.

If not, I will know.] That so I may use means for their Reformation.

Ver. 22. And the Men.] The three Men mention'd Verse 2. It is commonly said, that only two of them went away from Abraham, and that the third remain'd and held discourse with him. But I see no reason for this: They that came in and eat with him, and rose up from the Table, (Verse 16.) who no doubt were all three, being the Persons that are here said now to have turned their Faces from thence, i. e. from the place where they had been entertained by Abraham, or where he parted with them.

And went towards Sodom,] as they intended, Verse 16.

But Abraham stood yet before the LORD.] Not before any of those three, but before the Divine Majesty, who appeared to him, ver. 1. and had spoken to him, ver. 13. and discoursed with him, ver. 17, 20. in whose Presence he still continued. Some by stood understand, he prayed: But that follows in the next Verse.

Ver. 23. Abraham drew near.] Approached towards the Divine Majesty, to make his Addresses by Prayer and Supplication to him. Perhaps the Divine Majesty remained in the place where it first appeared, ver. 1. and Abraham by conducting the three Men some part of their way, being gone farther from it, now come nearer to it. Though the Phrase doth not necessarily import it; to draw nigh to God, in the Holy Language, signifying no more but to worship him.

Wilt thou destroy the righteous with the wicked?] As much as to say, I know thou wilt not. For such Questions strongly deny, as in ver. 17.

Ver. 24. Fifty righteous within the City.] Of Sodom, which was the chief, and comprehended the rest of the Country of Pentapolis; which one would guess, by Gen. xiv. 17. depended upon Sodom as the Metropolis. So what is said here of it, I take to refer to the whole Region.

Wilt thou not spare the place for the fifty, &c.] He desires two things of God: 1. That he would not destroy the Righteous with the Wicked. 2. That he would spare the Wicked for the sake of the Righteous, if any considerable Number of them were found among the Wicked.

Ver. 25. Shall not the Judge of all the Earth do right?] This refers (as we translate it) only to the first part of his request, not to destroy the Righteous with the Wicked. Which was contrary to common Justice, much more to that exact Justice, which is administered by the Supreme Lord of the World: From whom there lies no Appeal. But, according to the Vulgar Translation, which is this, [Thou who judgest all the Earth, wilt by no means execute this Judgment,] it refers to the other part also: That God would not be so severe as to destroy a whole Country; whilst there were many good Men still remaining in it: And so the word right, includes in it Clemency. And indeed this Passage seems to relate to both parts of his Request: And is to be interpreted thus; Shall not the Supreme Judge show Mercy, as well as do Justice?

Ver. 26. And the LORD said, If I find fifty, &c. then will I spare, &c.] This shows the foregoing Interpretation to be right: God promising most graciously to be merciful to all, for the sake of a few, in comparison with the Multitude of Offenders.

Ver. 27. Who am but Dust and Ashes.] Very mean and vile.

Ver. 28. Lack five of the fifty righteous.] A great Argument of Abraham's Modesty; who durst not presume to ask too much at once; but by degrees proceeds in the following Verses, to petition for greater abatements: And that with fear and trembling, lest the LORD should be angry with his importunity.

Ver. 32. I will not destroy it for tens sake.] A wonderful representation of the tender Mercy of the most High; who condescended so low as to grant a reprieve to the whole Country, for the sake of so small a Number, if they could have been found in it. And his Mercy was still greater, even beyond Abraham's desire; for he spared one of the five Cities, for the sake of three or four Persons, as we read xix. 20, 21.

We do not find, that Abraham makes express mention of Lot in any of the foregoing Petitions; But it is plain from xix. 29. that he was in his Thoughts, which God knew; and he is comprehended in those words, Verse 23. of this Chapter; Wilt thou destroy the Righteous with the Wicked?

Ver. 33. And the LORD went his way.] The Divine Majesty, or the Glory of the Lord, disappeared (and ascended perhaps towards Heaven) after this Communication with Abraham was finished.

And Abraham returned to his place.] In the Plain of Mamre, verse 1.

CHAP. XIX.

Ver. 1. AND there came two Angels.] There were three at the first, (xviii. 2.) but the Chief of them was gone; having dispatched his Message to Abraham; unto whom he was peculiarly sent. See xviii. 2.

At even.] They had been with Abraham in the heat of the Day: And were now come to the Gates of Sodom.

Lot sat in the gate of Sodom.] The Hebrew Doctors will have it, that he was made a Judge in this City; and the prime Judge of all: For they adventure to name five (in Bereſchith Rabbah) and say Lot was the President of the Court, which sat in the Gate of the City. But this is only a fancy of theirs: He rather sat in the Gate of this City, as Abraham did at his Tent door; to invite Strangers to his House, (according to the Hospitality of those days) which was the greater Charity, because he knew the City to be so wicked, that (if we may believe the Hebrew Doctors) they not only denied them all assistance, but abused them, and were cruel to them, (see Gemara Sanhedrim, C. xi. 8. Pirke Eliezer, cap. 15.) for which last, they quote those words of Ezekiel, xxii. 29. they have oppressed the stranger wrongfully. Which are spoken of Israel, whom xvi. 49. he had compared with Sodom: One of whose Sins he says was, want of Compassion to the poor and needy.

Rose up to meet them, &c.] Just as Abraham did; whose Civility he imitates, as well as his Charity. For the bowing himself so lowly, was a Token of the great Honour he paid them: Who had the appearance of great and noble Persons. And therefore he calls them Lords, in the next Verse.

Ver. 2. Turn in, I pray you, and tarry all night, &c.] It is late, and the Night draws on, take up your Lodging with me, and refresh your selves; and go away as early as you please.

And they said, Nay, &c.] It was as great a Civility in Strangers, not to be forward to accept, as it was in him to invite. And therefore they refuse him at first, to try his Kindness: But intending, no doubt, to embrace his offer, if he pressed them further. So the following words are to be understood.

We will abide in the street all night.] Unless you persist in your Invitation. In those hot Countries, it was not unusual to lie in the open Air, especially in Summer. And in a City, they were safe from being infested by wild Beasts, or Robbers.

Concerning washing the feet. see xviii. 4.

Ver. 3. He pressed upon them greatly.] Would not be denied, but was so earnest that they yielded. It is the same word with that verse 9.

Bake unleavened Bread.] Which would be soonest ready, that so they might, in good time, repose themselves.

Ver. 4. And before they lay down.] To take their rest.

Both old and young.] A manifest Token of an universal Depravation of Manners, and Dissolution of Government.

From every quarter.] Or, as some understand it, from the most extreme parts of the City: As in Psalms. xix. 4. One, it seems, told another, what goodly Persons were come to their City: And all ran to the House where they heard they were; with the same wicked Inclinations. This is a proof there were not ten righteous Persons in Sodom.

Ver. 5. That we may know them.] A modest word for a lewd Fact. Some indeed will have it understood simply, of their examining what they were, whence they came, and what their business was. Which might perhaps be their pretence; but Lot's answer to them, ver. 7, 8. interprets their meaning to be filthy.

Ver. 6. Went out at the door.] To try if he could persuade them to depart. From whence, perhaps, the Jews gathered he was a Man of Authority among them.

Ver. 7. Do not so wickedly.] As to break the Rights of Hospitality; and violate the Laws of Nature.

Ver. 8. Behold now, I have two Daughters, &c.] This must be understood to have been spoken, in a great perturbation and perplexity of Mind; and out of a vehement Desire to preserve the Men whom he had entertained: Which made him say, he had rather they should abuse his own Daughters, than those Strangers.

For therefore came they under the shadow of my roof.] He pleads the Laws of Hospitality, which obliged him to protect them; tho' he himself suffered by it.

Ver. 9. And they said, Stand back.] Give way to us.

This one fellow, &c.] Here is one, and he but a Sojourner; who takes upon him to be a Censor Morum, and controul the whole City. This shows he was no Judge.

Now will we deal worse with thee, &c.] Abuse thee more than them. For it is the same word with ver. 7. doing wickedly.

Ver. 11. Smote the Men with blindness.] Not with a total Blindness, (for then they would not have sought for the Door of Lot's House, but rather have groped for the way home) but such a Dimness that they could not see any thing distinctly, or in its right place: But there seemed to be a Door, suppose, where there was none: Or, there was such a Confusion in their Brain, that all things were turned topsy-turvy (as we speak) in their imagination, and appeared quite otherwise than they were.

Ver. 12. Son-in-law, and thy sons, and thy daughters.] Here the Copulative and, must be expounded or; as it is used in many places: xiii. 8. Let there be no strife between me and thee, or between my herdsmen and thine. And so we translate it, Exod. xii. 5. Thou shalt take it out of the sheep, or out of the goats: And Exod. xxi. 15. He that smiteth his father, or his mother, shall be put to death. And so it should be translated here, Hast thou any here besides son-in-law, or thy sons, or thy daughters? As much as to say, we are desirous to save all that are nearly related to thee, for thy sake.

Ver. 14. Which married his Daughters.] Had espoused them for their Wives, but had not yet consummated the Marriage, as some understand it. Others will have it, that, besides those two Virgin Daughters at home with him, he had other Daughters, who were actually married in the City. Which they gather from the next Verse, take thy Wife and two Daughters, which are here: As if he had more Daughters elsewhere. And R. Jebuda (in Pirke Eliezer, c. 25.) names one of them married to one of the great Men of Sodom, and calls her Pelothit. But this seems rather to have been the Name of one of them who were saved by the Angels, and thence so called: For it signifies deliver'd, or snatch'd from destruction.

He seemed as one that mocked.] Who was not in earnest; but only made sport with them, and spake in jest. For it is the same word from whence Isaac is derived, which signifies Laughter.

Ver. 15. And when the morning arose.] At break of Day: For the Sun did not rise, till Lot was got into Zoar, ver. 23.

Take thy Wife, and thy two Daughters, which are here.] These last words, which are here, are not without Emphasis: And are paraphrased thus by the Chaldee Interpreter, which are found faithful with thee: Are not corrupted by the common Wickedness of this place; or, that believe what we threaten.

Ver. 16. While he lingred.] Being loth to leave his Goods, or his Sons-in-law, and Children: Or, as some think, praying God to spare the City.

The Men laid hold upon his hand, &c.] One of the Angels laid hold upon him and his Wife, and the other upon his two Daughters; whom they pulled out of the House with some kind of constraint, and led them out of the City.

Ver. 17. He said.] That Angel who had a peculiar Charge of preserving Lot and his Family. See xviii. 2.

Escape for thy life.] Make haste, if thou lovest thy Life.

Look not behind thee.] To see what becomes of thy Goods; or, as if thou wast loth to leave Sodom. Make no delay, no not so much as to turn about and look back.

Neither stay thou in the Plain.] Do not rest, till thou hast got out of the Plain: For every Place in it is to be destroyed.

Ver. 18. And he said unto them, &c.] Both the Angels were still with him: But he seems particularly to speak to him that led him and his Wife out of Sodom; who had spoken before to him, and bid him make haste, ver. 17. But there are those (Franzius, for instance) who would have the word Adonai translated not, my Lord, but my Lords, as if he spake to both.

Ver. 19. I cannot escape to the Mountains, &c.] He that lingred before, ver. 16. now thought he could not make haste enough. Either being crazy; or, tired with sitting up all Night, or, fearing the destruction would overtake him before he could reach the Mountain, and desiring perhaps to have a better dwelling than that.

Ver. 20. My Soul shall live.] Rejoice, and be exceeding thankful.

Ver. 21. See, I have accepted thee.] Granted thy Request.

I will not overthrow, &c.] A wonderful Instance of the Divine Clemency: Which in the midst of Wrath remembered Mercy.

Ver. 22. Haste thee.] Make no more delays: No, not to make any further Petitions.

I cannot do any thing till thou be come thither.] Having made thee this Promise, I must defer the Vengeance till thou art safe there.

Called Zoar.] In after-times it had this Name, from the smallness of it; which he twice mentions, ver. 20.

Ver. 24. The LORD rained from the LORD.] It cannot be denied that here is an intimation of a Plurality of Persons in the Deity; yet there are many both ancient and modern Interpreters, who think the meaning is no more, than the LORD sent this Rain from himself, it being the manner of the Scripture Phrase to repeat the Noun instead of the Pronoun (as Grammarians speak) of which Cocceius (upon the Gemara of the Sanhedrim, G. 4.) gives these Instances; Gen. ii. 20. 1 Sam. xii. 11. Zech. i. 16. And there are others, which come nearer to these words; Exod. xxiv. And he, (i. e. the LORD, ver. 3.) said unto Moses, Come up unto the LORD. Hos. i. 7. I will save them by the LORD their God. Zech. x. 12. I will strengthen them in the LORD, &c. The Council of Sirmium indeed anathematizes those who thus interpret these words, and do not say, the Son rained from the Father, Socrat. L. ii. c. 30. Yet St. Chrysostom did not fear to say this is an Idiom of the Scripture-Language, which intended only to shew, יְהוָה מֵיָהוָה וְיַחְזִיקֵם בַּיהוָה, that the LORD brought this Punishment upon them. Others also have observed, that the Scripture-Phrase being very concise, by the LORD, (in the beginning of the Verse) may be meant the Angel of the LORD. For wheresoever mention is made of the LORD, it is to be understood of him, יְהוָה רִינֵנו, and his house of judgment, (as the Jewish Doctors speak) i. e. of the Angels which attend his Divine Majesty. And thus I find Aretbas, (or Andreas Casariensis) in his Commentaries upon the Revelation, p. 729. understands these words. For he there compares that Captain who was over the Locusts, Revel. ix. 11. to the Angel that was sent to cut off the Army of Senacherib, and to this Angel, ὁ ὅς ἐστι Ζωδόμενος ὁ ἀπέπεσε ἀπὸ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν, ὁ ὅς ἐστι Ζωδόμενος ὁ ἀπέπεσε ἀπὸ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν, who had the Charge of executing the fiery destruction upon Sodom committed to him. For all Angels, saith he, are not ministering Spirits, οἱ δὲ διακονοῦντες σωτηρίαν, for Men's Preservation, but some serve, οἱ δὲ τιμωρίαν, for Punishment. And that they can bring Fire from Heaven, and raise Storms and Tempests, appears by the Story of Job.

Out of Heaven.] From the LORD, whose Seat is in Heaven. The like Expression we have, Revel. xx. 9.

Upon Sodom, and upon Gomorrah.] And the neighbouring Cities, Admah, and Zebaim; as appears from Deut. xxix. 23.

Brimstone and Fire.] A most hideous Shower, or rather Storm, of Nitre, Sulphur, or Bitumen, mingled with Fire, fell upon this Country from above; and, as the Tradition was among the Heathen, accompanied with a dreadful Earthquake: Which made an irruption of those bituminous Waters, whereby this Country was turned into a Lake called Asphaltites, or the Salt or Dead Sea. So Strabo, L. xvi. in his Description of that Lake. And indeed it doth not seem improbable that the Earth quaked while the Heavens did so terribly frown, and the Almighty's Voice thundred from the Clouds, as Doctor Jackfon speaks, Book i. on the Creed, c. 15. For the word καταιψαλει, (which St. Peter uses, 2 Pet. ii. 6.) may be thought to import some such subversion. But it was his Ignorance of the sacred Tradition in the Scriptures, which made Strabo wholly ascribe the desolation of that Country to the Earth, and not at all to the Heavens. Whereas Tacitus, who was better informed, says these Judaical Cities (as he calls them) fulminum jactu (or ictu) arsisse, were burnt by the stroke of Thunderbolts from Heaven: And, a little after, igne caelesti flagrasse, were set on fire, and consumed by Lightning. L. v. Histor. With which fell such abundance of bituminous Stuff, that the Valley which had only some Pits of Bitumen in it before, xiv. 3, 10. became a Lake of it.

VOL. I.

Ver. 25. And he overbrow those Cities, &c.] Super impium Populum gebennam misit à calo, as Salvian glosses, L. i. & L. iv. de Gubern. Dei. He sent Hell from Heaven upon an impious People. Of whose destruction there remains an everlasting Monument in the Salt Sea: Into which that plain Country is turned. The quality of which, and of the Soil about it, is so contrary to the Nature of all other Seas, or Inland Lakes, that no Philosopher can give an account of it like that which Moses hath given us; as the same Doctor Jackfon truly observes. He that will read Tacitus in the place fore-mentioned, or Pliny, or Diodorus, may be satisfied of this. The Country where these Cities stood, being become a Pan, or Receptacle (as the fore-named Doctor well calls it) of such a strange moisture, that it may be called liquid Pitch, rather than Water: For it is so stiff, that no Wind will move it; nor will a Camel sink, if thrown into it; nor any Fish, or Bird that uses the Water, live in it: And therefore called the Dead-Sea, and Salt-Sea, as Salmasius thinks, (Exerc. Plinian. Pag. 577, 614.) because no Creature can live there, and because the noisome Steams that come from it blast all that grows of itself, or is sown in the Earth about it. Nor do the Rivers that run into it at all alter it, but it infects all their Waters with the loathsome Qualities of those Dregs of God's Wrath (to use Doctor Jackfon's words once more) which first settled in it at this Overthrow: Just like bad Humours, when they settle in any part of our Bodies, plant, as it were, a new Nature in it, and turn all Nourishment into their substance.

Ver. 26. His Wife look'd back from behind him.] She not only lagged behind, as we speak, but turned about and stood still a-while, bewailing perhaps the loss of all there: Or, as some of the Jews fancy, to see what would become of her Kindred, and whether they would follow her or no.

Became a Pillar of Salt.] Or, as some understand it, an everlasting Monument: Whence, perhaps, the Jews have given her the Name of Adith, (as they call her in Pirke Eliezer, cap. 25.) because she remained a perpetual Testimony of God's just Displeasure. For she standing still too long, some of that dreadful Shower before-mentioned overtook her; and falling upon her, wrapp'd her Body in a Sheet of Nitro-sulphureous

Matter:

Matter, which congealed into a Crust as hard as Stone, and made her appear like a Pillar of Salt, her Body being, as it were, candied in it. Kimchi calls it an heap of Salt; which the Hebrews say, continued for many Ages. Their Conjecture is not improbable, who think the Fable of Niobe was hence derived; who, the Poets feign, was turned into a Stone upon her excessive Grief for the death of her Children.

Ver. 27. Gat to the place, where he stood before the LORD.] Where he prayed, say the Jews, or communed with God, xviii. 22, 33.

Ver 28. The smoke of the Country, &c.] Some think the Hebrew word signifies, like the smoke of a Lime-kiln, or of a boiling Cauldron. After the Shower was over, the Reek or Steam of it remained; and made that Country look dismally, which before was like the Garden of God, (xiii. 10.) but now becoming a stinking Puddle of filthy Water, καὶ ὁ πρὸς ἑαυτὸν ἀπαῖδης, as Diodorus speaks, noisome beyond expression.

Ver. 29. Overthrew the Cities wherein Lot dwelt.] In one of which he dwelt: Which is an usual manner of speaking in Scripture, Gen. viii. 4. the Ark rested on the Mountains (i. e. on one of the Mountains) of Ararat, Judg. xii. 7. Jephthah was buried in the Cities (i. e. one of the Cities) of Gilead. Which explains that of St. Matthew, xxvi. 8. when his Disciples (i. e. one of his Disciples, Judas) saw it, he had indignation, &c.

Ver. 30. And Lot went up out of Zoar, &c.] It appears from hence, that this good Man was very timorous, not having so strong a Faith as his Uncle Abraham. For he that had lately obtained a Pardon for this Place, because he was afraid he should not have time enough to get to the Mountain, now forsakes it: For fear, I suppose, a new Shower should come from Heaven and destroy it after the rest; because the Inhabitants perhaps continued unreformed, tho' they had seen such a terrible Example of the Divine Vengeance upon their wicked Neighbours. If his fear to dwell in Zoar proceeded from this Cause, it was the more reasonable; because he might think, tho' God had spared them for the present, yet they taking no warning by the Calamity of their Country, would shortly perish as the rest had done. And so *Theodore*t and others think this City was afterwards destroyed: Of which there is no certain Record; and if the Tradition be true, it was not speedily swallowed up, as they report, but retained for some time the Name of Zoar; being before called Bela, xiv. 2.

Dwelt in the Mountain.] It is not said what Mountain, but it is probable, one of the Mountains in the Country afterward called Moab, from one of his Children which he here begat. For Epiphanius, Hæres. liii. describes the Country of Moab as lying, πέρα τῆς ἀλυτῆς, &c. beyond the Salt or Dead Sea. See Salmas. Exerc. Plin. p. 615.

Ver. 31. There is not a Man in all the Earth.] Not one remaining of their Kindred, that they knew: For they were not much acquainted, we may suppose, beyond that Country which was destroyed; and those of Zoar were so wicked, that they look'd upon them as Beasts rather than Men.

Ver. 32. Let us make him drink Wine.] Which they brought with them out of Sodom to support their Spirits in their flight, or else got at Zoar: Of which they invited their Father to drink liberally, and cheer himself under his extreme great Sorrow.

That we may preserve Seed of our Father.] This Fact of theirs being objected by Celsus against our Religion, Origen gives this Account of it: (Lib. iv. contra Cels.) That these two Maids having learnt something of the Conflagration of the World, and seeing their own City and Country destroyed by Fire, imagined, ζῶντες τῷ θεῷ ἀνδράπων, that the Seminary of Mankind remained only in their Father and them. And if what they did was upon this supposition, That there was no other way to restore the World, they did no worse than the Stoicks thought their wife Man might do, if the Race of Mankind were extinct, so that none but he and his Daughter were left alive. Iræneus makes the same Excuse for them, and says they did this innocently, and in their simplicity, believing all Mankind were destroyed, L. iv. cap. 51. But I take their Conjecture to be highly probable, who conceive that the eager Desire, which then possessed the Hearts of good People, to fulfil the Promise of the Messiah, was that which put them upon this, otherwise monstrous, Crime. For which there are these Reasons: First, That they had lived so chastly in the midst of the Impurities of Sodom, that one cannot think a Spirit of Uncleanness now entered into them, and carried them to this Action. And indeed, Secondly, Their joining together in this Contrivance, (whereas Matters of this nature use to be carefully concealed from the nearest Friends, or make them fall out, if they find themselves engaged in the same Intrigue) shows that they were acted by Counsel and Design, and not by brutish Lust. And, Thirdly, Their perpetuating the Memory of this Fact, in the Names of their Children, is a demonstration there was something extraordinary in it, and that they were not ashamed of it, but rather gloried in it; desiring it might be remembered that these Children were descended from Lot. Who they thought perhaps, might pretend to fulfill the Promise as well as Abraham: Being the Son of Abraham's elder Brother; and called out of Sodom by the Ministry of Angels, as Abraham was called out of Chaldæa.

Ver. 23. He perceived not when she lay down, &c.] This seems hard to be understood: But it must be noted, That Moses only says, he did not perceive when she came to bed to him, and when she got up again; not that he did not perceive when he lay with her, of which he could not but have some perception.

Tho' M. Montaigne in his Essays, relates a Story of a Widow, who being drunk, was abused by a Hind in her House, and afterward finding herself with Child, could not remember how it came to pass. But the Fellow at last confessed his Fact: Of which, whatsoever Sense she had then, she had perfectly forgot it when she awaked.

Ver. 34. Go thou in, &c.] If he had retained any remembrance of what he had done the Night before, one cannot think he would have fallen into the same Snare so soon again. For which reason it is probable, he did not think he had been intoxicated, but only drank so freely, as to make him sleep soundly, and forget his Sorrow.

Ver. 37. Moab.] Most will have this word to signify, from my Father. But Drusus in Deut. ii. 8. takes the import of it to be, Aqua Patris.

Ver. 38. Ben-ammi.] This signifies as much as, the Son of my People. Which doth not acknowledge so plainly as the other, That this Son was begotten by her Father; but only that he was the Son of one of her own Nation, or Kindred, not by a Stranger.

CHAP. XX.

Ver. 1. Journeyed from thence.] i. e. From Mamre, where he had dwelt a great while, and where many remarkable Passages had happened, xiii. 18. xviii. 1.

Toward the South Country.] Toward Egypt: For some fancy the very Stench of the Lake of Sodom was offensive to him in Mamre.

Sojourned in Gerar.] The Metropolis of Palestine; and, as some compute it, not much above six Miles from Mamre.

Ver. 2. Abraham said of Sarab, &c.] Just as he had done in Egypt, xii. 13. when there was greater reason for it; she being then thirty Years younger than now; when she was no less than ninety Years old. But it seems her Beauty remained at this Age, being healthful, and having born and suckled no Children: And Women in those days living so long, that they were as fresh at ninety, as they are now at forty or fifty. When many that are of excellent Constitutions, and naturally handsome, continue very lovely.

Abimelech.] The Name of all the Kings of Palestine; as Pharaoh was of the Kings of Egypt. It is not improbable, as the Author of Tzemath-David conjectures, that the succeeding Kings took the Name of him who was the first King of the Country. Ad A. M. 2600.

Sent and took Sarab] By violence, some think; but I see no ground for it. He desired to have her; and might think Abraham would look upon it as a great honour to have his Sister become Wife to a King: And Abraham, it is likely shewed no unwillingness, not being in a Condition to deny him.

Ver. 3. And God came to Abimelech in a dream by night.] Two differences are observed by Maimonides, between this manifestation, which God made of his Mind to Abimelech, and that which he made to the Prophets. For it is only said here, God came to Abimelech, and that he came in a dream by night. The very same is said of Laban the Syrian, who doth not seem to have been so good a Man as Abimelech, xxxi. 24. But of Jacob it is said, God spake unto Israel, and he spake to him in the Visions of the Night, (not in a Dream) and said, Jacob, Jacob, xlv. 2. See More Nevoch: P. ii. c. 41. God was not a Stranger to other Nations, when he was peculiarly kind to Abraham, but spake to them in Dreams, and sometimes in Visions; as appears in Eliphaz, and Elibu, Job iv. 13. xxxiii. 14, 15, &c.

Thou art but a dead Man.] viz. If thou dost not restore Abraham his Wife, ver. 7.

She is a Man's Wife.] (Or, married to a Husband, as we translate it in the Margin) so completely, that he hath enjoyed her as his Wife. For from this place the Jewish Doctors prove that the Marriage Contract was not perfected in these days till the Parties had lain together: After which, if any other Person lay with the Woman, he was to be put to death as an Adulterer; but not if he lay with her after the Contract, before it was consummated by actual Enjoyment. See Mr. Selden, de Jure N. & G. L. v. c. 4. p. 551.

Ver. 4. But Abimelech had not come near her.] To use her as his Wife.

Wilt thou slay also a righteous Nation?] He was afraid (as became a good Man and a good King) lest his People should suffer upon his account; who, in this Particular, had no guilt upon them.

Ver. 5. Said he not unto me, &c.] The Fault is in them, not in me: For I had both their words for it, that he was her Brother; and he said nothing of her being his Wife.

In the integrity of my heart.] Not with any intention to defile her, but to make her my Wife.

And innocence of my hands.] I did not take her by violence from Abraham, but he and she consented to it.

Ver. 6. And God said unto him in a dream.] The same Expression is still retained which we had, ver. 3. to show, that this was a lower degree of Divine Manifestation than was in Abraham's Family.

I know thou didst this in the integrity, &c.] i. e. That thou didst not design any Evil.

For I also, &c.] Or rather, And I also withheld thee. I dealt well with thee, because of thy Integrity. Some think he was withheld by a Disease in the Secret Parts, ver. 17.

From sinning against me.] From committing Adultery.

Ver. 7. He is a Prophet.] This is the first time we meet with the word Nabi, a Prophet: And Abraham is the first that is honoured with this Name. Which signifies one familiar with God; who might come to him to consult him upon all occasions, and be authorized to declare God's Mind and Will to others; and also prevail with him by his Prayers for a Blessing upon them. So it here follows:

He shall pray for thee.] Obtain life and health to thee. The greater any Prophet was, the more powerful he was in Prayer: As appears by the Stories of Moses, Elias, and Samuel. See Psalms xcix. 6.

It appears by this whole History of Abimelech, that he was a Man of great virtue in those days; and not an Idolater, but a Worshipper of the True God, as Melchizedec the High Priest Priest of that Country was: Yet not so well acquainted with Divine Revelations as Abraham was.

Ver. 8. Abimelech rose up early in the Morning.] This is a further Token of his Goodness, that he delayed not to obey the Divine Command.

Called all his Servants.] His Privy Council, (as we speak) who were all of the same mind with him, that this was a Divine Admonition, which, it was not safe to disobey. From whence we may probably gather, his Court was not so corrupted as Abraham suspected.

Ver. 9. What hast thou done unto us?] Into what danger hast thou brought us?

Thou hast brought on me and my Kingdom a great Sin.] Run me into the hazard of committing a great Sin, or suffering an heavy Punishment, (for so Sin is sometimes taken) in not telling me the Truth.

Thou hast done deeds unto me, that ought not to be done.] This is not fair dealing, such as I might have expected from thee.

Ver. 10. What sawest thou, &c. What didst thou observe in my Country, that made thee think we would meddle with thy Wife? What tokens of Injustice, or Impurity, didst thou see among us?

Ver. 11. Because I thought surely, &c.] The word rak, which we translate surely, signifies only; and may be thus well translated here, this only I saw wanting in your Country, the fear of God: i. e. A sense of Religion, which restrains Men from all manner of Wickedness. It seems the People were not so good as their King.

Ver. 12. And yet indeed she is my Sister.] Do not condemn me of telling a Lye, for she is truly my Sister. Such was the Language of those days to call their Wives, Sisters; and their Nephews, Brothers. As he calls Lot, xiii. 8. who was his Nephew, and the Brother of Sarah, as was observed upon xi. 29.

She is the Daughter of my Father.] i. e. His Father's Grand-daughter; who are frequently in Scripture called the Children of their Grand-fathers. For she was the Daughter to Haran, elder Brother of Abraham.

But not the Daughter of my Mother.] It seems Terah had two Wives, by one of which he had Haran, the Father of Lot and Sarah; and by the other he had Abraham. So Sarah was Daughter to one who was his Brother by his Father's side, but not by his Mother: And with such a Niece they thought it not unlawful then to marry: No regard being had to Consanguinity (if we may believe R. Solomon Jarchi) by the Father's side, before the Law of Moses, but only by the Mother's.

The more received Opinion indeed of the Hebrew Doctors is, (as Mr. Selden observes, L. v. de Jure N. & G. cap. 2.) that Sarah was indeed the Daughter of Terah by his second Wife, and so Abraham's half Sister. And said Batriades (Patriarch of Alexandria above seven hundred Years ago) in his Arabick History, tells us, the Name of Terah's first Wife was Jona; and the Name of his second Tevitha, by whom he had Sarah. But there is no other Authority for this.

Ver. 13. When God caused me to wander.] The Hebrew word which we translate wander, being in the Plural Number, the LXX render the word Elohim (God) the Angels: Who by the Command of God led him from his Father's House thro' divers Countries. But the Chaldee translates it, when because of the Idols of Chaldaea I was called away from my own Country, &c. For so the Gods, that is, the Idol Gods, might be said to cause him to wander, because it was by reason of them, that God would not have him stay any longer in his own Country. But there is no need of these Devices, nothing being more usual in the Hebrew Language than for the Plural Number to be put instead of the Singular, especially when they speak of God, as Bochart observes in many places; Gen. xxxv. 7. Exod. xxxii. 4. Psalm cxlix. 2. Eccles. xii. 1. See Hierozytic, P. i. L. ii. c. 34. Nay, Hacksplan hath rightly observed, that there are Nouns of the Plural Number in their termination, which in signification are singular; with which it is usual to join a Verb of the Plural Number, because of the plural termination of the Noun. A plain Example of which we have, Gen. iv. 6. Why is thy Countenance (in the Hebrew, Faces) fallen? The like he observes in the Syriack Language, John i. 4. The life (in the Syriack, lives) was the light of Men.

Ver. 16. I have given thy Brother a thousand pieces of Silver.] The word Pieces is not in the Hebrew. But by Ceseph, Silver, all in a manner understood Shekels: For anciently there were no Shekels of Gold or Brass, but only of Silver. Yet there are those who think he did not give him thus much in Money, but in the Goods before-mentioned, ver. 14. which were worth a thousand Shekels. See xxxiii. 16.

He is unto thee a covering of the Eyes, &c.] These words are very variously expounded, according as the first word hu is interpreted: Which may relate either to the Gift before-mentioned, and may be translated, this; or to Abraham, and be translated he, as it is by us. If they refer to the former, then the Sense is, I have given him that sum of money to buy thee a veil, that all who converse with thee here, or in any other Country (where thou shalt come) may know thee to be a married Woman. For a Veil was worn in token of subjection to the Power of the Husband, and that thereby their Chastity might be preserved safe from the Snares of others; as G. Vorstius observes upon Pirke Eliezer, cap. xxxii. Or, as others interpret it, This money will be a covering to thine Eyes, (that is, a defence to thy Modesty) it being a testimony that Abimelech paid dear for taking thee into his house.

If they refer to Abraham, then the meaning is, Thou needest no other defence of thy Modesty and Chastity than he, nor hast any reason to say hereafter, he is thy Brother; for he is so dear to God, that God will defend him; and he will defend thee without such shifts as this thou hast used: Nay, not only thee, but all that are with thee; and that, even against strangers. I omit other interpretations, and refer the Reader to L. de Dieu.

Thus She was reproved,] Or, instructed (as some translate it) not to dissemble her Condition.

dition. Or, this was the Reprehension he gave her, for saying Abraham was her Brother.

Ver. 17. So Abraham prayed unto God, &c.] Beseeched God to restore them all to their Health, now that his Wife was restored to him, ver. 14.

Ver. 18. For the LORD had fast closed up, &c.] By such Swellings (some understand it) in the secret Parts, that the Men could neither enjoy their Wives, nor the Women who were with Child, be delivered.

CHAP. XXI.

Ver. 1. AND the LORD visited Sarah, &c.] Bestowed upon her the Blessing he had promised her, i. e. made her conceive. For so the word visit signifies; either in a bad Sense to inflict Punishment (Exod. xx. 5.) or in a good Sense, to confer Blessings; as here, and Exod. iii. 16. and many other places.

And he did unto her as he had spoken.] Performed his Promise, by making her bring forth a Child: For so it is explained in the next Verse, Sarah conceived and bare Abraham a Son.

Ver. 2. Sarah conceived, &c.] God not only made her Womb fruitful, but brought the Fruit of it to Perfection; and then brought it into the World.

At the set time of which God had spoken to him.] xviii. 14. It is not said where Isaac was born: For we are not told here, whether Abraham departed from Gerar into any other Part of this Country, as Abimelech kindly offered and gave him liberty to do, xx. 15. But it appearing by the latter end of this Chapter, that he continued a long time in Abimelech's Country, tho' not at Gerar, it is probable Isaac was born at Beerseba, ver. 31.

Ver. 6. God hath made me to laugh.] i. e. To rejoice exceedingly.

So that all that hear, will laugh with me.] All my Friends and Neighbours will congratulate my Happiness, and rejoice with me.

Ver. 7. Give Children suck.] It is usual to put the Plural Number for the Singular, as was observed before, xix. 29. Or she hoped perhaps to have more Children after this. And her giving him suck, was a certain Proof that she had brought him forth of her own Womb; and that he was not a supposititious Child, as Menochius well observes. Others note, That the greatest Persons in those ancient Days suckled their own Children; which Favorinus, a Greek Philosopher, pressed as a Duty upon a Noble Woman by many strong Arguments: Which are recorded by A. Gellius, who was present at his Discourse, L. xii. Noct. Attic. cap. 1.

Ver. 8. The Child grew, and was weaned.] At the Age of five Years old, as St. Hierom reports the Opinion of some of the Hebrews.

Made a great Feast the same Day.] Rather now, than at his Nativity; because there was greater hope of Life, when he was grown so strong, as to be taken from his Mother's Breast.

Ver. 9. Sarah saw the Son of Hagar, &c. mocking.] He laugh'd and jeered, perhaps, at the great bustle which was made at Isaac's weaning: Looking upon himself as the First-born, and by the right of that, to have the privilege of fulfilling the Promise of the Messiah. This gives a good account of Sarah's Earnestness for the Expulsion, not only of him, but of his Mother also; who, it's likely, flattered and bore him up in those Pretensions. Many think he did more than mock him, because St. Paul calls it Persecution, Gal. iv. 29. which St. Hierom takes for beating Isaac: Who, perhaps, resenting his Flouts, might say something that provoked Ishmael to strike him. And it is very probable his Mother encouraged him to this, or maintained him in his Insolence: Which was the Reason Sarah pressed to have them both turned out of doors.

Some think he jested upon his Name, and made it a matter of Merriment. For so the word is used, xix. 14.

Ver. 10. Cast out, &c.] Let them not dwell here any longer, nor continue a Part of thy Family.

Shall not be Heir, &c.] She judged, by what she had seen of his fierce and violent Spirit, that it would not be safe for her Son; to let Ishmael have any share in his Father's Inheritance: for she was afraid he would make himself Master of all.

Ver. 11. Grievous, because of his Son.] His Wife is not here mentioned, because his principal Concern was for his Son: But it appears by the next Verse, he had some Consideration of her also.

Ver. 12. God said unto Abraham, &c.] By this he was satisfied that Sarah's Motion proceeded not merely from her Anger, but from a Divine Incitation.

For in Isaac shall thy Seed be called.] Here the Blessing promised to Abraham's Seed, xvii. 7, 8. is limited to the Posterity of Isaac; and the Meaning of the Phrase is, they that descend from Isaac, and not they that descend from Ishmael, shall be owned by me for the Children of Abraham; particularly the Messiah shall be one of his Seed.

Ver. 13. Also of the Son of thy hand-maid, &c.] He renews the Promise he had made him before, xvii. 20. that Ishmael should have a numerous Posterity, because he was descended from Abraham.

Ver. 14. Rose up early in the morning.] Delayed not to fulfil the Divine Will.

Took bread and a bottle of Water.] Which includes all sort of Provision for their present Necessity, till they came to the Place unto which, in all probability, he directed them to bend their Course. For it is not reasonable to think, that he sent them to seek their Fortune (as we speak) without any Care what became of them. It may seem strange rather, that he did not send a Servant to attend them, but let Hagar carry the Provision herself: Which I suppose was done to humble her, and to show that her Son was to have no Portion of Abraham's Inheritance, nor of his Goods, of which Servants were a Part. Doctor Jackson, Book i. on the Creed, chap. 25. thinks that Abraham would scarce have suffered them to go into a Wilderness, so poorly provided, when he had Store of all all things, unless he had been directed by some secret Instinct; prefaging the rude and sharking kind of life unto which his Progeny was ordained. Yet, it is probable, he was as kind to him, as he was to the Sons he had by Keturab, and sent him some Tokens of his Love afterwards. See xxv. 6.

Ver. 15. She cast the Child under one of the Shrubs.] He being faint, and ready to die with thirst. A Prefage (saith the great Man before-named) that his Posterity should be pinched with the like penury: Scantness of Water (which was their best Drink) streightning their Territories in Arabia, as Strabo observes, L. xvi. And after they had enlarged their Bounds, even in Mesopotamia itself, they were still confined to the dry and barren Places of it.

Ver. 16. And she went and sat her down, &c.] Her Strength carried her further than he could go: But her Affection still kept her within sight of the place where he was.

Ver. 17. And God heard the Voice of the Lad.] Who cried, it seems, as well as his Mother: And it moved the Divine Pity to send an Angel to their Relief.

Fear not.] Do not think I come to terrify thee: Or, do not fear the death of thy Child.

Ver. 18. Lift up the Lad, &c.] It seems he was so faint, that he was not able to stand without support.

Ver. 19. Opened her Eyes.] Made her see what she did not observe before, by reason of her Tears, or the great disturbance of her Mind.

Ver. 20. And God was with the Lad.] Preserved and prospered him: So that he grew to be a Man.

Became an Archer.] A skilful Hunter and Warrior also, with Bow and Arrows. Am. Marcellinus, L. xiv. tells us, that the Saracens, who were of the Posterity of Ismael, never set their Hands to the Plough, but got their living for the most part by their Bow. For such as they were themselves, such was their Food, (Victus universis caro ferina, &c.) they all lived upon wild Flesh, or Venison, and such wild Fowl as the Wilderness afforded, with Herbs and Milk. Dr. Jackson observes, that he compares them to Kites, ready to spy a Prey, but so wild withal that they would not stay by it, (as Crows or other ravenous Birds do by Carrion) but presently fled with what they caught into their Nests.

Ver. 21. He dwelt in the Wilderness of Paran.] Which was near to Arabia: In which Country all the Oriental Writers say the Posterity of Ismael lived. Particularly Patracides, who says, he went into the Land of Jathreb, which is that part of Arabia, in which is the City of Medina.

A Wife out of Egypt.] Out of her own Country, where she was best acquainted. The Jewish Doctors say he had two Wives, whose Names they tell us were Aiscab and Phatimah: The first of which received Abraham churlishly when he went to visit his Son; and therefore he put her away and took the other, who proved more civil, when he made a second Journey thither. Which, tho' it look like a Fable, yet I think it not improbable that Abraham might go to see how his Son lived, and that Ismael might sometimes wait upon him, (as the Author of Schalscall. Hakab. and Pirke Eliezer affirms) for we cannot think they were so unnatural, as never to have any correspondence: Especially, since we read that Ismael, as well as Isaac, took care of Abraham's Funeral, xxv. 9. After which, it is not improbable Hagar might have another Husband; which is the account Aben Ezra (upon Psalms lxxxiii. 6.) gives of the People called Hagarenes, who are there mentioned as distinct from the Ismaelites: They were, saith he, descended from Hagar by another Husband, not by Abraham.

Ver. 22. Abimelech and Piccol, &c.] It is plain by this that Abraham still lived, if not in the Country of Gerar, yet very near it.

God is with thee in all that thou dost.] They saw him so thriving and prosperous, that they were afraid he might grow too strong for them, if he should have a mind to disturb them.

Ver. 23. Swear that thou wilt not deal falsely, &c.] That as there hath been a long Friendship between me and thee, so thou wilt not violate it, but always preserve it, even when I am dead: According to thy frequent Professions and (perhaps) Promises.

According to the kindness, &c.] Abimelech thought he might claim this Oath from Abraham, by Virtue of the Obligations he had laid upon him.

Ver. 24. I will swear.] He was as forward to confirm his Promises as to make them.

Ver. 25. And Abraham reproved Abimelech.] But before he swore, he thought it necessary to settle a right Understanding between them: And therefore argued with Abimelech (as it may be rendred) about a Well of Water digged by Abraham's Servants, which Abimelech's had injuriously taken from him. This was Wisdom to complain of Wrongs now, before they entred into a Covenant, that they, being redressed, there might remain no occasion of Quarrels afterward.

Ver. 26. Abimelech said, I wot not, &c.] This is the first time I heard of it; if thou hadst complained before, I would have done thee right.

Ver. 27. And Abraham took Sheep, &c.] Some think they were a Present he made to Abimelech, in gratitude for what he had bestowed on him, (xx. 14.) or in token of Friendship with him. But others think they were designed for Sacrifice, by which they made a Covenant one with another. At least, some of them served for that use.

Ver. 28. And he set seven Ewe-lambs by themselves.] The meaning of this is afterwards explained, ver. 30. That tho' they were part of the Present he made him, yet they should be understood also (being set apart from the rest) to be a purchase of a quiet possession of that Well.

Ver. 30. A Witness unto me that I have digged this Well.] By this Token it shall be remembered hereafter, that I digged this Well, and that thou didst grant me quiet possession of it.

Ver. 31. Called the place Beersheba.] The Hebrew word Sheba signifies both an Oath, and also seven. Perhaps for both reasons this Place had had his Name. We are sure for the first, which is here mentioned: Because they swore to each other.

Ver. 31. Thus they made a Covenant, &c.] By giving and accepting those Sheep and Oxen, mentioned ver. 27. and perhaps by offering Sacrifices; or, at least, by eating and drinking together: As Isaac and Abimelech did in after-times, xxvi. 30.

Here some observe it was not unlawful, by the Law of Nature, to make Covenants with Infidels and Idolaters, for mutual Defence and Commerce, or such like reasons. But I see no Proof that Abimelech was such a Person. In future Ages the People of Canaan were so corrupted by this, as well as other Sins, that God commanded them to be exterminated, and made it unlawful to enter into a Covenant with them, Exod. xxxiv. 15. But as the Philistines were none of them, so it still remained lawful to make Leagues with other Gentiles, who were not of the seven Nations of Canaan, as we see by the Examples of David, and Solomon, and others.

They returned into the Land of the Philistines.] Into that part of the Country where they dwelt: For both Abimelech and Abraham were now in that Land, as appears from the last Verse of this Chapter.

Ver. 33. Abraham planted a Grove.] For a solemn and retired Place wherein to worship God. For, as Servius says upon the ix. Aeneid. Nunquam est Lucus sine Religione. There never was a Grove in ancient times, without Religion. And therefore here we may well suppose Abraham built an Altar, which was fenced and bounded with an Inclosure, and shaded with Trees; as Mr. Mede (Discourse xix.) observes their Proseucha's or Places of Prayer to have been in after-times. For that this was intended for a Place of Prayer, appears by the following words, and called there on the Name of the Lord, &c.

From hence, some think, the Custom of planting Groves was derived into all the Gentile World: Who so prophaned them by Images, and Filthiness, and Sacrifices to Demons, that God commanded them, by the Law of Moses, to be cut down. But Abraham made use of a Grove before this, xii. 6, 8. where we find he built an Altar on a Mountain, which I question not was compassed with Trees. See xiii. 18. Therefore I take this only to have been the first Grove that he planted himself.

Called upon the Name of the LORD, the everlasting God.] I find that Maimonides, in several places of his More Nevochim, translates the last words, The LORD God of the World, or the LORD the Almighty Creator of the World. For this was the great Article of Faith in those Days, That God made the World. Par. ii. c. 30. & Par. iii. c. 29.

Ver. 34. Sojourned many days, &c.] The word Days often signifies Years: And it is likely, signifies so in this place. For here Isaac was born, and here he was weaned: And after that Abraham found so much friendship from Abimelech, and so many conveniencies of Life, that they invited him to stay a long time in this Country.

CHAP. XXII.

Ver. 1. AND it came to pass after these things.] That which follows, fell out while Abraham dwelt at Beer-sheba, or near it, ver. 19.

God did tempt Abraham.] Proved or tried his Faith, in a very difficult Instance. The Hebrews take great notice, that the Name of Elohim (which they call Nomen Judicii) is here used, as it is in several of the following Verses.

And said unto him, Abraham.] I suppose there was such a visible appearance of the Divine Majesty to him as he had often seen, xv. 1. xvii. 1. xviii. 1.

Here I am.] A Phrase, expressing readiness to hearken, and to give answer, ver. 7, 12.

Ver. 2. Take now.] Immediately.

Thy Son.] A hard thing, had it been Ismael.

Thy only son Isaac.] His only Son by Sarah, and the Child of the Promise, xxi. 12.

Whom thou lovest.] Who was far dearer to him than any thing in this World; dearer than his own life: For Men will venture that to preserve their Children. According to an old saying in Euripides, Ἄνθρωποι δ' ἀνθρώποις ἀπ' ἑνὸς ψυχὴν μένουν.

Children are to all Mankind, their very Life, or Soul.

Whence it was that Pacatus Drepanius said in his Panegyrick to Theodosius the Great, Instituente Natura plus ferè filios quàm nosmetipsos diligimus. We are taught by Nature to love our Sons, in a manner, more than ourselves. But the love of God in Abraham was stronger than either.

Get thee into the Land of Moriah.] So it was called afterwards, from God's appearing there (ver. 14.) for the Deliverance of Isaac, as many think. Certain it is, that the Temple of Solomon was built upon Mount Moriah, 1 Chron. iii. 1. But this Name belonged not only to that Mountain, but to all the mountainous Country thereabouts: Which is here called the Land of Moriah. Which Aquila translates καταφανή, conspicuous: For it is derived from the word Raah, to see. And the LXX translates it not amiss, ὕψις, high Country: Which is very conspicuous. But Mount Sion, and Acra, and other neighbouring Mountains being also very high, this Name of Moriah belonged to them; because they were very conspicuous. Inasmuch that Mount Sion is often used in Scripture for Mount Moriah: For all that mountainous Country went by one and the same Name.

And offer him there.] The Hebrews observe the word is ambiguous, and may be translated, make him to go up: But Abraham understood it in the usual Sense, That he should kill him, as they did the Beasts for Sacrifices. A very hard Injunction; which some think God would not have laid upon Abraham, if he had not had a Power thus to dispose of Isaac, inherent in him as his Father. See Dr. Taylor, Duct. Dubit. L. iii. c. v. Rule 2. n. 1.

Upon one of the Mountains.] There were more Hills than one thereabouts, (Psalm cxxv. 2.) as I observed on the foregoing Verse. And it may be further here noted, That in ancient Times, they chose Mountains, or high Places, whereon to worship God and offer Sacrifices, xii. 8. Which God himself approved of, till they were prophaned, as the Groves were, (see xxi. 33.) and then he commanded Abraham's Posterity, not to worship in high Places, but only in one certain Mountain, where he ordered his Temple to be seated. Nothing is plainer in the Gentile Writers than that they chose Mountains for Places of Worship: And herein Celsus the Epicurean compares them with the Jews; observing, particularly out of Herodotus, that the Persians offered Sacrifices to Jupiter, going up, ἐπὶ τὰ ὑψηλότερα καὶ ὄρεον, to the top of the highest Mountains, as his words are in Origen, L. v. contra Cels. It is well known also that these Mountains were well shaded with Trees; so that commonly Groves and Mountains are mention'd together, as Places for religious Worship.

Ver. 3. And Abraham rose up early in the Morning, &c.] Some here take notice of the readiness of his Obedience, in several Instances.

First, That he rose up early. Secondly, Saddled his As himself, (tho' the Phraze doth not certainly import so much.) Thirdly, Carried Wood ready cleft along with him for the Offering, lest he should find none there.

And Isaac his Son.] It is an Enquiry among the Jews, how old Isaac was at this time. Some of them say seven and thirty, whom the Arabic Christian Writers follow, Pairicides and Elmacinus. Aben Ezra more probably saith he was thirty. But there is no certainty of such things. For I find in the Gemera Sanhedrim, Cap. x. n. 4. it is said, this fell out a little after he was weaned. See ver. 9.

And went unto the place.] That is, toward the Place: Which he did not see, till the third Day after he set out.

Ver. 4. On the third Day.] It was not much above one Day's journey from Beerseba to Moriab: But an As goes slowly, especially being loaded, as this was, with a burden of Wood, and with Provisions, we must suppose, for their Journey: And Abraham, and his Son, and Servants, went on foot, and could not travel far on a Day, (Isaac being but young) for it doth not appear they had more than one single As, ver. 5.

And saw the place afar off.] It is most reasonable to suppose, that God had given him some Token or Sign, whereby he should know it. And I cannot but think it highly probable, that the Divine Glory appeared in the place where he was to make the Oblation. Which Conjecture I find confirmed by R. Elieser, among other of the Jews, who says, That when God bad him go to the place he would tell him of, ver. 2. and there offer his Son; he ask'd how he should know it? And the Answer was, Wheresoever thou seest my Glory, there I will stay, and wait for thee, &c. And accordingly now, he beheld a Pillar of Fire reaching from Heaven to the Earth, and thereby knew this was the Place. See Pirke Elieser, c. 31.

Ver. 5. Go yonder and worship.] This confirms the fore-mentioned Conjecture, That the Divine Glory appearing upon the Mountain, he went thither to worship God.

And come again to you.] He either speaks of himself alone, or believed God would restore Isaac to Life, tho' he did slay him.

Ver. 6. And laid it upon Isaac his son.] A Figure of Christ, who carried his own Cross, John xix. 17. according to the Roman Custom. Philo's Reflection upon Isaac's carrying the Wood for his own Sacrifice, is, That nothing is more laborious than Piety.

Ver. 7. Behold the Fire and the Wood, &c.] It appears by this, that he had not hitherto acquainted Isaac with his Intention.

Ver. 8. So they went both of them together.] It seems they staid a while, (as they were going together, ver. 6.) till Isaac had finished this Discourse with his Father, and then they proceeded.

Ver. 9. Built an Altar there.] Of Turf, some think; or, of such Stones as he could gather there.

And bound Isaac his son.] Both his Hands, and his Feet, as it is explained in Pirke Elieser, Cap. xxxi. When the Gentiles offered human Sacrifices, they tied both their Hands behind their Backs, as appears from Ovid, L. iii. de Pont. Eleg. 2. and other Authors. Whether Isaac was thus bound, it matters not; but we cannot doubt that Abraham had now acquainted him with the Will of God, and persuaded him willingly to comply and submit unto it: Wherein he pre-figured Christ the more exactly, who laid down his Life of himself, and no Man (without his Consent) could take it from him, as he speaks, John x. 17, 18. We have reason to believe this of Isaac, because he being younger and stronger could have made resistance, had he been so minded. Josephus says he was twenty five Years old, L. i. Antiq. 14. And Bochart makes him twenty eight; the word Naar, which we translate Lad, being used for one of that Age; nay, Joseph is called so when he was thirty Years old, Hierozyic. P. i. L. iii. c. 9. This is certain, That he was old enough to carry such a load of Wood, (Verse 6.) as was sufficient to make a fire to offer up a Burnt-Offering. There are those also, who think Isaac was laid upon the Altar to be offered, in that very Place where Christ was crucified. And thus much is true, That tho' Mount Calvary was without Jerusalem; and therefore different from Mount Moriab, on which the Temple stood: Yet they were so near, and it's likely only Parts of one and the same Mountain, that they were anciently both comprehended under the Name of Moriab.

Ver. 10. Abraham stretched forth his Hand, &c.] His Obedience proceeded so far, that it evidently appeared he was fully resolved to do as he was bidden: For the Knife was just at Isaac's Throat, ready to do the execution. Inasmuch that God made account of it, as if it had been actually done, and accepted his Obedience as ἀλόκληρον καὶ παντελές, as entirely perfect, and absolutely compleated, as Philo speaks. And yet there have been those who disparage this Obedience, by endeavouring to make the World believe, that the Sacrificing of Children was in use before Abraham's time. And the very first thing that hath been alledged, as a proof of it, is the very Objection in Philo, made by cavilling Calumniators (as he calls them) who said, Why should such Praise be bestowed on Abraham, ὡς ἡγχεῖν τὴν κατὰ νόμον ἑστῶσαν, ὡς ἂν ἐὰν ἐπὶ τῷ νόμῳ ἡγεῖται, ὡς ἂν ἐὰν ἐπὶ τῷ νόμῳ ἡγεῖται, as if he had attempted a thing altogether new, which private Men, and Kings, and whole Nations do upon occasion? The learned Reader cannot but know that one of our own Countrymen, (Sir J. Marsbam in Canon Chronic. §. v.) hath set this in the front of all his Arguments, to prove that Abraham was not the first who sacrificed his Son; without acquainting the Reader with Philo's Answer to this, which quite overthrows all his Pretensions. For he says (Lib. de Abrahamo, p. 375, 376. Edit. Paris.) That some Barbarians have done this, following the Custom of their Country, or being in great distress, &c. But nothing of this nature could move Abraham to it; for the Custom of Sacrificing Children was neither in Babylon, nor Mesopotamia, nor Chaldea, where he had lived a long time: No, nor (as it follows a little after) in that Country where he then lived; But αὐτὸς ἔμελλε πρῶτον ἀρχεῖν καὶ οὐκ ἔπειτα λαγύμην παραδείγματός, he was to be the Beginner of a perfectly new and unusual Example. What plainer confutation can there be of what the fore-named Author pretends, than this, which he most disingenuously concealed? Nor is there more strength in what follows in him, out of Sanchuniathon; who says that Saturn offered his only Son. For by Saturn, it is evident, he meant Abraham; as appears by the Name of that Son, whom such-like Authors call FEUD; which is plainly the very same with JEHID, as Isaac is called in the second Verse of this Chapter. I omit the rest, which is of the like stamp.

World

Ver. 11. And the Angel of the LORD called to him, &c.] That is, the LORD himself, by his Angel. See upon xviii. 10. To which I shall here add, That, whether it be said in these Holy Books, the LORD said any thing, or an Angel spake, we are always to understand both to have been present: For the Angels ever attend upon the Divine Majesty; and being Ministers of his, do nothing but by his Order. Therefore when he is said to speak, it is by them; and when they are said to speak, it is from him: It is the LORD therefore that speaks, whosoever be the Minister. Of which St. Austin gives a demonstration from this very Place, L. iii. de Trinitate, Cap. xi. In the beginning of this Chapter, ver. 1, 2. We read that God tempted Abraham, and bade him go and offer to him his Son: But here the Angel of the LORD called to him, and bade him not to do it. What is the meaning of this? Will they (whose Opinion he there opposes) say that God commanded Isaac to be slain, and that his Angel forbade it: And that Abraham obeyed the Angel who bade him spare his Son, against the Command of God, who bade him slay him? This Sense is ridiculous and not to be endured. The plain meaning is, That God spake both times, in the one case, and in the other, but by an Angel who was his Minister.

VOL. I.

That's the reason Angels sometimes speak as if they were the LORD, because they speak in his Name, just as when a publick Crier pronounces the Sentence of a Judge, Non scribitur in gestis, ille præco dixit, sed ille Judex, it is not written in the Records, That the Crier, but the Judge pronounced that Sentence.

And thus R. Jebuda understood this Passage, whose gloss is this (in Pirke Eliezer, cap. 31.) He, i. e. the LORD, made his Voice to be heard from between the two Cherubims, and said, Lay not thy hand upon the Lad. I do not know whether it be worth observing, That God is not called in all this Story (as the Jews note) by the Name of Jehovah, till now: Which being, say they, Nomen misericordiae, is most agreeable to this part of the Story, as Elohim was to the former part, ver. 2.

Abraham, Abraham.] He ingeminates his Name, that he might make him attend to what he said; and put a stop to his Proceedings.

Ver. 12. Now I know thou fearest God, &c.] Thou hast given sufficient proof of the regard thou hast to God and his Commands. It is apparent from what thou hast done; and thou needest do no more to evidence it. And so Hackspan translates the word know in this place, now I have proved, or approved, as Psalms i. ult. Matth. vii. 23. Which Proofs do not argue Ignorance, no more than Questions do, Gen. iii. 9. John vi. 5, 6.

No body (that I know of) hath better explained this whole Matter than Moses Maimonides, whose words are these: (More Nevochim, P. iii. c. 24.) This Story of Abraham makes good two great Foundations of the Law: 'One is, to show us how far the Fear and Love of God extends itself. For here was a Command to do that, with which the loss of Money, or of Life itself is not to be compared; nay, that from which Nature abhorred, viz. That a Man very rich and in great Authority, who earnestly desired an Heir, which was born to him, when he had no hope of one, in his old Age, should so overcome his natural Affection to him, (which could not but be exceeding great) as to forego all the Expectations he had from him, and consent, after a Journey of three Days, to slay his Son with his own Hands: This is the greatest thing that ever was performed. For, if he had done it in that moment when he was commanded, it might have been thought a sudden, precipitant, and inconsiderate Act: But to do it so many Days after he received the Command, upon mature deliberation, is the highest proof of his Obedience; and that this Act proceeded from nothing but from the Fear and Love of God. For he did not make haste to slay his Son out of any fright he was in lest God should have slain him, or taken away his Estate if he had disobeyed, but took time to consider of it, that he might show to all Men what one ought to do for the Love and Fear of God, and not for fear of Punishment, or hope of worldly Reward: For the Angel said, Now I know thou fearest God.

The

‘The Second thing we are taught by this History is, That the Prophets were fully assured of the Truth of those things which God spake to them, either in Dreams, or in Visions, or any other way, which they believed as strongly as things of Sense. For if Abraham had in the least doubted whether this were the Will of God or no, which he received either in a Vision, or a Dream, he would never have consented to a thing which Nature abhorred.’

This very Story is told by Alexander Polyhistor, as Eusebius relates out of him, L. ix. Præpar. Evang. §. xix.

Ver. 13. Abraham lift up his Eyes.] From looking upon Isaac, or upon the Angel.

And looked.] He heard, we may suppose, a bustling Noise which the Ram made when it was caught in the Thicket; which made him look that way from whence the Noise came.

And, behold, behind him a Ram, &c.] Bochart gives many reasons to prove that the most ancient reading, and much better, was, Behold, one Ram; Achar, which we translate behind, being put for Achad, one or a singular Ram, P. i. Hierozoic. L. ii. c. 49. But it is not material which way we take it; nor need we enquire how the Ram came there. Nothing is more common than for Sheep to go astray; and by God’s Providence this Ram was caught in a Thicket not far from Abraham: Whereby he made good what Abraham had told his Son, God will provide a Lamb for a Burnt-offering. In which this Ram was a notable Type of Christ, who was a Sacrifice provided by God, not by Man; as this Ram was brought by Divine Providence to be offered, not by Abraham.

And Abraham took the Ram, and offered him up for a burnt-offering, instead of his Son.] Saying, as R. S. represents it, Lord, accept this Sacrifice, as if my Son himself were slain, and his Blood shed, and his Skin flea’d off, and he were burnt and reduced to Ashes.

And the Ram being accepted instead of his Son, may be thought to signify that the offering of the blessed Seed, God’s only Son, should be suspended till future times, and that in the mean season the offering of the Blood of Beasts should serve as a Pledge (to use the words of Mr. Mede) of that Expiation which the blessed Seed of Abraham should one day make, Discourse xxv. where he observes, that the more lively to express this, God so disposed, that the very Place where the Ram was offered instead of Isaac, should be the Place of Sacrifice for Israel. For there it was, where the LORD answered David by Fire from Heaven, (1 Chron. xx. 26.) and so designed it for the Place he had chosen for his Altar: There David pitched him a Tabernacle, 1 Chron. xxii. 1. and there Solomon built him an House, 2 Chron. iii. 1.

Ver. 14. Jehovah-jereb.] The LORD will see or provide; that is, take care of their Safety, who steadfastly obey him.

As it is said to this day.] Which is thus called to this day: Or, as others interpret it now, it is a proverbial Speech when Men are in great straits, in the Mount of the LORD it shall be seen: Where a double variation is observed, from what was said before: For here is Jehovah instead of Elohim, (ver. 12.) and then, Jeraeb instead of Jereb, i. e. the Passive instead of the Active: Signifying, that the LORD will not only see or provide, but make himself conspicuous, by so providing, that all shall behold the Care he takes of those that fear him.

Ver. 15. And the Angel of the LORD called, &c.] This confirms what was noted on ver. 12. that it was God himself who called to Abraham to stay his Hand, and now says, By myself have I sworn, saith the LORD, &c. What can be clearer, (as Hackspar glosses, Disput. ii. de Nominibus Divinis, n. 16.) than that we are to turn away our Eyes from the Angel, and fix them upon God; who blessed Abraham, and is called the LORD, for whose sake (ver. 12.) Abraham spared not his only Son. In all like Cases therefore, which exceed the Angelical Dignity, we are always to understand, some such words as these here mentioned, Neum Jehovah, thus saith the LORD.

Ver. 16. By myself have I sworn, &c.] I observed upon xii. 7. and xvii. 6. that God enlarged his Mercies to Abraham, proportionable to his Obedience: Which is apparent in this great and last Trial of all, the offering his Son; which was rewarded by the Ratification of God’s former Promise or Covenant, by a most solemn Oath: By myself have I sworn, I will multiply thy Seed, &c. This was promised before, but not confirmed by an Oath: And besides, the very Promise is now more affectionate, (if I may so style it) in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thee, &c. In the latter end also of the Blessing there seems to be couched the highest of all Blessings, That God would make his own only Son such a Sacrifice as Abraham was ready to have made his Son Isaac: That all the Nations of the World (ver. 18.) might be blessed in him, i. e. all that would follow the Faith of Abraham. So Abarbinel himself interprets it upon xii. 3.

Ver. 17. Possess the Gate, that is, the Cities, of his Enemies.] And consequently their Country. For the Gates being taken, thereby they entred into their Cities; and their Cities being surrendered, the Country was conquered.

Ver. 18. In thy Seed shall all the Nations of the Earth be blessed.] God promised to make Abraham’s Seed as numerous as the Stars of Heaven, xv. 5. which Promise he assures him here should be fulfilled in Isaac, ver. 17. But moreover directs him to expect after the multiplying of his Posterity, One particular Seed who should bring a Blessing to all Mankind. This Singularity St. Paul observes and presses very much, Gal. iii. 16. applying it to the Messiah. And it is further observable, that there is an increase of Sense in these words, as there is in the former. For he doth not simply say, גבדכו, they shall be blessed, but, החבדכו, shall bless themselves, or count themselves blessed in him: To show, as Jacobus Altingius thinks, that this Person should not stand in need of any Blessing himself, as the rest of Abraham’s Seed did, but be the Author of all Blessings unto others, who should derive them from him alone, L. ii. Schilo. c. 2.

Because thou hast obeyed, &c.] As a Reward (the word in the Hebrew signifies) for obeying my Voice.

Ver. 19. Went together to Beer-sheba.] Where he had for some time settled his abode, xxi. 33.

Ver. 20. Milcab bare born Children, &c.] The following Genealogy is set down to show whence Rebekah the Wife of Isaac was descended. For she alone of all Bethuel's Daughters (which is probable were many) is mentioned, ver. 23.

Ver. 21. Huz his first-born.] There were two other of this Name. One the Son of Aram, x. 23. another of the Posterity of Esau, xxxvi. 28. But this Uz here mentioned is he from whom Job descended; whose Country was called Ausitis, (so the LXX translate Uz, Job i. 1.) and his Posterity called Ausitæ by Ptolemy; who were a People of Arabia Deserta, near Chaldea, not far from Euphrates.

Buz.] From whom came Elibu the Buzite, Job xxxii. 2. a People in some part of the same Country, or near it.

Aram,] Who inhabited, perhaps, some part of Syria: Which had the Name of Aram from another mentioned, x. 23.

Ver. 22. Chesed.] He was the Father of the Chaldeans, who are called Chasdim in Scripture from this Chesed or Chasad, as some read it. Where the rest that follow settled, or whether they had any Posterity or no, I cannot find. It's likely they never grew to make a Nation or a Family, and so left no Name behind them.

Ver. 24. And his Concubine.] This was not an ill Name in these ancient times, but signifies a Wife, who was not the Mistress of the Family, but only taken for the increase of it by procreation of Children. Such Wives were generally Servants; whereas the prime Wife was a Free-woman, or made so by being married to govern the Family and bring Children to inherit the Estate.

CHAP. XXIII.

Ver. 1. AND Sarah was an hundred and seven and twenty, &c.] The whole Verse may be thus translated, And the years of the life of Sarah were (in the whole) an hundred twenty and seven years: It being usual with the Hebrews to repeat a word (as Life is here) when they would signify any thing to be compleat. And Sarah is the only Woman whose entire Age is set down in Scripture.

Ver. 2. Kirjath-arba.] i. e. The City of Arba, who was a famous Man among the Anakims, (as we read, Josh. xiv. ult.) and either built this City, or made it the place of his residence, from whence it took his Name.

It doth not appear when Abraham left Beer-sheba, and removed to this Place.

The same is Hebron,] A very ancient City, as appears from Numb. xiii. 22. When it assumed this Name, instead of Kirjath-arba, is not certain: But some conjecture it might be after Abraham purchased a Burial-place in this Country. See xiii. 18.

Abraham came.] Some fancy he was in some other part of the Country, when his Wife died: And several of the Jews have a conceit that he came from Mount Moriab, (which is confuted by what we read, xxii. 19.) where Sarah hearing he was gone to sacrifice her Son, died with Grief. But Maimonides speaks better sense, when he says, Abraham came from his own Tent, which was separate (as I noted before, xviii. 9.) from his Wife's; as appears further from xxiv. 67.

To mourn for Sarah, and to weep for her.] The first relates to private Sorrow, the other to the public, especially at the Funeral Solemnities; when they made great Lamentation. After Abraham had performed the former, he made preparations for the latter: But what the Rites of Mourning were in those days we do not know. It's likely they shut themselves up from Company, neglected the care of their Bodies, abstained from their ordinary Food, which, with many others, were the Customs of Abraham's Posterity; who made it a part of their Religion to mourn for the Dead.

Ver. 3. And Abraham stood up from before his dead.] By this it seems to be apparent, that in Abraham's time they sat upon the Ground while they mourned, as it is certain they did in future Ages. In which Posture they continued till they had satisfied natural Affection, and the decent Custom of the Age and Country where they lived: Then they rose up, as Abraham here did, to take care of the Interment of his Wife. Seven Days, in After-ages, were the common time of Mourning; and for illustrious Persons, they mourned thirty Days.

Spake unto the Sons of Heth.] In whose Country he now lived: Concerning whom see x. 15. By the sons are meant the principal Persons of that Nation.

Ver. 4. I am a stranger and a sojourner with you.] Tho' I am not a Native of your Country, yet I have lived long enough among you to be known to you.

Give me a possession of a burying place, &c.] I do not desire any large Possessions among you, being but a Sojourner; let me only have a Place which I may call my own, wherein to bury those of my Family which die.

Ver. 5. And the Children (or Sons) of Heth answered, &c.] By one of their Body, who spake in the Name of the rest; as appears by the first words of the next Verse, Hear us, my Lord: In which form they were wont to address themselves to great Men, ver. 11, 13, 15, 16.

Ver. 6. Thou art a mighty Prince.] We have a great honour for thee.

In the choice of our sepulchres, &c.] Make choice of any one Sepulchre, and no body will deny to let thee have it. Every Family (at least great ones) had their proper place for Burial: Which I suppose, were sometimes so large, that they might spare others a part of them, or of the Ground wherein they were made.

Ver. 7. Abraham stood up.] It seems they had desired him to sit down among them while they treated this Business; which, when they granted, he stood up to thank them.

And bowed himself.] The Hebrew word signifies the bowing of the Body: And there are other words in that Language proper to the bowing of the Head, or of the Knee.

Ver. 8. Intreat for me to Ephron, &c.] He desires them to mediate between him and this Man (who perhaps was not then present in the Assembly) for a Purchase of a convenient Place in his Ground.

Ver. 9. Cave of Machpelah.] We take this word Machpelah for a proper Name, as many others do: But the Talmudists generally think it to have been speluncam duplicem, (as the Vulgar Latin also with the LXX, understand it) a double Cave. Yet they cannot agree in what sense it was so; whether they went thro' one Cave into another, or there was one above another. For that by a Cave is meant a Vault, arched over with Stones, or Wood, which the Ancients called Cryptæ, no body doubts. Salmasius hath described them in his Plin. Exercit. p. 1208. where he says, this Cave is said to have been double, in the same sense that the Greeks called theirs, σπήλαια ἀμφιδύδυμα, because they had a double Entrance, so that one might go into them at both Ends, as Hesychius expounds it. Which shows, as he adds, it was a large Place, and would contain many Bodies. And of this he is so confident as to say, Non querenda est alia duplicis speluncæ interpretatio; no other Interpretation of this double Sepulchre ought to be sought after. But learned Men will not hearken to such Dictates; and particularly, Theodorick Hackspan maintains Machpelah to be a proper Name (as we take it) by these two Reasons: First, Because the Field itself wherein this Cave was, is called the Field of Machpelah, ver. 19. Which doth not signify sure that there was a double Gate to this Field, but that it was in that Tract of Ground called Machpelah. And, Secondly, This Field in Machpelah, is said to be before Mamre, ver. 17. Which plainly denotes it to be a Place so called; Miscell. Lib. i. cap. 10. For which last Reason, Guil. Vorstius also takes it to have been the Name of a Country, or Province, in which this Field and Cave lay. Animadv. in Pirke Elieser, p. 179.

Which is in the end of his Field.] Burying-places were not anciently in the Cities, much less in their Temples; but in the Fields, in Caves, or Vaults made to hold a good Number of Bodies. And so they continued, it's manifest, in our Saviour's time among the Jews; as appears by Lazarus his Monument, John xi. 30, 31. and by the Burying-places for strangers, Matth. xxvii. 7. and their carrying the Widow's Son out of the City, Luke vii. 12, &c.

This seems to have been in the Corner of the Field before-mentioned; which perhaps was near the Highway: For there they sometimes affected to bury their Dead, as appears from Gen. xxxv. 8, 19. Josh. xxiv. 30.

Ver. 10. And Ephron dwelt.] The Hebrew word for dwell signifies literally sat: Which hath made some think that Ephron was a great Man (a Ruler, or Governor) among the Children of Heth, who sat as a Prince or Judge in this Assembly. And that this was the reason why Abraham (ver. 8.) addressed himself to others of the same Rank, that they would make way for him into his Favour.

In the audience of the Children of Heth, &c.] It is judiciously observed by Cornel. Bertram, that all weighty Matters in those days were determined by the King (if they had any) or the Elders, with the Consent of the People, De Repub. Judaic. cap. 3. Marriages were a matter of publick Right, xxix. 22. as Sepulchres were it appears by this place; both of them being held to belong to Religion.

Ver. 11. In the presence of the sons of my people, &c.] - Contracts, or Grants, were wont to be made before all the People, or their Representatives, till Writings were invented.

Ver. 12. Abraham bowed, &c.] Because by their Intercession this Favour was granted him.

Ver. 13. I will give thee Money for the Field.] This was the surest Title, he thought, by Purchase. And it was but reasonable he should buy it, if he would have any Land in Canaan; for the time of possessing it, according to God's Promise, was not yet come.

Ver. 15. The Land is worth four hundred shekels.] This is the first time we meet with the Name of shekel. Mention was made of Money before in general, xvii. 12, 13. and of pieces of silver, xx. 16. (which shows the use of Money was found out in those early days, and they did not trade merely by the exchange of one Commodity for another) but we have no Name for the Money till now; and cannot exactly tell of what value a Shekel of Silver was. But Josephus, L. iii. Antiq. c. 10. saith, Ἀλλὰς Νέξο δραχμὰς τεσσαεας, it was as much as four Attick Drachms; that is, half an Ounce: Which in our Money wants not much of half a Crown.

What is that between me and thee?] Some will have this to signify as much as, This is not worth speaking of between Friends, and therefore I had rather thou wouldst accept it as a gift. But it is more reasonable to think, that he only pretended to use him kindly, and not to exact upon his Necessity: It being as much as to say, This is no great Price, but a friendly Bargain; pay it therefore, and bury thy dead.

Ver. 16. Abraham weighed to Ephron, &c.] They did not tell Money as we do now, but weighed it; for it was not stamped anciently, as Aristotle observes, but in the beginning of the World was received, μεγέθει καὶ σάμειον, by its bulk and its weight; which being very troublesome, they learnt in time to set a Mark upon it to free them from that inconvenience. ὁ γὰρ χαρακτὴρ ἐτίθη τῷ πόσει σημεῖον, for that Mark was set upon it to denote its quantity, i. e. how much it was worth; for, having the Publick Stamp, that made it current at a known value. Which must not be understood of foreign Money, which was still weighed, tho' stamped, but of that of their own Country; which they were assured was worth so much as the Mark expressed. Yet it continued to be weighed among the Jews in David's time, 1 Chron. xxi. 25. nay, till the Captivity of Babylon, Jerem. xxxii. 9. And indeed the very word Shekel comes from shakal to weigh, and may be interpreted, as Waserus observes, the weight.

From

From all which Herm. Conringius well concludes there is no Truth in what the Jews say, in Bereſchith Rabba, and other Books, that Joſhua, David, and Mordecai, nay, Abraham, coined Money in their Days. To ſupport which fiction, they have counterfeited ſome Coins, with the Inſcription of Senex & Anux on one ſide, and Juvenis & Virgo on the other. As if Iſaac and Rebekah were now married: Or Abraham had Power to coin Money in a Country where he did but ſojourn, and was no Sovereign.

Ver. 17. Which were before Mamre.] Over-againſt Mamre. See xiii. 18.

Were made ſure.] By a ſolemn Contract, in a Publick Aſſembly, (ver. 11.) where the Money was tendred and accepted, and all there preſent deſired to be Witneſſes to it.

Ver. 18. In the preſence of the Children of Hebr.] See Ver. 11.

Ver. 19. And after this Abraham buried Sarah, &c.] It is not likely that Ephron had ever buried any of his Family here, but had only begun to make a Vault in this Field which Abraham bought of him, with all the Trees therein, (ver. 17.) or, if it were finiſhed, he ſold it before he had made uſe of it. For we cannot think Abraham would lay his Wife's Body among thoſe of the Hittites: But in a vacant place where he intended to be interred himſelf: As his Family after him alſo were, xlix. 30, 31.

Ver. 20. Was made ſure.] He repeats this, which had been ſaid, ver. 17. becauſe now the Purchaſe was more confirmed, by the laying Sarah's Body in this Place, it being a kind of taking actual poſſeſſion of it.

CHAP. XXIV.

Ver. 1. AND Abraham was old.] Some of the Hebrews, and Chriſtian Writers alſo refer this to his Wiſdom, as the next words [well ſtricken in Years] unto his Age: No Body being called Zaken (tho' far more aged) in the Holy Scripture till now: And therefore they tranſlate it Elder, which is the Name of a wiſe Man. See Selden, L. i. de Synedr. cap. 14. p. 556, &c. Certain it is that Abraham was now an hundred and forty Years old: For he was an hundred when Iſaac was born, xxi. 5. and Iſaac was forty when he married Rebekah, xxv. 20.

Ver. 2. And Abraham ſaid unto his eldeſt Servant of his Houſe.] Or, rather, as the LXX tranſlate it, He ſaid to his Servant, the Elder of his Houſe: That is, the Steward, or Governor of his Family, as the Hieruſ. Targum tranſlates it. See Mr. Selden, L. i. de Synedr. cap. 14. p. 550. And Dr. Hammond upon Acts xi. not. b. All take this Servant to have been Eliezer, mentioned xxv. 2.

Put thy Hand under my Thigh.] Some will have this Phraſe to import no more than, Liſt me up, that I may ſtand, and call God to witneſs. But Abraham, no queſtion, was now ſo vigorous, as to be able to riſe of himſelf: Having many Children after this. Others therefore follow the Opinion of the Jewiſh Doctors, which is this, in ſhort; Before the giving of the Law, the ancient Fathers ſwore by the Covenant of Circumciſion.

They are the words of R. Eliezer in his Pirke, cap. 49. And it is not improbable that this manner of Swearing, by putting the Hand under that part which was the ſubject of Circumciſion, had reſpect to the Covenant God made with that Family, and the right to accompliſh the Promiſe of the Meſſiah. But this was not a Cuſtom peculiar to Abraham's Family, for we find it among other Eastern People: And therefore, it is likely, more antient than Circumciſion. For which Cauſe, Aben Ezra himſelf, thinks putting the Hand under the Thigh, was a Token of Subjection and Homage, done by a Servant to his Lord: He ſitting, and the Servant putting his Hand under him. Grotius imagines, that the Sword hanging upon the Thigh, (Pſalm xlv. 3.) this was as much as to ſay, if I falſify, kill me. Which is very witty; but the other ſeems plainer, ſignifying as much as, I am under thy power, and ready to do what thou com- mandeſt.

Ver. 3. Swear by the LORD.] It was not lawful to ſwear by any Creature, but only by him that made them all. For they took the greateſt Care to declare, that they worſhipped him alone.

That thou wilt not take a Wife unto my Son.] It ſeems he intended to leave the Guardianship of his Son to him, (if he ſhould die, before he had diſpoſed of him) as unto a wife and faithful Servant, who had managed his affairs above fifty Years, and we do not know how much longer.

Of the Daughters of the Canaanites.] For tho' there were ſome good People among them, as appears by Melchizedec and Abimelech; yet he ſaw them degenerating apace into all manner of Wickedneſs, eſpecially into Idolatry: Which would bring them, he knew, to utter Deſolation when they had filled up the meaſure of their Iniquity, xv. 16.

Ver. 4. But go into my Country.] i. e. Into Meſopotamia, where he lived for ſome time in Haran, after he came from Ur: Which was alſo in that Country, as I obſerved upon xi. 31. It ſeems alſo his Brother had removed hither: Following his Father Terah's and Abraham's Example. See xi. 31.

And my kindred.] The Family of his Brother Nabor, which he heard lately was increaſed, (xxii. 20.) who, tho' they had ſome Superſtition among them, retained the Worſhip of the True God, as appears from this very Chapter, ver. 31, 50.

And take a Wife unto my Son Iſaac.] Which, no doubt, was by Iſaac's Conſent, as well as his Father's Command.

Ver. 5. Muſt I needs bring thy Son again into the Land from whence thou cameſt?] He deſires (like a conſcientious Man) to underſtand the full Obligation of his Oath, before he took it. And his doubt was, whether, if a Woman would not come with him into Canaan, he ſhould be bound to go again a ſecond time, and carry Iſaac to her.

Ver. 6. Beware that thou bring not my Son thither again.] He would by no means his Son ſhould go to that Country which God commanded him to forſake; that Command obliging, not only himſelf, but his Poſterity. See Ver. 8.

Ver. 7.

Ver. 7. The LORD God of Heaven, &c.] He who rules all things above as well as below, who brought me from my own into this Country, and hath promised, and confirmed that Promise with an Oath, that my Posterity shall inherit it, will prosper thy Journey, and dispose some of my Kindred to come hither, and be married to my Son.

Send his Angel before thee.] Good Men were ever very sensible of God's Providence, governing all things, and prospering their proceedings by the Ministry of Angels: Which Abraham's Servant takes particular notice of, ver. 40.

Ver. 8. And if the Woman will not be willing to follow thee, &c.] If it fall out otherways than I hope, thou hast done thy Duty: If thou bring not my Son into that Country again. He speaks (both here and ver. 6.) as if Isaac had once been there: Because Abraham himself came from thence, and his Servant also, and a great many of his Family, (xii. 5.) who, if Isaac went to settle there, must have gone with him, as part of his Substance.

Ver. 10. And the Servant took ten Camels, &c.] Camels were of great use in those Countries, as they are at this day: Some of them being made for carriage of Burdens; and others for swift travelling; which latter sort were called by a peculiar Name, Δεσμάδες, Dromedaries, as Salmastius observes in his Plinian. Exercit. p. 987. These perhaps were of that kind, for the greater expedition: Like those we read of 1 Sam. xxx. 17.

For all the Goods of his Master were in his Hands.] He might chuse what Accommodations he pleased for his Journey; having every thing belonging to his Master at his command: Who being a great Person, it was fit his principal Servant should be well attended, (as it appears he was, ver. 32.) especially when he went upon such an Errand, as to court a Wife for his Master's Son. Most refer this to the Presents he carried along with him: And R. Solomon will have it that he carried a Writing with him under his Master's Hand, (an Inventory we call it) specifying all his Goods and Riches, that they might know what a great Match his Son was.

City of Nabor.] Which was Haran, from whence Abraham came, xi. 31. and to which Jacob went to find his Kindred, xxviii. 10. How far it was thither we are not told, nor how long they were going to it: And Moses omits also whatsoever passed in the way, as not pertinent to his Story.

Ver. 11. Camels kneel down.] The Posture wherein they rest themselves.

Ver. 12. O LORD God of my Master Abraham, &c.] He had observed the Kindness of God to have been so great to Abraham, and Abraham to have such a peculiar Interest in his Favour, that in confidence he would make good Abraham's words, (ver. 7. & 40.) he not only begs he might have good success in his Journey, but desires a sign of it, to confirm his Faith; and such a sign as was most apposite to denote the Person that would make a good Wife; by her Courtesy, Humility, Condescension, Hospitality, prompt and laborious Charity: All which are included in what he desires, and she did.

Ver. 14. Thereby shall I know that thou hast showed kindness to my Master.] He had no Confidence that God would do any thing for his own sake, but for his Master's, whom God had most wonderfully blessed.

Ver. 15. And it came to pass before he had done speaking, &c.] This shows it was by a Divine Suggestion that he made this Prayer, which was answered immediately. Such is the Divine Goodness; or rather, (to use the words of Sam. Bochartus, upon occasion of many such Instances) Sic enim parata & obvia esse solent Dei beneficia; ita ut preces nostras non tam sequantur, quam occupent atque antecedant, P. i. Hierozic. L. ii. cap. 49. So forward is God to bestow his Benefits upon us, that they do not so much follow our Prayers, as prevent and go before them. See Ver. 45.

With her Pitcher upon her Shoulder.] Behold the Simplicity, Frugality, and Industry of that Age.

Ver. 20. Drew for all his Camels.] There were ten of them, (ver. 10.) and they are a very thirsty sort of Creatures: And therefore she took a great deal of Pains to serve him, who was but a stranger, in this manner. Which showed extraordinary Goodness, and a most obliging Disposition; at which he might well be amazed, as it follows in the next Verse.

Ver. 21. Wondring at her, beld his peace, &c.] He was so astonish'd at her Kindness, Readiness to do good, and laborious Diligence, &c. and also at the Providence of God in making things fall out so pat to his desires, that for the present he could not speak: Having his Mind employ'd in marking and observing every Passage, whereby he might judge how to conclude whether this was the Woman or no, whom God designed for his Master's Son.

Ver. 22. The Man took.] Gave her, as the Phrase is often used. But he first asked her whose Daughter she was, as appears from ver. 47.

A golden Ear-ring.] Or rather, (as the Margin hath it) a Jewel for the Forehead. And so we translate the Hebrew word, Ezek. xvi. 12. and this Person himself expounds it ver. 47. I put the Ear-ring or Jewel, upon her Face, i. e. her Forehead. For such Ornaments were used in those Times and Countries, hanging down between the Eye-brows, over the Nose.

Two Bracelets for her Hands.] i. e. Wrists.

Ver. 26. Bowed his Head, and worshipped the LORD.] Gave solemn Thanks to God for hearing his Prayer: And acknowledged, that by his Providence, he was conducted to the execution of his Desires, as it follows in the next Verse.

Ver. 27. Mercy and Truth.] Mercy in promising, and Truth in performing: Or both truly been merciful to him according to his Promise, ver. 7. See ver. 49.

The House of my Master's Brethren.] i. e. His near Kindred.

Ver. 28. Told them of her Mother's House.] The Women in the Eastern Countries had their Apartments by themselves, as was before observed, and appears again, ver. 67. Thither it was proper for Rebekah to go and acquaint her Mother with what had passed.

Ver. 30.

Ver. 30. When he saw the Ear-ring, &c.] This was the reason why he ran to invite the Man to their House.

He stood by the Camels at the Well.] Expecting to see the issue.

Ver. 31. Come in, thou blessed of the LORD.] Whom God favoureth, and I pray may still continue in his Favour. For it refers both to the time past and future.

Ver. 32. Water to wash his Feet, &c.] As the Custom was in those Countries. See xviii. 4.

Ver. 33. I will not eat, &c.] An excellent Servant; who prefer'd his Master's Profit to his own Pleasure.

Ver. 35. The LORD hath blessed my Master greatly, &c.] Enriched him exceedingly, so that he is become a Person of great Eminence, xxiii. 6.

Ver. 36. Given all that he hath.] Declared him his Heir, and settled his whole Estate upon him.

Ver. 40. The LORD before whom I walk.] Whom I worship and study to please, keeping a grateful remembrance of his Benefits always in my Mind. For so Abraham's own Words are ver. 7. The God which brought me from my Father's House, &c.

Ver. 41. Thou shalt be clear from this my Oath.] Or Curse, as the Hebrew word imports: For all Oaths were made antiently with some Imprecations upon themselves if they swore falsely.

Ver. 42. O LORD God of my Master Abraham, &c.] He doth not relate just the very Words which he said; but the Sense of them, and most of the Words.

Prosper my way which I go.] The Design in which I am engaged.

Ver. 48. My Master's Brother's Daughter.] The Grand-Daughter of his Brother Nabor.

Ver. 49. If ye will deal kindly and truly.] Be really and sincerely kind.

That I may turn to the right-hand, or to the left.] A kind of proverbial Speech; signifying, that I may take some other course (which way God shall direct) to fulfil my Master's desire. It is the fancy of some of the Hebrew Doctors, that he meant, he might go either to the Ishmaelites, or the Children of Lot.

Ver. 50. Laban and Bethuel.] The chief Manager of this Affair was Laban; for Bethuel is not mentioned till now; because, perhaps, he was old, and unfit for business: but consents to all that is desired.

The thing proceedeth from the LORD.] It appears to be the Divine Will and Pleasure.

We cannot speak unto thee good or bad.] No way contradict it.

Ver. 51. Rebekah is before thee.] Is by us delivered to thee, to be disposed of according to thy desire: As the Phrase is used xx. 15.

As the LORD hath spoken.] Declared by those Signs which thou hast related to us.

Ver. 52. Worshipped the LORD, to the Earth.] Gave the most humble thanks unto Almighty God for his Goodness to him.

Ver. 53. Gave to her Brother and Mother.] Here is no mention of the Father: Which hath made some think, as Josephus did, that the Father was dead; and Bethuel, mentioned ver. 50. was her younger Brother. But I take it to be more likely, that her Father being infirm, had committed the Care of his Daughter to Laban and his Wife: And so appeared no more than was just absolutely necessary in this Treaty of Marriage; which was carried on principally by Laban, who is mentioned therefore before her Mother.

Precious things.] Presents of great value.

Ver. 55. Let the Damsel abide with us a few days, at least ten.] There is nothing more common in Scripture, than by Days to express a Year. And therefore we have exactly translated these words in the Margin, a full Year, or ten Months: See iv. 3. Lev. xxv. 29. 1 Sam. i. 3. compared with ver. 7, and 20. Some think this cannot be the meaning, because the Servant was in such haste to return to his Master. But it was as fit for them to show their Love to Rebekah, as it was for him to show his Concern for his Master. Besides, there was something of Decency in it, the Custom being in all Countries, for her that was espoused to a Husband, to stay some time with her Parents, before the Consummation of the Marriage. And one would think the Custom then was, for to keep her a Year or near it: which makes them desire she might stay at least ten Months, that they might not depart too far from the common Usage, and that she might have the longer time to fit herself with the usual Nuptial Ornaments. Thus Onkelos, it is certain understood it; and the Paraphrase of Uzielides, and the Mauritanian Jews, as Mr. Selden observes, L. v. de Jure N. & G. cap. 5.

Ver. 56. That I may go to my Master.] Whom he would have to rejoice with him.

Ver. 57. Enquire at her Mouth.] Let her resolve how it shall be. St. Ambrose observes upon this Passage, That they do not consult her about the Marriage, for that belonged to the judgment of the Parents, but about the time of going to compleat it. Upon which occasion he quotes the words of Hermione, when she was courted by Orestes, (in Euripides his Andromacha) which he thinks were taken from hence, Νυμφόμυθον μὲν ὅτι ἐμὴν Πατὴρ ἐμὲ μείμραν ἔχει, καὶ ἐμὴν κελθεῖν τάδε. My Father will take care of my Marriage: These things do not belong to my determination. L. i. de Abrahamo Patriarcha, cap. ult.

Ver. 58. Wilt thou go with this Man?] That is, presently, as he desires. For that she should be Isaac's Wife, was agreed already between them; and we are to suppose she had consented. The only Question was, whether so soon as the Man desired?

And she said, I will.] I agree to go, without any delay: Which, no doubt, very much endeared her to Isaac.

Ver. 59. And her Nurse.] Whose Name was Deborah, xxxv. 8. who did not suckle her, perhaps: But was (as we speak) her Dry-Nurse: For whom, it is likely, she had a great Affection. It being a piece of ancient Piety and Gratitude, to keep such Persons as long as they lived, who had taken Care of them in their Infancy. It is probable also she was remarkable for Prudence, and other eminent Qualities; or, else Moses would scarce have let her Name, and her Death and Burial had a place in this History, xxxv. 8.

Ver. 60. And they blessed Rebekah, &c.] Her Father and Mother, with all the rest of their Family and Kindred, prayed God to make her exceeding fruitful; and to make her Posterity victorious over their Enemies: Which were the great things they desired in those Days. The Hebrews look upon this (as Mr. Selden observes in the place before-named on ver. 55.) as an Example of the solemn Benediction, which was wont to be given (even before the Law of Moses) when the Spouse was carried to her Husband.

Thou art our sister.] Near Cousin or Kinswoman: For all that were near of Kin called one another Brothers and Sisters.

Ver. 61. Her Damsels.] Who waited upon her; and were given as part of her Portion.

Ver. 62. Well of Lahai-roi.] Mentioned xvi. 14. By which it appears, that Abraham, after the death of Sarah, returned to live at Beersheba, or thereabouts; for that was nigh this Well: And it is probable Abraham and Isaac were not parted.

Ver. 63. To meditate, &c.] The Cool of the Evening and Solitude are great Friends to Meditation.

Ver. 64. She lighted off the Camel.] As they always did, who met any Person whom they honoured.

Ver. 65. Took a Veil.] Not only out of Modesty, but in Token of her Subjection to him. Many will have this to have been a peculiar Ornament belonging to a Bride, called by the Romans Flameum, by the Greeks ἄβρεον, as Mr. Selden observes, L. v. de Jure N. & G. cap. 5. Whence those words of Tertullian, de Veland. Virgin. c. 2. Etiam apud Ethnicos velatae (i. e. sponsae) ad virum ducuntur: Even among Heathens Brides are brought to their Husbands with a Veil over their Faces.

Ver. 66. And the servant told Isaac all things that he had done.] How she had consented to be his Wife.

Ver. 67. Brought her into his Mother Sarah's Tent.] That Apartment wherein his Mother dwelt: Which was distinct from that of the Husband's.

And Isaac was comforted after the death of his Mother.] The Love he had to his Wife helpt to alleviate the Sorrow he had conceived at his Mother's death: Which was so great, that now it had continued three Years. Such was the pious Affection Children had for their Parents in ancient Days.

Isaac was forty Years old when he married Rebekah, (xxv. 20.) and, if we can believe the Jews, (in Seder Olam) she was but fourteen.

CHAP. XXV.

Ver. 1. THEN again Abraham took a Wife.] Sarah being dead, and Hagar long ago sent away, and his Son Isaac lately married, he wanted a Companion in his old Age. For, having given up Sarah's Tent unto Rebekah (xxiv. ult.) it is probable he gave up his own to Isaac, and so dwelt in a Tent by himself; where he found it necessary to have a Wife to look after his Family.

And her Name was Keturah.] We are not told what Family she was of: But it is not unlikely she had been born and bred in his own House, as Eliezer his Steward was; and, perhaps, was chief among the Women, as he among the Men-Servants. Many of the Jews will have her to be Hagar, whom (Sarah, who was the cause of her expulsion, being dead) he now received again. So the Hierusalem Paraphrase, and Jonathan also: But Aben Ezra confutes this Opinion with good reason; for no account can be given of Abraham's having more Concubines than one (ver. 6.) unless we make Keturah distinct from Hagar. Nor can any Body tell why he should call Hagar by the Name of Keturah here, when he calls her by her own Name, ver. 12.

Ver. 2. And she bare him.] He was now an hundred and forty Years old: But so vigorous as to beget many Children. Which need not seem strange, considering the Age to which they then lived, (for he lived thirty and five Years after this Marriage, ver. 7.) and that now, in our time, Men have had Children after they have been seventy, nay, eighty Years of Age.

To the Truth also of this History we have the Testimony of Pagan Writers. For Alexander Polyhistor (mentioned by Josephus and by Eusebius, L. ix. Præpar. Evang. cap. 20.) tells us that Cleodemus (called by some Malchas) writing the History of the Jews, reports just as Moses doth, Ὁτι ἐκ τῶν υἱῶν Ἀβραάμ ἐγένοντο πλείους υἱοὶ: That Abraham had a good many Children by Keturah: Three of which he mentions by Name.

Zimran.] This Son of his, with all the rest of his Brethren, were sent by Abraham into the East Country, (as we read ver. 6.) and therefore we must seek for them in those Parts, viz. in Arabia, and the Countries thereabout; where some footsteps of them have remained for many Ages, particularly of Zimran; from whom we may well think the Zamareni were descended, a People mentioned by Pliny, with their Towns, in Arabia Felix, L. vi. cap. 28.

And Jockshan.] Concerning whom I can find nothing but only this, That Theophanes a Chronographer, in the beginning of the ixth Century, after he hath treated of the Ismaelites and Madianites, (the latter of which came from one of Keturah's Children) and the Parts of Arabia where Mabomet was born; immediately adds, that there were other People, ἑσδνεσι, more in the Bowels of Arabia, descended from Jectan, called Amanite, that is Homerite. Perhaps it should be written Jockshan, not Jectan: For Philostorgius expressly says of the Homerites, Ἐστὶ δὲ τῶν ἐν τῇ Ἀραβίᾳ, &c. That they are one of the Nations descended from Keturah and Abraham, L. iii. Hist. Eccles. §. 4. where he relates a famous Embassy which Constantius sent to to them to win them to Christianity, and the good success of it. And there is this strong proof of their Descent from some of Abraham's Family, that they retained the Rite of Circumcision, even when they were Idolaters. For he says expressly, That it was a circumcised Nation, ἡ δὲ ὄψον περιτομένην ἦν, and circumcised also on the eighth Day. Which was not the Custom of all the Arabians, if we may believe Josephus, L. i. Antiq. c. 23. and Eustatius in Hexameron, &c. who say, the Arabians staid till they were thirteen Years old before they were circumcised.

Medan,] From whom the Country called Madiana, in the Southern part of Arabia Felix, 'tis likely had its Name.

Midian,] From whom Midianitis in Arabia Petraea had its Denomination.

And Ishbak,] I can find no footsteps of his Posterity, unless it be in Bacscami, which Pliny says was one of the Towns of the Zamareni; who descended from his eldest Brother Zimran. There were a People also hard by, called Bacilitæ, as he tells us, L. vi. Nat. Hist. c. 28.

And Shuab,] Perhaps he had no Children, or so few, that they were mixt with some of their other Brethren, and left no Name behind them. Yet Pliny in the next Chapter mentions a Town called Suasa, in that part of Arabia which is next to Egypt, L. vi. cap. 29.

Ver. 3. And Jokshan begat Sbeba,] I observed before upon x. 7. that there are four of this Name, or near it, all comprehended by the Greek and Roman Writers under the Name of Sabæans. One of them the Son of Raamah, had a Brother called Dedan, as this Sbeba here hath. But they were the Fathers of a distinct People, as is evident from the Scripture-Story, and from other Authors. For, besides the Sabæi in the furthestmost parts of Arabia, near the Persian and the Red-Sea, there were also a People of that Name (descended, it is very probable, from this Son of Jokshan) in the very Entrance of Arabia Felix; as Strabo tells us. Who says, that they and the Nabatæi were the very next People to Syria; and were wont to make Excursions upon their Neighbours. By which we may understand (which otherwise could not be made out) how the Sabæans broke into Jacob's Country, and carried away his Cattle. For it is not credible they could come so far as from the Persian or Arabian Sea: But from this Country there was an easy Passage thro' the Defarts of Arabia into the Land of Uz or Ausitis, which lay upon the Borders of Euphrates. See Bochart in his Pbaleg, L. iv. c. 9.

And Dedan,] There was one of this Name, (as I said before) the Son of Rbegma, Gen. x. 7. who gave Name to a City upon the Persian Sea, now called Dadan. But besides that, there was an inland City called Dedan in the Country of Idumæa, mentioned by Jeremiab, xxv. 23. xlix. 8. whose Inhabitants are called Dedanim, Isa. xxi. 13. and this Dedan here mentioned may well be thought to be the Founder of it, as the same Bochart observes, L. iv. c. 6.

And the Sons of Dedan were Ashurim, and Letushim, and Leummim,] If these were Heads of Nations, or Families, the memory of them is lost. For it is a mistake of Cleodemus (who mentions the first of these in Euseb. Præpar. Evang. L. ix. c. 20.) to derive the Assyrians from this Ashurim, they having their Original from Ashur, one of the Sons of Sbem, x. 22.

Ver. 4. And the Sons of Midian, Ephab,] The Name of Ephab, the eldest Son of Midian, continued a long time; for these two are mentioned by Isaiab as near Neighbours, lx. 6. And not only Josephus, Eusebius, and St. Hierom, but the Nubien Geographer also, tells us of a City called Madian, on the Shore of the Red-Sea; near to which was Ephab in the Province of Madian. עִיפָה, Epha or Hipha is the same with that Place the Greeks call Ἰππῶ, and Ptolemy mentions both a Mountain and a Village of this Name, on the same Shore, a little below Madiane, which is the Madian here mentioned, as Bochart observes in his Hierozoic. P. i. L. 2. cap. 3.

And Ephraim,] I can find no remainders of his Family, unless it be among the Homeritæ before-mentioned, whose Metropolis was called τῶρα: In which Theophilus (sent by Constantius to convert that Country) built a Church; as Philostorgius relates, L. iii. Hist. Eccles. §. 4. Which City is mentioned by many other Authors, as Jacobus Gotofredus observes in his Dissertations upon Philostorgius: Particularly by Arianus in his Periplus of the Red-Sea, where he calls the Metropolis of the Homeritæ expressly by the Name of Ἀρά; which one cannot well doubt came from this Ephraim.

And Hanoch,] In that part of Arabia Felix where the Adranitæ were seated, there was a great trading Town called Cane, as Ptolemy tells us, and shows its distance from Alexandria: Κὰν ἑπταβίων ἢ ἄνεον, L. viii. Pliny also mentions a Country in Arabia, which he calls Regio Canauna; which may be thought to have taken its Name from this Person and his Posterity.

And Abidab,] The Relicks of this Name remain (if the two last Syllables, as is usual, be inverted) in the People called Διέννοι, who lived in an Island called Διέν or Διέν, which lay between Arabia and India, and is by Authors said to belong sometimes to the one, and sometimes to the other. Philostorgius saith only, they bear the Name of Indians, (in the place before-named, where he saith, Theophilus, who was sent to convert the Homerites, was born here.) But Pliny reckoning up the Tracts of Arabia, places the Isle called Devadæ (which I take to be this) over-against the fore-named Region called Canauna, L. vi. cap. 28. And Strabo, (as Gothofred observes) Agatharcides, and others, call it Διέν.

And Eldaab,] I know not where to find any Remains of this Name, unless it be in the City Elana, (which might easily be formed from Eldaab, by leaving out the Daleth, and turning the Ain into Nun, than which nothing more common) which was seated in the Sinus Arabicus, toward the East; called by others Ἀλδρα, (Elana) from whence the Sinus itself was called Elanites, and the People that lived in it, Elanitæ; as Salmasius shows out of many Authors, Exercit. in Solinum, p. 482.

Ver. 5. Gave all he had to Isaac.] As he designed long before, xxiv. 36.

Ver. 6. Sons of his Concubines.] Which were Hagar and Keiurab: Who were Wives, but of an inferior sort, according to the manner of those Times and Countries. Keiurab is expressly called his Concubine, 1 Chron. i. 32. as she is above, ver. 1. of this Chapter, called his Wife. Which R. Bechai (in Mr. Selden, cap. 3. de Successionibus) thus explains: She was his Concubine, because of a servile Condition; but his Wife, because married with Covenants, to provide for her and her Children; tho' they were not to heir his Estate. The Talmudists indeed do not perfectly agree in this matter: For tho' they all agree (and prove it evidently) that they were real Wives, yet some say they were made so only by solemn Espousals, without any Marriage-settlement in Writing, as the principal Wives had. Others think they had a Writing also, but not with such Conditions as the principal Wives enjoyed. Abarbinel hath an accurate Discourse about this, which Buxtorf hath translated into his Book de Sponsalibus, n. 17. And see also Mr. Selden, L. v. de Jure N. & G. cap. 7. p. 570. &c. and G. Schickard, de Jure Regio, cap. 3. p. 70.

Gave gifts.] Some Portion of his Money, or moveable Goods, or perhaps of both; which, in all probability, he gave to Ismael, as well as to these Sons, (tho' it be not mentioned, Gen. xxi. 14.) because Moses here saith, he gave Gifts to the sons of his Concubines, of which Hagar was one.

Into the East Country.] Into Arabia, and the adjacent Countries, as was said before. For the Midianites are called the Children of the East in Judg. vi. 3. 33. vii. 12. viii. 10.

Ver. 7. These are the Days of the Years of Abraham, &c.] This is spoken by Anticipation, (to finish the Story of Abraham) for Esau and Jacob were born before he died; and were now fifteen Years old: For Isaac was but sixty Years old when they were born, ver. 26. and seventy five when Abraham died; who was an hundred Years old at Isaac's birth, and lived to the Age of one hundred seventy and five.

Ver. 8. Abraham gave up the ghost.] Died of no Disease, but old Age.

In a good old Age.] Without Pain or Sickness.

Full of Years.] The Hebrew hath only the word full; we add Years, to make up the Sense: Which some think rather to be this, That he was satisfied, and had enough of this World, desiring to live no longer. Like that Expression in Seneca, Epist. lxi. Vixi, Lucili charissime, quantum satis est; mortem plenus expecto.

Gathered to his People.] It doth not relate to his Body, which was not buried with them; and therefore must relate to his Soul, which is supposed by this still to live in that place where his pious Fore-fathers were gone. Or else it is an Hebrew Idiotism, signifying no more, but that he left this World as all his Fathers had done before him.

Ver. 9. His Sons, Isaac and Ismael, &c.] By this it appears that Isaac and Ismael were not Strangers to one another. Nay, some of the *Oriental*s tell us that Abraham went to see Ismael at his House, and that Ismael came to see him after he was sent away: Which is not at all improbable. For no doubt Abraham provided for him suitable to the condition of his Birth: And Ismael could not but be convinced that the Inheritance of his Father belonged of right to Isaac, who was the Son of a Free-woman, and he only of a Bond-woman. Nor could he well be ignorant that Isaac was to be Heir of Abraham's Estate by God's Designation.

In the Field of Ephron, &c.] See xxiii. 17.

Ver. 11. Isaac dwelt by the Well Labai-roi.] He continued, after Abraham's death, his former Habitation which he had when he married, xxiv. 62.

Ver. 12. Now these are the Generations of Ismael, &c.] Having mentioned the Blessing of God which went along with Isaac, after his Father's death (in the foregoing Verse) he takes this occasion to show, that God was not unmindful of his Promise made to Abraham concerning Ismael also, xvii. 20.

Ver. 13. Nebaioth.] As he was the First-born of Ismael, so his Posterity gave the denomination to the whole Country of Arabia Petraea, (in the best part of which, see ver. 3. they inhabited) which Pliny, Strabo, and Ptolemy call Nabataea; and sometimes other Authors, call Nabathis; as the Inhabitants were called Nabataei, who are mentioned also by Dionysius Periegetes in his Description of the World, and by Plutarch in the Life of Demetrius; who, he saith, was sent to subdue the Arabs called Nabataei, (τῶν καλεσθῶν Ναβαταίων) where he was in great danger to perish, by falling, οἷς τόπος ἀνδρῶν, into places where there was no Water. These are commonly called in Scripture Ismaelites, as if they had been the sole Heirs of their Progenitor: And they dwelt near to the Midianites, (their Half-brethren) for in the Story of Joseph, he is said in one place to be sold unto the Ismaelites, in another to the Midianites, (Gen. xxxvii. 27, 28, 36.) they being Neighbours and Copartners in Traffick. The Country of Moab also was near to these Nabataei, as appears from Epiphanius, Heres. liii. where speaking of the Countries that lay beyond the Dead-Sea he mentions this, which he calls, Ναβανθὴ χώρα, the Region of Nebaioth, Iturea, and Moabitis. See Salmasius, Plin. Exercitat. p. 615.

Kedar.] His Posterity called Kedareni were also seated in Arabia Petraea, together with their elder Brother. And their Name also was so famous, that some Authors call the whole Country Kedar. For the Language of Kedar is the Arabian Language; and when David complains that he had dwelt long in the Tents of Kedar, the Chaldee expounds it, in the dwelling of the Arabians. But those Arabians called Scenitæ were properly the People of Kedar. And yet not all the Scenitæ, (i. e. all the Arabs who dwelt in Tents) but those only who dwelt in Arabia Petraea. For there were divers kinds of them, (all called Σκνιτῆς) some near Euphrates, others in Arabia Felix, &c. as Salmasius shows in his Plin. Exercit. p. 484. Some take them to be the same with those whom Ptolemy calls Pharanitæ:

Pbaranitz : For what the Pſalmiſt calls dwelling among the Tents of Kedar, is called, 1 Sam. xxvi. 1. dwelling in the wilderneſs of Paran. Pliny only ſays Pbaranitis bordered upon the Arabs, (in ora contermina gentis Arabiae) and ſo later Writers make Pbaran and Arabia Petraea to be near Neighbours, as the ſame Salmaſius ſhows, p. 485.

Ver. 14. Dumab.] He ſeems, by Iſaiab xxi. 11. to have been ſeated near Idumaea.

Ver. 15. Hadar.] Some think the Atbritæ in Arabia Felix came from him. In which like- wiſe there was a City called Tema, from the next Son of Iſhmael. And Jetur, the next Son to him, may well be thought to have been the Father of the Ituræi in Cælo-Syria. And Kedemab, the laſt of his Sons, to have dwelt near his Brother Kedar. For ſo Jacobus Capellus expounds thoſe words, Jer. xlix. 28: Go up to Kedar, and ſpoil the Men of Kedem, (which we tranſlate, the Men of the Eaſt.) And there are ſome other People in thoſe Countries, whoſe Names ſound ſomething like the reſt of the Sons of Iſhmael, but not ſo like as theſe as I have mentioned: Which makes me omit all further ſearch after them, enough having been ſaid to ſhow the truth of this Account which Mofes gives us of Iſhmael's Poſterity.

Ver. 16. Theſe are their Names, by their Towns.] Tho' ſome of them dwelt in Tents (and thence were called Scenitæ Arabes) yet they did not live ſo ſcatteringly, but pitched them together and made a Town.

And their Caſtles.] They had even then Places of Defence: Which may make it probable, that they had alſo walled Towns, to which they reſorted from their Tents in the Fields, when they were in any danger, Iſai. xlii. 11. For it muſt be here noted, That as there were divers People of this Name of Scenitæ Arabes, ſo there was this difference among them (as Salmaſius obſerves in the fore-named place) that ſome of them were Nomades, who wandred from place to place; others of them were not: Particularly the Sabaan Scenitæ, and moſt of the reſt dwelt in Tents, but were fixed in their Habitations, and did not remove from one place to another, as thoſe that dwelt in Meſopotamia did, who were both Scenitæ, and alſo Nomades. They therefore who were ſettled in Tents, as the Sons of Iſhmael were, had reaſon to build Fortreſſes for the ſecurity of their ſlender Habitations.

Twelve Princes according to their Nations.] Or rather, (as Dr. Jackson well głoſſes, Book i. on the Creed, c. 25.) twelve Heads of ſo many ſeveral Houſes, Tribes, or Clans. Which kind of Government they continued till four hundred Years after Chriſt; and is better expreſſed by Heathen Writers than by many Chriſtian Interpreters, when they call them, ῥῶμας αἰσῶτες, Rulers of their Tribes, as Strabo ſpeaks, L. xvi. in his Deſcription of Syria. And ſo the later Writers ſpeak of the Saracens (who were the ſame People formerly called Scenitæ Arabes) whoſe Governors they called Phylarchi Saracenorum, as may be ſeen in Sextus Rufus, and Jornandes.

See Salmaſ. as before, p. 484, 485.

Ver. 17. Gathered unto his People.] The ſame Phraſes being uſed here of the death of Iſhmael that were, ver. 8. of the death of Abraham; they ſhow the meaning is no more but that they left the World as others had done before them. We do not read where Iſhmael was buried; it is likely, in his own Country, not in the Cave of Macbpelab: For that had been to give his Poſterity a claim to a ſhare in the Land of Canaan.

Ver. 18. They dwelt from Havilah unto Sbur, &c.] See Gen. x. 7. Joſephus, L. i. Antiq. c. 12. makes the Iſhmaelites to have poſſeſſed the whole Tract between the Euphrates and the Red-Sea: Which appears in this place not to be true; for between them and Euphrates were the Amalekites and Moabites, who did not reach to Euphrates neither. The Iſhmaelites therefore poſſeſſed the Country, which, in that part Eaſtward that was next to the Amalekites, was called the Wilderneſs of Havilah; and in that part next to Egypt, was called the Wilderneſs of Sbur: And in other places of Scripture is called Kedar, the Wilderneſs of Paran, and the Wilderneſs of Sin. All which was comprehended afterward under the Name of Arabia. For Stephanus (as Salmaſius obſerves, Plin. Exerc. p. 488.) makes but two Arabias: One which he calls the Spicy, between the Persian and the Arabian Sea; the other on one end of it Weſtward, was next to Egypt; on the other end Northward, next to Syria.

As thou goeſt towards Affyria.] The Wilderneſs of Sbur was over-againſt Egypt, and touched it in that part by which the Way lay from Egypt to Aſſyria: Or, as ſome underſtand the whole Verſe, The ſons of Iſhmael dwelt from Sbur, which is towards Egypt; unto Havilah, which is towards Affyria, in the way from Egypt thither.

He died (Heb. fell) in the preſence of all his Brethren.] Of all his Relations or Kindred; which are called Brethren in Scripture. But his death has been ſpoken of before; and in this Verſe mention being made only of the ſituation of his Country, ſome interpret it in this manner, His Lot fell, i. e. he had his Portion in the preſence of all his Brethren; according to the Promise made to his Mother, xv. 12. The Children of Keturab lying on the Eaſt of his Country, and Iſaac's Seed on the Weſt. Or, if we take it to relate to his death, it may have the ſame ſenſe: Till death he dwelt in the preſence of all his Brethren, and was in a flouriſhing condition.

Ver. 19. Theſe are the Generations of Iſaac.] His principal Deſign being to give an Account of thoſe deſcended from Abraham by Iſaac; Mofes returns to that, after a ſhort Account of his other Poſterity.

Ver. 20. The Syrian of Padan-Aram, &c.] Betuel and Laban are called Aramites, or Syrians, not becauſe they were of that Nation, but becauſe they lived in the Country of Aram, or Syria, that is, in Padan-Aram; as it is here explained, and appears more fully from Rebekah's diſcourſe with her Son Jacob, when he ſent him thither, xxviii. 2, 5. where he living twenty Years with his Uncle Laban, was upon that account called a Syrian, tho' born in Canaan, Deut. xxvi. 5.

Padan-Aram was a part of Mesopotamia. I say a part of it; for Mesopotamia itself was called Aram-Nabaraïm; that part of Syria (for there were many other Arams) which lay between the two great Rivers of Euphrates and Tigris. Which Country had two parts also: One toward the North from the Mountains of Armenia to the River Chaboras, i. e. Araxes, (from whence Balaam seems to have been fetcht, Numb. xxiii. 7.) which was exceeding fruitful, and upon that account called Padan: Which signifies in Arabick the same that Sede doth in Hebrew, i. e. a Field. And therefore what Moses calls going to Padan-Aram, Gen. xxviii. 2. the Prophet Hosea calls fleeing to Sedo-Aram, in the Country or Field of Syria, Hosea xii. 12. this being a cultivated Country abounding with all plenty. The other part of Mesopotamia was Southerly, from the fore-named River unto Babylon; and was very stony and barren. The Syrians lived in the former, and the Arabians in the latter; as Bochart observes, L. ii. Phaleg, cap. 6.

Ver. 21. Isaac intreated the LORD for his Wife, &c.] The Hebrew word Atar doth not signify barely to intreat or pray, but to beseech with earnestness, vehemence, and importunity. It's most likely he continued these importunate Prayers several Years, the desire of seeing the Messiah making them very uneasy under Barrenness. And some of the Hebrews fancy that she remaining barren twenty Years, Isaac at last carried her with him to Mount Moriab (where he should have been offered) and there made most fervent Supplications for a Son: As if he would remember God of the Promise he had there made him, That he would multiply Abraham's Seed as the Stars of Heaven, xxii. 17.

Ver. 22. And the Children struggled together within her.] Some time before her delivery (ver. 24.) she felt, as if two were wrestling together in her Womb, and put her into pangs by striving which should get out first.

If it be so, why am I thus?] If I cannot be delivered, why did I conceive?

And she went.] The Struggling and Pangs, we must suppose, ceased for some time; so that she was able to go and consult the Divine Majesty about this unusual Contest.

To enquire of the LORD.] There were some Places where the Divine Majesty used to appear, which was the settled place of Worship. See iv. 3. Maimonides will have it, that she went to the School of Sem, or Heber, who were Prophets, to desire them to consult the Divine Majesty about her Case, More Nevoch. P. ii. cap. 41. And it is very probable, that there was some divinely inspired Person attending the SCHECHINAH wheresoever it was; such as Melchizedec was at Salem. Whom Patricides takes to have been the Person to whom Rebekah resorted for resolution of her Doubt.

Ver. 23. And the LORD said unto her.] By Melchizedec, saith the fore-named Patricides: By an Angel, saith Maimonides. Who tells us (in the place now mentioned) their Masters are so settled in their Opinion, that she went to enquire of the fore-named Prophets, and that by the LORD, is meant his Angel; that they will have Heber to be him that gave the Answer, (for Prophets, say they, are sometimes called Angels) or the Angel that spake to Heber in this Prophecy. But it is most reasonable to think that the LORD spake to her by an Angel from the SCHECHINAH.

Two Nations are in thy Womb.] The Heads of two Nations.

Two manner of People shall be separated.] Greatly differing in their Dispositions, Manners, course of Life, and Country; which will make them perpetually disagree.

From thy Bowels.] Shall issue from thee.

The elder shall serve the younger.] In his Posterity, not in his own Person.

Ver. 24. When her days to be delivered were fulfilled.] This demonstrates, the time of her delivery was not come when the Struggling first began.

Ver. 25. Red all over.] Some will have it with red Hair, not only on his Head, but all over his Body.

Like an hairy Garment.] As rough as Hair-cloth, just as the Poets describe Satyrs. He was hirsutus; not only hairy all over, but those Hairs as stiff as Bristles; arguing great strength of Body, and a rough, fierce Temper.

They called his Name Esau.] Which signifying made in Hebrew, this is commonly taken for the reason of his Name; that he was as full of Hairs when he was born, as others are at Man's estate; but I think it may as well denote his active Genius, which they thought this prefigured.

Ver. 26. Jacob.] He certainly had his Name from his taking his Brother by the Heel at his birth: As if he would supplant him; as he afterwards did.

Was threescore Years old.] God exercised Isaac's Faith and Patience (just as he had done Abraham's) for the space of twenty Years, before he gave him a Child. For he was forty Years old when he married (ver. 20.) and now sixty.

Ver. 27. A cunning Hunter.] Had great skill in Hunting, in which his active Genius delighted.

A Man of the Field.] That took pleasure to be abroad, pursued wild Beasts in Woods and Mountains, where afterwards he had his Habitation.

A plain Man, dwelling in Tents.] He loved not violent Exercise, but kept at home; or look'd after the Flocks of Sheep, and the Breed of Cattle.

Ver. 28. And Isaac loved Esau, &c.] Not only because he was his First-born, and because his love of Hunting argued him to be a Man of great Activity and Valour, who was likely to prove a great Person, but because he also took care frequently to entertain his Father with Venison (which was of divers sorts) and afforded him such variety at his Table, as gave his Father frequent occasion to commend him.

But Rebekah loved Jacob.] Being a Man of a more meek and quiet Temper, suitable to her own own Disposition; and more at home also with her, than Eſau was; and deſigned by God to inherit the Promiſe, ver. 23. It is likely Eſau made great court (as we ſpeak) to his Father, and Jacob to his Mother: Whereby they won their Affection.

Ver. 29. He was faint.] With too violent and long purſuit of his Sports.

Ver. 30. Feed me, I pray thee, with that ſame red, &c.] It was made of Lentils, as we learn from the laſt Verſe of this Chapter. And St. Auſtin upon Pſalm xlvi. ſaith they were Egyptian Lentils; which were in great eſteem, and much commended by Atheneus, and A. Gellius: And gave the Pottage, it is probable, a red tincture. Some think Eſau did not know what it was, and therefore calls it only by its colour; aſking for that red, that ſame red, as it is in the Hebrew.

Therefore was his Name called Edom.] This repeated eager deſire of he knew not what, for which he ſold his Birth-right, gave him the Name of Edom: Which ſignifies red. Whence the City which he built, and the whole Country his Poſterity inhabited, was called by the ſame Name; and by the Greeks Idumea; bordering toward the South upon Judea, Arabia, and Egypt.

Ver. 31. Sell me this day thy Birth-right.] The eldeſt Son had ſeveral Privileges belonging to him above the reſt: The chief of which was to have a double Portion of his Father's Eſtate. As for the right of Prieſthood, there are many reaſons to prove it did not belong thereunto. But whatſoever they were, Jacob cunningly made an Advantage of Eſau's Neceſſity, to purchaſe them all for a ſmall matter. In which ſome think he did not amiſs: About which I ſhall not diſpute.

Ver. 32. What profit ſhall this Birth-right do to me?] He ſpeaks very ſlightly, if not contemptuouſly of it: Preferring the preſent ſatiſfaction of his Appetite, before his future Dignity and Greatneſs. For ſome are of Opinion he pretended to be fainter than really he was; out of a vehement longing for the Pottage; which, perhaps, was a rarity.

Ver. 33. Swear to me this Day.] That I ſhall peaceably enjoy the Prerogative of the Birth-right.

Eſau ſeems to have been very violent in all things; and to have purſued this as eagerly as he did his Sports: Jacob, on the contrary, very ſedate and crafty to make the beſt uſe of the Opportunities he met with, to promote his Ends.

Ver. 34. Roſe up and went his way.] Well ſatiſfied, and without any trouble for what he had done. Which the Apoſtle cenſures as a piece of Profaneſs: Parents being wont to give a ſpecial Bleſſing to their Firſt-born.

Deſpiſed his Birth-right.] He thought, perhaps, he could recover that by Force, which he had loſt by his Brother's Craft.

CHAP. XXVI.

Ver. 1. AND there was a famine in the Land, &c.] Such a ſcarcity of Proviſions, as was in Abraham's days (xii. 10.) when he was newly come into Canaan, hapned again in the days of Iſaac.

And Iſaac went.] It is not ſaid from whence he went: But it is probable, after the death of Abraham, he went and dwelt where his Father had often done, at Mamre near Hebron. For he was not now at Beerſheba, or the Well Labai-roi, (which was the laſt place of his habitation that we read of, xxv. 11.) for that was in this very Country of Gerar, to which he now went.

Unto Abimelech.] The Son, it is moſt likely, of him to whom Abraham went: For he is not to be thought the ſame; it being an hundred Years ſince that time. And all the Kings of that Country were, for many Ages called by the Name of Abimelech; as appears from the Story of David: Who fled to one of that Name called Achiſh in 1 Sam. xxi. 10. but Abimelech in the Title of the xxxivth Pſalm. See Gen. xx. 2.

Ver. 2. And (or for) the LORD appeared to him.] He intended to have gone into Egypt, as Abraham his Father had done in the like Caſe, xii. 10. But God forbid him, (appearing to him either in a Viſion, or a Dream; or as the Glory of the LORD appeared afterward to Moſes and the Congregation of Iſrael upon ſeveral occaſions) and directed him to ſtay in this Country, which was in the way to Egypt: Where he promiſes to provide for him.

Tho' Egypt was a moſt plentiful Country; yet the King of it at this time, was not ſo good a Man, perhaps, as him that reigned in the Days of Abraham.

Ver. 3. Sojourn in this Land, &c.] He not only promiſes to take care of him at preſent, during the Famine: But renews the Promiſes made to Abraham his Father at fundry times, and in divers places, xii. 3. xv. 5. xvii. 2, 8. and at laſt confirm'd by an Oath, xxii. 16, 17.

I will be with thee, and bleſs thee.] Theſe, and ſuch like words, Maimonides ſhows expreſs a ſpecial Providence over thoſe to whom they are ſpoken, and over all belonging to them. More Nevoch. Par. iii. cap. 18.

Unto thy Seed will I give all theſe Countries.] Which he repeats again in the next Verſe; having mentioned the vaſt multiplication of his Seed.

Ver. 4. In thy Seed ſhall all the Nations of the Earth be bleſſed.] In this is contained the Promiſe of the Meſſiah, the higheſt Bleſſing God could beſtow: Which he aſſured Abraham ſhould ſpring out of his Family, xxii. 18. and now aſſures the ſame to Iſaac.

Ver. 5. Becauſe that Abraham obeyed my Voice.] In going out of his own Country when God called him; in circumciſing himſelf and his Family; but eſpecially (xxii. 18.) in offering his Son Iſaac.

And

And kept my Charge.] i. e. Observed the Sabbath-Day, says Mannesseh Ben-Israel, out of the Hebrew Doctors: L. de Creat. Problema viii. But it seems more rational to understand by this word which we translate Charge, all that he commanded him to observe: The Particulars of which follow.

My Commandments, my Statutes, and my Laws.] These are nicely distinguished by some of the Jews; especially Abarbinel: Who, by Commandments, understands, not only that of Circumcision, but of expelling Ismael: And by Statutes, (Hebr. Chukkotai, which always relates to Ceremonial things) not only binding his Son Isaac to offer him in Sacrifice, but his offering a Ram afterwards in his stead: And by Laws, (which include the Judicial part of Moses's Writings) his taking a Wife for Isaac out of another Country; and bestowing Gifts upon the Children of his Concubines, reserving the Land for Isaac. But this may seem too curious: And so many words may be thought rather to be used, only to express his exact Obedience to God in every thing, whether belonging to Religion, or to Justice, Mercy, or any other Duty. According to what he required of him, xvii. 1. Walk before me, and be thou perfect.

Ver. 6. And Isaac dwelt in Gerar.] This is a fresh Instance of his constant Obedience; in trusting to God's Providence here, and not going down into Egypt as he was inclined.

Ver. 7. She is my Sister.] Or, Cousin; for so she was. He told part of the Truth, but not all.

For he feared to say, &c.] He imitated his Father; as Children are apt to do.

Ver. 8. Sporting with Rebekah his Wife.] Using such familiarity with her, and blandishments, as were not allowable between Brethren and Sisters, but common between Man and Wife, even openly. As embracing her in his Arms, and kissing her, perhaps, very often: He having an exceeding great love to her, xxiv. 67.

Ver. 9. Of a surety she is thy Wife.] It seems he took Isaac to be so good a Man, that he look'd upon the Liberties he took with Rebekah, as tokens of conjugal Love, not of incestuous Desires.

Ver. 10. Brought guiltiness upon us.] It is likely the Punishment inflicted upon his Father and Family, (xx. 17.) only for taking Sarah into his House, with an intention to make her his Wife, was yet in memory among them.

Ver. 11. He that toucheth this Man or his Wife, &c.] This looks like a modest word, as it is used, xx. 6. and 1 Cor. vii. 1. But the Chaldee Paraphrast (and the Hebrew Doctors) interpret it of not doing them any injury: Because he speaks of the Man, as well as his Wife, and so it is explained ver. 29.

Ver. 12. Then Isaac sowed in that Land.] Most take this to have been in the time of Famine: Which makes it the greater wonder, that the Ground should then bring forth so plentifully. But it seems more likely to me, that the Dearth was at an end: For it is said Verse 8. that he had been in that Country a long time, when Abimelech saw him sporting with his Wife.

An hundred fold.] This, in itself, is not wonderful; tho', at this time, it was a singular Blessing of God, after there had been some time ago a Dearth; and, perhaps, the Soil not rich, which afforded so large a crop. Otherwise, Varro says (L. i. de Re Rustica, c. 44.) that in Syria, about Gadera, and in Africa about Byzacium, they reap'd an hundred Bushels for one, (ex modio nasci centum.) Pliny and Solinus say the same of that Country Byzacium: Inasmuch that Bochartus fancies the Metropolis of that rich Country, viz. Adrumetum, had its Name from hence; signifying in the Phœnician Language as much as, the Region of an hundred fold: L. i. Canaan, cap. 24. Nay, some Places in Africa were so rich that they produced two hundred, yea, three hundred fold, as he shows out of several good Authors in the twenty-fifth Chapter of that Book. Whence he thinks Africa had its Name; being as much as Εὐςαργος γῆ, Terra Spicarum, a Land of Ears of Corn. All which I have noted, that this Passage may not seem incredible to any Reader.

And the LORD blessed him.] Or, for the LORD blessed him. This is the reason of the fruitfulness of that Soil; which naturally would not have yielded so much.

Ver. 13. And the Man waxed great, &c.] I suppose he had many such fruitful Years; so that his Riches increased till he grew very great, and bought more Cattle than he had before. For in them consisted the ancient Riches, as Servius tells us on the first of Virgil's Eclogues. Omne Patrimonium apud majores peculium dicebatur, à pecoribus; in quibus universa eorum substantia constabat. Unde etiam PECUNIA dicta fuit, à PECULIO. The same also we find said by Columella.

Ver. 14. Great store of Servants.] The Margin hath, store of Husbandry. Which is very likely; because he was encouraged in it, by his great Crops: Which could not likewise but increase the Number of his Servants. The Arabick set forth by Erpenius hath only a great revenue, or vast increase: Which, among the Eastern People, as I said, was principally from their Cattle. But God blessed him with abundance of Corn also.

Ver. 16. Thou art much mightier than we.] As the People envied him, ver. 14. so the King himself, it seems, began to fear him: And therefore desired him, in a friendly manner, to leave his Country. For they were not yet grown so wicked, as to attempt to destroy those who lived quietly among them; when they apprehended they would become richer and stronger than themselves.

Ver. 17. The Valley of Gerar.] Where that was, is uncertain; but at some distance from the City where Abimelech dwelt, and near to which Isaac had inhabited before.

Ver. 18. Which they had digged in the days of Abraham.] He chose to open the old ones, rather than dig new; both, because he was certain there to find a Spring of Water, and because it was most easy, and less obnoxious to Censure or Envy: And because he would preserve his Father's Memory; for which reason he did not give them new Names, but those they had in his Father's Days.

Ver. 19.

Ver. 19. They digged in the Valley, &c.] In process of time, they found a necessity of more Water; and so digged till they met with a new Spring, in the Valley.

Ver. 20. The Water is ours.] Because it was found in their Soil, as Menochius observes. But they having let the Ground to Isaac, the Water was truly his, as long as the Contract lasted.

Ver. 21. And they digged another Well.] I suppose in the same Valley: For rather than contend, he receded from his right in the other Well.

Ver. 22. He removed from thence.] To avoid strife, he quitted that part of the Country, and went to another: Where he was not disturbed in his Pasturage.

For now the LORD hath made room for us.] He was streightned before for want of sufficient Water for his Flock: Which now he enjoyed in abundance.

And we shall be fruitful in the Land.] Increase more than formerly: Now that they could water their Flocks quietly and plentifully.

Ver. 23. Went up from thence to Beersheba.] Where he and his Father had anciently lived, xxi. 33. xxv. 11.

Ver. 24. And the LORD appeared unto him the same night.] As he had done before he came to Gerar, ver. 2.

I am the God of Abraham.] Who was so kind to him, and made a Covenant with him.

I am with thee.] My special Providence is over thee; as was explained before, ver. 3.

Ver. 25. Built an Altar there.] To offer Sacrifice unto the LORD.

Called upon the Name of the LORD.] As Abraham had done before him, in this very place, xxi. 33.

And pitched his Tent there.] Resolved to settle in this place.

Ver. 26. Phicol, &c.] The same Name and the same Office that he had, who is mentioned xxi. 22. but he was not the same Man no more than Abimelech the same King. It is probable this was a Name of some Dignity among them; like that of Tribunus or Dictator among the Romans: Which passed from one to another.

Ver. 28. We saw certainly the LORD was with thee, &c.] We have observed such a special Providence over thee, that we come to establish a perpetual Friendship with thee, by a solemn Oath, if thou wilt consent to our desire. They were afraid, it seems, lest being disobliged by their sending him out of their Country, he should fall upon them one time or other; being mightier than they, as they acknowledged, ver. 18.

Ver. 29. Have sent thee away in peace.] They remember him how they dismissed him peaceably; and did not go about to seize upon his Estate, while he lived among them: Which they make an Argument, why he should contract a nearer Friendship with such civil People.

Thou art now the blessed of the LORD.] This looks like an high Compliment, or flattering Expression.

Ver. 30. He made them a Feast, &c.] So Covenants were made, by eating and drinking together.

VOL. I.

Ver. 32. Told him concerning the Well they had digged, &c.] They had begun to dig before Abimelech and Phicol came, ver. 25. and now they came at a Spring of Water.

Ver. 33. He called it Sheba.] From the Oath which was lately made between him and Abimelech. It had been called so before by Abraham xxi. 31. but that Name, perhaps, was forgotten, and so he revived it, as he had done others, ver. 18.

Ver. 34. The Daughter of Beeri the Hittite, &c.] Josephus saith these two Men, Berri and Elon, whose Daughters Esau married, were Dynasts, powerful Men among the Hittites: Which is not improbable. But his Father sure had given the same charge to him, that Abraham had done concerning his own Marriage, xxiv. 3. and then it was a very undutiful, nay, an impious action, to marry with those People, who were under the Curse of God. The Scripture might well call him profane: Who seems not to have regarded either the Curse or the Blessing of the Almighty.

Ver. 35. Agrief of mind.] His very marrying with them, sorely afflicted his Father and Mother. Or, as others interpret it, their Idolatry and bad Manners extremely grieved them.

CHAP. XXVII.

Ver. 1. WHEN Isaac was old.] An hundred thirty and seven Years old, as many have demonstrated.

He said unto him, my Son, &c.] It appears by this and what follows, that tho' Esau had displeased him by his Marriage, yet he retained his natural Affection to him, which he had from the beginning.

Ver. 3. Thy Quiver.] Some take the Hebrew word to signify a Sword: Which was as necessary for a Huntsman, as a Bow and Arrows.

Ver. 4. Make me savoury Meat, &c.] To raise his feeble Spirits, and enable him to deliver his last and solemn Benediction, with the more Vigor.

My soul may bless thee before I die.] It seems Isaac did not understand the Divine Oracle, xxv. 25. as Rebekah did; or, she had not acquainted him with it. For he intended to bestow upon Esau the promised Land; which was that God told Abraham he would bless his Posterity withal. For the last Benediction of these great Men, was the settling of their Inheritance; and making those their Heirs upon whom they bestowed their Blessing. Now the Birth-right which Esau had sold Jacob, gave him right only to the greatest part of Isaac's Estate: But not to the Land of Canaan, which was to be disposed of by Isaac, according to Divine Direction.

Ver. 7. And bless thee before the LORD.] These words show it was not a common Blessing, but a solemn Benediction, and by Divine Authority or Approbation, which Isaac meant to give his Son Esau.

Ver. 8. Obey my Voice, &c.] Rebekah having just reason to conclude, that Esau had forfeited the Blessing, which she was desirous to preserve in her Family, by marrying with the People of Canaan, who were cursed by God; thought of this Device to get Jacob preferred before him.

P

And indeed, it cannot be denied, that it was a profane thing (as I noted before) to marry with a Daughter of Heth. And he seems afterwards to have had no good Design in marrying with a Daughter of Ishmael, (xxviii. 9.) for it looks as if he went about to set up the Pretensions of that Family, against Isaac's.

Ver. 9. Two good Kids of the Goats.] Two fat fucking Kids, as Aben Ezra expounds this Phrase, Kid of the Goats, (upon Exod. xxiii. 19.) which in old time were accounted very delicious Meat: A Present fit for a King, 1 Sam. xvi. 20. and which Manoah prepared for the Angel, whom he took for a Noble Guest, Judg. xiii. 15. And (which is most proper to be here considered) allowed to decayed and weak People, as an excellent Nourishment.

Both these Kids were not prepared for Isaac: But he took the most tender and delicate parts of both, and dressed them for him.

And I will make them savoury Meat.] Dress it so, as to please his Palate; and not to be distinguished by him from Venison. For, we know, the natural taste of things may be quite altered, by various sorts of Seasonings, as we call them; and ordered in such manner, that Bochartus says he knew skilful Huntsmen take a Pasty made of Beef for Venison.

Ver. 11. An hairy Man.] In the Hebrew, ishb Sair, a rough Man, hairy like a Goat. For the same word Sair signifies a Goat, Gen. xxxvii. 31. Lev. ix. 15. and other places.

Ver. 12. A deceiver.] One that cheats his Father; imposing on his Age, and on his Blindness: Which, he wisely considers, would have been an high Provocation if he had been discovered.

Ver. 13. Upon me be thy curse.] i. e. There is no danger: I will warrant the success.

Ver. 15. Took goodly Raiment, &c.] His best Clothes; which most suppose were laid up in a Chest, among odoriferous Flowers, or other Perfumes: Both to preserve them from Moths, and to comfort the Brain when they were worn: For their smell is mentioned ver. 27. It is a groundless fancy of the Jews that these were Sacerdotal Garments, (and the very same that Adam wore, which descended to Noah, &c.) for, as there was no Sacrifice now to be made, so the Primogeniture did not make him a Priest, more than Jacob, as was noted before. One may rather say, these were Garments belonging to him, as Heir of the Family: Between whom and the other Sons, it's very probable the Affection of Parents was wont to make some difference in their Apparel.

Ver. 16. Put the skin of the Kids of the Goats.] It is observed by Bochartus, That in the Eastern Countries, Goats-Hair was very like to that of Men: P. i. Hieroziac. L. ii. c. 51. So that Isaac might easily be deceived, when his Eyes were dim, and his Feeling no less decayed than his Sight.

Ver. 18. Who art thou, My son?] He suspected him, from his Voice, and returning so soon from Hunting.

Ver. 19. I am Esau thy first-born, &c.] Here are many Untruths told by Jacob, besides this, (for his Father did not bid him go get him some Venison, nor did God bring this Meat to him, which he had prepared, &c.) which cannot be wholly excused: But it must be confessed, he and his Mother were possessed with a false Opinion, That they might deceive Isaac, for the good of his Family.

Arise, I pray thee, and sit and eat, &c.] He was lying upon his Bed, one would guess by this, being aged and infirm: And he intreats him to raise up himself, and sit: For so they did in those Days (as we do now) at their Meals. This appears afterwards, when Joseph's Brethren sat down to eat Bread, xxxvii. 25. and sat when they eat with Joseph in Egypt, xliii. 33. And so Homer makes all his Heroes sit at their Feasts, as Athenæus observes: Which Custom continued among the Macedonians in the days of Alexander, as Bochart observes in his Hieroziac. P. i. L. ii. c. 50.

Ver. 21. Come near, &c.] Isaac still suspected by this long discourse with him, wherein he observed his Voice, that it was not Esau. And the Hebrews, in Bereschith Rabba, say, that he fell into a great sweat, and his Heart melted in him like Wax, while he talked with him: So that an Angel came to support him, from falling down.

Ver. 23. So he blessed him.] After he had once more ask'd him whether he was his very Son Esau, which Jacob affirmed, ver. 24. who was punished for this Deceit, when he was cheated himself by Laban, in the business of his Wives, as well as in other things: And (as the Hebrews observed) he that deceived his Father by the Skins of the Kids of Goats, was deceived himself into a false opinion that Joseph was killed, by his Brethren dipping his Coat in the Blood of a Kid of the Goats, Gen. xxxvii. 31.

Ver. 26. Come now and kiss me.] Some think he had a desire to be satisfied that way, whether he was Esau or not. But I take it rather, to be a Token of his great Love and Affection, wherewith he bestowed his Blessing upon him.

Ver. 27. He smelled the smell of his Raiment.] As he embraced him, he perceived the Fragrance of his Garments: Which he could not before, while he stood remote; his Senses being weak and dull. The Jews, who fancy these to have been the Garments wherein Adam ministered, imagine also that they retained the scent which they had in Paradise. So Bereschith Rabba, and R. Sol. Jarchi, as Braunius observes, L. i. de Vestib. Hebr. Sacerd. c. 4.

See, the smell of my son.] The apprehension of one Sense, is in this Language, often used for the apprehension of another, (as Maimonides speaks, P. i. More Nevoch. cap. 46.) as, see the Word of the LORD, Jer. ii. 31. i. e. Hear his Word. And so in this place, See the smell is as much, as Smell the Odour of my son, &c. But it may simply signify, Behold, or observe; no Field that God hath adorned with the greatest variety of the most fragrant Flowers, smell sweeter than my son.

Ver. 28. Therefore God give thee, &c.] I take it for a sign that God will give thee, (for so it may be translated, as a Prophecy as well as a Prayer) the greatest abundance: Which proceeds from a rich Soil, well watered from Heaven. These two are the causes of Plenty.

The dew of Heaven.] Rain fell only at certain Seasons in that Country; but there was a recompence for it by large Dews, which very much refreshed the Earth; and are represented in Scripture as a Divine Gift, Job xxxviii. 28. Micah v. 7. which God threatens sometimes to withhold, because of Mens Offences, 1 Kings xvii. 1.

Ver. 29. Let People serve thee, &c.] As the former part of the Blessing relates to Wealth, so this to Dominion and Empire: Which was signally fulfilled in the Days of David, when the Moabites, Ammonites, Syrians, Philistines and Edomites also were subdued under him.

Let thy Mother's Son bow down to thee.] This is a third part of the Blessing, giving him a Prerogative in his own Family: And in the next words he pronounces a Blessing upon all that should be Friends to him; as on the contrary, a Curse upon his Enemies.

Ver. 33. Isaac trembled very exceedingly.] What the Hebrews say upon ver. 21. (see there) had been more proper here, That his Heart melted, and he was ready to swoon away.

Who?] A broken form of Speech.

Yea, and he shall be blessed.] He had blessed him so seriously, and with such Affection, and (it is likely) extraordinary Confidence of God's Approbation, that he would not revoke it. For he felt, as I take it, the Spirit of Prophecy upon him, when he pronounced this Blessing: And it enlightened him to understand the Oracle formerly delivered, xxv. 23.

Ver. 35. Taken away thy Blessing.] Which I intended to have bestowed on thee, looking upon it as thine, by the right of being my First-born.

Ver. 37. All his Brethren.] His Kindred.

What shall I now do unto thee, my Son?] Having given Jacob so much, it was but a small matter he could do for him.

Ver. 39. Behold, thy dwelling shall be the fatness, &c.] Some have translated it, Thy dwelling shall be without the fatness of the Earth, and the Dew from above; but by thy Sword shalt thou live, &c. i. e. He prophesies that he should inhabit a poor Country, but maintain himself plentifully by his Sword. For, otherwise (they think) his Blessing would be the same with Jacob's, ver. 28. But if we retain our Translation, there is a manifest Difference between this and Jacob's Benediction. For here he makes no mention of plenty of Corn and Wine; and gives him no such Dominion as he did to Jacob, (the Jews observe other differences) and whatsoever fatness was in the Soil of his Country, it did not last, as appears by Mal. i. 3.

Ver. 40. By thy Sword shalt thou live.] Live upon Spoil; or, as others interpret it, be in perpetual War to defend thy Country.

And shall serve thy Brother.] Here Isaac speaks out the very words of the Oracle mentioned before, xxv. 23. which was fulfilled in the days of David, 2 Sam. viii. 14. and 1 Chron. xviii. 15. (the Circumstances of which Conquest are more fully described, 1 Kings xi. 15, &c.) And again, after they had recovered some strength, Amozab made great Slaughters among them, 2 Kings xiv. 7. as the Manassees did afterwards, 1 Man. v. 65. and at last were utterly disabled by Hircan.

VOL. I.

mus, the Son of Simon Maccabæus, as we read in Josephus, L. xiii. Antiq. c. 17.

When thou shalt have the Dominion.] St. Hierom and the LXX do not understand this of their having any Dominion over the Seed of Jacob (which we never read of) but only of their regaining power to shake off subjection to them, as it follows in the next words:

Thou shalt break his yoke from off thy Neck.] Which they did in the days of Jeram, as we read, 2 Kings viii. 20, 22. 2 Chron. xxi. 8, &c.

Ver. 41. And Esau said in his Heart.] Designed, and resolved within himself; and, as it should seem, was so full of it, that he could not contain his Purpose within his own Breast, but in his Anger blurted it out to somebody who told it to Rebekah.

The days of mourning for my Father, &c.] He will die shortly, (in which he was deceived, for he lived three and forty Years after this) and then I will be revenged. He had some regard to his Father still remaining (whom he would not grieve) but no consideration of his Mother, who had helped Jacob to supplant him.

Ver. 44. Tarry with him a few days.] A Year or two. But herein she also was mistaken, for he did not return in twenty Years time.

Until thy Brother's fury.] Time, in which various things happen, very much allays Fury and Rage.

Ver. 45. And be forget, &c.] The memory of it be much worn out, and grown weak.

Why should I be deprived of you both in one day?] She had reason to think, that if Esau killed Jacob, and the publick Justice did not punish it (according to the Precept, ix. 6. which had settled Courts of Judicature) God himself would prosecute Esau with his Vengeance, as he did Cain.

Ver. 46. I am weary of my life, because of the Daughters of Heth.] The two Wives of Esau, who were Hittites, were such a continual vexation to her, that she wished rather to die than to live among them.

If Jacob take a Wife, &c.] She pretends only this reason for sending Jacob among her Kindred, and says not a word of the danger his Life was in; for she would not afflict her Husband, but only preserve her Son.

What good shall my Life do me?] I had rather die than live in such perpetual vexation; therefore let him go and take a Wife, as Abraham did for thee, of our Kindred.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Ver. 1. AND Isaac called Jacob.] Sent for him to come to him.

And blessed him.] Renewed and confirmed the Blessing he had already given him, that it might not be thought to be of less force because procured by Artifice and Subtily, xxvii. 35.

Ver. 2. To Padan-Aram.] See xxv. 20.

Ver. 3. And God Almighty bless thee, &c.] This is the solemn Blessing mentioned ver. 1. wherein he ratifies what he had done; and more fully and distinctly settles the Land of Promise upon him, and makes him the Father of the Promised Seed.

Ver. 4. Give thee the Blessing of Abraham.] The Blessing of Abraham was, That he should inherit the Land of Canaan; and that in his Seed all the Nations of the Earth should be blessed, Gen. xv. 18. xxii. 18. both which he now confirms to Jacob.

Ver. 5. And Isaac sent away Jacob,] In some haste, as the LXX translate, ver. 2. Arise, flee, i. e. depart without any delay. Which looks as if Rebekah had at last suggested something to him of the Danger he was in.

And he went to Padan-Aram.] Prepared himself to go and set forward. Or else it is spoken by anticipation; for he did not come thither till after several Passages, which are related in this and in the next Chapter.

Son of Bethuel the Syrian.] See xxv. 20.

Jacob's and Esau's Mother.] Now Jacob is put first, as being lately declared Isaac's Heir, and Heir of all the Promises.

Ver. 9. Then went Esau unto Ishmael, &c.] To the Family of Ishmael; for he himself died fourteen Years ago. And therefore Nebaioth (his eldest Son, xxv. 13.) is here mentioned as the present Head of the Family; whose Sister Esau married. Whereby he showed himself not to have any great regard to the Divine Revelation; otherwise he could not but have known, that this Family being descended from a Bond-woman was not to inherit the Promises made to Abraham and Isaac.

Ver. 10. Jacob went out from Beer-sheba, &c.] Quite alone, without any Servants to attend him, and without any Presents to court a Wife, or gain the Kindness of Laban: Neither of which were wanting, when Abraham sent Eliezer to take a Wife for Isaac. But as he was sent away in haste, (as I noted before, ver. 5.) so hereby the Anger of Esau was mitigated, who at present was left the sole Possessor of all Isaac's Riches, and saw Jacob depart in a poor Condition. This also was an Act of Divine Faith, that God would take a singular Care of him, and let him want nothing. And as they could not but hope that Laban, being so near a Relation, would be glad to see him and entertain him; so it is probable, he might carry Letters of Credence with him, that he was to be Heir to Isaac, as Eliezer assured them, Isaac was to be to Abraham, xxiv. 36. We are to suppose likewise, that he was not sent without Money to bear his Charges, (as we speak) and had some Provision with him: For we read of Oil, ver. 18. which he poured on the top of the Pillar.

Ver. 11. And he lighted upon a certain place, &c.] A convenient place (shaded with lovely Trees, see ver. 19.) to lodge in: Unto which he did not go by design, but happened (as we speak) upon it when he did not think of it.

And he took of the Stones of that place.] One Stone, from among many others that were there: As appears from ver. 18. The same form of Speech was observed before, xix. 29. xxi. 7.

Ver. 12. And he dreamed.] He had the following Representation made to him in a Dream.

Behold, a Ladder, &c.] It is judiciously observed by Maimonides in his Preface to his More Nevochim, that there are two sorts of Prophetic Parables, (as he calls them) in one of which, every word hath some peculiar signification: In the other, the whole Parable represents the thing intended, but every word hath not its weight, some serving only for Elegance. Among the first sort he reckons this: In which the Ladder may be thought to represent the Divine Providence, which governs all things; and particularly now directed Jacob in his Journey, every step of which was under God's Guidance. It being set upon the Earth, denoted, he thinks, the Steadfastness of Providence, which nothing is able to shake: And the top of it reaching to Heaven, signifies, that it extends itself all the World over, to every thing, great or small, high or low: And the several Steps in the Ladder, the Motions and Actions of Divine Providence: The Angels which went up and down, signify, that they are the great Ministers of God's Providence, by whom he manages all things here below; and that they are never idle, but always in motion to serve those especially who serve God faithfully: Their ascending represents their going to receive the Divine Orders and Commands; and their descending, the execution of his Orders. Or, (with a peculiar respect to Jacob's present Condition) the one signified their safe Conduct of him in his Journey to Padan-Aram; and the other, their bringing him safe home again.

This is infinitely more solid than the Conceit of almost all the ancient Rabbins, That God represented in this Ladder the Rise and the Fall of the four great Monarchies. For where is there any mention in this Dream of four Angels? Or, of seventy Steps representing the seventy Years Captivity in Babylon? Or, of two and fifty Steps representing the time of the Reign of the four Kings of Persia and Media, according to their Computation? &c. All this is the pure Invention of idle Men, who dream upon the Holy Scriptures.

Ver. 13. And behold, the LORD stood above it.] Finally, he saw the Divine Majesty or Glory, (so the Targum here expounds it) as the unmovable Mover of all things. From whom all comes, as the first Cause; and to whom all returns, as the last End.

I am the LORD God, &c.] This is the first time that we read of God's appearing to Jacob: And it was only in a Dream; but it made such a deep impression upon him, that he doubted not of the Truth of what was now expressly promised him by God himself, that he should have the Blessing of Abraham, as his Father had told him, ver. 4.

Ver. 15. Behold, I am with thee.] Or, will be with thee, i. e. My peculiar Providence shall be over thee, and take care of thy Safety, as Maimonides well expounds it in his More Nevoch. P. iii. cap. 18.

I will not leave thee, &c.] This shows the intent of the Dream was to comfort Jacob, in his solitary and poor Condition, by an assurance that God's watchful Providence should attend him till he had accomplished all his Promises to him.

Ver. 16. Surely the LORD is in this place.] By his special extraordinary Presence: For here he had manifested himself to him, and given him singular Assurances of his Favour, and that, the very first Night after he went from home: Which made this Place more acceptable to him than his Father's House. For now he was become a Prophet, as Maimonides observes, More Nevoch. P. ii. cap. 45. where he says, That they who prophecy in a Dream, do not call it a Dream after Prophecy is come to them in a Dream, but simply say it was a Prophecy. Thus the Patriarch Jacob, after he awakened out of his Prophetick Dream, (wherein he heard the LORD speak to him, ver. 13, 14.) he doth not call it a Dream, but roundly says, Surely the LORD is in this place, &c.

And I knew it not.] I did not expect to meet with such a Divine Appearance and Revelation to me.

Ver. 17. And he was afraid.] Possessed with a religious, awful Apprehension of God. Which made him say, How dreadful is this place?] With what Reverence ought I here to behave myself?

This is none other but the House of God.] The Divine Majesty dwells here: This is not a common Place, but a sacred; having a Divine Presence in it.

And this is the Gate of Heaven.] Here God keeps his Court, attended by his Holy Angels; whom he had seen come from Heaven hither, and go up from thence thither. So Mr. Mede explains it, Book ii. p. 436. The Presence of God in one place more than another, consists in his Train or Retinue. A King is there, where his Court is; and so God is there especially present, where the Angels keep their Station. Which is the meaning of the Gate of Heaven, i. e. Heaven's Court: For the Gate was wont to be the Judgment-Hall, and the Place where Kings and Senators used to sit, attended by their Guards and Ministers.

Ver. 18. Took the stone, and set it up for a Pillar.] Upon the top of some other Stones which he heaped up together: That it might remain as a Monument of the Divine Mercy to him, and preserve the Memory of this Heavenly Vision; and that by this Token he might know this Place when God brought him back again, and commemorate his Goodness to him here.

This Stone was held in great Veneration by the Jews in future times, and translated to Jerusalem. After the destruction of which by Titus, they were wont (upon that Day when it was taken, which was the only Day they were permitted to come thither) with great Lamentation and rending their Garments, to go and anoint this Stone. Such is the Power of fond Superstition. See Vossius, de Idolol. Lib. vi. cap. 38.

Poured Oil on the top of it.] Not in honour of this Stone, (as Bonsferius himself confesses) much less of any Idol to which it was dedicated, but to consecrate it as a Monument of God's great Mercy to him in the before-mentioned celestial Vision. Oil, it appears by this, was anciently used in consecrating things, before the Law of Moses: And not only in this Family, but in others also, it is probable; from whence the Pagan Custom came of anointing Stones, which by Theophrastus are called Λιπαγὰ Λίθοις, upon which superstitious People were wont, when they met with them in the Highways, to pour Oil, and fall down and worship. A great many Authors mention them, which are collected by Elmenhorstius in his Observations upon Arnobius, p. 37. They that would be satisfied how wretchedly some of the Romish Writers plead for the worship of Images from this very place, may read Dr. Jackson's Treatise of the Original of Unbelief, Chap. xxxv. where he excellently explains this Action of Jacob, n. 5, 6, 7.

Ver. 19. And he called the Name of that place Bethel.] From this word Bethel came the word Βαυῦλια (as Scaliger in his Animadv. upon Euseb. p. 198. and others think) among the Heathen: Whereby they denoted rude Stones, which they worshipped either as Symbols of Divinity, or as true Gods, animated by some heavenly Power. Of which Worship, see Photius in his Bibliotheca, ccxlii. But especially Bochartus, L. ii. Canaan, cap. 1. where he shows the Phœnicians (at least as the Jews think) first worshipped this very Stone which Jacob anointed: And afterward consecrated others, which they called Bætylia, and Bætyli, in memory of this Stone anointed at Bethel. See p. 785, 786. Certain it is, this idolatrous Practice came very early into the World: Which made Moses forbid the erecting of such Pillars, they being in his time converted to a prophane Use, Lev. xxvi. 1. Deut. xii. 3. xvi. 22.

But the name of that City.] Which was near to the place where this Pillar was set up.

Was Luz, at the first.] So called, perhaps, from the many Almond-trees which grew there, (for Luz signifies an Almond, see xxx. 37.) among which, it is probable, Jacob took up his lodging, because they were a kind of Covering to him. Both this Luz in the Tribe of Benjamin, and the other among the Hittites, in the Tribe of Ephraim, Judg. i. 26. Bochart doubts not had their Name from this Original, L. i. Canaan, cap. 35.

Ver. 20. Jacob vowed a Vow.] This is the first Vow that we read of in Scripture: Which all Men allow is a part of Religion, and so was acknowledged by the Law of Moses, Deut. xxiii. 21. Psalm l. 12. Psalm lxxv. 2, &c.

Perhaps Jacob was the first, that in this manner expressed his devout Affection towards God.

If God will be with me, &c.] Perform his Promise to me, ver. 15.

Give me Bread to eat, &c.] Support and maintain me; which is the explication of the Promise.

Ver. 21. Then shall the LORD be my God.] I will most righteously worship and serve him. Which doth not imply, that he would not worship him if he did not bring him home in Peace, but that, if he did, he would perform some special Service to him, and worship him with extraordinary Devotion; consecrating (as it follows) this Place to his Honour, offering him Sacrifice, and giving him the Tenth of all he had, to maintain his Worship.

Ver. 22. And this Stone, which I have set for a Pillar.] All Pillars were not unlawful, but such only as were for idolatrous Uses; as Maimonides resolves, L. de Idol. cap. vi. §. 8. And therefore the Jews, so expound those words before-before-mentioned, Thou shalt not set thee up any Statue or Pillar, which the LORD thy God hateth, Deut. xvi. 22. concerning Pillars set up for worship, not of those for memorial.

Shall be God's House.] Here will I set apart a Place for God's solemn Worship and Service: Build an Altar and offer Sacrifice, &c. See xxxv. 3.

Give the tenth unto thee.] Δεκάτω ἅπ' ἑμμοισμῶν, saith Josephus, the Tithe of all his Income, for the maintenance of Burnt-Sacrifices, and such-like pious Uses; and, perhaps, for the Relief of the Poor. As for the Priests, we do not yet read of any Tithe given to them: Tho' Mr. Selden (in his History of Tribes, p. 4, &c. and Review, p. 451.) thinks they were paid to Isaac, who was then Priest of the Family. And so Bishop Mountague in his Book against him, p. 199. who observes that we read only of Abraham and Jacob paying Tithe, not of Isaac; because Isaac was a more special Type of Christ than either of these. And Abraham and Jacob were Types of those two People who were to have part in the true Isaac; for Abraham was Father of all the Faithful; and Jacob was a Type of the Synagogue; as St. Ambrose handles these Matters in the Life of Abraham. Yet the same Bishop confesses, That many doubt whether Jacob paid the Tenth of all to Isaac, or immediately to God: Because Jacob also was a Priest himself. See p. 205, &c.

This, I think, we may certainly conclude from this place, That Jacob, the Grand-child of Abraham, vowing the Tenth of all, as Abraham had given the Tenth of the Spoil, he was induced to it by the Custom which was then among religious People. How they came to pitch upon this Portion rather than a Fifth, Sixth, or any other, is not so easy to be resolved. But they seem to speak with much Reason, who observe that in this Number Ten, all Nations in a manner end their Account (Aristotle in his Problems, L. 3. §. xv.) and then begin again with compound Numbers. Or, as others phrase it, This is the end of less Numbers, and the beginning of greater: So that it was look'd upon as the most perfect of all other, and accordingly had in great regard. But after all, it seems most likely to me, that they had some Divine Direction for it, as they had for Sacrificing. And it may be further noted, That what they gave to their Kings was the Tenth Part, as well as what they gave to God. And nothing more common among the Gentiles than Tenths paid to their Kings; and that, very anciently; for it appears from 1 Sam. viii. 14, 15, 17. that it was part of the Jus Regium among the Eastern People. Aristotle himself mentions it under the Name of Πάλαιος νόμος, an ancient Law in Babylon: And it was also used in Athens, which was a Commonwealth, as Dr. Spencer shows in his Learned Work, De Leg. Hebr. Ritual. L. iii. cap. x. §. 1. And Bishop Mountague shows they were paid among the Romans, p. 248, &c.

CHAP. XXIX.

Ver. 1. AND Jacob went on his Journey.] Because the Hebrew Phrase for went on, is lift up his Feet; some will have it that he proceeded most cheerfully in his Journey, after this glorious Vision. Which we may believe to be true, tho' not signified by this manner of speaking.

To the People of the East.] To Mesopotamia, which lay Eastward from Canaan.

Ver. 2. A great stone upon the Well's Mouth.] To keep the Water clean and cool.

Ver. 5. Laban the son of Nabor.] Grand-son of Nabor: Who is mentioned rather than Bethuel, because he was the Head of the Family.

Ver. 6. Rachel his Daughter.] Her Name in Hebrew signifies a Sheep. For it was anciently the manner to give Names, even unto Families, from Cattle, both great and small. So Varro tells us, Lib. ii. de Re Rustica, c. 1.

Multa nomina habemus ab utroque pecore, &c. à minore, PORCIUS, OVILIUS, CAPRILIUS; à majore, EQUITIUS, TAURUS, &c. See Bochart, P. i. Hierozoic. Lib. ii. cap. 43.

Ver. 7. It is yet high day, &c.] A great deal of the Afternoon yet remains. It was the Custom of those Eastern Countries, where the Sun had great Power in Summer-time, to bring their Flocks towards Noon into shady places, where there was Water to refresh them; otherwise the extreme Heat would have killed them. There they rested (it appears by many places of Scripture, particularly Cantic. i. 7.) till the Heat of the Day was over, and then having watered them again, they carried them out to feed till Sun-set.

Ver. 9. For she kept them.] It was a noble Employment in those days to keep Sheep: Whence God himself hath the Name of the Shepherd of Israel. She had those under her, we are to suppose, who took the greatest pains about them; but she was the chief Shepherdess, who inspected them all.

Ver. 10. Went near, and rolled the Stone.] He was stronger, or more dextrous at such things, than any body there: Or the meaning is, he assisted in this Work; and, perhaps, was the first that set his Hand about it.

Ver. 11. Jacob kissed Rachel.] Having told her who he was, and satisfied her of the truth of it, then (after the Custom used among near Relations at their first meeting) he saluted her; and that, with more than ordinary affection, for he wept for joy to see her. Laban in like manner kissed him.

Ver. 12. Her Father's Brother.] So all near Relations are called, ver. 15.

Ver. 13. He told Laban all these things.] Which are mentioned in the foregoing and this Chapter. The reason of his coming from home; God's Providence over him in his Journey; and his happy meeting with Rachel.

Ver. 14. Surely thou art my Bone and my Flesh.] So very near of kin to me, that I can deny thee nothing.

Ver. 15. Because thou art.] Or, as De Dieu translates the word Haci, (and gives many Instances of it) Art thou not my Brother? Is it fit then, that thou shouldest serve me for nothing?

Ver. 17. Leah was tender-eyed.] Some translate it, had delicate Eyes. So the Chaldees: And then the meaning is, All her Beauty lay in her Eyes. 1 Beautiful Beautiful and well-favoured.] Was every way amiable, being well-shap'd, having good Features and a fine Complexion.

Ver. 18. I will serve thee Seven Years for Rachel, &c.] He had not brought Money enough with him to purchase a Wife (as the Manner was in those Days) and therefore offers his Service for Seven Years instead of it.

Ver. 19. It is better that I give her thee, &c.] He seems to answer cunningly, and yet one cannot but take it for a Contract, as it appears to have been by ver. 21.

Ver. 20. They seem'd unto him but a few Days.] He valu'd Rachel so much, that the Price at which he purchas'd her seem'd inconsiderable.

Ver. 21. Give me my Wife.] So she had been by Contract ever since it was made (ver. 19.) and he doth not now demand that he might have her to Wife, but that he might enjoy her, being already his Wife by that solemn Agreement made Seven Years ago.

Ver. 22. Laban gather'd together the Men of the Place.] All such private Contracts were compleated by the Elders or Governors of the Place, in the Presence of all the People; we had an Instance of this before in Abraham's Purchase of a Sepulchre for his Family, xxiii. 11, 18. which was a sacred and religious thing, as well as the Rites of Marriage, and therefore both of them Publici Juris, as Cornel. Bertram speaks, Part of the Publick Care.

Ver. 23. In the Evening.] At Bed-time.

Brought her to him.] The Modesty of those Times made them bring the Bride to her Husband's Bed veil'd, and without Lights; so that it was the easier for Laban to deceive Jacob, by bringing Leah to him, whom he could not hope so readily to dispose in Marriage as Rachel, because she was homely.

Ver. 24. Gave unto his Daughter, Zilpah his Maid, &c.] A very poor Portion, yet all that he gave to Rachel afterward, ver. 29. which made them say, that he us'd them as Strangers, not as his Children, putting them off without any Portion, xxxi. 14, 15.

Ver. 26. It must not be so done in our Country, &c.] We do not read of any such ancient Custom, and therefore this seems a mere Shift, or a Jest; or, if it had been true, he should have told it Jacob beforehand.

Ver. 27. Fulfil her Week, &c.] Perfect this Marriage with Leah, by keeping a Seven Days Feast (as the Custom was) and then thou shalt have Rachel also; for he doth not speak of a Week of Years, but of Days, as Mr. Selden shews out of many Authors, L. v. de Jure N. & G. Cap. 5. where he hath this plain Commentary upon these Words:

Marriages are to be celebrated, according to Custom, by a Seven Days Feast; compleat this Marriage thou hast begun with Leah, and then upon Condition of another Seven Years Service, thou shalt marry Rachel also, and keep her Wedding-Feast Seven Days.

Ver. 30. And served with him yet other Seven Years.] After he had solemnly marry'd Rachel, and bedded her (as we speak) for that he did Seven Days after his Marriage with Leah was ac-complish'd; so this Verse begins, And he went in also unto Rachel, and then began his other Seven Years Service: There was no positive Law as yet against such Marriages as this (with two Sisters) which were afterwards expressly condemn'd, but at present indulg'd, as the Marriage of a Man's own Sister was in the beginning of the World; whence that Saying of the Jews in the Gemara Hierosol. upon the Title Sanbedrim, The World was built by Indulgence; and Jacob, it is very likely, thought there was an unavoidable Necessity for his marrying these two Sisters; for Rachel was his true Wife, Leah being impos'd upon him by a Cheat; but having known her, he concluded he could not honestly leave her, no more than he could Rachel, to whom he was first contracted.

Ver. 31. Leah was hated.] Comparatively, not absolutely; for Leah having joined with her Father to deceive him, he could not love her so well as Rachel, to whom he had engag'd his first Affection.

Ver. 32. Reuben.] The Name of his Son, and of all the rest that follow, are deriv'd from the Hebrew Tongue; which shews that Laban's Family spake the same Language with Abraham's, with some little Variation, as appears afterward, xxxi. 47.

CHAP. XXX.

Ver. 1. Envied her Sister.] Was so grieved, that it made her fret into Impatience and Rage; for it is a frantick Speech which follows.

Give me Children or I die.] I shall make myself away (as we now speak) or die with Grief; see here the great Danger of too eager and impatient Desires, the fulfilling of which was her Death indeed.

Ver. 2. Jacob's Anger was kindled.] He conceived a just Indignation against her Impatience, which he expresses with some Heat.

Am I in God's stead? &c.] Is it in my Power to give what God thinks fit to deny? Thus he puts her in mind of what the Psalmist said afterward, Children are a Gift that cometh of the Lord, as the Old Translation hath it, cxxvii. 3.

Ver. 3. Behold my Maid Bilhah, go in unto her.] She follow'd the Steps of Sarah, Jacob's Grandmother (xvi. 1.) in adopting the Son of her Maid-servant, whom she gave to Jacob out of the same Principle that Sarah gave Hagar to be Abraham's Wife, a vehement Desire to fulfil the Promise, that their Seed should be as the Stars of Heaven, and especially the Promise of the Messiah; which made them so extremely troubled at Barrenness.

She shall bear upon my Knees.] Bring me a Child, whom I may set upon my Knees as my own; for so it follows.

That I may have Children.] Tho' not by my own Body, yet by her; for she being Rachel's Servant, the Children that were born of her were Rachel's Children, not her own.

Ver. 4.

Ver. 4. And she gave him Bilhah her hand-maid to wife.] Of such kind of Wives as this and Zilpah, ver. 9. see xxv. 6.

Ver. 6. God hath judged me.] Decided the Controversy between me and my Sister, and given Sentence on my side.

She called his Name Dan.] The Mothers sometimes gave Names to their Children (as Leah had done to hers, mention'd in the foregoing Chapter) but with the Approbation of the Father, who sometimes controul'd them, xxxv. 18.

Ver. 8. With great Wrestlings, &c.] I have struggled exceeding hard (i. e. in incessant, vehement Desires, and perhaps in Prayers to God) to have another Child before my Sister, and have prevailed.

Ver. 9. Took Zilpah her Maid, and gave her to Jacob to Wife.] Imitating her Sister, and perhaps out of the same Principle, hoping some or other of her Children might be the Father of the Messiah; and therefore the more Children she had, the more likely some of them might be so happy.

Ver. 11. A Troop cometh.] The Hebrew Writers generally expound it, Good Fortune cometh; as Mr. Selden shews in his Syntagm. de Diis Syris, cap. i. and the LXX translate it ἐντυχῆ, in a lucky Hour; and other Greek Versions τυχεῖα, as in St. Chrysostom (Hom. lvi. on this Book) who expounds it ἐπιτυχὸν τὸ σῶμα, I have obtain'd my Aim. Others have ἐντυχῆμα, which is the same; whence the Latin anciently had it, Beata facta, or Felix sum, as in St. Austin, 2. xci. in Gen. and this seems to come to be nearer to the Hebrew than any other Translation; because what other way soever we expound the Word Gad, either for a Troop, or Fortune, we must make two Words of Bagad, as the Masorites do, and take ג to signify as much as גב, according as we translate it, A Troop cometh, or good Fortune cometh; but I see no necessity of this, for taking Gad for a Troop, it may be simply translated, with a Troop; a Troop shall follow this, i. e. a great many more Children; and it must be confess'd, that Jacob in his Blessing, xlix. 19. doth allude to this Signification of the Word, which I doubt not is the truest; for Gad or Gada never denotes Fortune any where but in the Targum of Onkelos and Jonathan, and among the Rabbins, who follow them; and therefore this may be look'd upon as a later, not the ancient Signification of the Word.

Ver. 14. In the days of wheat-harvest.] Which began at Pentecost, when the First-Fruits of it were offer'd; as Barley-harvest began at the Passover.

Mandrakes.] In the Hebrew the Word is Dudaim, which here signifies the Fruit of a Tree or Plant (whatsoever it be) and in the Book of Canticles, vii. 13. it signifies the Flowers; and these are the only two Places where this Word is found in the Bible; which Job Ludolphus gives many Reasons to prove cannot signify a Mandrake, for the Flowers of that have a bad Smell, and the Fruit of it a bad Taste; and therefore, after great Variety of Opinions, he concludes it to be that which in Syria they call Mauz, which is an excellent Sort of Fruit, growing upon a Plant, in the top of which there are great Bunches of it, like a Cucumer; from whence he fancies this Fruit was anciently called Dudaim, from the Hebrew Word Dud, which signifies propinquus, cognatus, amicus, a Neighbour, Kinsman, or Friend; such were these Dudaim, which he calls cognatus aut patruelus ab una stripe profectos. Vide Comment. in L. i. Histor. Æthiop. cap. xix. n. 72.

Ver. 15. Taken away my Husband.] It seems he had estrang'd himself for some Time from Leah's Bed, out of his great Love to Rachel, or because he took little Delight in her; or Rachel's Envy at her having so many Children, when she herself had none, made her contrive Ways to keep him from Leah.

Ver. 16. Thou must come in to me, &c.] I cannot think of any good Reason either of this Contention among Jacob's Wives for his Company, or their giving him their Maids to be his Wives, or for Moses's taking such particular Notice of all this, but only the earnest Desire they had to fulfil the Promise made to Abraham, that his Seed should be as the Stars of Heaven for Multitude; and that in one Seed of his (the Messiah) all the Nations of the Earth should be blessed. It had been below the Dignity of such a sacred History as this is to relate such Things, if there had not been something of great Consideration in them; and what can that be but chiefly the Birth of the blessed Seed, which was the Object of the Hopes of all pious People in those Days? For it is evident, both by Rachel and her Sister, that it was Children they desired, and not merely the Company of their Husbands, as it here follows, ver. 17.

Ver. 17. God hearken'd to Leah.] To her earnest Prayer, or vehement Desire, and gave her another Son.

Ver. 18. God hath given me my Hire.] I purchas'd my Husband's Company, and God hath repaid me, by the Gift of another Son; unto which she adds a further Reflection, as if this was the Reward of her Kindness to her Husband, in bestowing her Maid upon him to be his Wife.

Ver. 19. Conceived again.] The Birth of this Son begat a greater Kindness between them, and made him less a Stranger to her Bed.

Ver. 20. God hath endow'd me with a good Dowry.] By restoring her Husband to her, and bestowing new Fruitfulness upon her; for she had ceased to bear, xxix. ult.

Ver. 21. Dinah.] No reason is given of her Name, but it seems to have the same with that of Rachel's First-born by Bilhah, ver. 6. for, as if she had now got the Better of Rachel, she calls this Child by a Name importing Judgment.

Ver. 22. God remember'd Rachel.] He would not have Leah insult over her, nor triumph too much, and therefore blessed Rachel with a Son out of her own Womb; for that was to remember her.

Ver. 24. Joseph.] His Name seems to have been taken both from ending her Reproach, which she mentions before, ver. 23. The Lord hath taken away (Asaph the Hebrew Word is) my Reproach, and from adding another Son to this.

God shall add to me another son.] This was a great Expression of her Faith; more than we find in all the former Births.

Ver. 25. Send me away.] It is plain, by this, that the seven Years Service for Rachel were now finished, just when Joseph was born: And therefore he desires to be dismissed, having lived with him fourteen Years.

To my own Place, and to my Country.] i. e. To his Father's House in Canaan: Which was his Country, because he was born there.

Ver. 26. For thou knowest what service I have done thee.] He appeals to himself, whether he had not served him with all Diligence and Fidelity: And therefore deserved to be dismissed after such long Labours.

Ver. 27. I have learned by experience.] Or, as the Antients understood the word Nichashti, I have found by Divination: And Aben Ezra thinks he learnt it by consulting with his Teraphim. But there needed no such advice with them; the thing was plain in itself, that he had brought Prosperity along with him into his House.

Ver. 29. Thou knowest how I have served thee.] With how much Care and Fidelity, as he had admonished him before, ver. 26.

And how thy Cattle was with me.] How they prospered under my Care.

Ver. 30. Blessed thee since my coming.] So St. Hierom explains the Hebrew Phrase, at my Foot: Ever since I set my Foot within thy doors; or, since I enter'd into thy service. Others expound it, Wherever I went, or by my leading thy flock. But Mainonides says, this Phrase, Leragli (at my foot) signifies because of me; for my sake. And so he explains the like Phrase, xxxiii. 14. P. i. More Nevoch. cap. 28.

Ver. 31. Thou shalt not give me any thing, &c.] I will take nothing of thee at present; but make this following Bargain with thee, for the future.

Ver. 32. All the speckled and spotted.] In this place, and in xxxi. 10. there are four distinct words used to express what should be his.

The first of them is nakod, which we well translate speckled. For the word signifies little Points or Pricks, which the Greeks call σιγυαλα: As many have observed; particularly Bochart in his Hierozioc. P. i. L. ii. c. 45.

The second is talv, which signifies broader and larger Spots; which we frequently see in Cattle.

The next is akod, which signifies spotted with divers Colours: But most properly, spots, or rather circles, or rings about the Feet or Legs (which we translate ring-straked) so Symmachus renders it λευκὸποδῶν, white-footed: And Onkelos and Jonathan, having Marks on their Feet; rather Lists round their Legs or Feet; for the word denotes binding or twisting about any thing.

And then the last word barud signifies whitish spots like Hail. For barud, in Hebrew, is Hail.

This shall be my hire.] He doth not mean, that those Cattle which were already speckled and spotted, &c. should be given him: For that doth not agree with what went before, thou shalt not give me any thing, (i. e. I will take nothing that is now thine) and besides, it would have been no wonder, if those that were spotted already should bring forth others like to themselves. Therefore the Sense is, That he would separate all the spotted Sheep and Goats; and then out of those which were of one Colour, he would have all that should prove hereafter at all marked with any of the fore-mentioned variety. Now this was a thing so unlikely to happen, that Laban, in the next Verse, embraces the motion very greedily: Thinking that white or black Cattle, would bring forth none but such as were like themselves.

Ver. 33. So shall my Righteousness, &c.] This separation being made, it would appear that if he had any spotted, they were not taken from Laban's Flock; but given to him by God out of them, as a Reward of his honest Diligence.

Ver. 34. I would it might be according to thy word.] He thought this so good a Bargain, that he was afraid Jacob would not stand to it.

Ver. 35. Into the hands of his sons.] i. e. Of Laban's Sons, who were now grown up: Tho', perhaps, when Jacob first came to him, they were so little as not to be able to look after the Flocks; which his Daughter therefore fed, xxix. 9. As for Jacob's Sons, the eldest of them was scarce seven Years old; and therefore could not be fit for such Employment. Laban therefore went and separated the spotted Cattle from the rest; and then, lest Jacob should get any of them to mix with those of one Colour, he committed them to his own Sons, to be fed apart by themselves. And, as it follows in the next Verse, made a distance of three days journey, between the one and the other; that none might be in danger to stray to the Flock which was fed by Jacob: Unto whose Care were committed all that had no Spots at all.

Ver. 36. Set three days journey, &c.] That they might be sure not to come near, so much as to see one another.

Ver. 37. Of the Hazel.] The Hebrew word Luz signifies an Almond, as Bochart proves at large, out of a great many Authors. And therefore St. Hierom here rightly translates it, Virgas amygdalinas. And the Hebrew Interpreters, who will have it signify an Hazel-tree, confess that herein they depart from the Opinion of those that went before them. So Aben Ezra and Kimchi, who both acknowledge that the antient Doctors expound it, Almond-rods.

And piled white strakes in them.] He had three Artifices to compass his end. The first was this, To peel off the Bark from the Rods, at certain distances, till the white appeared between the Bark, which was of a different Colour. And these Rods, thus discoloured, he laid in the Channels of Water, at that time when the Cattle were wont to couple, (as it follows in the next Verse) that their Fancies might be painted with such divers Colours, as they saw in the Rods. See ver. 40, 41.

Ver. 39. And the Flocks conceived before the Rods, and brought forth, &c.] The Greek Fathers ascribe this to the miraculous Operation of God, as Bochart observes in his Hierozioc. P. i. L. ii. cap. 49. But the Latin Fathers, particularly St. Hierom, look upon it as done by the natural Operation of the Imagination. For which he alledges the like thing done in Spain among Horses and Mares: And brings Quintilian and Hippocrates to justify the like Conceptions in Women. Which he backs with a great Number of Authorities, out of Galen and other Writers: Who have observed indelible Marks, to have been impressed upon Children, by the Objects that were presented to their Mother's Imagination, at the time of her Conception.

And St. Austin says the Egyptians, by the like Device with this of Jacob's, had still a new Apis, or Pied-Bull, to succeed that which died: To whom they gave Divine Honour. But whatsoever Power there might be in natural Imagination to produce such Effects, it must be acknowledged that God gave an extraordinary Blessing to this Contrivance: As appears by the Vision which Jacob says he had, wherein God (who had directed him to this Invention) promised to give it success, xxxi. 10, 11, 12. For Beasts have very rarely such a strong and vehement Imagination, as produces such Effects; unless it be moved by some unusual Passion. And therefore we must confess that God excited and stirred up their Imagination; which otherways would not have wrought in that manner; at least, not in all the Cattle. For, let any Shepherd now try this Device, and he will not find it do, what it did then by a Divine Operation. Vide G. Vossius, L. iii. de Idolol. cap. 22.

Ver. 40. And Jacob did separate the Lambs, &c.] One Species is put for all: And the meaning is, That those young Cattle (whether Lambs, or Kids of the Goats, &c.) which were thus brought forth spotted, he did not suffer to remain with the Flock of Laban: lest he should say that he did him wrong by letting them mix together, and so bring forth spotted Cattle, (and perhaps he might also think that they looking upon Laban's one-coloured Cattle, might bring forth young ones like to them.) But, instead of this way of intrenching himself, he had a second Artifice; which was to put the spotted Cattle (produced by the former Device) foremost: So that Laban's Flock should always look upon them, and thereby be the more apt to conceive the like. And then it follows in the end of this Verse,

He put his own Flocks by themselves, and put them not to Laban's Cattle.] Which looks like a repetition of what was said in the beginning of the Verse: But the meaning is, That those which brought forth spotted, by this second Artifice, he also put by themselves; and suffered them not to be mingled with Laban's Cattle: as before he had separated those that were brought forth spotted, by looking upon the Rods.

Ver. 41. And it came to pass, when the stronger Cattle did conceive, that Jacob, &c.] This was his third Artifice: Which is thus expounded by the Chaldees and a great number of other Authors, (which may be seen in Bochart, P. i. Hierozoic. L. ii. cap. 46.) that he laid the Rods before the Cattle only in the Spring-time, when the Sun was ascending, and the Cattle lusty and vigorous: But let them alone when the Cattle came together in September, or the declension of the Year, (for they bred twice a Year in those Countries) at which time they were become more feeble. If he had always laid the Rods before the Cattle, there might have been none but spotted, and so Laban have been quite impoverished. Therefore he chose to do it only in their first and prime Copulation, which was in the Spring-time; and omitted it in the latter, which was in the Autumn. Our famous Mr. Mede follows this Interpretation, Discourse xlv. p. 355. But there is no certainty in it: For Pliny and Columella prefer those begot in Autumn, to those begot in the Spring. And therefore our Translation is most proper, which represents Jacob as using this Artifice, of laying the Rods before them, only when the stronger Cattle came together, and not when the weaker. And so the LXX understood the words, without respect to the former or latter breed: And so the Hebrew words import, as Bochartus shows in the place before-named, pag. 514.

Ver. 43. And the man increased exceedingly, &c.] Some have made it a question, whether he got all these Riches honestly; because Laban did not think of his using any Art, but only of bare casual Productions. But, as what was not directly against the Contract, may be thought to be allowed by it; so it is certain that Jacob might lawfully take what God bestowed upon him: Who seems to have directed him by an Angel to use this Artifice; or, at least, testified his approbation of it: intending to transfer unto Jacob the wealth of Laban, as he gave the riches of the Egyptians to the Israelites. For the World is his, and the Fulness thereof: And he may dispose of every thing in it, as he pleases.

Maid-servants, &c.] To look after his Cattle; and after his Camels and Asses, which he also purchased.

CHAP. XXXI.

Ver. 1. HE heard the words of Laban's sons.] Who uttered such discontented or threatening Speeches, as made him fear they would fall upon him and do him mischief. This was the first cause of his resolved flight.

Hath taken away all that was our father's.] They speak of him as if he had been a Thief: which made him suspect they would use him accordingly.

All this glory.] All these riches, ver. 16.

Ver. 2. And Jacob beheld the countenance of Laban, &c.] This was the second cause of his Resolution to be gone; that he saw by Laban's Looks things were not likely to go well with him, if he stay'd any longer.

Ver. 3. And the LORD said unto Jacob, &c.] This was the third Cause, the Divine Majesty appeared to him, and bad him be gone. And as he had his Warrant, so he seals it with his Promise to protect him in his Return to his own country.

Ver. 4. Jacob sent and called Rachel and Leah.] Rachel is first mentioned as his chief Wife; for so she was in his designation: And so the Posterity of Leah afterward acknowledged; naming her first in the Blessing of Ruth, iv. 11:

To the Field unto his Flock.] That he might discourse them privately: Fearing also, it is likely, that he might be seized by Laban and his Sons, if he went to the House.

Ver. 5. The God of my Fathers hath been with me.] Hath appeared to me (ver. 3.) and bid me not fear your Father.

Ver. 6. With all my power.] I have omitted nothing that I could do to promote his Interest.

Ver. 7. Hath deceived me.] Dealt unjustly with me, in not standing to his Agreement.

Changed my Wages ten times.] i. e. Very often; as many interpret it from the like Expression in other places, particularly Levit. xxvi. 26. where ten Women are put for a great number of Women. But others think that he really changed his Wages just ten times: For he served him six Years after he made the Agreement with him mentioned in the foregoing Chapter, ver. 31, &c. And the first Year, he stood to his Bargain: But seeing him thrive exceedingly, he altered the form of their Covenants at the end of that Year. And in like manner, every half Year, when the Ewes brought forth young ones (which they did twice a Year) and he saw them spotted, he broke his Contract, and made a new one less advantageous to Jacob: Sometimes restraining it to one sort of Cattle, sometimes to another, and not letting him have the whole benefit of his Contract. Which is not at all improbable: For Jacob mentions his ill dealing with him in the very same words, ver. 41. And in the next Verse to this, he relates how Laban would sometimes let him have only the speckled; at another time, none but the ring-straked; and so we may suppose of the rest. See this explained by St. Hierom in Quæst. Hebr. and by St. Austin Q. xcv. in Gen.

But God suffered him not to hurt me.] To defraud me of my Wages, by these changes which he made in them.

Ver. 9. Thus hath God taken away, &c.] He prudently conceals his own Artifice, and only relates what hand God had in the business, (which indeed was the chief, for without his Blessing it could not have prospered) for fear perhaps that they should any way divulge it, and bring him into danger with Laban. For every body cannot keep a Secret, (the Hebrews make too severe and foolish Reflections on Women upon this occasion) and his whole Estate depending on this, he thought it best to keep it to himself for the present.

Ver. 10. It came to pass, at the time the Cattle conceived, &c.] To confirm them in the Opinion, that the hand of God had transferred all the Riches of their Father unto him, he relates what was represented to him in a Dream.

The Rams that leaped, &c.] He beheld them such as he had agreed to have for his Hire; and therefore likely to produce others spotted, and straked, like themselves; according to the common Observation of the Poet:

Sic catulos canibus similes, sic matribus hædos.

For in the Hebrew the words ring-straked and speckled may be referred to the Ewes as well as to the Rams. And it is probable, he had this Vision before he made his Agreement with Laban, whereby he was directed to the Artifice of which he made use; or else God represented to him afterward, that he approved it, and would make it successful.

Grisled.] This word (barud) is not used before: But I took notice of it in the foregoing Chapter, ver. 32. that it signifies as much as great white or grey spots, like to Hail-stones. It is just the quite contrary to nakod, speckled or sprinkled with little black spots, which were upon the Sheep that were white: As these were whitish or grisled Spots, upon those that were black.

Ver. 11. And the Angel of God spake unto me, &c.] In the Name of God, as his Ambassador; God being supposed to be present, where his Angels, who are his Retinue, are said to appear; as I have often noted. See xxviii. 17.

Ver. 12. Lift up now thine Eyes.] He said, ver. 10. that he did lift up his Eyes: Therefore the meaning here is, Observe now, and mark what thou seest.

I have seen all that Laban doth unto thee, &c.] Taken such notice of it that I will do thee Right.

Ver. 14. I am the God of Bethel.] It is plain by this, that tho' the Angel only appeared, ver. 11. yet God himself was present and remember'd him, how he had appeared unto him in Bethel, xxviii. 11, 12. &c. and how Jacob had anointed the Pillar, and vowed a Vow unto him. So Maimonides expounds it; for Jacob, no doubt, faith he, made the Vow to God, and not to the Angel: And therefore the Angel (as he understands it) speaks here in the Name of God and not of himself, More Nevoch. P. i. cap. 27. See chap. xxii. 11, 15. But I see no reason why we should not suppose the Divine Majesty himself to have appeared also, as he did at Bethel: When Jacob saw the Angels ascending and descending upon the Ladder, and the LORD himself standing at the top, and speaking to him, as he doth here. For upon a serious Consideration of all the Circumstances, this Vision here mentioned seems to me to be distinct from what was represented by an Angel in a Dream, ver. 11. For he had that, it is evident, at the beginning of his last six Years Service; this, at the conclusion of them: But he puts them both together, because they belong to the same Matter.

And God now remembers his Vow, to show him that he was well-pleased with it; and to excite him to perform it, when he had brought him (as he assures him he would) to that place again.

Ver. 14. Rachel and Leah answered, &c.] They immediately consented to go along with him, and not so much as to acquaint their Father with it; for they knew he would give them nothing.

Is there any portion, &c.] We shall get nothing by staying with him: The reason of which follows: "

Ver. 15. Are we not counted as strangers? &c.] He hath not dealt with us, as if we were his Children, but as if we were of some other Family, whom he had bought, and sold again.

Sold us.] Not so much giving us in Marriage, as selling us for the Price of Jacob's Labour.

Quite devoured our Money.] Kept to himself all the Money he got by thy Service, and given us not a Farthing of it.

Ver. 16. For all the riches, &c.] God hath but given us that which was our own: And therefore thou mayest lawfully keep it, and go away with it.

Ver. 17. Jacob rose up.] Prepared himself for the Journey.

And set his sons.] As was but needful: Reuben his eldest, being scarce fourteen Years old; and Joseph his youngest, scarce six.

Upon Camels.] They used to ride upon Camels, in the East-Country; especially when they made long Journeys. See xxiv. 10.

Ver. 18. He carried away all his Cattle.] But nothing of Laban's, as Josephus, without any reason, fancies.

Ver. 19. Laban went to shear his Sheep.] Which gave Jacob the better opportunity to escape, whilst he was busy about that, and feasting perhaps his Shearers.

And Rachel had stolen.] In all likelihood his Wives returned to the House, to fetch what they had left there when Jacob sent to speak with them in the Field, (ver. 4.) and then Rachel took away these Images.

The Images that her Father had.] These Images in the Hebrew are called TERAPHIM: Of which we read very often afterward, in the Holy Scripture. Mercer and Simeon de Muis take it for an exotic Word: But others derive it from the Hebrew word Rapha, which signifies to cure or heal; as if these were looked upon as Salvatores, Saviours and Deliverers, or Preferrers from Mischief.

There are other Derivations, of which there is no certainty: But most agree they were a kind of Penates, as the Romans called them, Household Gods: In which Style Laban speaks of them, when he says, ver. 30. Wherefore hast thou stolen my Gods? But it is a great Question among the Hebrew Doctors, Whether, in these ancient times, they worshipped them as Gods, or only used them as Instruments of Divination; as Mr. Selden observes, de Diis Syris Syntagm. i. cap. 2. Where he shows, that several of the Hebrew Doctors take them to have been Figures in human Shape, (1 Sam. xix. 13.) made by Astrologers to be capable (as they fancied) of the heavenly Influences. And for this reason, they think Rachel stole them, that Laban might not enquire by them which way Jacob and his Family were gone. Hottinger also hath many ingenious Arguments to prove, that they were the same with the Arabian Talismans in after-times: Which were Images made under such or such Constellations, to receive the heavenly Influences; either to be a Phylactery, or an Oracle. See L. i. Histor. Orient. cap. 8.

But the Conjecture of Lud. de Dieu upon this place, seems to me far more probable, that they were the Representations of some Angelical Powers, (Teraphim and Seraphim being the very same, by the change only of a Letter) who, they imagined declared the Mind of God, by them. For, in those Countries where the SCHECHINAH, or Presence of the Divine Majesty, did not appear, as it did in Abraham's Family, they had at least some Tradition of it, and of the Angels that were its Attendants: The resemblance of which they made, in hope they might by that means have a Communication with them, and gain Intelligence from Heaven. Of which evil Spirits made their Advantage, and abused Mankind by the lying Answers they gave to their Enquiries. For there is no reason to think that God allowed, much less appointed, the making of these Teraphim: Which Gaffarel adventures to say, were piously used before the Law of Moses, and God manifested his Mind and Will by them. This had been to lead Men into Idolatry, by Image-worship; unto which they were prone of themselves.

Expositors differ very much about Rachel's Intention in stealing them. Some fancy she still retained a taint of Superstition: But I take it to be more likely, that Jacob, who loved her extremely, and was no less beloved by her; had brought her off from the false Notions and bad Customs of her Country. And then she did not carry them away, for fear Laban should enquire by them, which way they were gone; (for she knew they were but vain Idols, which could give no Direction) but rather designed to convince her Father of his Superstition, by letting him see, that his Gods (as he called them) could not preserve themselves, much less do any service to him. Or, perhaps, she intended to give herself some Portion of his Goods, which she thought justly belonged to her: And so took these Teraphim, which were of some value (tho' small Images) because they are generally supposed to have been made of Silver.

Ver. 20. Jacob stole away unawares.] Without the knowledge of Laban. For the word Heart (as it is in the Hebrew) is here put for the Understanding and Will.

Laban the Syrian.] There being no necessity of mentioning his Country, (which was well known from the preceding Story) some think he is here called the Syrian, to denote that as cunning as he was, Jacob was too hard for him. For the Syrians, in ancient Authors, are observed to have been a very crafty, subtle People. But there is no certainty of this; there being a frequent Redundance very obvious in this Language. See ver. 25.

Ver. 21. So he fled, &c.] Pack'd up his Baggage (as we now speak) and made all ready for a speedy flight: And (as it follows) rose up, and made all the haste he could to get over the River.

And passed over the River.] i. e. Euphrates, frequently called in Scripture the River; in regard of its eminence.

Mount Gilead.] So called afterward, from what Jacob and Laban did there, ver. 48. It joined to Mount Libanus.

Ver. 22. On the third day.] There was such a distance between Jacob's Flock and his (xxxiii. 36.) that he could not hear sooner; especially when he was taken up with other business, (ver. 19.) and did not make enquiry.

Ver. 23.

Ver. 23. Took his Brethren.] Some of his near Kindred.

They overtook him.] The Hebrew word imports, They came close up to him.

Ver. 24. And God came to Laban the Syrian in a Dream, &c.] See concerning this Expression, xx. 3.

Speak not to Jacob either good or bad.] About his return to thee. Unto which God charges him he should neither allure him by Promises, nor affright him by Threats.

Ver. 25. Then Laban overtook Jacob.] This is a different word from that in ver. 23. signifying he came near, or approached just to him: So that they might confer one with another.

Now Jacob had pitched his Tent, &c.] For Jacob and Laban had both pitched their Tents in the same Mount, not far from one another. This, Josephus thinks, they had done in the Evening; when Laban came up so close to him, that if the Night had not parted them, they might then have discoursed together: Which they did next Morning, when they came nearer one to another; after God had warned Laban not to stop his Journey.

Here Gilead is redundant, as the word Syrian was before in ver. 20, 24.

Ver. 26. As Captives taken with the Sword.] As Prizes in War, which are wont to be carried off with force and violence.

Ver. 28. Thou hast now done foolishly in so doing.] He seems to pretend, that he would have been very kind to him, if they had parted with mutual consent: And would have him think he had lost by stealing away, not only the Musick and Merriment, (before-mentioned, ver. 27.) but such Gifts as he would have bestowed upon him.

Ver. 29. The God of your Father spake unto me, &c.] There is no ground to think that the SCHECHINAH or Divine Majesty appeared to him; for we do not read either here, or ver. 24. of his seeing any thing, but hearing one speak to him, and that, in a Dream; who told him, I suppose, that he was the God of Isaac, and of Abraham. Or, if he saw a glorious Appearance, it was in his Sleep only, not when he was awake.

Ver. 30. Stolen my Gods.] See ver. 19.

Ver. 31. Because I was afraid.] This is an Answer to the first part of Laban's Expostulation, ver. 26, 27, &c.

Ver. 32. With whomsoever thou findest, &c.] This is an Answer to the last part of it. From which some gather, that Theft was punished with Death, in those days. Sacrilege perhaps was.

Ver. 33. Laban went into Jacob's Tent, &c.] This shows that Men and Women had every one of them their distinct Tents apart by themselves; as was noted before, xxiv. ult.

Ver. 34. Camels furniture.] The Saddle upon which they rode, or laid their Carriage.

Searched all the Tent.] Except that place where she fat,

Ver. 25. Let it not displease, &c.] She begs his pardon that she did not stand up to do him reverence, as became a Child to her Father; and excuses it by an Infirmary which was upon her.

And he searched.] He looked all about the place where she fat.

Ver. 36. Jacob answered and said, &c.] He proceeded farther in his Answer; and expostulates with Laban, as he had done with him: Setting forth the causelessness of his Pursuit, the Injustice of charging him with Theft, and all his unkind Usage of him, from the time he came to him, till his Departure, notwithstanding his faithful Services; which he represents most admirably.

Ver. 38. Thy Ewes and She-Goats have not cast their young.] I look'd so carefully after them, and such was the Blessing of God upon my Care, none of them miscarried. A most high Commendation of his Service. Who would not have valued such a Servant, for whose sake God bestowed such an unwonted Fecundity upon Laban's Flock?

The Rams of thy Flock have I not eaten.] Under Rams are comprehended the Lambs also: For if he had eaten any of them, it had been no great Commendation to abstain from the Rams. But he contented himself with Pulse, or such-like mean Diet, to promote his Master's Profit.

Ver. 39. That which was torn of Beasts, &c.] And that also which was stolen by Theft, was not brought to Laban's Account; but Jacob made them good. Which was not only an unjust Exaction, but an inhuman: For the most careful Shepherd in the World could not have his Eye every where to prevent such things, especially in the dark; as it follows:

Whether stolen by day or by night.] A most barbarous Usage of a Nephew, and a Son-in-law, to make him pay for that which wild Beasts devoured, or Thieves stole, against his will; when no body could see their approach in the Night. Some question where Jacob got Money to pay for them. But it is to be considered, that he did not come quite unprovided from his Father's House; with which also we may reasonably think, he still held some correspondence.

Ver. 40. Thus was I, in the day the drought, &c.] While I served thee the Heat consumed me in the Day-time, and the Frost nipp'd me by Night. For in those Countries Shepherds were wont to watch their Flocks; especially about the time that Ewes were likely to year: As we read, Luke ii. 8. See Bochart in his Hierozoic. P. i. L. ii. cap. 44.

My Sleep departed from mine Eyes.] Many times he took no rest; being awakened by wild Beasts, or by Thieves, or kept awake by his great solicitude for his Flock.

Ver. 41. Thus have I been twenty Years in thy House.] This hath been my manner of life, for no less than twenty Years, that I have been a Servant in thy Family.

Ver. 42. The fear of Isaac.] The God whom Isaac feared; that is, worshipped: As the Chaldees interpret it.

Thou hast sent me away now empty.] Without Goods, Wives, or Children: For he seems to have been so barbarous, that if he had been left to himself, he would have made them all his Slaves.

God

God hath seen my affliction.] How ill thou hast treated me; and taken care to relieve me. For so the word seen signifies in many places, particularly xvi. 13.

Ver. 43. These Cattle are my Cattle, &c.] Because they belonged to his Daughters, and their Children, therefore he calls them his: That is, now he is in a good mood, and pretends the same Care of every thing that Jacob had, as if it were his own. So it follows:

And what can I do this day unto these my Daughters? &c.] How can I do them any harm, when they are so very dear to me?

Ver. 44. Let us make a Covenant, &c.] Enter into a strict League, by some Monument or other, that shall remain as a Testimony of our Friendship.

Ver. 45. Set it up for a Pillar.] For a Monument of what Laban desired.

Ver. 46. Jacob said to his Brethren, Gather stones, &c.] He prays every one whom Laban had brought with him, to bring a Stone; and they did so, and laid them together on an heap, which was flat at the top like a Table; so that they did eat upon it the next Morning, ver. 54.

Ver. 47. Laban called it Jegar-Sabadutha, &c.] One of them gave it a Syriac Name, signifying the heap of Testimony: The other an Hebrew, signifying the heap of Witness. For Gal is an Heap, in Hebrew; and Ed, a Witness. These two Languages were different, but not so much that they did not understand one another, as appears by the whole Story.

Ver. 48. This heap is a Witness between me and thee this day.] It shall remain as a Monument, that we agree not to transgress these Bounds; as it is explained, ver. 52.

Ver. 49. Mizpah.] A Watch-Tower. This shows that Laban understood Hebrew as well as Syriac: Or rather, that these were two Dialects, which differed in pronunciation, and in many words, (as those mentioned, ver. 47.) but in most, had the same common to them both.

The LORD watch between me and thee.] Observe how we behave our selves, when we cannot see one another. Here he uses the Name of Jehovah; which shows he was acquainted with the Religion of Jacob, as well as his Language; and worshipped, 'tis likely, the LORD of Heaven and of Earth; tho' not without some superstitious Mixtures.

Ver. 50. If thou shalt afflict my Daughters, &c.] It seems to be a short form of Speech, importing, God, who observes all things, will punish thee for it.

If thou take other Wives besides my Daughters.] Which might have been worse for them and their Posterity; and therefore he lays this restraint upon him.

No man is with us, &c.] Tho' here be no Man besides our selves, to be witness of this Agreement; yet consider that God (which is infinitely more) knows it, and will punish him that transgresses it.

In these two last Verses he discourses very religiously; which revived also his natural Affection to his Children.

Ver. 52. This heap be witness, and this pillar be witness, &c.] It seems that Laban and his Company set up an Heap, made of the Stones which every one brought; and Jacob set up one single large Stone (ver. 45.) in the form of a Pillar. And, 'tis likely his Pillar look'd towards the Land of Canaan, and their Heap towards Haran.

That I will not pass over this heap, &c.] As Stones were set in the Confines of Fields to be Boundaries, and Land-marks (as we call them) to distinguish Mens Possessions, and limit them from encroaching one upon another, so were this Heap, and this Pillar, intended to be in the nature of such Boundaries; beyond which neither of them should pass armed to offend the other.

Ver. 53. The God of Abraham, and the God of Nabor.] These two were Brethren, (for he doth not mean sure, their Grand-father, the Father of Terah, xi. 24.) and before Abraham was called out of Ur, they both worshipped other Gods, Josh. xxiv. 2. But then, Abraham renounced those Gods, and worshipped only the Creator of Heaven and Earth, as Nabor, I have formerly conjectured, also did; when he followed him to Haran. Therefore I think, we need not make a question by which of Abraham's Gods Laban now swears: For I take him to have been bred up in the true Religion, which made Abraham desire his Son should have a Wife out of this Family; for which reason Isaac also sent Jacob hither.

The God of their Father.] As much as to say, by the God of our Ancestors: Who, after God's appearing to Abraham and calling him out of his own Country, became the Worshipers of the LORD of Heaven and Earth alone. See xi. 31.

Jacob swore by the Fear of his Father Isaac.] By him whom Isaac worshipped, ver. 42. He mentions the Fear of Isaac rather than the God of Abraham, to declare more plainly and undoubtedly by what God he swore. For Abraham had been an Idolater, but Isaac never was.

Ver. 54. Jacob offered sacrifice.] Peace-offerings, (as they were afterward called) part of which were eaten by him that offered them, and by his Friends. This further shows they were of the same Religion, by their partaking of the same Sacrifice, which Jacob no doubt offered to the True God.

Called his Brethren to eat Bread.] Invited them to feast with him upon that Sacrifice: Whereby they confirmed the Covenant lately made between them.

Ver. 55. Laban blessed them.] Prayed God to preserve and prosper them.

Returned to his place.] viz. Haran.

CHAP. XXXII.

Ver. 1. THE Angels of God met him.] To encourage and comfort him with the assurance that God was with him. This is a remarkable Passage, showing the singular Care God had of him: Who, as he appeared to him when he went from Canaan, so now appeared to him again in his Return thither, that he might depend upon the Promise he then made him, xxviii. 13, 14, 15.

Ver.

Ver. 2. This is God's host.] Which attend upon the SCHECHINAH, or Divine Majesty; to execute his Commands.

Mahanaim.] i. e. Two Hosts, or Camps, as it is in the Margin. Either, because there were several Squadrons (as we speak) of the Angels; drawn up like an Army, ready for his defence: Or, because, besides his own Family, which was pitched here in order like a Camp, there was that of the Angels also. The former seems most probable, because this Name relates to God's Host, mentioned before; which consisted of several Troops of Angels.

Ver. 3. And Jacob sent messengers before him, &c.] As he was about to pass over Jordan (ver. 10.) he sent some to wait upon his Brother.

Unto the Land of Seir.] Which Esau, it seems, had conquered in Jacob's absence, according to the Blessing of his Father, xxvii. 40. By thy Sword shalt thou live. This Jacob thought fit to congratulate to him; and at the same time to try how he stood affected towards himself.

The Country of Edom.] So it was called in Moses's time.

Ver. 4. Thus shalt ye speak to my Lord Esau.] He calls him his Lord, that he might mollify his Anger, if any remained, by humble Language. Which sounded as if he had no thoughts of the Birth-right he had purchased of him. This also was the Style wherein others addressed themselves to Esau, after he had won the Principality of Seir.

Thy Servant Jacob.] These are submissive words also; importing his Inferiority.

I have sojourned with Laban, &c.] This hath the same design with the foregoing words; to insinuate that he was much inferior to Esau; having been a Servant a long time to Laban.

Ver. 5. And I have Oxen, &c.] Yet he adds this, That he was plentifully provided for, lest Esau should think he came a begging, and might prove a burden to him; so the Hebrews understand it. And Maimonides observes, that he mentions only Oxen, Asses, and Flocks, (i. e. of Sheep and Goats) because these were the common Possessions of all Men, and in all Countries, that had any thing. But Horses and Camels were not ordinary Goods, but the Possessions of a few great Persons, and in some Countries only: More Nechochim, Par. iii. cap. 39. Jacob indeed had Camels, (ver. 7, 15. and xxxi. 17.) but, it is likely, they were not many, and he had no great breed of them.

Men-Servants and Maid-Servants.] These were a part of their Possessions, as Oxen and Sheep were; which they bought and sold; and were no where more plentiful than in Syria, (from whence Jacob came) if it were then such a Country, as it was in after-times, when the Roman Writers say, they were servituti nati, born to slavery.

That I may find grace in thy sight.] He courts his Friendship, and desires he would favour him, and not hinder him in his Passage to their old Father.

Ver. 6. We came to thy Brother Esau, and also be cometh to meet thee.] They reported, no doubt, what he reply'd to Jacob's Message; and this coming to meet him signifies, that he gave them a civil reception: And pretended, at least, to be glad to hear of his Brother's return; and therefore prepared to come and welcome him into his own Country.

Four hundred Men with him.] Nobly attended; partly to show his Greatness, and partly to do honour to Jacob by a publick Salutation.

Ver. 7. Then Jacob was greatly afraid, &c.] Being conscious to himself what cause Esau had not to love him. He interpreted his coming to meet him, with such a Number, otherwise than it was represented. The Vision of Angels indeed, who met him (ver. 1.) might have fortified him against all fear of Esau's meeting him: But the first Motions of such Passions cannot always be prevented.

He divided the People that were with him, &c.] Put his Family, and all belonging to him, in as good a posture, as he was able.

Ver. 9. O God of my Father Abraham, &c.] As he had prudently disposed all things for the preservation of his Family, at least, of some of them: so he addresses himself to God, (of whose Goodness both Abraham and Isaac had very long experience) without whose Favour he knew the Angels themselves could do nothing for him: For they are his Host, ver. 2. and act only by his command.

Return unto thy Country.] He represents to God that he was in the way of Obedience to his Orders: And then remembers him of his gracious Promise, I will deal well with thee.

Ver. 10. I am not worthy, &c.] Next, he acknowledges what God had done for him already; and how unworthy he was of the smallest part of it.

With my Staff.] As a poor Traveller, having no more than I could carry about me. Travellers used Sticks then, as they do now; for their Ease, and for their Defence.

Ver. 11. The Mother with the Children.] i. e. My whole Family: Which could not consist with God's Promise, mentioned in the next Verse.

Ver. 12. As the Sand of the Sea.] The words of God's Promise are as the Dust of the Earth, xxviii. 14. But that signified the same with what God had said to Abraham, xxii. 17. which this Promise authorized him to apply to himself, as the Seed whom he intended to bless.

Ver. 13. He lodged there.] i. e. In Mahanaim, or thereabouts: where he hoped God would command the Angels, which he had seen, to protect him.

And he took of that which came to his Hand, &c.] According to this Translation, he took what he first light upon, without any choice; being still in a Passion of Fear. But the Hebrew Phrase בִּירוֹ, that which was in his Hand, signifies what was in his Power to present him withal, viz. Such Cattle as are after mentioned; tho' he had no Jewels, or precious Raiment. And it appears that he chose them with great Consideration, in exact Proportions: For having commended himself, upon such good Grounds, to the Protection of the Almighty, his Fear vanished.

Ver. 14. Two hundred She-Goats, and twenty He-Goats, &c.] The Males bare the proportion of one to ten Females. And so it was in the Rams Rams and Bulls; which was the proportion Varro saith was observed in his days and Country. See Bochart in his Hierozyic. P. i. L. ii. cap. 54.

Ver. 15. Milk Camels.] Who had lately foaled: For nothing was more delicious in those Countries (as Bochart observes out of Aristotle, Pliny, and many other Authors, Ib. Lib. ii. cap. 2.) than Camels Milk.

Ver. 18. It is a present.] With which he hoped to sweeten him; there being a great Power in Gifts to win Mens Hearts, even when they are disaffected: As the wise Man observes in many places, Prov. xvii. 8. xviii. 16, &c.

And behold he is behind us.] He would not have Esfau think that he was afraid to see him.

Ver. 19. And so he commanded the second, &c.] He therefore distributed them into several Drove, that they might make a greater appearance; and that he might still be more and more pleased, with the Respect which was shown him, and the Present intended him. For every new Drove, and new Speech, made a new Impression upon him.

Ver. 21. Lodged that night in the company.] Or, Camp, i. e. where he pitched the Tents for his Family.

Ver. 22. He arose up that night.] Before it was Day; in the last Watch of the Night.

His eleven Sons.] i. e. All his Children: For the Daughter is comprehended.

Passed over the ford Jabbok.] This was a little River, flowing from the Country of the Ammonites, and falling into Jordan, where it comes out of the Lake of Genesareth. It was in one place fordable; and there Jacob first passed over himself, to try the depth of it.

Ver. 23. And he took them and sent them over, &c.] Having tried the Ford, he returned; and caused them all to pass over: And so (as it follows) was left alone, on the East-side of the Brook.

Ver. 24. And there wrestled a Man with him.] He staid alone, in all likelihood, that he might commend himself and his Family to God, by earnest Prayer: Which seems to be confirmed by the Prophet Hosea, xii. 4. And as he was Praying, or when he had done, a Man encountered him, with whom he graped; taking him, perhaps, for some of Esfau's Attendants come to surprize him. For it was so dark, that he could not see what kind of Countenance he had: Or, if he could, Angels were wont to appear so like to Men, that at the first they did not discern the difference. Maimonides fancies all this was done in a Prophetic Vision: More Nevoch. P. ii. cap. 42. but the whole Narration confutes this. The only question is, whether this was a created Angel, or the Eternal ΑΓΓΕΛΟΣ, as many of the ancient Fathers understood it. Whose Opinion is opposed by St. Austin, (as I observed upon the xviiith Chapter) and seems to me not so probable, as that this Angel was one of God's Host, mentioned ver. 2. sent from the SCHETCHINAH, or Divine Majesty: By whose Order, and in whose Presence, he strove with Jacob, in such manner, as is here described. In short, I take him to be one of those, whom the Jews call Angels of the Presence; that wait continually upon the Divine Majesty, and make a part of his Retinue. See xxxv. 10.

Ver. 25. And when he saw that he prevailed not against him.] Tho' Jacob, no doubt, was extraordinarily strengthened by God, in this Combat (Hosea xii. 5.) yet the Angel, who represented God, could have prevailed against him, if his Orders had not been to let Jacob have the better.

He touched the hollow of his Thigh.] The Angel gave over the Combat; but made him know, by this light touch, what he could have done, if he had pleased, i. e. quite overthrown him, as easily as he had made him go limping. This discovered to Jacob that he was more than a Man who wrestled with him: And that he had not prevailed against him by his own Strength; but by the Power of God.

The hollow of Jacob's Thigh was out of joint.] The Thigh-bone slipped out of the Cavity, or Socket, into which it was inserted.

Ver. 26. And he said, let me go.] Tho' the Angel ceased to wrestle any longer, yet Jacob would not let go his hold: And, the more to set off his Victory, the Angel seems not to be able to break from him, without his Consent.

For the day breaks.] It is time for thee to follow thy Family over the Brook.

And he said, I will not let thee go, except thou bless me.] By this it plainly appears, Jacob began to understand who he was.

Ver. 27. What is thy Name?] The Angel doth not yet own his Quality; but speaks as if he were unacquainted with Jacob.

Ver. 28. Thy Name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel.] i. e. Not only Jacob, (as this Expression is used, 1 Sam. viii. 7.) or not so much Jacob as Israel. Which Name abolished the other, in his Posterity: Who were called Israelites, but never Jacobites.

For as a Prince hast thou power with God, and with Men.] These words explain the End and Intention of this Combat; which was to show, That he having such Power with God, as to prevail over one of his Ministers, needed not fear his Brother Esfau. So the Vulgar Latin expresses it. If thou hast been strong against God, how much more shalt thou prevail with Men. And it is the Sense of our Translation, which more literally renders the Hebrew words, Thou hast behaved thyself like a Prince (so the word Scharitha imports) with God, and with Men, &c. That is, hast showed such an Heroic Spirit (as we speak) in this Combat, that thou needest not fear Esfau and all his followers: This Victory is an assurance that thou shalt get the better of him.

There is no Body skilled in the Original Language, but easily sees no other Derivation of the Name of Israel is to be sought for, but what is contained in this word Scharitha: Which gives the reason of it. For Sar, as St. Hierom observes, signifies a Prince; and the Jod in the beginning, is the common note of a proper Name. So the meaning of Israel is as much as a Prince with God.

Ver. 29. Jacob asked him, and said, Tell me, I pray thee, thy Name.] Jacob having told him his own Name, desires him to requite him in the the same kind : That thereby he might more certainly know, whether he was an Angel or a Man. For these words seem to demonstrate, he did not think him to be God himself.

Wherefore dost thou ask after my Name ?] Do not enquire after it. Rasi thinks Angels changed their Names according to the Offices and Functions to which they were assigned.

And be blessed him there.] Renewed the Blessing which God had promised to Abraham and his Seed ; whereby Jacob was fully satisfied who he was : For he pronounced this Blessing in the Name of God, from whom he came.

Ver. 30. I have seen God face to face.] Been admitted to the nearest Familiarity with him. For he look'd upon this Angel, as a part of the SCHECHINAH, which now also, it's likely, visibly appeared, and made him call this Place Peniel, The Face of God. Which doth not import that the SCHECHINAH appeared in an human Figure, (for it never did) but that he look'd upon it as a Token of the Divine Presence, and that it approached very near him ; as when one Friend speaks to another face to face, as the ancient Phrase was.

And my Life was preserved.] This is commonly interpreted by the Opinion, which was in old time, that if they saw one of the heavenly Ministers, they were to be no longer Men of this World, but die presently. But it may refer (as Menochius observes) to the principal Scope of the Combat, which was to confirm Jacob against the fear of Esau : And so the meaning is, I doubt not, I am safe, God will preserve me from any hurt by Esau.

Ver. 31. He bled upon his Thigh.] Because the Hip-Bone was out of its place. Many think this lasted only for a time ; and some will have it, that the Angel cured him before he gat to Esau. But there is no certainty of either of these Conjectures.

Ver. 32. Therefore the Children of Israel eat not of the Sinew which shrank, &c.] That Sinew (or Tendon) which fastens the Hip-Bone in its Socket : Which comprehends the Flesh of that Muscle, which is connected to it. He that eat of this was to be beaten, as the Jewish Masters tell us. See Mr. Selden, Lib. ii. de Synedrui, p. 552. Hottinger de Leg. Hebr. §. 3. Vorstius upon Pirke Eliezer, p. 221.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Ver. 1. Jacob lifted up his Eyes, &c.] Being come to his Family, (whom he sent before him over the Brook, xxxii. 23.) and looking about him, he beheld Esau and his Train, at some distance : And put himself, his Wives, and Children, in good order to meet him.

Ver. 2. Joseph bindermost.] As more dear to him, than any of the rest : For he did not yet know that the Messiah was to proceed from Judah, one of the Sons of Leah.

Ver. 3. And he passed over before them.] Put himself in the front of them.

Bowed himself to the Ground seven times.] At some convenient distance he began to bow ; and so, at every other step, or more, he bowed again (seven times) till he came near to his Brother. This was to testify the great Honour he had for him : And to take out of Esau's Mind all suspicion, that he look'd upon himself as the elder Brother.

Ver. 4. Esau ran to meet him.] This declares the forwardness of his Affection : Which would not let him proceed so ceremoniously as Jacob did.

Kissed him.] This word is mark'd in the Hebrew Text (as fourteen other words in the Bible are) with four unusual Points over it : To denote, as the Hebrew Doctors think, some remarkable thing ; which some of them take to be, the sincerity of Esau's Reconciliation to his Brother. And, truly, if he heartily pardoned the Injury, which he conceived Jacob had done him, it is much to be noted ; and ought to be look'd upon as a sign he was become a good Man. And so Mart. Bucer, I remember, understood it, in his Commentaries upon the Epistle to the Romans : Where he makes this an Argument that Esau was not a Reprobate, as some are apt to imagine. If it be said that God deterred him from doing his Brother any hurt, it is more than can be proved. For it is recorded indeed that God threatened Laban in such a manner, that he durst not meddle with him : But no such thing is said of Esau, tho' it would have been of more concern to have recorded the same here, if Moses had known of any such Divine Apparition to him.

Ver. 7. Joseph and Rachel.] The Hebrew Doctors here observe, that Joseph goes before his Mother ; but the Mothers of all the rest went before their Children : Of which, I think, it is not needful to seek a reason. For it is likely Moses did not take care to place his words exactly. Or, if he did, no more ought to be made of it than this ; that Joseph being a goodly Child, his Mother put him before her ; as we commonly do, when we would show a Child to advantage. Or, he being very young and a forward Child, stepped before his Mother, as Children are wont to do, when some fine Show appears, which they eagerly desire to behold.

Ver. 8. What meanest thou by all this drove ? &c.] The Servants, no doubt, had told him, (as their Master had ordered, xxxii. 17, &c.) but he asks Jacob that he might have an opportunity to declare how little he needed or desired such a Present.

These are to find grace in the Sight of my Lord.] To testify my Respect to thee, that I may obtain thy Favour and Good-will towards me. For Inferiors were wont to approach to their Superiors with Presents, to make themselves the more kindly accepted. And it is observable, that as he and all his made such Obeisance to Esau, as signified he was his Servant, (as he calls himself, ver. 5.) so he still honours Esau by the Name of his Lord.

Ver. 9. I have enough, my Brother, &c.] In this he shows himself not to be of a covetous Humour : But as free from that Vice, as from Revenge.

Ver. 10. If I have found grace in thy Sight.] If thou lovest me.

As though I had seen the face of God.] For Esau's kind Reception of him, he could not but look upon as a Token of the Divine Favour towards him. Some think by God may be meant an Angel, or great Man: Into whose presence, Inferiors, as I said, were wont to approach with Presents.

And thou wast pleased with me.] Received me kindly.

Ver. 11. Take my Blessing.] i. e. My Present, as we expound it in the Margin of 1 Sam. xxv. 27.

I have enough.] It is a larger word in the Hebrew, than that used by Esau, ver. 9. signifying that he had enough to spare of all sorts of things: And therefore Esau need not fear his impoverishment, by accepting this Present.

Ver. 12. And he said, Let us take our journey, &c.] Esau invites him to go along with him, to the Land of Seir, and there refresh himself.

I will go before thee.] Show thee the way, and conduct thee.

Ver. 13. And he said unto him, &c.] i. e. Jacob said this in excuse, that he could not go so fast as Esau; and therefore desired to follow after by easy Journeys.

Children are tender.] Joseph was not above six or seven Years old.

Flocks and Herds with young.] The Hebrew word Aloth (in 1 Sam. vi. 7.) signifies Kine that had sucking Calves. Unto which Sense Bochart inclines in this place; and so do Jonathan, Onkelos, and other ancient Interpreters. See his Hierozioc. P. i. Lib. ii. cap. 30.

Are with me.] Must be look'd after very carefully.

All the Flock will die.] i. e. All that are big with young; or, have newly brought forth young.

Ver. 14. I will lead on softly.] Follow thee with a gentle pace; such as the Flocks and Children can bear.

According as the Cattle that go before me.] It was observed before, xxx. 30. that Maimonides interprets this Phrase [Leregel] for the sake: And so he understands it here, with respect to the Cattle and Children. More Nevoch. P. i. cap. 28. Or, because of the Cattle, &c. that they may not be over-driven.

Until I come to my Lord, unto Seir.] Moses omits this Journey to Seir, as he doth his Visit to his Father: Which one cannot think he deferred for so many Years, as were between his return to Canaan, and the mention of his coming to Mamre, xxxv. 27. Or, Jacob was hindered, perhaps, by something which he could not foresee, from performing this Promise to his Brother: Of which, no doubt, he gave him an account, that he might not be thought to break his word.

Ver. 15. Let me now leave with thee, &c.] He would have left some of his Followers with Jacob, to show him the way, and to be a Guard to him; or honourably attend him.

Let me find grace in the sight of my Lord.] In this also be so kind, as to gratify my desire, xxxiv. 11.

Ver. 16. Esau returned that day.] The same Day they met together; because he would not be a burden to Jacob.

Ver. 17. Journeyed to Succoth.] After he had been with his Brother in Seir, if he did follow him thither; as it is likely he did, tho' not here mentioned: No more than the Entertainment he gave him, and such like things; which one cannot think were wanting at this meeting.

Built him an House.] Intending to make some stay in this place.

Ver. 18. And Jacob came to Shalem, a City of Shechem.] Or, he came safe and sound (so the Hebrews generally understand the word Shalem) to that City called Shechem. And it may refer either to the soundness of his Leg; which was perfectly well, so that he halted no longer: Or, to the safety of his Person; in that he was not at all hurt by Esau: Or, rather, to the safety of every thing he had; no evil accident having befallen him, of any sort, since he left Laban. Which is the rather now mentioned, because in the next Chapter Moses gives a relation of a very sad misfortune, which befel his Family.

When he came from Padan-Aram.] Some think this needed not to have been added: Whereas it expresses more fully what was said before, that he came safe all the way from thence hither.

And pitched his Tent before the City.] Because it was the Sabbath-Day, saith Manessah ben Israel, out of the Hebrew Doctors (Probl. viii. de Creati-one) which made him stop and rest here, and not enter the City, till it was ended. But this is a mere fancy, for the Rest from all Labours on this Day, was not commanded to be observed, till they came out of Egypt: And the true Reason of pitching his Tent here, was for the convenience of Pasturage.

Ver. 19. And he bought a parcel of a Field.] He made a small Purchase, that he might be the less imposed upon by the Inhabitants of that Country: Who had disturbed Abraham and Isaac, about the Wells they digged in the Ground they hired of them.

For an hundred pieces of Money.] The Margin hath an hundred Lambs. But this is the right Translation, as appears from Acts vii. 16. And Bochart hath taken a great deal of Pains to show that Kesita doth not signify a Lamb, but some sort of Money: Tho' of what value is uncertain. P. i. Hierozioc. Lib. i. cap. 2. and Lib. ii. cap. 43. For a great while before this time, Money was in use; with which they trafficked, and not by exchanging one Commodity for another. See xxiii. 16.

Ver. 20. Called it El-Elobe-Israel.] This Altar is dedicated to God, the God of Israel; who had delivered him from Laban and Esau, and lately honoured him with a new Name, importing his great Power with him.

CHAP. XXXIV.

Ver. 1. WENT out.] From her Mother's Tent, which was without the City, xxxiii. 18.

To see the Daughters of the Land.] Into the City of Shechem, to look about her with the young Women, (as the Hebrew Word imports) who, as Josephus relates, celebrated a Festival at this time, where some fine Spectacles were presented.

Ver. 2. And when Shechem.] From whom the City, perhaps had its Name.

Prince

Prince of the Country,] Or one of the prime Nobility of the Country, ver. 19.

Took her, &c.] By force (as both the Targums and many others understand it) and ravished her. From whence we learn, that this was done some Years after Jacob's Return into Canaan: For then Dinab was not much older than Joseph; and now we must suppose her, at least, fifteen. And indeed the bloody Fact of her Brethren shows as much, who must be grown up to be Men: Which they were not, when Jacob returned to Canaan; the eldest of them being then scarce a Stripling of fourteen Years old.

Ver. 3. His soul clave unto Dinab.] He could think of nothing else but her: For he loved her extremely, as it follows in the next words:

Spake kindly to the Damsel.] Courted her to marry him, with such Professions of sincere Affection, as might gain her Heart, notwithstanding the Injury he had done her.

Ver. 4. Get me this Damsel to Wife.] Treat with her Father about our Marriage.

Ver. 5. And Jacob beard, &c.] By some of Dinab's Servants, or Companions; for it is not to be thought that she went out alone.

Now his Sons were with the Cattle in the Field.] Which he had lately purchased, xxxiii. 19. or in some hired Ground remote from the City.

Held his Peace, &c.] Took no notice of what he heard, till he could have their Advice and Assistance.

Ver. 6. And Hamor went out,] Of the City, to treat with Jacob in his Tent, xxxiii. 18.

Ver. 7. And the Sons of Jacob, &c.] As they were treating, in came Jacob's Sons: Who, hearing how their Sister had been abused, were very much afflicted, and no less angry.

Wrought folly in Israel,] Or, against Israel. Committed a Wickedness highly to the disgrace and injury of Israel's Family.

Which thing ought not to be done.] Contrary to the Law of Nations, That a Virgin should be violated without Punishment. So Rashi.

Ver. 8. Hamor communed with them.] With the whole Family, Jacob, Leab, and Dinab's Brethren.

Longeth.] Is extremely in love.

For your Daughter.] The Daughter of Jacob and Leab; unto whom he speaks in the presence of her Brethren.

Ver. 9. And make ye marriages with us, &c.] Become one People with us, ver. 16.

Ver. 10. And ye shall dwell with us.] Settle your selves among us.

And the Land shall be before you.] In any part of our Country.

Dwell ye.] He repeats it again, to beget in them a confidence of a Settlement among them, in the enjoyment of all their Rights and Privileges, as much as if they had been Natives.

And trade ye.] Exercise what Traffick you please up and down the Country, without any lett or impediment.

And get you possessions therein.] Purchase Land.

Ver. 11. Let me find grace in your Eyes.] Grant this Petition, which my Father makes in my behalf, xxxiii. 15.

And what ye shall say unto me, &c.] Make your own Terms, I will agree to them.

VOL. I.

Ver. 12. Ask me never so much Dowry and Gift.]

This shows more fully, That the Custom of those times was (as was noted upon xxix. 18.) for Men to give Money for their Wives. But there was a greater reason for a Dowry now, and a large one too, that he might make compensation for the wrong he had done. For there was a natural Equity in those Laws of Moses, (Exod. xxii. 16. Deut. xxii. 28.) by which Men were bound to make satisfaction to the Fathers, if either by Enticement, or Violence, they had abused their Daughters.

Dowry and Gift seem to be distinct things: The Dowry being given to the Parents, the Gift to the Kindred.

Ver. 13. The Sons of Jacob answered, &c.] Hence some infer, that by the Custom of those Days, the Consent of the Brethren was required rather than of the Parents: For the Sons of Jacob here make the Contract, as Laban had done with Abraham's Servant, xxiv. 50. But it is more reasonable to think, that Jacob left it to them to consider what was fit to be done in a matter which required great deliberation; and then to report their Opinion to him, who had the greatest interest in her, and right to dispose of her.

Ver. 14. We cannot do this thing.] It is against our Religion. Which was partly true; for tho' Jacob himself had married one whose Father was uncircumcised, (as Isaac had done before him) yet by degrees this Opinion prevailed among them till it was established by the Law of Moses.

For that were a reproach to us.] They plead Honour, as well as Conscience.

Ver. 15. In this will we consent unto you.] Upon these Terms we will agree to the Match.

Ver. 17. We will take our Daughter, and he gone.] By this it appears they treated in their Father's Name, as was noted before, ver. 13.

Ver. 18. And their words pleased Hamor, &c.] It may seem strange, they should so easily consent to be circumcised, till we consider how passionately Shechem loved Dinab, and the great Affection Hamor had to Shechem; who was his beloved Son, ver. 19. Besides, this was but a poor Prince, and his City little and mean; which he thought to enrich and strengthen by Jacob's Family (who were very wealthy) being incorporated with them, ver. 23.

Ver. 19. He was more honourable.] In greater esteem with his Father, and all the Family, than any other belonging to it.

Ver. 20. Came unto the Gate of their City.] Where all Publick Affairs were transacted.

And communed with the Men of the City.] Such great Matters could not be concluded without the Publick Consent. See xxiii. 18. xxix. 22.

Ver. 21. These Men are peaceable.] They use many Arguments to persuade the People to consent: And the first is, that the Israelites had hitherto lived inoffensively among them.

Let them dwell in the Land, and trade therein,] By a Publick Decree, or Law.

For the Land is large enough.] This is the second Argument, there was Land enough in their Country, uncultivated, which these Men would improve.

Ver. 23.

Ver. 23. Shall not their Cattle, &c.] This is the greatest Argument of all; taken from the Profit they should have by them; the gain of no less than all they had. Which is not to be understood, as if they intended to over-power them, and seize upon all their Stock, but that by Inter-marriages, their Estates would be inherited by them as much as by the Israelites.

Ver. 24. All that went out of the Gate of his City.] i. e. All the Citizens (xxiii. 18.) who were met together in the Common-Hall (or Place of Publick Assemblies) and were soon persuaded to yield to the Reasons which had persuaded their Rulers.

Ver. 25. On the third Day, when they were fore,] And began to be a little Feverish. For the greatest Pain and Anguish the Jews observe, was upon the third Day after Circumcision; which very much indisposed them. See Pirke Elief. cap. 29. and Vorstius's Annotations, p. 195. And indeed Hippocrates observes the same of all Wounds and Ulcers, that they are then most inflamed by a conflux of sharp Humours to them.

Two of the Sons of Jacob, &c.] With their Servants: For they two alone could not destroy a whole City, tho' but small.

Slew all the Males.] The Women and Children in those days were always spared in the most deadly Wars: As when the Midianites were killed, Numb. xxxi. 7, 9. and the Edomites, 1 Kings xi. 16. And so Moses commanded they should do even with the Canaanites, Deut. xx. 13, 14. See Bochart, P. i. Hierozoic. Lib. ii. cap. 56. Selden de Jure N. & G. Lib. vi. cap. 16. p. 745. and de Synedr. L. i. p. 81.

Ver. 26. Took Dinah out of Shechem's House.] Where it seems she remained, after the Rape he had committed, in hope of a Marriage.

And went out.] Carried her home.

Ver. 27. And the Sons of Jacob.] The rest of his Sons (who were able to bear Arms) came after the Slaughter, and helped to plunder the City. Thus they were all involved in the Guilt; which was very great and manifold, as Bonfrerius, and out of him, Menochius, have observed.

Because they had defiled.] Their Prince had defiled her: Whose Fact, it seems, they did not disapprove: And therefore it is imputed to them all, as the cause of their Slaughter.

Ver. 28. They took their Sheep, &c.] It is a reasonable Conjecture of Bonfrerius, That Jacob caused all these to be restored to the Wives and Children of the Slain, whom he set at liberty.

And spoiled even all that was in the House] Of Hamor and Shechem: Which, perhaps, they kept to themselves, in compensation of the wrong he had done; and none of the Family, perhaps, surviving to own them.

Ver. 30. Ye have troubled me.] Disturbed my Quiet, and made it unsafe for me to live in this Country, where I hoped to have settled.

Made me to sink, &c.] Made me odious to all the Country; as a Murderer, a Robber, and a Breaker of my Faith.

Ver. 31. Should he deal with our Sister, as with an Harlot?] As with a common Whore, that prostituted herself to his Lust? If she had done so, there had been no ground for their Quarrel.

(according to the Hebrew Doctors) because Shechem had not then offended against the Laws of the Sons of Noah, (as they speak) i. e. The Right of Nations: Which was not violated by a Man's lying with a single Woman, by her free Consent. But Dinah being forced, and violently ravished, (as they take the sense of ver. 2. to be) they tell their Father they might right themselves by making War upon them. For there was no other way to deal with Princes, whom they could not implead in any Court; and therefore betook themselves to Arms. See Mr. Selden, L. vii. de Jure N. & G. juxta Hebr. cap. 5.

CHAP. XXXV.

Ver. 1. AND God said unto Jacob.] There were several ways, as Maimonides observes, whereby God communicated himself to the Prophets. Unto whom he is said, sometimes, to speak by an Angel in a Dream, as he did to Jacob, xxxi. 11. Sometimes by an Angel, without any mention how it was, whether in a Dream or Vision, or not: Of which he takes this Place to be an instance; and Verse the 10th of this Chapter, and xxii. 15. Thirdly, In other places there is no mention of an Angel, but of God alone speaking; yet in a Vision, or Dream, xv. 1. And, Lastly, God is said to speak absolutely, neither in a Dream, nor Vision, nor by Angel, xii. 1. xxxi. 3. More Nevochim, P. ii. cap. 42. In which Classis, I think he might have put this Apparition to Jacob, as well as that last mentioned: For there is no difference between them, but this: That in the former place (xxx. 3.) it is said, The LORD said unto Jacob; and here, God said unto Jacob, Arise, go up to Bethel, and dwell there.] By this Advice, God showed he still took care of him; and delivered him from the Fear he was in of the Canaanites and Perizzites. Who, one would think, detested the Fact of Shechem; or else it may seem strange that they did not immediately cut off Jacob and his Family, who had taken such a terrible Revenge for it, but let them remove quietly to Bethel. But Moses gives us the true reason of this, ver. 5.

Make there an Altar.] Perform a Vow which thou madest in that place, xxviii. 20, 21, 22. Some wonder Jacob made no more haste to this Place, after his return to his own Country, (for now he had been about nine Years in Canaan) and some of the Hebrew Doctors fancy God punished him for deferring so long to go thither, (where he promised to worship him, if he prospered his Journey and brought him back again in safety) by suffering his Daughter Dinah to be ravished. But it is more probable, that he met with Obstructions, which made it not safe for him, as yet, to go thither; or, that he waited till God, who had conducted him hitherto, should direct him to take his Journey to that place. For, it is very probable, he enquired of him about his Removal.

Ver. 2. Then Jacob said unto his household, &c.] Being to perform a solemn Sacrifice to God, he calls upon his Family to prepare themselves for

And to all that were with him.] Hired Servants who lived with him.

Put away the strange Gods.] Rachel had her Fathers Teraphim, which now, it is to be supposed, she confessed. And he suspected there might be some among the Men-Servants and Maid-Servants he brought with him out of Mesopotamia, (xxxii. 5.) where there was much Superstition: And that in the sacking of Shechem they might bring away some Images with them (for the sake of the Silver and Gold) which they kept secretly among them.

And be clean.] Wash your Bodies, as Ahen Ezra truly interprets it: For this was the ancient Rite of cleansing. Wherein he seems to have followed Jonathan, who thus paraphrases it, Purify your selves from the pollution of the slain, whom ye have touched; referring it to the foregoing Slaughter of the People of Shechem.

And change your Garments.] Put on clean Clothes. Which was but a reasonable Injunction, being to appear before the Divine Majesty; in whose Presence it was rudeness to be seen in fordid Raiment: Especially in those, wherein they had newly defiled themselves by a bloody Slaughter. These two, I doubt not, were pious Customs which their godly Ancestors had observed from the beginning of offering solemn Sacrifices. It being very unseemly to appear before a great Man, in dirty Apparel, or with a sweaty Body. And I do not see, why we should not look upon these as an external Profession of the like Purity in their Minds and Hearts. All Nations retained these Washings, and white Raiment, when they performed the solemn Offices of Religion: Which were not derived from Idolaters, but from the purest Antiquity.

Ver. 4. And they gave unto Jacob all the strange Gods.] Which, it seems by this Expression, were numerous.

And the Ear-rings that were in their Ears.] In the Ears of the Idols; for there was no harm in the Ear-rings they wore themselves. So some interpret it; not considering, that besides the Ear-rings which were Ornaments, there were others worn in the nature of Amulets; or for some other superstitious Uses, having the Effigies of some God or other; or some Symbolical Notes, in which they fancied there was some Power to preserve them from several Mischiefs. Maimonides in his Book of Idolatry, cap. 7. mentions such Idolatrical Rings, as were utterly unlawful to be used; and Vessels marked with the Image of the Sun, the Moon, or a Dragon: Which were Symbols of Divinity among the Heathen; who made Marks also in several parts of their Bodies.

And Jacob bid them.] Buried them in the Earth; after he had first broke them in pieces (as some think) or melted them, as Moses and Hezekiah did, Exod. xxxii. 20. 2 Kings xviii. 4. Which if it be true, it is but a Tale which is told of the Samaritans, that they digged up these Idols and worshipped them. See Hettinger, Smeigma Orient. p. 359.

Under an Oak which was by Shechem.] It was so unknown under what Oak this was, that there is no ground for their Opinion, who think this was the same Oak mentioned in Yesh. xxiv. 26. For he intended to abolish the memory of these Idols; and therefore hid them where he thought no body would find them.

It took up some time to do all this; and yet the People of the Land did not fall upon Jacob's Family, the Providence of God watching over him; as it follows in the next Verse.

Ver. 5. And they journeyed:] And the terror of the LORD was upon the Cities round about them, &c.] Here is the true reason why the Country did not, at least, fall upon the Rear of Jacob's Family when they marched away; because God made a panick Fear to fall upon them. Who otherwise (one would guess by this) had an inclination to be revenged for the destruction of Shechem. For tho' they could not justify the Fact of Shechem, yet they might think Jacob's Sons too cruel in the Punishment of it: For their own Father was of that Opinion.

Ver. 6. So Jacob came to Luz.] See xxviii. 19.

Ver. 7. Built there an Altar, &c.] And offered Sacrifices of Thanksgiving to God, for performing his Promise to him, beseeching him still to continue his Care of him.

Ver. 8. Deborah, Rebekah's nurse died.] She went to attend Rebekah when she was married to Isaac: Which troubles the Jews to give an account how she came here into Jacob's Family. R. Solomon solves it thus; That Rebekah having promised Jacob when he went away, to send for him, (xxvii. 45.) she performed this Promise by Deborah: Whom she sent to Padan-Aram to invite him home; and in her return she died here. But it is more reasonable to suppose that Jacob had been at his Father's House before this time: And Rebekah being dead, (whether before or after is uncertain) Deborah was desirous to live with his Wives, who were her Country-women. And that her Death is here mentioned (tho' we read nothing of Rebekah's) to give an account how this Oak came by the Name of Allon-Bacub, in after-times.

Under an Oak.] There were many about Bethel: Near to which there was a Wood, or Forest; out of which the Bears came who devoured the Children that cursed Elisha, 2 Kings ii. 23. And under an Oak also the old Prophet found the Man of God sitting, as he went from Bethel, 1 Kings xiii. 14.

Ver. 9. And God appeared unto Jacob again, &c.] The SCHECHINAH or Divine Majesty, who bade him go to Bethel, ver. 1. appeared to him when he came there in a most glorious manner: As he had done when he lodged there in his Journey to Padan-Aram, xxviii. 13.

Ver. 10. Israel shall be thy Name.] This is a far more honourable Name than that of Jacob: And therefore by it thou shalt be commonly called. For the Name of Jacob was given him from the supplanting of his Brother, and getting the advantage of him, but this of Israel, from his prevalence over the Angel of God.

And he called his Name Israel.] He solemnly confirmed that Name which was given him before by his Angel, xxxii. 28.

This seems to me to prove, That it was no more than an Angel, who wrestled with Jacob, and told him his Name should be changed. For if it had been God himself, Jacob was as much satisfied then, as he could be now, that Israel should be his Name. But, I take it, God reserved the declaration of it from his own Mouth, till this time: When he ratified what he had before spoken by his Angel.

And thus I find (since I noted this) St. Hierom understood this Passage: Whose words are these: Dudum nequaquam ei nomen ab Angelo imponitur, &c. This Name was not heretofore imposed on him by the Angel; who only foretold that God would impose it on him: That therefore which was there promised should be, we are here taught was fulfilled.

Ver. 11. I am God Almighty, &c.] Here God renews his Promise to him, as he had often done to Abraham. He had first blessed him by Isaac, xxviii. 3. when he sent him from home. Then he himself blessed him, when he appeared to him the first Night of his Journey, ver. 13. of that Chapter: And now again, when he was come back to the very same place where he blessed him before. And he speaks to him by the Name of El-Shaddai, i. e. God All-sufficient: The very same whereby his Father had blessed him, xxviii. 3. and whereby God blessed Abraham, xvii. 1.

Ver. 13. And God went up from him.] It is evident by this, that a visible Majesty, or Glory appeared to him at this time: From whence the foregoing words were spoken to him: Which being done, it went up towards Heaven. In the Hebrew the words are, went up from upon him, or over him; and the very same is said of Abraham, xvii. 22. as if the SCHECHINAH appeared over his Head in great Lustre; whilst he, perhaps, lay prostrate upon the Ground.

Ver. 14. Set up a Pillar in that place.] To be a Monument of the Divine Goodness; who there appeared to him, and made him such gracious Promises as those before-mentioned, ver. 11, 12. and to serve for an Altar whereon to offer Sacrifice. For so the word Matzebah signifies, Hosea iii. 4. And therefore Isaiab seems to make an Altar and a Pillar the same thing, xix. 19.

Poured a drink-offering thereon.] To consecrate it unto the solemn Service of God. For which end he poured Oil upon it, as he had done upon the Stone, (xxviii. 18.) which, in all likelihood, was a principal part of this Pillar. And having done all this, we are to suppose, he not only offered Sacrifice, but paid the Tenth of all that God had given him, according to his Vow, xxviii. ult.

Ver. 15. Called the Name of the place.] Or, rather, of that place; that famous Place, which God had made so remarkable by his Goodness to him. For the Hebrews, not without reason, make the He, before Makom, to add an Emphasis to that word.

Bethel.] i. e. The House of God. So he said he would make this Place, xxviii. 22. and now he is as good as his Word, by renewing the Name he had given it thirty Years before, when he first went into Mesopotamia.

Ver. 16. And there was but a little way to come to Ephrath.] When they were come within a little of Ephrath. The Hebrew word for a little is Chibrath: Whose precise Signification is uncertain. Benjamin Tudelensis saith, this Place was within half a Mile and a little more of Ephrath. See his Itinerar. p. 47. and Const. L' Empereur, on the Place, p. 176.

Ver. 17. Fear not: Thou shalt have this Son also.] The Midwife seems to comfort Rachel with her own Prediction, xxx. 24.

Ver. 18. She called his Name Ben-oni.] Rachel seems to give her former hopes of a second Son for lost; at least, she expected no comfort from him, being ready to expire. And therefore she called him a Son of Sorrow: His Birth being her Death.

But his Father called him Benjamin.] To comfort Rachel in her Sorrow, and to avert the sinister Omen, Jacob immediately changed his Name into Benjamin; signifying, The Son of his Right-hand, or of his Strength, as it is commonly interpreted. Tho' others will have it, The Son of Years, i. e. of his old Age; or, putting both together, the support and stay of his old Age.

Names are oft-times strangely adapted to things; and the Presage of Parents have anciently been observed to be fulfilled.

— Heu nunquam vana Parentum
Auguria —

Which is in no instance more verified than in this Child of Jacob's: Who did not bear either of these Names for nought. There being two very different Fates of his Posterity, (as Dr. Jackson observes in a Discourse of his upon St. Matth. ii. 17, 18.) answerable to the contrary Importance of the Names given him by his Father and his Mother. No Tribe in Israel more valourous, yet none so subject to sorrowful Disasters as this Tribe of Benjamin. It was almost extirpated in the time of the Judges, xx. 25, &c. and yet before the conclusion of that Age, Benjamin became the Head of his Brethren: The first King of Israel being chosen out of that late desolate Tribe: And tho' that King proved at last but a Ben-oni, yet this Tribe stuck close to Judah, when all the rest revolted to his Brother Joseph.

Ver. 20. Jacob set a Pillar upon her Grave.] After that Law was made (Deut. xvi. 22.) against erecting Pillars, the Jews did not think all Pillars unlawful, but only those for superstitious Uses: Not those which were in memory of something; as Maimonides his words are, L. de Idolol. cap. 6.

Ver. 21. And Israel journeyed.] This is the first time that Moses calls him Israel, after this Name was given him by God. Which he repeats twice in the next Verse; and then calls him Jacob again, in the latter end of it. It is in vain to search for a Reason. Some of the Jews will have it, That he calls him Israel, because he bare the Death of his beloved Wife with admirable Patience and Submission to God's Will. But they cannot give so good a Reason, why why he immediately alters his Stile, and calls him Jacob again: See Ver. 22.

Beyond the Tower of Edar.] i. e. the Tower of the Flock, as some translate it; who think there was such a Tower near Jerusalem, because of those Words of Micah, iv. 8. O Tower of the Flock, the Strong-hold of the Daught' of Zion. Which, if it be true, it doth not prove there was no Tower in Jacob's Days called by that Name; but rather, that in future Ages this Tower was renew'd in the same or a neighbouring Place, and called by the ancient Name, which it had in the Days of Jacob.

Ver. 22. Went and lay with Bilhah, his Father's Concubine.] She is called his Wife, xxx. 4. and, according to the Laws of those Times, was truly so; as I have often observ'd all those called Concubines were; tho' not the principal Wives, but of a lower Rank. See Mr. Selden, de Jure, N. & G. L. v. cap. 7. p. 570, 571, &c.

And Israel beard it.] And highly resented it, as we find, xlix. 4. But in this short History Moses passes over Israel's Censure of his Incest till he came to die, which shews sufficiently how he was affected when the Fact was committed; or perhaps these Words, Israel beard it, may signify, that tho' Reuben thought to have committed this Sin so secretly as to have concealed it from his Father, yet he came to the Knowledge of it, and gave him such private Rebukes as were fitting; but proceeded not to publick Punishment, to avoid Scandal.

Now the Sons of Jacob were twelve.] Their Number being now compleated by the Birth of Benjamin, after whom he had no more Children, Moses thought good here to enumerate them; and they being all born (save Benjamin alone) before he had the Name of Israel, it may be the Reason perhaps why he calls him Jacob.

Ver. 26. Which were born to him in Padan-aram.] All except Benjamin, who (as was said just before, ver. 18.) was born in Canaan.

Ver. 27. Jacob came to Isaac his Father, &c.] To dwell with him, and to be the Comfort of his Old Age; for it is not to be doubted he had been with him before, since he came from Mesopotamia; but now came to stay with him till Death parted them.

Unto the City of Arba, &c.] Called Kirjath-Arba, xxiii. 2. from a great Man (Josh. xiv. 15.) among the Anakims, whose Name was Arba, and either was born, or dwelt, or ruled here; it was afterward called Hebron, where Abraham dwelt a long time, xiii. 18. and where he bought a Burying-place for his Family, xxiii. 19.

Ver. 28. The Days of Isaac were an hundred and fourscore Years.] He liv'd five Years longer than his Father Abraham, xxv. 7.

Ver. 29. His Sons Esau and Jacob buried.] As Isaac and Ishmael had done Abraham, xxv. 9. and no doubt in the same Place, he sojourning there (as we said before) as his Father had done before him; by this it appears the Friendship between Esau and Jacob continu'd after the Interview they had at Jacob's Return into this Country.

CHAP. XXXVI.

Ver. 1. THESE are the Generations of Esau.] Which are here set down to shew how effectual his Father's Blessing was, xxvii. 29. and as Maimonides thinks (P. iii. cap. 50. More Nevoch.) to prevent the Destruction of any of the Family of Esau, but only those of Amalek, who descended from the First-born of Esau by a Concubine, the Sister of Lotan, an Horite, one of the ancient Inhabitants of Seir, ver. 12, and 22. His Descendants were to be destroy'd, by an express Precept, for a particular Offence (Exod. xvii.) but the divine Justice took care of the rest, by distinguishing them thus exactly from him, that they might not perish under the Name of Amalekites.

Ver. 2. Esau took his Wives, &c.] The Names of these Wives are not the same with those he is said to have marry'd, xxvi. 34. therefore it is probable his former Wives dy'd without Issue; and so he took another Daughter of Elon (when Judith was dead) called Adah; and the Daughter of a Man called Anah, by whom he had such Children as here follow.

The Daughter of Zibeon.] The Word Daughter here signifies Niece, or she is call'd Zibeon's Daughter because he bred her; as the Children of Michal are mention'd, 2 Sam. xxi. 8. tho' she had none at all, but only educated the Children of her Sister; as Zibeon perhaps did his Brother Anah's Daughter, ver. 20.

Ver. 3. Basemath, Ishmael's Daughter.] She is called by another Name, xxviii. 9. but it is likely Esau changed her Name from Mahalab, which signifies sickly and infirm, into this of Basemath, which signifies aromatic and fragrant; either because the Name better pleased him, or he thought would better please his Father; or she grew more healthy after Marriage; or perhaps she had two Names given her at the first.

Ver. 6. Went into the Country from the Face of his Brother Jacob.] Into another Country, out of the Land of Canaan, into which he lately came to bury his Father, as we read in the latter End of the last Chapter; which being done, he and Jacob, no doubt, agreed about the Division of Isaac's Estate, out of which a large Share came to Esau, who had something also of his own there before (all his Sons before-mention'd being born to him in Canaan, ver. 5.) besides what he had in Seir.

His Brother Jacob.] He knew of no other Name his Brother had, that of Israel it is likely being not yet publish'd and commonly used.

Ver. 7. For their Riches were more than that they might dwell together.] There was not room enough in the Land of Canaan (where they were but Sojourners, and could have no more than the present Possessors would lett to them) for such a vast Stock as they had between them, and therefore were constrain'd to separate, as Abraham for the same Reason had done from Lot, xiii. 6, &c. and Esau having begun before to settle in Seir, did not think fit to bring what he had there hither, but carried what his Father left him thither, where where he had enlarg'd his Dominion since Jacob's Return to Canaan.

Ver. 8. Thus dwelt Esau in Mount Seir.] It is a Question how he could be said to have gone to dwell in Seir upon this Occasion, seeing we find him there before, when Jacob came out of Mesopotamia, xxxii. 3. But the Answer is easy, That then he had only some Part of the Country, and not the best of it neither; and therefore perhaps had some of his Estate still in Canaan, while the rest of it was in Seir; and it seems remarkable to me, that he is not said till now to dwell in Mount Seir, but only in the Land of Seir, or barely in Seir, to which he invited Jacob at his Return (xxxii. 3. xxxiii. 14, 16.) This mountainous Country, which was richer than the other, he got into his Possession after that time.

Esau is Edom.] The Father of the Edomites, as it follows, ver. 9.

Ver. 12. She bare to Eliphaz, Amalek.] This was necessary to be set down (as I observed on ver. 1.) that there might be a Distinction between the Amalekites, who were to be destroy'd, and the rest of the Posterity of Esau; concerning whom it is said, Thou shalt not abhor an Edomite, because he is thy Brother, Deut. xxiii. 7. thus Joseph Albo; for tho' they made a distinct People from the Edomites, and liv'd in a neighbouring Country, yet they possessed that Part of Mount Seir which was near Kadesh-Barnea, as may be gather'd from Numb. xiii. 29. and xiv. 43.

Ver. 15. These were Dukes.] The Word Alloupe, if we may believe R. Solomon Jarchi, signifies Heads, Chiefs, or Rulers of Families, who may be call'd Princes, tho' their Government was not yet regal, but a kind of Aristocracy in the beginning.

Ver. 16. Duke Korab.] He is not reckon'd among the Sons of Eliphaz, ver. 11. but call'd the Son of Abolibamah, ver. 14. and accordingly said to rule over a Family descended from hers, ver. 18. We must suppose therefore there were two Korabs, one the Son of Abolibamah, the other a Nephew of Eliphaz, by some of his Sons or Grandsons, who came to be a great Ruler, and to get the Government of some of these Families, and according to the Stile of Scripture is reckon'd for Eliphaz's Son.

Ver. 20. These are the Sons of Seir the Horite.] From this Seir the Country had its Name, but from whom he descended is not recorded.

Who inhabited the Land.] Who were the ancient Inhabitants of this Country before Esau conquer'd it, and perhaps were the first that possess'd it after the Flood, whose Genealogy I suppose is here mention'd, because Esau's Posterity marry'd with some of them; particularly his eldest Son Eliphaz took Timna, Sister of Lotan (one of Seir's Sons) for his Concubine, ver. 22. yea, Esau himself seems to have marry'd one of this Family, viz. Abolibamah, whose Father and Uncle are said to be Hivites, ver. 2. but here plainly call'd Horites, being descended from Seir the Horite, tho' dwelling then among the Hivites.

Ver. 21. These are the Dukes of the Horites.] The Heads of their Families, who govern'd the Country before Esau and his Posterity dispossess'd them, and settled themselves in the same Form of Government which they found among these Horites.

In the Land of Edom.] So it was called in the Days of Moses.

Ver. 24. This is that Anab who found the Mules in the Wilderness.] Not by Accident, but by his Art and Industry he invented (as we speak) this Mixture, and produc'd this Kind of Creature; so it is commonly interpreted: But the Word found, tho' used 400 times in Scripture, never signifies (as Bochart hath observed, P. i. Hierozoic. Lib. ii. cap. 21.) the Invention of that which was not before, but the finding that which already is in being. Nor doth Jemim signify Asses in Scripture; and therefore others have read the Hebrew Word as if it had been written Jamim (as St. Hierom observes) imagining that as Anab fed his Father's Asses he found a great Collection of Waters (see Vossius, L. iii. de Idolol. cap. 75.) which some fancy to have been hot Waters, or Baths, as the vulgar Latin interprets it; but then we must read the Hebrew quite otherwise than we do now; and Bochart gives other Reasons against this Interpretation, and endeavours to establish another Opinion; that by Jemim we are to understand Emim, a gigantick sort of People mention'd in Scripture, and next Neighbours to the Horites; these Anab is said to find, i. e. to meet withal and encounter, or rather, to have fallen upon on a sudden and unexpectedly, as this Phrase he shews signifies in Scripture; this Opinion he hath confirm'd with a great many Reasons; to which another late learned Writer (Wagenfeil) thinks an Answer may be given; tho' he inclines to it, if one thing were not in the way; which makes him think, here is rather meant some Herb or Plant call'd ιαμειν, which Word the LXX retains, not knowing how to translate it; and thus Aben Ezra affirms many Interpreters of the Scripture have understood it, which seems to be the most probable Conjecture of all others. See Wagenfeil in his Annot. upon that Title of the Talmud call'd Sota, p. 217, 218, &c.

As he fed the Asses of Zibeon his Father.] The Sons of Princes were wont to follow this Employment in ancient Times, as Bochart shews out of many Authors; particularly the Scholiast upon Homer's Odyssey, τὸ παλαιὸν καὶ οἱ τῶν βασιλέων παῖδες ἐπιμαυόν. Hierozoic. P. i. L. ii. cap. 44.

Ver. 28. The Children of Dishan are these: Uz, &c.] From this Man the whole Country, or a great Part of it, is called by the Name of Uz, Lament. iv. 21. which was in Arabia Petræa, in the Borders of the Land of Canaan.

Ver. 30. These are the Dukes that came of Hori.] This Hori was the Ancestor of Seir, by whom this Country was first planted.

Among their Dukes.] Or according to their Families or Principalities.

Ver. 31. And these are the Kings that reigned in the Land of Edom.] It appears by this, that after several Dukes (as we translate it) had ruled the Country, the Edomites changed their Government into a Monarchy; and here follows a Catalogue of their Kings; for I can find no ground for the Opinion of the Hebrew Doctors, that that Alluph, a Duke, differed in nothing from Meleeb, a King; but that the latter was crowned, the former not crowned.

Before there reigned any King over the Children of Israel.] Moses having a little before this (xxxv. 11.) mentioned the Promise of God to Jacob, That Kings should come out of his Loins; observes it as a thing remarkable, being a great exercise of their Faith, that Esau's Posterity should have so many Kings: And there was as yet no King in Israel when he wrote this Book, nor (as it is commonly interpreted) a long time after. This Moses might well write without a Spirit of Prophecy; nor is there any reason to say, this Passage was inserted by some Body else after the death of Moses. We might rather affirm, if it were needful, that Moses's meaning is, All these were Kings in Edom, before his own time; who was the first King in Israel, Deut. xxxiii. 5. For he truly exercised Royal Authority over them, as Mr. Selden observes, L. ii. de Synedr. cap. 1, 2.

Ver. 32. The name of his City was Dinhabab.] Of which he was Governor, perhaps, before he was made King; and wherein he reigned.

Ver. 33. Of Bozrah.] Which was afterward the principal City of the whole Country; as we read in the Prophet Isaiab, xxxiv. 6. and Jeremiab xlix. 3. and Amos i. 12.

It seems, by this List of their Kings, that the Kingdom at this time was elective; for the Son did not succeed the Father. Which may have been the reason, perhaps, why it lasted but a while, before their Government was altered again, ver. 40. Maimonides hath an opinion different from all others, that none of these Kings were of the Race of Esau; but strangers, who oppressed the Edomites: And are here set down by Moses to admonish the Israelites, to observe that Precept, Deut. xvii. 15. Not to set a stranger to be King over them, who is not their Brother, i. e. One of their own Nation.

Ver. 35. Who smote Midian in the Field of Moab.] The Midianites, perhaps, came to invade them; and Hadad march'd out and met them in the Frontiers of their Country, which joined to that of Moab: Where he got a great Victory over them.

Ver. 37. And Saul of Rebooth by the River reigned, &c.] If by the River we should understand Euphrates, (as it usually signifies) near to which stood the City of Rebooth, (Gen. x. 11.) it may seem strange that one should be chosen from so remote a Country, to be King of Edom: Unless we suppose him to have been born there, but to have lived in Edom; and by his great Achievements, to have got into the Throne. Otherwise, we must take this for some other City; which stood by the most known River of this Country.

Ver. 38. Baal-banan.] This Name is the reverse (as I may call it) of Hani-ball.

Ver. 39. His Wife's name was Mehetabel, &c.] None of their Wives, much less their Pedigree, are named besides this alone: Which shows she was an eminent Woman in those Times and that Country; either for Wisdom, or Parentage, or Estate, or some other Excellence.

Ver. 40. And these are the names of the Dukes that came of Esau.] They seem now to have returned to their first Constitution; and Kings were laid aside for some time. But in future Ages, we find they changed again, and then Kings reigned successively, the Son after the Father, as they did in Israel. Some think, these were the great Men, who ruled in Edom, in Moses's time.

According to their Families, &c.] They were the Heads of different Families; and lived in different Places; and, perhaps, reigned at the same time, in several Parts of the Country: So the Words seem to import.

Ver. 43. In the Land of their possession.] In their own Country; whilst the Seed of Jacob sojourn'd in a strange Country, and possessed no Land of their own.

He is Esau, &c.] He ends as he began. This is the Account of Esau; the Father of the People who are now called Edomites.

CHAP. XXXVII.

Ver. 1. AND Jacob dwelt in the Land, &c.] Having given us an Account of Esau's removal to Seir, (xxxvi. 6, 7.) and of the Prosperity of his Family there: He now goes on to tell us, that Jacob still continued in the Country where his Father had sojourn'd; in the Land of Canaan.

Ver. 2. These are the Generations of Jacob.] These words are to be connected with the latter end of xxxv. 23, 24, &c. where he relates how many Sons Jacob had; and then gives an account of the Family of Esau, (in the xxxvith Chapter) which being ended, he returns to finish the History of Jacob.

And the Lad was with the sons of Bilbab, &c.] These Words vehu naar, signify he was very young, in the simplicity of his childish Years; and come in, by way of a Parenthesis, in this manner. Joseph being seventeen Years old, was feeding the Flock with his Brethren, (and he was but a Youth, unexperienced, and therefore called a Child, ver. 30.) with the sons of Bilbab, &c. Which last words are an explication of the former, showing with which of his Brethren he was. Not with the Sons of Leab, but with the Sons of Jacob's Hand-Maids: Particularly with Bilbab's, whom we may look upon as a Mother to him, now Rachel was dead, having waited upon her. And Zilpah's Sons are also mentioned in the second place, as those, it is likely, who were thought to have less emulation to him, than the Sons of Leab. But we see by this, how much our greatest Prudence often fails: For Reuben and Judab, the Children of Leab, had more Kindness for Joseph than any of the rest.

Their evil report.] What evil Lives they led.

Ver. 3. Because he was the son of his old age.] Benjamin was more so than he; and the rest were born not many Years before him. But he is so called, because he had been married a good while to Rachel, before he had him: And he was the greatest Comfort of his old Age; Benjamin not being yet grown up, to give any proof of his future worth.

He made him a Coat of many colours.] It is commonly thought to signify a Garment wrought with with Threads of divers Colours; or made up of pieces of Silk or Stuff, which had much variety in them; or wrought, as some think, with Figures of Fruit, or other things: See Salmasius upon Flav. Vopiscus, p. 396. But Braunius (de Vestib. Sacerd. Hebr. L. i. cap. 17.) hath proved, I think, that the Hebrew Word Passim, here signifies a long Garment down to the Heels or Ancles, and with long Sleeves down to the Wrists; which had a Border at the bottom, and a Facing (as we speak) at the Hands, of another Colour, different from the Garment. See ver. 23.

Ver. 4. Could not speak peaceably to him.] In a kind and friendly manner: But churlishly, and with evident signs of hatred. Aben Ezra fancies they would not so much as salute him, or wish him peace (as the Phrase then was, Peace be to thee) or ask him how he did; as our Custom is.

Ver. 5. Joseph dreamed a Dream.] This was usual among the antient Patriarchs, and others as appears also, by Elibu: Who shows that all Dreams were not Illusions of evil Spirits, Job xxxiii. 14, 15, &c. And long before his time Abimelech was warned by God in a Dream, Chapter xx. of this Book, ver. 3, 6, 7. Upon which Consideration (as Dr. Jackson well observes) we should not mistrust the Reports of several antient Historians, who tell us how Princes and Fathers of Families have had Forewarnings of future Events; either concerning themselves, their Kingdoms, or Posterity: Book i. upon the Creed, chap. 9.

He told his Brethren.] This argues his great Innocence and Simplicity; that he had not yet Understanding enough, to consider how ill this Dream might be expounded; or not Prudence enough, to conceal what might be ill interpreted by them.

They bated him yet more.] The first ground of their Hatred was their Father's great Love to him; and then, his informing their Father of their bad Behaviour: Which was still increased by the fine Clothes his Father bestowed on him; and now most of all by this Dream; which they interpreted to signify his Superiority over them.

Ver. 7. Your Sheaves stood round about, and made obeisance, &c.] Or, gathered round about mine: Which was fulfilled, when they came for Corn into Egypt; of which these Sheaves, some think, were an apt representation.

Ver. 8. Shalt thou indeed reign over us?] It seems they could readily interpret the meaning of a Dream: Which shows how common they were in those Days.

For his Dreams, and for his Words.] This seems to import, that he had more Dreams of like nature; and was wont to talk of them: Which they thought favoured of Arrogance.

Ver. 9. He dreamt yet another Dream.] Which confirmed the former; by repeating the same thing, under different Figures. For as the former was taken from the Earth; so this from Heaven: And is more comprehensive than the former; for it concerns his Father, as well as his Brethren.

Behold the Sun and the Moon, &c.] They seemed to descend to him, or he to be carried up to them: Where they bowed, and lay at his Feet.

Ver. 10. His father rebuked him.] Gave him a check; that Joseph might not grow conceited of himself, and his Brethren might not be provoked to hate him.

What is this Dream, that thou hast dreamed?] What an idle Dream is this?

Shall I, and thy Mother, and Brethren, &c.] Who can believe this? Thy Mother is dead, (which is sufficient to show the vanity of this Dream) and thy Father sure is not to truckle unto thee; no, nor thy elder Brethren.

Ver. 11. His Brethren envied him.] Tho' Jacob seemed to slight what he said; it incensed his Brethren against him.

But his Father observed his Saying.] He did not look upon it as a mere Fancy; but thought there might be something in it. And therefore, tho' he thought fit publickly to slight it, yet he took such notice of it privately, that he preserved it in Mind, and laid it up in his Heart; as the Scripture elsewhere speaks. And it really was fulfilled, when he went down into Egypt; and, no doubt, showed that Respect which was due to the Vice-Roy of the Country: And so did his Mother Bilhab, and all his Brethren.

Ver. 12. His Brethren went to feed their Father's flock in Shechem.] As their Flocks increased, so they enlarged their Pasture: And they often removed to find fresh Pasture. Besides, he had made a Purchase in this place; where they fed his Flocks in his own Ground.

Ver. 13. Come, I will send thee unto them.] Make thyself ready, that I may send thee to inquire of thy Brethren's Welfare. About which he was now the more solicitous; because they were gone to a Place, where they had, some Years ago, given great provocation to the Country, by their barbarous Cruelty.

Ver. 15. A certain Man found him.] Some take this to have been an Angel: Who took care of him, when he was at a loss, which way to go. So Maimonides, P. ii. More Nevochim, cap. 42. Where he makes this Passage the very same with that xvi. 7. The Angel of the LORD found her, &c.

Ver. 18. They conspired against him.] The Hebrew Word signifies, they took subtle and crafty Counsel against him to slay him. Laid their Heads together (as we now speak) to kill him, so that the Murder might be concealed from their Father.

Ver. 19. Behold, this Dreamer cometh.] In the Hebrew, This Master of Dreams; or a frequent Dreamer; one that hath Dreams at command.

Ver. 20. Cast him into some pit.] Which they were wont to dig frequently in those Countries, to hold Rain-Water for their Cattle, when they could not find a Spring, or were near no River.

Ver. 21. He delivered him out of their Hands.] Preserved him from being murdered by them, as they intended; which he did by the following Counsel: Which seemed to have something of Humanity in it; and yet would effect what they resolved.

Ver. 22. Cast him into this pit.] That he might perish with hunger.

And

And lay no bands upon him, &c.] Let not us kill him. This he said that he might save his Life, intending secretly to draw him out of the Pit, and restore him safe to his Father. By which piece of good Service, Reuben, perhaps, hoped to reconcile his Father to him, who was justly angry with him for defiling his Bed, xxxv. 22.

Ver. 23. His Coat of many Colours.] By this it seems he was distinguished from the rest of his Brethren: Being not yet grown up to such laborious Employments as they followed abroad; and therefore indulged to wear a richer sort of Garment with his Father at home. For, according to the common Notion, it was wrought or embroidered with Flowers; which was accounted noble, as well as beautiful, in ancient times; as appears by Plato, who commending the Government then admired in Greece, compares it to such a Garment that hath variety of Colours in it, L. viii. de Republ. p. 557. Κινδυεύει χαλκίση αὐτῇ τῇ πολιτικῶν ἢ ὥσπερ ἱμάτιον ποικίλον πᾶσιν ἀνδρῶσι περικυλμανον, ἔτω καὶ αὐτῇ πᾶσι ἥδησι περικυλμανη χαλκίση ἀν φαίνονται.

Ver. 24. The pit was empty, there was no Water in it.] This shows the use of such Pits was to hold Water; which at this time was dried up for want of Rain.

Ver. 25. A company of Ishmaelites.] In the Language of these Times it is called a Caravan; Merchants not daring to travel alone, in small Numbers, in those Eastern Countries, thro' the Deserts, for fear of Robbers, or of wild Beasts.

From Mount Gilead.] They came from Parts beyond that, but passed that way to traffick there.

With their Camels.] Which were, and still are, the most proper Beasts for Carriage in those Countries, being able to travel a great way in the Deserts without Drink. And the Midianites (who are here the same with the Ishmaelites, ver. 28.) had as great a Breed of them as any other Country; as Bockart observes, P. i. Hierozoic. Lib. ii. cap. 3.

Bearing Spicery.] The word Nechoth, which we, and a great many others, translate Spicery in general, seems to signify some particular sort of Spicery, as the following words do. A great many Conjectures there are, what sort; and Bockart, most probably, concludes it to be Storax. See the fore-named Book, P. ii. Lib. iv. cap. 12.

Balm.] So Kimchi, whom the modern Interpreters generally follow, expounds the Hebrew word Tzeri: Which the Ancients interpret Resin; and Bockart justifies them by such Reasons as these: That there was no Balm in Gilead in these days, but it was brought thither out of Arabia Felix in the Reign of King Solomon: And then it grew on this side Jordan, about Engaddi and Hiericho, not beyond Jordan in the Land of Gilead. Ib. Par. i. Lib. ii. cap. 51.

Ver. 26. What profit is it, if we slay our Brother? &c.] We shall get nothing by letting him die in the Pit: Had we not better make Money of him?

And conceal his Blood.] Tho' we should be able to conceal his Murder; which is not easy to do.

Ver. 27. For he is our Brother, and our Fleish.] Natural Affection persuaded to this, rather than to the other.

And his Brethren were content.] As many of them as were then present; for Reuben was not among them at this Consultation.

Ver. 28. Then passed by Midianites.] They are called Ishmaelites just before, ver. 25. And so they are immediately in this very Verse, [Sold Joseph to the Ishmaelites.] For they were very near Neighbours, and joined together in Trade, making now one Caravan, with a joint Stock, as this Story intimates. Read Judg. viii. 1, 3, 22, 23, 24, 26. and it will appear the Scripture speaks of them as one and the same People in after-times.

For twenty pieces of Silver.] Most understand for many Shekels: Which was a very small Price; but therefore demanded, and no more, that the Bargain might be clapt up the sooner.

Ver. 29. Reuben returned to the pit.] He, pretending some business, had withdrawn himself from the Company, with an intention, when his Brethren were gone from the Pit, to come privately and take Joseph out, and carry him to his Father. Upon that Design he now came thither.

Rent his Clothes,] As they used to do when they mourned for the Dead: Whereby he expressed his real Grief for his Brother.

Ver. 30. The Child is not.] He is dead; as this Phrase commonly signifies.

Whither shall I go?] I know not whither to flee, to hide myself from my Father's Anger: Who might justly expect the eldest Son should take the greatest Care of him.

Ver. 31. And they took Joseph's Coat, &c.] His Brethren, it seems, persuaded Reuben also to join with them in concealing the Sale of Joseph, and making their old Father believe he was devoured by some wild Beast.

Ver. 32. They sent the Coat, &c.] They first sent it by a Messenger; and immediately followed themselves, with the Tale which is here related.

Ver. 33. An evil Beast.] Some wild Beast, of which there were great store in those Countries, (such as Lions and Bears) for he could not suspect his Brethren would kill him.

Ver. 34. Rent his Clothes, and put sack-cloth on his loins.] This was the highest degree of Mourning in those Days. We read often of putting on Sack-cloth in future Ages, upon such sad Occasions: But this is the first time we meet with it; which shows the great Antiquity of such Customs.

Mourned for his Son many Days.] Beyond the ordinary time of Mourning. Many Years (as the word Days sometimes signifies) perhaps, till he heard he was alive. So the following Verse seems to denote, that he resolved not to cease mourning for him as long as he lived.

Ver. 35. All his Sons and Daughters.] He had but one Daughter: Therefore the meaning is, his Sons Wives, or their Daughters.

I will go down into the Grave, &c.] If Sheol here be expounded Grave, then the next words must be thus translated, mourning for my Son, as R. Solomon interprets them. For Joseph was not buried buried in a Grave; and therefore he could not think of going down to him thither. And thus Christophorus à Castro, upon the Second of Baruch, acknowledges Sheol signifies in this place, and interprets it in this manner: Lugere non desinam, donec me sepulturæ demandetis: I will not cease to mourn, till you lay me in my Grave. But if we follow our Translation, which is most common, I will go down to my Son, then Sheol must signify the State, or Place of the Dead; as it often doth: And particularly Isaiab xiv. (where the King of Babylon is expressly denied the honour of a Grave, ver. 19, 20.) Sheol is said to be moved for him, and to meet him, and to stir up the Dead for him, ver. 9.

Thus his Father wept for him.] Continued his Mourning; not only by wearing Sack-cloth, but in such passionate Expressions as these.

Ver. 36. And the Midianites.] In the Hebrew the word is Medanim (a distinct Name from those, ver. 38.) who were a People derived from Medan, one of the Sons of Keturab, and Brother to Midian, xxv. 2. They and the Midianites lived near together in Arabia not far from the Ismaelites: Who all joined together in this Caravan, and made one Society of Merchants, consisting of Medanites, Midianites, and Ismaelites.

An Officer.] The Hebrew word Saris oftentimes signifies an Eunuch: By whom the Eastern Queens were attended. But it likewise signifies all the great Courtiers, (as the Chaldees here translates it) such as the Bed-chamber-Men, the Lord-Chamberlain, (as we now speak) and such-like Officers of State; and therefore is rightly translated here, for Potiphar had a Wife. The truth is, this was the prime Signification of the Word: Till, in after-times, the Depravation of Manners, and the Jealousy of the Eastern Kings, made them set none but Slaves, who were castrated, to attend their Queens; by whom they were preferred to great Offices; and so came to enjoy this Name.

Pharaoh.] This was a common Name to all the Kings of Egypt. See xii. 15.

Captain of the Guard.] The LXX translate it, Master-Cook: And so Epiphanius calls his Wife, ἡ κυρία τοῦ ἀγρογυαίου, Hæres. xxvi. n. 17. Our Margin hath it, Chief of the Slaughter-Men, or Executioners. But the word Tebachim may better be translated Soldiers, than Butchers, or Executioners; and here, some think, may denote him whom we call the Provost-Marshal: Others will have it, the Master of the Horse. But I see no more proper Translation than ours, Captain of the Guard: Or rather, Chief Commander of the King's Guard; such an one as Nebuzaradan was, 2 Kings xxv. 20. For Schar is more than one whom we now call a Captain. See xl. 3. This Phrase Schar-Hatabachim is explained by Hottinger out of the Æthiopick Tongue. See Smegma Orient. p. 85.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

Ver. 1. At that time.] It is uncertain whether he meant at the time Joseph was sold (which is just before mentioned) or at the time Jacob returned from Mesopotamia to live in Canaan, xxxiii. 18. or when he went to settle with his Father at Mamre, xxxv. 27. But, take it any of these ways, there was time enough for all the Events following, before they went into Egypt; supposing Judab's Children to have married very young: As may be seen in most Interpreters.

Judab went down from his Brethren.] Either upon some business, or in some discontent.

Adullamite.] A Citizen of Adullam; which was a famous Town, or City, that fell afterwards to the Tribe of Judab: Whose King was slain by Josbua, xii. 19. And where there was a famous Cave, in which David hid himself, 1 Sam. xxii. 1.

Ver. 2. Judab saw there.] So as to fall in love with her. For, according to the old Saying, ἐκ τῆς ὁρᾶς τὸ ἐρᾶν.

A Daughter of a certain Canaanite.] It was not so bad for a Man circumcised to marry the Daughter of one uncircumcised; as it was to give their Daughters in Marriage to an uncircumcised Husband, (xxxiv. 14.) For an uncircumcised Man was accounted unclean, tho' he had renounced Idolatry: But a Woman born of uncircumcised Parents was not so accounted, if she embraced the Worship of the True God. Whence Salmon, a great Man in the Tribe of Judab, married Rabab, who was a Canaanite. Such an one we must suppose this Woman, whom Judab married, to have been; or else he had offended his Father, as much as Esau did Isaac, by marrying the Daughters of Heb.

Whose Name was Shuah.] Her Father's Name was Shuah, ver. 12.

He took her,] To be his Wife, ver. 12.

Ver. 5. And he was at Chezib when she bare him.] Some think this Town the same with Achzib, belonging to Judab, Josb. xv. 44. But why Moses mentions his absence when this Child was born, and why he sets down the Place where he then was, we cannot give an account; tho' there was, no doubt, some special Reason for it. Perhaps it is to show, why she gave the Name to this and to her former Son, (whereas he himself named the first, ver. 3.) because he was not at home when they were born.

Ver. 6. Whose Name was Tamar.] She seems also to have been a Woman of Canaan, but not an Idolater.

Ver. 7. Was wicked in the sight of the LORD.] i. e. Exceeding impious; and that, notoriously. See Gen. x. 9. What particular Sins he was guilty of, is but conjectured. Some fancy they were of the same nature with his next Brother's. See Bonfrere, or Menochius out of him.

And the LORD slew him.] Cut him off suddenly, by some unusual stroke.

Ver. 8. Go in unto thy Brother's Wife, &c.] This (say the Hebrew Doctors) was an ancient Custom, in force before the Law of Moses: Which only enacted what had been formerly practised, (Maimon. P.iii. cap. 49. More Nevoch.) that when a Man died without Issue, his next Brother should marry his Wife, Deut. xxv. 5. Which Custom afterward extended to the next Cousin, if no Brother remained.

And raise up Seed unto thy Brother.] Preserve thy Brother's Name and Family; by begetting a Child, which may be accounted his, and inherit herit his Estate. For so the Law was; that the First-born of such a Match was not to be look'd upon as the Child of him that begat him, but as his Brother's, who was the Mother's first Husband. All the following Children were to be his own.

Ver. 9. Onan knew that the Seed should not be his.] i. e. The First-born should be reputed his Brother's Child.

Left he should give Seed to his Brother,] Or, left a Child should be born in the name of his Brother, as the Vulgar Latin interprets it very exactly, according to the Opinion of the Hebrews; as Mr. Selden observes, L. vii. de Jure N. & G. cap. 3.

Ver. 10. The thing which he did, displeased the LORD.] This made his Sin the more heinous, that he acted against the Divine Promise made to Abram, concerning the multiplying of his Seed; especially against the Belief of the Promise of the Messiah, that Seed, for which all good Men longed.

Ver. 11. Remain a Widow in thy Father's house, &c.] It seems the Contract of Marriage at first was so understood in those Days, that if the Husband died without Issue, the Woman must marry his next Brother; and as long as any of his Brethren remained, they were bound to marry his Wife, and preserve their Brother's Memory; or else solemnly renounce her, to their great infamy and disgrace. This was so well known, that there is nothing in the Law, that enjoins any new solemn Contract in such a Case: Because the first Husband being dead, she and the next Brother were Man and Wife, without any further Agreement, by virtue of the Original Law, until he renounced her. Yet by the Constitutions afterwards made by their Elders, it was ordained, that he should espouse and endow her solemnly before Witnesses; as Mr. Selden shows in his Uxor Hebr. Lib. i. cap. 12. and Lib. ii. cap. 2. and 10.

But Judab thought Selah was too young to perform this Contract; and therefore desired her to stay till he was grown up, and to abide in her own Father's House rather than in his, that Selah might not think of Marriage too soon.

For he said, Left peradventure he die also.] This some make an Argument, that he never intended to give her his Son. But it is more agreeable to ver. 24, and 26. to think that according to the Custom of those Days he could not refuse it. And therefore he thought it was their youthful Folly, which made his two other Sons perish: Which made him resolve to keep this till he had more Discretion, and was better instructed in his Duty. Or if we imagine their Sin was known to none but Tamar, the meaning may be, that he thought their marrying too young was the Cause of their Death; and therefore he determined to keep this only remaining Son, till he was of a riper Age.

Ver. 12. In process of time.] In the Hebrew the words are, The Days were multiplied, i. e. after some Years.

To Timnath.] A Town not far from Adullam, it is probable, for it was also within the Lot of the Tribe of Judab, Josh. xv. 57.

He went up to Timnath.] Some have made a difficulty about this Phrase: For Samson is said to have gone down to Timnath, Judg. xiv. 5. But they should have considered (as Bochart observes, P. i. Hierozoic. L. iii. cap. 4.) that there were two different Places, one called Timnath, the other Timnathab: This in the Tribe of Judab, the other in the Tribe of Dan. To this they went up, because it was a mountainous Country: To that they went down, because it was in a Valley.

To his Sheep-shearers.] It was the Custom at such times to make a Feast, (as we do now) and to invite their Kindred and Friends to it, (as he doth his Friend Hirah) which appears sufficiently from the Story of Abshalom, 2 Sam. xii. 23. For in those Countries where they had vast Flocks, Sheep-shearing was a kind of Harvest: Which made that time to be observed with such Joy as there used to be in Harvest. Whence David's Servants said to Nabal, that they were come to him on a good day; for he was shearing Sheep, 1 Sam. xxv. 8. Accordingly Judab having finished the time of mourning for his Wife, went to recreate himself with his Friends at this Festival Season.

Ver. 14. She put off her Widow's Garments.] In which, it seems, such Persons continued till they were married to the next Brother. But she, at this time, laid them aside, that he might not have the least suspicion she was the Person whom he courted.

Covered her with a Veil,] As all Women did in the Eastern Countries when they went abroad: And there are Examples of it also in the Western Parts of the World; as Mr. Selden at large shows, in his Uxor Hebraica, L. iii. cap. 17. Where he produces several Passages out of the Alcoran requiring this.

Wrapt herself.] Muffled her Face with it, as we speak, that she might not be known.

And sat in an open place.] Where two Ways met, as the Hebrew words seem to import: Unless we take it for a proper Name, as it is in the Margin of our Bibles. Either way, it signifies, in a publick place, where every body might see her. It is commonly noted, That there was so much Modesty left in those ancient Days, that Harlots both went veiled, and also sat without the Cities, (see Origen, L. iv. contra Celsum, p. 206.) But however the latter part of this Observation be, the former part of it is not true. For, as Bochartus observes (P. i. Hierozoic. L. ii. cap. 46.) Proprium fuit meretricum non velari, sed revelari; it was proper to Harlots not to be covered, but to go bare-faced: As appears from Isai. xlvii. 3. Nabum iii. 5, &c. All that can be answered to this is, That it might be otherwise, in very ancient Times. Which I do not take to be true: For all Women, as I observed before, were covered; and therefore Harlots were distinguished only by their sitting in the Highways, not by their Veils.

For she saw that Selah was grown, and she was not given, &c.] She resolved, if she could, to have a Child by one of this Family; and hoped, perhaps, that Selah might come along with his Father, and have the same Desires his Father had: And

And in those Days (as I noted before) there were no such Solemnities required, as the Jews afterwards used (tho' the Law did not enjoin it) to the making a Marriage with one's Brother's Wife. Which was to be contracted they say, before two Witnesses, and by giving a piece of Money, or a Writing: But this was ordained only by their Elders, not by the Original Law. See ver. 11. And therefore she thought if she could have caught Selah by this Device, it would have been held lawful: But this Plot failing her, she so far transgressed, as to admit Judah himself to lie with her.

Ver. 15. Because she covered her face.] This is not the reason why he took her for an Harlot; but why he did not know her to be his Daughter-in-law, (as Mr. Selden observes in the place before-named, ver. 14.) because he could not see her Face: And he thought her to be an Harlot, because she sat in trivio, in the Highway; where she publicly exposed herself.

Ver. 16. Let me come in unto thee.] There was an express Law that there should be no Kedeshaw (or Whore) among the Daughters of Israel, i. e. none who should prostitute her Body without Marriage, Deut. xxiii. 18. Levit. xix. 29. But before the giving of the Law (saith Maimonides) if a Man found a single Woman in a Publick Place, and they agreed on certain terms to lie together without being married, they were not punished. See Mr. Selden, L. v. de Jure N. & G. cap. 4.

What wilt thou give me ?] That which made such Facts not to be punished, was (saith the same Maimonides) because of the Contract which passed between them. This reward which he gave the Harlot for the use of her Body, being like the Dowry a Man gave his Wife, when he put her away: Which being paid, it was thought he did her no wrong, More Nevochim. P. iii. cap. 49. They that would now have their wicked Practices warranted by such Examples, should consider that every thing not punished by Men, was not allowed by God: And that we now live under another Dispensation, which expressly forbids such Uncleanneſs; and declares, that not only Adulterers, but Whoremongers, God will judge, i. e. punish, Hebr. xiii. 4. See ver. 23.

Ver. 17. A Kid from the Flock.] Which was look'd upon as a valuable Present, in those Days; as I have observed before, xxvii. 9.

Wilt thou give me a pledge, &c.] A Pawn, as we now speak, to be returned when he sent what he promised.

Ver. 18. Thy Signet.] His Ring, wherewith he sealed.

Thy Bracelets.] The Hebrews generally understand by this word his Cloak, or some such Garment: Others, his Girdle.

And thy Staff, &c.] Which it is likely, had something in it, to distinguish it from other Mens Staves. And she asks so many things, that by some or other of them (if not by all) it might be certainly known, who was the Father, if she proved with Child.

And he came in unto her.] Not publicly; but in some Bye-place, to which they retired.

And she conceived by him.] Tho' he did not know her, yet she knew him: Which aggravated her Crime, and made it Incest in her, tho' only Fornication in him. Unto which, one would think, she was tempted, by her vehement Desire to have a Child by one of this Family; unto which the Promise of the Messiah belonged. For tho' she seems to have been one of the Seed of Canaan, (as I said before, ver. 6.) yet embracing the Religion of Jacob, she renounced the Impiety of the Canaanites: And so is mentioned in the Genealogy of our Saviour, as well as Rahab and Ruth.

Ver. 19. Laid by her Veil from her, &c.] Retired into her Father's House (for within Doors they did not wear Veils) where she clothed herself again like a Widow.

Ver. 21. Where is the Harlot ?] By this it is apparent, that the word Kedeshab signifies a common Whore (as we speak) who publicly prostituted herself for hire; as the Hebrew Doctors observe upon this place, and upon Deut. xxiii. 17. But whence this Name should be given to Harlots, is a great doubt; it coming from a Root, which signifies that which is Sacred. Which hath inclined some learned Men to think, that the Women-Priests, consecrated to the Service of Baalpbebor, or Priapus, were no better than Whores; and the Men-Priests who served Asheroth, mentioned 2 Kings xxiii. 7. made all Whores be called Kedishim; which was the Name for those devoted to such impure Ministries. See Mr. Selden, de Diis Syris, Syntag. i. cap. 5. and Syntag. ii. cap. 2. But such beastly Idolatry, surely, was not so old as the Days of Jacob: And it seems more reasonable to me to think, that the Original word signifying Separation, it was applied either to those who were separated unto Holiness, or unto Uncleanneſs, as Harlots were.

And they said, There was no Harlot in this place.] They knew of none that publicly professed to be a Prostitute: Nor had they seen any one fit publicly to invite Customers.

Ver. 23. Let her take it to her.] Keep the Pledge to herself.

Lest we be ashamed.] Tho' the Fact he had committed was in those Days lawful, (saith Maimonides) that is, was not punished by the Judges, yet Men did not publicly boast of it, nor were willing to own it; but were ashamed it should be known, (which was a sign they were sensible there was a moral Turpitude in it) and therefore endeavoured to hide and conceal it, even with the loss of those Goods which were of greatest value. For the sense, saith he, of Judah's words is this, It is better to lose what she hath of ours, than by inquisition after it, to divulge the business, and increase our shame. More Nevochim, P. iii. cap. 49. Where he bids his Reader observe, this is the Moral Virtue which ought to be learn'd from this History, together with Justice and Equity: which appears in his performing the Agreement he made of sending a Kid; of which he desires his Friend to be a Witness, that he might not lie under any suspicion of having offered Violence to her.

Ver. 24. Bring her forth.] Out of her Father's House, into the Place of Judgment, where he would have her sentenc'd to the severest Punishment.

Let her be burnt.] Not presently (for that had been the highest Injustice and Cruelty to burn the Child in her Belly) but after she was deliver'd, till which time he would have kept her in such safe Custody that this Execution might be done upon her. Some think burning was the Punishment for Adultery in those Days; others think the Punishment depended on the Will of the supreme Governor, whosoever he was, whom some also take to have been Judah himself, as Chief in his own Family; and that he was so severe against her because she had disgrac'd his Family, and he was glad to be rid of her, that he might not give his Son Selah to her. But there are those who think by burning is meant no more but branding her in the Forehead, to denote her to be an Whore. See Mr. Selden, L. vii. de Jure N. & G. cap. 5. If Judah did mean burning her at a Stake (as we now speak) it was a Punishment not then commonly used, but inflicted (as his Words are, L. iii. Uxor. Hebr. cap. 12.) ex more seu lege aliqua singulari, by some singular Custom or Law.

All this proceeds upon a Supposition that she really was Selah's Wife, tho' not solemnly marry'd (as the Jews pretend it was necessary after the Law was given) by virtue of the first Contract with his eldest Brother, which was the reason of her being kept at her Father's House, that no Body else might pretend to her, but she be reserv'd for him, otherwise there could have been no ground for proceeding against her as an Adulteress.

Ver. 26. She hath been more righteous than I.] These Words do not signify that she had in this Matter committed a less Sin than he (for she had committed a greater) but that in another Matter, which was the occasion of this, he had broken his Word with her, when she had till now kept her Faith with him, and liv'd a Widow honestly, in Expectation of his Son; besides, she committed this Fact out of desire to have a Child, he to satisfy his Lust.

And he knew her no more.] Which some have translated quite the contrary, and he ceased not to know her, i. e. he solemnly marry'd her, and took her to be his Wife, which was unlawful after the Law of Moses was given, but as lawful before as many other things which they practis'd; and two of the Chaldee Paraphrasts have feign'd a Bath-Coll to have come from Heaven to countenance the Fact. See Mr. Selden, L. v. de Jure N. & G. cap. 9. and L. vii. cap. 5. But it is not likely he would take his Son's Wife to be his own, and likewise having known her, tho' by an Error; most think Selah himself afterward had her not to Wife, but she rather did Penance (as we now speak) in Widowhood all her Days; for Selah we find had Children by another, Nunb. xxvi. 19.

Ver. 28. This came out first.] Perceiving there were Twins struggling in her Womb, the Midwife, to distinguish this from the other, as the first born, bound this Thread about his Wrist.

Ver. 29. How hast thou broke forth?] What is the Cause of this? Or, what a Violence is this? speaking as one astonish'd at his Eruption; for it was without Example, and therefore the Novelty of the thing made her break out into this Exclamation; tho' if it be true which a learned Anatomist affirms, that where Twins are of the same Sex, they are wrapt in the very same Secundines, as they call them (whereas those that are of a different, are separated by distinct Inclosures) the other Son being stronger and more vigorous, might force his way the more readily when his Brother was nearer to the Birth. Fernellius, L. vii. Physiolog. cap. 12.

This Breach be upon thee.] Take thy Name from this Breach, be thou ever call'd Eruption or Breach, as Bocbart interprets it, Hierozic. P. i. L. ii. cap. 30.

Ver. 30. Called Zarah.] Which most think signifies as much as be ariseth (being used commonly of the Sun's rising) because this Child appear'd first, by putting out his Hand before the other.

CHAP. XXXIX.

Ver. 1. AND Joseph.] Having ended this Story of Judah, he returns to that of Joseph, which he had begun before in the xxxviii Chapter, repeating, where he left off, how he was sold to Potiphar.

Brought down.] It is a Descent from Judaea to Egypt, which lies very low.

Ver. 2. And the Lord was with Joseph.] To guide him in his Deportment, and in the Management of all Affairs committed to him; so that, as it follows, he was a prosperous Man.

He was in the House of his Master.] One of his domestick Servants.

Ver. 3. His Master saw that the Lord was with him, &c.] Found by Observation and Experience that he was an extraordinary Person; it is not likely that Potiphar knew God by the Name of Jebozab; but the Meaning is, he observ'd the happy Fruits of Joseph's Service; which Moses, not he, ascribes to the Lord's peculiar Blessing.

Ver. 4. And he served him.] Found such Favour with his Master, that he took him to wait upon his Person.

And he made him Overseer over his House.] In time he advanc'd him to a higher Station, to be (as they now speak) his Major Domo, to whom all the Servants in the Family were to be obedient.

And put all be bad into his Hand.] Committed all his Estate, both within Doors and without (as appears by the next Verse) to his Care and Management.

Ver. 6. He left all be bad in Joseph's Hand.] Did not call him to a daily Account, nor concern'd himself about any Business, but trusted entirely to his Prudence and Fidelity.

And he knew not ought be bad, save the Bread which he did eat.] This is the highest Expression of of Confidence, signifying that he was utterly careless about any thing that concern'd his Estate, not minding what his Expence or Receipts were, but taking his Ease, left all to Joseph's Honesty; in short, he thought of nothing, but only to enjoy what he had without any Care or Trouble.

And Joseph was a goodly Person.] Being the Son of a beautiful Mother.

Ver. 7. Cast her Eyes upon Joseph.] Look'd upon him amorously, or rather lasciviously, he being young as well as handsome.

Ver. 9. How can I do this great Wickedness? &c.] Here are three He Hajedia's, as the Hebrews call them, pointing us to so many remarkable Things: How shall I commit such a Wickedness as Adultery? Such a great Wickedness? Against so kind a Master, who so entirely trusts in my Integrity, especially since it cannot be committed without the highest Offence to God?

Ver. 10. Day by Day.] Took all Occasions to solicit him.

Or to be with her.] He avoided, as much as was possible, to entertain any Discourse with her, shunning her Company, &c.

Ver. 11. About this time.] The Phrase in the Hebrew (where there are again two He's of the same kind with the former) signifies some remarkable Day; R. Solomon and Josephus think it was some Festival, when the Master and the rest of the Family were gone to the Temples, and she stay'd at Home, feigning herself not well; but the Vulgar translates it simply, upon a certain Day; or it may signify, having the like Opportunity as formerly, and Joseph being about his Business in the House, she caught him, &c.

To do his Business.] To cast up his Accompts, saith the Chaldee Interpreters.

None of the Men of the House were within.] In that Part of the House where he was.

Ver. 12. Left the Garment in her Hand.] If he had struggled to get the Garment away from her, the Accusation might have been more specious, that he went about to ravish her. Epiphanius hath made a good Reflection upon this Example, καταλιπόντες τὰ ἱμάτια, καὶ τὸ σῶμα ἐκ ἀπόλλυσιν. Ἀποδεδεσμένον ἢ πέπον, ἵνα μὴ πύση τῇ πυλίδι, &c. Vid. Hæres. lxxix. n. 9. He left his Garment, that he might not lose his Body; and shunn'd the Place, that he might not fall into the Snare; and indeed it was dangerous to adventure himself in her Company, much more to touch her, lest he should fall into Temptation.

Ver. 14. She called unto the Men of her House.] Cry'd to them who were in her Apartment to come and help her.

He bath brought in.] In her Rage she reflects upon her Husband, as accessory to her Danger, that she might the more incense him against Joseph. There is something like this in Apuleius's Story (L. x. Metamorph.) of the Step-Mother's Love to her Son-in-law, which was turn'd into Hatred, and made her contrive just such a Lie as this when he would not yield to her.

To mock us.] To abuse our Family.

I cry'd with a loud Voice.] An improbable Story (for no Body heard it) but was easily believ'd against a Servant, whom they all perhaps envy'd; if she pretended it was done in Joseph's Apartment, the Question might have been ask'd her, what she did there?

Ver. 17. Came in unto me to mock me.] To offer Violence to me (as the Hebrew Phrase signifies) and rob me of my Chastity.

Ver. 18. He left his Garment with me.] Philo observes, that this was an Argument rather that she laid Hands on him; for he could have easily taken his Garment from her, if he had not fled hastily from her Importunity; but her Husband's Jealousy made him credulous.

Ver. 20. Joseph's Master took him, &c.] Caused him to be apprehended and carry'd to Prison; during his Anger he would not hearken to the Apology which we cannot but think he offer'd to make for himself, unless we suppose (which is not unlikely) that his Master would not so much as see him, but order'd him immediately to be hurry'd to the Gaol.

A Place where the King's Prisoners were bound.] Where the King himself caused those who had offended him to be committed; this shews Potiphar was a great Man (see xl. 3.) and that he look'd upon the Crime as very great; for this Prison we must think was most strictly guarded; that they who were thrown into it might not escape Punishment; and it appears by what the Psalmist says, cv. 18. that the Prisoners were hardly used, and that Joseph (xl. 15.) was thrust into the lowest Part of the Prison, which was the most dismal, as well as of greatest Difficulty to make an Escape out of it.

And he was there in the Prison.] His Master proceeded no further against him, but there he left him; perhaps Joseph found Means to let him know the Truth, which made him not form any Process to take away his Life, or inflict any other Punishment on him; and yet to save his Wife's Credit he let him lie in the Prison.

Ver. 21. The Lord was with Joseph.] The same Wisdom and Virtue appear'd in him now he was in Prison that his Master discern'd when he came first into his House, ver. 2.

Gave him Favour.] So that he had more Liberty than the rest, after some short Confinement.

Keeper of the Prison.] The under Keeper it appears from xl. 4.

Ver. 22. Committed to Joseph's Hand, &c.] His Favour increas'd so much (as it had done in his Master's House, ver. 4.) that he in effect was the Keeper of the Prison, not a Prisoner.

C H A P. XL.

Ver. 1. HAD offended their Lord.] In the Hebrew is a Word of the Plural Number for Lord, viz. Adonim; ratione dignitatis, saith Bochartus, because of his high Authority; and so it is used, not only when he speaks of the King, but of great Men, particularly of Joseph's Master, xxxix. 2.

Interpreters do but guess at their Offence, which might as well be an Attempt upon his Life (by Poison, or other ways) as any thing else.

Ver. 2. Wroth against two of his Officers.] They are called by the same Name of Dignity (viz.

(viz. Saris) which we met withal before, xxxvii. 36. for in all Courts such Officers had a principal Place. See ver. 4.

Chief Butler.] Or Cup-bearer to the King, ver. 13. He simply nam'd the Butler and Baker in the foregoing Verse, but now the Schar (as the Hebrew Word is) which in the next Verse we translate Captain, i. e. the principal Officer of those Kinds, which would incline one to think that some under-Butler and Baker were accus'd of a great Fault, for which the head Butler and Baker were to answer, who perhaps were discover'd to have order'd them to do what they did.

Chief Baker.] Who took care of all bak'd Meats and Confections, ver. 17.

Ver. 3.] He put them in Ward, &c.] To be kept close Prisoners.

In the House of the Captain of the Guard, &c.] In that Prison of which Potiphar had the chief Custody, who by this appears to have been such an Officer as we call Lieutenant of the Tower.

Into the Prison where Joseph was bound.] Into that very Place where Joseph had been bound, for now he was set at liberty in the Prison.

Ver. 4. And the Captain of the Guard charg'd Joseph, &c.] By this it appears Potiphar's Anger was mitigated towards him (having heard the Truth it is likely before this time) and was of the same Mind with the under-Keeper of the Prison, who entrusted all in Joseph's Hand.

And he served them.] Attended upon them (which shews they were great Persons) to provide them what they wanted, &c.

And they continu'd a Season.] The Hebrew Word is Jamim, i. e. Days, which frequently signifies a Year, as hath been observ'd before, xxiv. 55.

Ver. 5. Each Man according to the Interpretation of his Dream.] Suitable to the Office which he had held, and to the Events which were shortly to befall them.

Ver. 6. Joseph came unto them in the Morning.] To see that they were safe, and to know what they wanted.

And behold they were sad.] It was very extraordinary that they should both of them dream in the same Night such Dreams as had a great Resemblance one to the other, and seem'd to import a great Change in their Condition, which made such a deep Impression upon them, that they were solicitous to know the Meaning.

Ver. 8. We have dream'd a Dream, and there is no Interpreter of it.] i. e. Here in Prison we have not the Opportunity of getting them interpreted; if they had been at liberty, there were Men in those Countries who pretended to the Skill of interpreting Dreams, which for the most part were not to be regarded; but some Dreams carry'd such lively Representations in them, and so suitable to their present Condition, and made likewise so great a Commotion in their Spirits, that they could not but attend to them; nay, think God had sent them, and therefore desire to know the Meaning of them.

Thus we find Achilles advising Agamemnon (in Homer's Iliad. i.) to consult with the Interpreters of their Gods, for what Offence they had sent the Plague among them; saying, To what Priest, or to what Prophet shall we go?

VOL. I.

‘H xj ἐνερπάζων, xj ρας τ’ ὅρας ἐν Διὶς ἔστιν.

Or to what Vender of Dreams? For even Dreams come from Jupiter.

Do not Interpretations belong to God?] Who can shew the Meaning of Dreams but he that sent them, viz. God? This shews that God did sometimes admonish other Nations (as we saw, xx. 6. xxxi. 24.) as well as the Jews by Dreams, until they forgot (as Dr. Jackson judiciously speaks) that Interpretations were from God, and labour'd to find out an Art of interpreting, then they either ceas'd, or were so mix'd with Delusions that they could not be discern'd; or if their Events were in some sort foreseen, yet Men being ignorant of God's Providence, commonly made choice of such Means for their Avoidance, as brought upon them the Events which they fear'd. Book i. on the Creed, chap. 9.

Ver. 12. The three Branches, are three Days.] i. e. signify three Days; so he understood their Meaning to be, rather than Months or Years; because of the sudden budding, blossoming, knitting and ripening of the Grapes, ver. 10.

Ver. 13. Shall lift up thy Head.] i. e. Advance thee, or as it is in the Margin, reckon thee, number thee among his Servants (as the Phrase is used Exod. xxxi. 12.) for there being a Roll or Catalogue of all the Officers of the Court, with their several Salaries, they were all call'd over on some certain Day (it should seem by ver. 20. before the King's Birth-day) and summon'd to give their Attendance, and then such as the King was offended withal were struck out, and punish'd according to their Deserts; or pardon'd, and graciously restor'd to their Places: this Exposition best agrees with the Event, ver. 20. where the Heads of both these Officers are said to be lifted up, tho' one of them only was advanc'd to his former Station.

Ver. 14. But think on me when it shall be well with thee, &c.] When my Prediction is come to pass, I ask no other Reward of thee, but that thou wilt be an Instrument of delivering me from my Imprisonment. Joseph was not only g own expert in interpreting Dreams (which he was not before he came into Egypt, xxxvii. 6, &c.) but fully assur'd he knew the right Meaning of them, as appears by this Passage; and such kind of Predictions by Dreams were frequently in ancient Times among the Heathen as well as among the Hebrews, tho' in after Ages they grew rare in both; for (as Dr. Jackson admirably speaks in the Place before nam'd) the Increase of Wickedness in the World, Multiplicity of Business, Sollicitude of Mind about worldly Affairs, and Mens too much depending on politick Devices to accomplish their Ends, caus'd the Defect of true Dreams, and of other divine Admonitions for the Welfare of Mankind.

Ver. 15. I was stolen.] Carry'd away by Violence, without the Knowledge of my Father, and sold for a Slave; his Brethren in selling him committed that Crime which the Latins call Plagium; for, Qui hominem liberum vendit, plagarius est.

Out of the Land of the Hebrews.] Some Men would have it thought that these Words were added by Josua or some other after Moses's Time, because Canaan was not called the Land of the Hebrews in his Days, much less in Joseph's; but they should have consider'd, that Joseph doth not call all the Land of Canaan by this Name, but only that Part of it where Abraham, Isaac and Jacob had very long liv'd, viz. about Hebron; there Abraham (who was the first that is call'd an Hebrew) settled with his Family when he came out of Chaldea, xiii. 17, 18. There Isaac dwelt also, xxxv. 27. and Jacob xxxvii. 1, 14. where it is said indeed they were Strangers or Sojourners in this Country; but they were Strangers of great Note and Name (as Jacobus Altingius hath well observed) who were treated as Princes, xxiii. 6. liv'd by their own Laws, made Leagues, not only with private Men, but with Cities and with Kings, xxi. 22, 23. xxvi. 28. xxxiv. 6. and the Fame of them could not but be spread abroad, both by the Victory which Abraham got in a Battle over several Kings, and by the sacking of Shechem, which the Neighbours durst not revenge; all which might well make that Part of the Country, wherein they had resided for three Generations, be call'd the Land of the Hebrews; where they were at first planted by the Consent of the Natives, who were confederated with Abraham, xiv. 13.

That they should put me into the Dungeon.] Into which he was thrown at the first, as a great Malefactor, for this was the lowest and darkest Place in the Prison, being under Ground; so the Hebrew Word commonly signifies a Pit, either with or without Water in it, and thence this Part of a Prison, which Bochartus well translates cryptam subterraneam; and sometimes signifies a Grave, Psal. xxviii. 1. Hierozoic. P. i. Lib. iii. cap. 4.

Ver. 16. The chief Baker saw the Interpretation was good.] It was well the chief Butler propounded his Dream first, which had a good Signification; for if this Man had spoken first, the other it is likely would not have propos'd his Dream.

Three white Baskets.] Or, as we now speak, three Wicker-baskets; and (as the Margin hath it) the Twigs so twisted, that they were full of Holes, as ours many times are wrought.

Ver. 17. In the uppermost Basket.] They were set one upon another, in the lowermost of which we may suppose was Bread, in the middlemost Pies, and in the highest the finer Sort of Pastes of all Sorts, Bisket, Tarts, &c.

Ver. 19. Lift up thy Head.] The same Phrase which was used of the other (verse 13.) but with this Addition, from off thee, to signify that his Name should be call'd for another Purpose, that he might not only have his Name struck out of the Roll, but his Head struck off from his Body; tho' there is no necessity so to understand it, but only simply, that he should lose his Life.

And shall hang thee on a Tree.] They that fancy his Head was first cut off, will have the Body only hang'd on a Gibbet; but it is more likely he was hang'd by the Neck, as Malefactors are now among us, upon a Gallows.

And the Birds shall eat thy Flesh.] He was left there to be devour'd by Birds of Prey.

Ver. 20. Pharaoh's Birth-day.] Either the Day on which he was born, or the Day on which he came to the Crown, which was Natalis Imperii, the Birth-day of his Empire; both of them were wont to be celebrated with Rejoycing and great Feasts in ancient Times as well as now. See the Commentators upon Matth. xiv. 6.

Ver. 21. And he gave the Cup.] His Fault we may suppose was of a smaller nature, or there was not evident Proof against him; or he had better Friends who interceded for him; so that he was not only pardon'd, but restor'd to his Office.

Ver. 22. But he hang'd the chief Baker.] Order'd him to be hang'd, being found guilty of what he was accus'd, &c.

Ver. 23. Yet did not the chief Butler remember Joseph, but forgot him.] He repeats it, to shew how very unmindful he was of him; after the manner of those vain Courtiers, who have no Value for Wisdom or Virtue, but are wholly given up to their Pleasures; it would have cost him nothing to mention Joseph to Pharaoh; but he seems to have been one of those who will spend their Interest, as we now speak, for no Body but themselves; or, as it may be interpreted, he did not as soon as he came to his Place call him to mind who foretold his good Fortune; and so in Process of Time he quite forgot him.

C H A P. XLI.

Ver. 1. At the End of two full Years.] It is uncertain whether two Years after Joseph was first put in Prison, or after the chief Butler was taken out of Prison; it seems to relate to the latter, being connected immediately with that History.

Pharaoh dream'd.] Had an extraordinary Dream sent from God.

He stood by the River.] Where they were wont to recreate themselves, especially in hot Weather, and when they expected its Rise to such a degree as to give Hopes of a plentiful Year.

Ver. 2. Behold, there came up out of the River.] This is a most apt and lively Figure, representing Things exactly conformable to the State of that Country, which was enrich'd by the yearly overflowing of the River Nilus, without which the Beasts would have had no Grass to feed them, much less to fatten them; but Bochart thinks the Hebrew Word Feor (which we translate River) properly signifies a Cut, as we speak, or a Canal out of Nile, of which there were many, for the drawing its Water into several Parts of the Country. Hierozoic. P. i. Lib. ii. cap. 42.

Well-favoured Kine, &c.] Or Oxen, by which the Fields being plough'd, and all the Business of Husbandry manag'd, their Fatness was a proper Token of Fertility, as their Leanness was of Famine. So Bochart observes; and see Vossius de Idolol. Lib. i. cap. 29.

And they fed in a Meadow.] This represented Nile as having overflowed a great way, to the enriching of a Pasture at a distance from the River.

Ver. 3. Stood by the other Kine.] This signified, the Events denoted hereby, to be near one to the other.

Upon the brink of the River.] Not feeding in a Meadow (as the former did) but picking up Grass here and there near the River. For this was a sign it had not overflowed at all, or very little: There being no Food for the Cattle, but on the River's Bank; where perhaps he saw them eat the Flags.

Ver. 5. Came up upon one Stalk.] A Token of great Plenty.

Ver. 6. Blasted with the East-wind.] To this Wind (which the Hebrews call Kadim) is ascribed in Scripture, all the Mischief that was done to Corn, or Fruit; by Blasting, Smutting, Mildews, Locusts, &c. and was more pernicious in Egypt than other Places, because it came thro' the vast Deserts of Arabia.

Ver. 7. And behold, it was a Dream.] Or, Behold, the Dream continued to run in his Mind. When he was awake he could not put it out of his Thoughts, but it perpetually presented it self to him, as it had done when he was asleep. This shew'd it to be one of those Dreams which the Greeks called Θεόπνευστα, sent from God: As the Interpretation and the Event shewed afterward more evidently. Bochart notes out of Josephus, L. xvii. a Dream of Archelaus (mentioned, Matth. ii. 22.) composed of both these Figures. For he saw ten Ears of Corn very plump and ripe devoured by Oxen. Which Simon Effæus interpreted to signify, that he should live ten Years, and then there should be a great turn of Affairs; (because Oxen turn up the Ground by the Plough) and accordingly it came to pass. Hierozoic. P. i. L. ii. cap. 41.

Ver. 8. His Spirit was troubled.] He could not rest satisfied till he understood the meaning of these Dreams: Which he thought imported some great Alteration in the State of his Country.

Called for all the Magicians of Egypt.] The word in Hebrew, (or rather Chaldee) for Magicians, had a bad signification in after-times: But what kind of Men they were now, we do not know: Whether they professed to interpret Dreams, and expound things secret, by natural Observations; or such Rules as are now found in the Books of Oneirocriticks, or by consulting Dæmons, or only by the foolish Art of Astrology, to which they were much addicted in future Ages.

Our learned Nic. Fuller, Lib. v. Miscell. Sacr. cap. 11. thinks the Hebrew word Chartummim imports, such as divined by certain Superstitious Characters, Pictures, Images, and Figures; which they engraved with Magical Rites and Ceremonies.

All the wise Men thereof.] These were the same, I suppose, with those who were called Philosophers in Greece. From whence several great Men went to learn of the Egyptian Priests:

VOL. I.

Who were famous for Wisdom before it came into Greece.

Told them his Dream.] He told them both his Dreams, as appears from what follows: But Moses speaks in the Singular Number, because they were, in effect, but one and the same Dream.

But there was none that could interpret them.] Either they were amazed, and did not attempt an Exposition, as beyond their Skill; or, what they said gave no satisfaction to the King. The seven Kine, and the seven Ears, it is likely, they thought, had a great Mystery in them, if the Worship of the Planets were then among them. Which they invoked with secret or inutterable Invocations, Κλήσεις ἀρρησέας, (as the Oracle mentioned by Porphry speaks) which were invented by that most excellent of all Magicians, (saith the same Oracle) the King of the seven Sounds, whom all Men know, i. e. Ostanes or Hestanes.

—“As εἶπες Μάγερ ὅχ' αἰεὶ ὅ
Ἐκαστῶν τε Βασιλῆς ἐν σάλλεσσι ἰσάσων.

By which seven Sounds, (of which he was the Inventor and Governor) Mr. Selden thinks, is meant the Harmony, which the Ancients supposed the Seven Planets to make. Whom these Magicians called upon ἑρμαιοῖσιν, with seven Invocations to each Planet, upon its proper Day; as he shows, Lib. iii. de Jure N. & G. cap. 19. But the more they laboured to find out this Mystery, the more they were puzzled and perplexed in their Thoughts: Nor could their Prayers (if they went that way to work) help them to disclose the Secret.

Ver. 9. I do remember my faults this day.] Call to mind the Offences I committed against Pharaoh: Or, as some will have it, my Ingratitude to one who was in Prison with me.

Ver. 11. Each Man according to the interpretation of his Dream.] Just according to the Event was each of our Dreams.

Ver. 13. As he interpreted to us, so it was.] He repeats the thing often, to show how exactly Joseph hit the Truth, in his Interpretation.

Me be restored to my Office, &c.] He told me, that on such a day, I should be restored to my Office; and he told the other he should be hanged.

Ver. 14. Brought him basily.] With all speed, that Pharaoh might not continue in suspense.

Out of the Dungeon.] It is reasonable to think, That tho' he was thrown into the Dungeon at the first, (xl. 15.) he did not continue there, when he look'd after all the Prisoners, and did the whole business of a Keeper, xxxix. 22, 23. Therefore this Part, as is usual, is put for the whole; signifying no more, than that they brought him out of Prison, where he had been in the Dungeon.

And he shaved himself, &c.] It was the Custom in most Countries, when Men were in a mournful Condition, to neglect their Hair, both of the Head and the Beard; and not to shift their Clothes, as in Prosperity, but to continue in a rueful Dress, whereby they expressed the Sense they had of their Calamity.

Ver. 16.

Ver. 16. It is not in me.] A modest Answer. I do not pretend to more Wisdom, than those thou hast already consulted.

God shall give Pharaoh an answer of peace.] But God, I doubt not, will direct me to give the King a satisfactory Answer: Nay, an Answer that shall be serviceable to him and to his Kingdom.

Ver. 17. And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, &c.] We may well suppose that Joseph desired to know the Dream: Which Pharaoh repeats in this, and the following Verses, something more fully than is set down before.

Ver. 21. When they had eaten them up, it could not be known that they had eaten them, &c.] An Emblem of a very grievous Famine: Which is represented, not only by the lean Kine devouring the fat, (as much as to say, the barren Years consuming all the Growth of the fertile) but by their remaining lean, as if they had eaten nothing: Which represents what often happens in Famine, that Men eat greedily, but are not satisfied; because God breaks the Staff of Bread, Lev. xxvi. 26. i. e. takes away its nourishing Virtue; as Bochart expounds it, Hierozoic. P. i. Lib. ii. cap. 41. But this seems to be a straining of that Phrase, Break the Staff of Bread: Which signifies no more, than want of Bread to support a Man's Life. And all that can be gathered from this part of the Dream is, That there should be such exceeding great Scarcity, that Men should have but just enough to keep them alive.

Ver. 25. The Dream of Pharaoh is one.] One and the same thing is represented by two several Figures.

God hath shewn Pharaoh what he is about to do.] God hath in these Dreams revealed to Pharaoh, what he intends shortly to bring to pass.

Ver. 26. The seven good kine, &c.] He represents in this, and in the following Verse, how one thing is signified by two Dreams. Seven Kine, and seven good Ears, representing seven good Years of Plenty; and seven lean Kine, and seven empty Ears, as many Years of Scarcity.

Ver. 28. This is the thing which I have spoken, &c.] I have told the King in short, what the Divine Providence is about to effect.

Ver. 29. Behold, there come seven Years, &c.] I will repeat it more at large. Take notice then, that in the next seven Years to this, there shall be very great Crops of Corn every where throughout the whole Country.

Ver. 30. And there shall arise after them, &c.] And immediately after they are ended, shall follow seven Years as barren as the former were fruitful, the Earth bringing forth little or no Corn. Which will make so great a Famine, that there shall be no memory of the foregoing Plenty; for there shall be no Corn left, but all eaten up, throughout all the Land of Egypt.

Ver. 31. And the plenty shall not be known, &c.] I say, there shall be no mark remaining of the foregoing Plenty, by reason of the extreme Scarcity in the following Years, which will be very heavy.

Ver. 32. And for that the Dream was doubled, &c.] The repetition of the Dream signifies the certainty of what I say: God having so determined; who will shortly justify the Truth of my Predictions. Both here, and in the foregoing Discourse, ver. 25, 28. he directs Pharaoh to look up unto God, as the Author of all these Events; and that, not in an ordinary, but extraordinary manner. For such Fertility, and such Famine did not proceed from mere Natural Causes, but from an Over-ruling Providence. It is observed by Pliny, L. v. Nat. Hist. cap. 9. that when Nile rose only twelve Cubits, a Famine followed; when thirteen, great Scarcity; when fourteen, they had a good Year; when fifteen, a very good: And if it rose sixteen, it made delirias, luxuriant Plenty: And the greatest increase they ever knew, was to eighteen Cubits. Now, that this River should overflow so largely for seven Years together, as to make vast Plenty, and then, for the next seven Years not to overflow its Banks at all, or very little, and so make a fore and long Famine, could be ascribed to nothing but an extraordinary Hand of God, it being quite out of the course of Nature. And indeed the Dream seems to signify something beyond that; for it is unnatural for Oxen to devour one another.

Ver. 33. Look out a Man discreet and wise.] One fit to manage so great an Affair. He that could foretell such Events, was fit to advise what was to be done upon the foresight of them: But it is probable, he did not presume to give such Directions, till he was asked his Opinion.

Ver. 34. Let Pharaoh do this.] When this is done.

Let him appoint Officers.] Let that chief Ruler appoint Officers under him in the several Provinces of the Kingdom: Such as the Romans called Præfatos Annonæ.

Take up a fifth part.] Some have ask'd, why not the half, since there were to be as many Years of Famine, as of Plenty? To which such Answers as these have been given by Interpreters: That the greater and richer sort were wont in time of Plenty to fill their Store-houses, as a Provision against a scarcer Year, which sometimes happened. And, Secondly, That in time of Famine, Men were wont to live more frugally, and not spend so much as they do in better times. And, Thirdly, That even in those Years of greatest Famine, something might be sown; at least, near the Banks of Nile. But the plainest Answer is, That ten Parts being the Tribute due to Kings, in many Countries, and it is likely here, (as I observed upon xxviii. ult.) Pharaoh was advised to double this Charge, in the Years of extraordinary Plenty: When the fifth Part was not more than the tenth, in other Years. Or, (which is rather to be supposed from a good King and a good Counsellor) to buy as much more as was his Tribute; which he might do at an easy rate, when vast Plenty made Corn very cheap.

Ver. 35. Gather all the Food of those good Years that come.] The fifth Part of the Growth of the next seven Years.

And lay up Corn,] In places provided for that purpose.

Under the Hand of Pharaoh.] Not to be meddled withal, but kept by Pharaoh's order, to be dispensed hereafter as need shall require.

And

And let them keep Food in the Cities.] Let this Food be reserved in the several Cities of the Kingdom.

Ver. 36. And that Food shall be for store.] Shall not be spent, but laid up and preserved against the time of Famine.

That the Land, &c.] The People of the Land do not perish.

Ver. 37. And the thing was good in the Eyes, &c.] The King and all the Court were pleased with this Advice. But some may wonder that Pharaoh and his Ministers should so readily believe a young Man, and a Stranger, of a Nation whom they did not converse withal, and lately accused of a great Crime. But they may be satisfied, by considering that Joseph had cleared himself in the Opinion of the Keeper of the Prison; where he had been known already to have interpreted Dreams exactly according to the Events, in two notorious Cases, which the Chief Butler had reported, ver. 12, 13. And besides, his Exposition of the Figures which Pharaoh saw in his Dream, was so natural, that it was apt to beget belief, if he had not been an Expounder of Dreams before. And, above all, it is to be considered, that God, who sent the Dreams, and made them stick in Pharaoh's Thoughts, disposed his Mind also to receive the Interpretation with a deep Sense of its Truth.

Ver. 38. Pharaoh said to his Servants,] The great Ministers of the Kingdom, and Officers of the Court, who stood about him.

In whom is the Spirit of God.] Without which he could not foresee and foretell such things.

Ver. 39. And Pharaoh said unto Joseph.] It seems all his Servants were of Pharaoh's Mind, and consented to what he said, being amazed at the Wisdom which appeared in Joseph.

Forasmuch as God hath shewed thee all this.] God wrought in him the highest Opinion of Joseph, as a Man divinely inspired.

There is none so discreet as thou art.] Thou thyself art the only Person, whom thou adviseest me to set over the Land, ver. 33.

Ver. 40. Thou shalt be over my House.] Be the Chief Minister in my Court: For that is meant by this House.

And according to thy word.] As thou shalt give Orders.

Shall all my People be ruled.] The Margin translates it, armed; as if he put the whole Militia of the Kingdom into his Hands: But this seems too narrow a Sense; nor was there any thoughts of War at this time, but of the Government of the Kingdom in time of Peace. And therefore we also translate it kiss, i. e. obey, as the LXX and Vulgar well translate it; and as it signifies in Psalms ii. ult. kiss the Son, i. e. submit to him, and obey him.

Only in the Throne will I be greater than thou.] Thou shalt have no Superior, but only myself.

Ver. 41. See, I have set thee over all the Land of Egypt.] He had advised Pharaoh only to set a Man to be the chief Inspector of the Stores of Corn, ver. 33. (for which Pharaoh thought none so fit as Joseph himself, ver. 39.) but he now constitutes him Chief Governor, under him, in all Affairs of the whole Country.

Ver. 42. Took off his Ring, &c.] This is well explained by Vossius, Lib. i. de Orig. & Progr.

Idolol. cap. 9. in these words: Tum ut Symbolum dignitatis, tum ad literas & diplomata publico nomine signandas: Both in token of the Dignity to which he was preferred, and that he might seal Letters and Patents in the King's Name.

Vesture of fine Linen.] So the Hebrew word Scheseb signifies, rather than Silk, (as it is translated in the Margin) tho' not the common Linen, but that which the Ancients called Byssus: Which Pollux saith, was; λίνο πῖπτο, a sort of Linen, very pure and soft, and very dear; because it did not grow every where. Linum tenuissimum & pretiosissimum, as Braunius shows, Lib. i. de Vestib. Sacerdot. Heb. cap. 6. In Garments made of this, great Men only, not the vulgar People, were clothed: Kings themselves, it appears by Solomon, being arrayed in such Vestures.

Put a gold Chain about his Neck.] Another Token of the highest Dignity.

Ver. 43. Made him ride in the second Chariot which he had.] In the best of the King's Coaches (as we now speak) except one, which Pharaoh reserved for himself, and attended, no doubt, with a suitable Equipage of Footmen and Horsemen, perhaps, for a Guard to his Person.

Cried before him, Bow the Knee.] They that went before his Chariot to make way for him, required all to do him such Reverence as they did to the King himself, when he appeared: Which was by bowing their Knees or their Body. The word they used to this purpose, as they went along, was Abrech: Which we translate bow the Knee, deriving it from the Hebrew word Barach, which hath that Signification. Tho' others will have it to signify the Father of the King: For Rach in the Syrian Language signifies a King; if we may believe R. Solomon. Others translate it, a tender Father, viz. of the Country which he had preferred. (See Vossius, L. i. de Idolol. c. 29.) And Hottinger will have it, as much as God save the King; or, a Blessing light on you. See Smegma Orient. p. 131. But unless we understood the old Egyptian Language, I think, we had as good rest in the Hebrew Derivation, as in any other, according to our own Translation.

And he made him ruler over all the Land of Egypt.] After this manner he constituted him Supreme Governor of the whole Country under himself; according to his Resolution, ver. 41.

Ver. 44. I am Pharaoh.] This is my Will and Pleasure, who am King of Egypt.

Without thee shall no Man lift up his Hand or Foot, &c.] A Proverbial Speech. Let no Man presume to do the smallest thing, in Publick Affairs, without thy Order.

Ver. 45. And Pharaoh called Joseph's Name.] He gave him a new Name, partly, because he was a Foreigner, and partly to honour him; and yet to denote him to be his Subject, tho' Ruler of every body else. We find Nebuchadnezzar did the same in Babylon, Dan. i. 7. And it is still the Custom in the Eastern Countries: Where the Mogul never advances any Man, but he gives him a new Name; and that, significant of something belonging to him. As not long ago, he called his Brother-in-law Afaph Chán, the gathering, or the rich Lord: And his Physician cian Macrob Chan, the Lord of my Health, &c.] as Peter de la Valle relates in his Travels, p. 465. where he observes the fame of his Wives, p. 470.

Zaphnath-Paaneab.] Which St. Hierom interprets, the Saviour of the World. But the whole Stream of Interpreters carry it for another Signification, which is the Interpreter of Secrets, or the Revealer of future things. See Sixt. Amama, and Alban. Kirker his Prodomus, cap. v. and our Countryman, J. Gregory, cap. xvi. of his Observations. Who, with Mr. Calvin, thinks it is ridiculous to attempt to make this Sense out of the Hebrew Language: And yet there are those who think they have done it with success. Tzapban being to bide or cover; whence Tzapbnath, that which is bidden or secret: And Panab signifying to look into or contemplate. So that Campeg. Vitringa thinks Josephus and Philo not to have ill interpreted this word, ὁρμηγέτης and κρυπῶν ὑπέρτης (Observ. Sacr. Lib. i. cap. 5.) an Interpreter of Dreams, and a Finder-out of things bidden. But as Jacobiades observes upon Dan. i. 7. that the Egyptian and Persian Kings gave Names, for Honour and Glory, (in token of their supreme Greatness and Authority) so it was most for their Glory to give them out of their own Language. And therefore if this be the meaning of Zaphnath-Paaneab, the Egyptian Tongue and the Hebrew had a great affinity one to the other.

And he gave him to Wife.] Either the King then disposed of the great Noblemens Daughters, when their Parents were dead, (as our Kings lately did of their Wards) or Asenath was of Pbaraob's Kindred, and so he provided her a Husband, and gave her a Portion. Or, the meaning simply is, he made this Match for him.

The Daughter of Potipherab.] This is a different Name from his, who was Captain of the Guard; and was of a different Quality. And therefore there is no reason, from some likeness in their Names, to think that Joseph married the Daughter of him who had been his Master: For he would have abhor'd to match with one that was born of so lewd a Woman as his Mistress; as Vossius well observes in the Place fore-named.

Priest of On.] Or, Prince of On, (as the Margin hath it;) for the word Coben signifies both Priest and Prince, (see 2 Sam. viii. ult.) Priests being anciently the prime Men of the Kingdom; for Kings themselves were Priests.

On was a famous City in Egypt, called afterwards Heliopolis: Which gave Name to one of the Νόμοι, i. e. Provinces of Egypt; whereof this Potipherab was Governor, or Lieutenant. Concerning which Province, and Asenath, and Potipherab, see Mr. Selden, L. iii. de Synedriis, p. 406.

And Joseph went out over all the Land of Egypt.] To see what Places were fittest for Stores.

Ver. 46. Joseph was thirty Years old.] So he had been out of his own Country thirteen Years; for he was but seventeen Years old (xxxvii. 2.) when he was sold into Egypt. In which time, we may well think, he had learned the Language of that Country, and gained much Experience; but never sent to his Father: In which there is visibly a special Providence of God; for his Father might have used means for his Deliverance, and then he had never come to this Greatness.

When he stood before Pbaraob.] When Pbaraob made him his Prime Minister. For the great Counsellors and Ministers alone, were admitted into the King's Presence (in the Eastern Countries, and, it's likely, the same State was kept here) and are said to stand before the King, Dan. i. 19. and to see the King's Face, Esther i. 14.

And went throughout all the Land of Egypt.] He seems to have only taken a general view of the Country before, ver. 45. but now a more particular; to give Orders for the building of Store-houses against the plenteous Years came.

Ver. 47. Brought forth by handfuls.] Such large Ears, that a few of them would make a Sheaf: Which our Translation seems here to mean by handfuls: For Sheaves are bound up with Mens Hands. And so it may be interpreted, it brought forth Sheaves, or Heaps: Or, more literally, handfuls upon one stalk, i. e. vast abundance. Some conceive the Corn was laid up in Sheaves, heaped up very high, and not thrash'd out: For so it would keep the longer.

Ver. 48. And he gathered up all the Food.] The fifth Part, as he had proposed; ver. 34. i. e. he bought it; which he might do at a small Price, when there was unusual plenty.

And laid up the Food in the Cities.] It is very probable he laid it up, as it was gathered, unthrash'd: That there might be Food for the Cattle also. So the Vulgar, In manipulos reductæ segetes congregatæ sunt in borrea. And what was laid up in the first Year of Plenty, it is reasonable to think, was dispensed in the first Year of Famine, &c.

Round every City.] This was very wisely ordered; for it was less charge to Pbaraob for the present, and more easy to the Country, when they wanted Provision.

Ver. 49. Gathered Corn as the Sand of the Sea.] The following words explain this hyperbolical Expression. And the reason of his heaping up so much was, that there might be sufficient to supply the Necessities of other Countries, as well as of Egypt.

Ver. 51. God hath made me forget all my toil.] The great Affliction and hard Labour he endured in Prison.

And all my Father's House.] The unkindness of his Brethren, who were the cause of all his Trouble. By imposing this Name on his First-born, he admonished himself in the midst of his Prosperity, of his former Adversity: Which he now thought of with Pleasure.

Ver. 52. In the Land of my Affliction.] In the Country where I have suffered much Affliction.

Ver. 53. And the seven Years of plenteousness were ended.] It was beside the intention of Moses to relate any of the Affairs of that Country, but what belonged to this Matter: And therefore he passes over all other Transactions of these seven Years, as he doth all the things that happened in Jacob's Family ever since Joseph came from it.

Ver. 54. The Dearth was in all Lands.] In all the Countries thereabouts, Canaan, Syria, &c. It seems there was a general want of Rain.

But in all the Land of Egypt there was Bread.] They did not feel the Famine presently, because they had much to spare from the former Years of plenty.

Ver. 55. And when all the Land of Egypt was famished.] When they had eaten up all their own Stores: Which, we may suppose, failed in two Years time.

The People cried to Pharaoh, &c.] Made earnest Petitions to the King, for relief of their Necessities.

Ver. 56. And the Famine was over all the Face of the Earth.] Grew still greater in all the neighbouring Countries.

And the Famine waxed sore in the Land of Egypt.] For the Egyptians themselves, having spent all their own Stores, were sorely pinch'd.

Ver. 57. And all Countries came to buy Corn, &c.] i. e. The neighbouring Countries, as was said before, ver. 54. For, if the most distant had come, the Store-Houses had been soon emptied.

Because the Famine was sore in all Lands.] It increased more and more, in those Countries before-named: Which were grievously afflicted by it.

CHAP. XLII.

Ver. 1. AND when Jacob saw that there was Corn in Egypt, &c.] He saw, perhaps, some pack by laden with Corn, which they had bought there. Or, one Sense (as is frequent in Scripture) is put for another: Seeing for Hearing; as it is expressed, ver. 2.

Why do you look one upon another?] As idle People use to do, while none of them will stir to seek Relief. Or, rather, as Men that know not what course to take, expecting who would begin to advise for their Preservation.

Ver. 2. That we may live, and not die.] He excites them to make no further delay, by the great Necessity wherein they were; no less than danger of perishing.

Ver. 4. Let mischief befall him.] He being, as yet, but young, and not used to travel, Jacob was afraid the Journey might be hazardous to him. Besides, he could not but desire to have some of their Company; tho' this was not his principal Reason.

Ver. 5. Came to buy Corn among those that came.] People came from all Parts thereabout, upon the same Business: And Jacob's Sons among others; whom, perhaps, they met withal upon the Road.

Ver. 6. And Joseph was the Governor, &c.] The Hebrew word Schallin signifies sometimes one that hath absolute Power: And seems to be used here to set forth the high Authority which Joseph exercised under Pharaoh.

He it was that sold to all the People of the Land.] Appointed at what Rates Corn should be sold, in every Part of the Country. For it is not to be supposed that he in Person, could treat with every Man that came to buy: But he, by his Deputies, who observed his Orders.

And Joseph's Brethren came.] It should seem by this, that all Foreigners were ordered to come to him; in the Royal City, where he resided: Or, at least, their Names were brought to him, that he might speak with such as he thought fit: And thereby get the better Intelligence of the State of their several Countries; and be sure to see his Brethren, who, he knew, would be constrained to come thither.

They bowed themselves before him, &c.] Unwittingly fulfilled his Dream. This seems to have been done after the manner of their own and other Eastern Countries; not of Egypt, where they only bowed the Knee, xli. 40.

Ver. 7. Spake roughly to them.] Gave them hard words, as we speak. Or, spake in a harsh Tone to them, and with a stern Countenance.

Ver. 8. And they knew not him.] They had not seen him in twenty Years: In which time a Youth alters far more than grown Men do; so that tho' he knew them, they might not know him. Who appeared also in such Pomp and State, that it made them not think of him: And he spake also to them by an Interpreter, ver. 23. Which represented him as a Stranger to them.

Ver. 9. Ye are Spies.] He did not think they were such Persons, but said this to provoke them, to give an account of themselves, and of his Father. Nor is there any reason to look upon this as a Lye. For they are not words of Affirmation, but of Probation or Trial: Such as Judges use, when they examine suspected Persons, or enquire into a Crime, of which Men are accused. And therefore have the force of an Interrogation; Are ye not Spies? Or, I must take you for Spies, till you prove the contrary.

To see the nakedness of the Land are ye come.] The weak Places of the Country; which are least defensible. Or, as others will have it, the Secrets of the Land: For it is the same word that is used to express the privy Parts.

Ver. 11. We are all one Man's Sons.] There needed no more than this to take off his suspicion. For no Man would have sent his Sons, but rather his Servants, if they had come upon an ill Design: Or, at least, not all his Sons; or not all of them together in a Company: But dispersed them rather about the Country. Nor was it probable, that one Man could have a Design upon Egypt; but all the great Men of Canaan must have joined in it: And then they would have sent Men of different Families, not all of one alone.

We are true Men.] This was a good Argument that they said true, when they told him (ver. 10.) they had no other business in Egypt but to buy Corn.

Ver. 12. And he said unto them, Nay, &c.] Unless you have better Arguments than this, I must take you for Spies. He slights their Argument, as great Men sometimes do, when they know not presently how to answer it. He had a mind also to have them give a further account of their Family, that he might be informed what was become of his Brother Benjamin.

Ver. 13. Thy Servants are twelve Brethren, &c.] They enforce their former Argument, by relating their Condition more fully and distinctly. But still it amounts to no more than this; That it was not likely a Parent would venture all his Children, in such a Design, as they were suspected to come about.

The youngest is this Day with our Father.] This was the thing he desired to know.

And one is not.] Is dead. So they thought, because they had heard nothing of him, in twenty Years space.

Ver. 14. This is that I spake unto you, &c.] This confirms what I said, and gives me just ground for suspicion, that ye are Spies: Because you pretend to have another Brother, which is not likely; for why should not your Father send all, as well as so many? This was but a Cavil; but served to compass his End: Which was to see his Brother.

Ver. 15. Hereby shall ye be proved.] By this very thing shall you be tried; whether you be honest Men, or no.

By the life of Pharaoh, &c.] As sure as Pharaoh lives; or, ita saluus sit, so let Pharaoh be safe and in Health, as I will keep you here, till I see your younger Brother. Others expound it, If Pharaoh have any Authority here, i. e. be King of this Country, you shall not stir from hence, &c. But most Authors take this for an Oath: The Original of which is well explained by Mr. Selden in his Titles of Honour, p. 45. where he observes, that the Name of Gods being given to Kings very early, ὁ ἀρχὴν βασιλεύων, (as Aristotle speaks, L. vi. Ethic. cap. 1.) from the excellence of their Heroick Virtue, which made them anciently great Benefactors to Mankind: Thence arose the Custom of swearing by them; which Aben Ezra saith continued in his time (about 1170.) when Egypt was governed by Caliphs. If any Man swore by the King's Head, and was found to have sworn falsely, he was punished capitally. And when Scach Ismael, the first Sopbi, got the Persian Empire, no Oath was held so Sacred (as Leunclavius reports) as to swear by his Head, i. e. in effect, by his Life.

But St. Basil will not have this to be an Oath: But a solemn Affelevation, to persuade Belief. For saith he, (Tom. i. Hom. in Psal. xv. p. 155.) Εἰσι πυνε λόγοι χάρις αὐτῶν ὅθεν ἔρχονται, ἔχ' ὅσοι ὃ ὄντες, &c. There are certain Speeches which have the fashion of Oaths, and yet are not Oaths: But δευαπεία πρὸς τοὺς ἀκούοντας, serve only to persuade the Auditors. Such he takes this to be; and that of St. Paul, Νὺν ὃ ἡμετέραν χαράσιν, by our rejoicing, 1 Corinth. xv. 31. where he saith the Apostle was not unmindful of the Evangelical Commandment, not to swear: But by a Speech, in form of an Oath, he would have them believe that his glorying in them (or rather in Christ) was dearer to him than any thing else. And the Truth is, Judab seems to have taken these words of Joseph, only for a solemn Protestation, xliii. 3. wherein he exposed the Life of Pharaoh (which was most dear to him) unto Execration, if he was not as good as his word. So G. Calixtus understands it.

Ver. 16. Send one of you, and let him fetch your Brother.] At first he proposed that only one of them should return home, to bring their Brother to him; and all the rest remain, in the mean time, Prisoners in Egypt.

Ver. 17. And be put them all together into Ward, &c.] That they might consult one with another, which of them should go to fetch Benjamin; about which, it seems, they could not agree: Every one fearing to be the Messenger of such sad Tidings to their Father; who might suspect they were all lost.

Ver. 18. Joseph said unto them the third day, &c.] I have no mind to destroy you: For I know there is a God, who will punish all Injustice and Cruelty. Therefore I make this new Proposition to you.

Ver. 19. Let one of your Brethren, &c.] This shall be the proof of your Honesty. Instead of sending one of you to your Father, you shall all go but one; who shall remain bound in Prison till you bring your younger Brother: And in the mean time carry Provision for your Families.

Ver. 20. But bring your youngest Brother, &c.] Fail not to let me see your youngest Brother: And so shall you justify yourselves to be no Spies; and suffer nothing.

And they did so.] They consented to this Proposal.

Ver. 21. And they said one to another.] They that had the chief Hand in the Conspiracy against Joseph, began upon this occasion to make the following Reflections on it.

We are verily guilty, &c.] See the Power of Conscience, which lies in their Face and reproaches them for a Fact committed above twenty Years ago.

In that we saw the anguish of his Soul, &c.] We would have no pity, when he besought us with Tears; and now nothing that we can say, will move this Man. They observe their Guilt in their Punishment. For, as they had thrown Joseph into a Pit, so they had been thrown into a Prison themselves: And as nothing he could say would incline them to spare him, so now they found Joseph inexorable to them.

This Anguish of his Soul, and his Entreaties are not mentioned before, (Chap. xxxvii.) but could not but be supposed, if they had not been mentioned here.

Ver. 22. And Reuben answered them, &c.] You should have hearkened unto me, and then you had not come into this Distress.

Behold also, his Blood is required.] You killed him, and now you must pay for it with the loss of your Lives. For he thought him to be dead.

Ver. 23. Spake to them by an Interpreter.] This shows the Egyptian Tongue and the Hebrew were different; tho' in some words they might agree.

Ver. 24. And he turned himself about from them.] And went into some other Room.

And wept.] Natural Affection was too strong for the Person he put on: And would not suffer him to counterfeit any longer.

Returned to them, and communed with them.] When he had vented his Passion, and composed himself to his former Temper, he repeated to them what he had told them before: But added withal, That if they brought Benjamin with them, they might traffick in the Land, ver. 34.

And

And took from them Simeon.] Who, the Hebrews say was the Person that put Joseph into the Pit: And therefore was now served in his kind. This, I think, may be fairly conjectured, That Reuben being resolved to save him, and Judah also inclined to favour him; if Simeon had joined with them, their Authority might have prevailed to deliver him.

And bound him before their eyes.] Caused him to be bound in their presence; to strike the greater Terror into them.

Ver. 25. To give them Provision for the way.] That they might carry what they bought entire, for the use of their Family.

And thus he did unto them.] Thus the Person, to whom Joseph gave that Command, did unto them.

Ver. 26. And they laded their Asses with Corn, &c.] It is not said how many Asses they laded; but one would guess, by what follows, only each Man one. For they went only to fetch a present Supply: Not thinking of providing against a long Famine.

Ver. 27. And as one of them opened his Sack, &c.] Wherein was their Provision for the Way, ver. 25.

Ver. 28. He said unto his Brethren, &c.] Who all presently opened their Sacks and found their Money there. For so the Story is told by Judah at their return to Egypt, xliii. 21: And both by that place and this, it appears this happened to them when they came unto their Inn, to rest themselves, in their first Day's Journey.

And their Heart failed them, &c.] Their Guilt made them afraid; otherwise they would have rejoiced. But all things terrify an evil Conscience: Which made them think some Design was laid to undo them all.

What is this that God hath done unto us?] Now God was in all their Thoughts, as the chief Governor of all things; whosoever was the Instrument.

Ver. 30. The Man who is the Lord of the Land.] By this it appears Joseph was little less than a King, i. e. in his Authority and Sway, which he bore in that Country.

Took us for Spies.] In the Hebrew it is, He gave us, i. e. treated us as Spies; by delivering us to be put in Prison.

Ver. 34. And ye shall traffick in the Land.] Buy Corn, or any thing else the Country affords; without any lett or impediment.

Ver. 35. When both they and their Father saw the bundles of Money, &c.] They had seen the same before: Therefore this is set down to express the Fear which Jacob himself was in, at the sight of the Money; tho' we may well suppose their Fear was increased, when they perceived him to have the same Apprehensions which they had, of some Design that might be laid against their Lives, when they returned to Egypt, tho' they brought their younger Brother with them.

Ver. 36. Simeon is not.] He looked upon him as dead; being in the Power of so rough a Man, as they described the Lord of the Land to be: Especially if he did not send Benjamin thither, as, for the present, he was resolved not to do.

VOL. I.

All these things are against me.] Or, upon me as the Hebrew Words carry it. These are heavy Burdens which lie upon me, not upon you; who can be content to have Benjamin go, after I have lost two of my Sons already.

Ver. 37. Slay my two Sons if I bring him not to thee.] Nothing could be more foolishly said; for what Good would it do Jacob (nay, what an increase of his Affliction would it have been) to lose two Grand-Children, after he had lost another Son? But it was spoken out of a passionate Desire to redeem Simeon, and to make more Provision for their Family: Being confident that Joseph (who professed to fear God, ver. 18.) would be as good as his Word.

Ver. 38. He is left alone.] The only Child of his Mother.

Bring down my grey Hairs with Sorrow to the Grave.] You will make me, who am worn away already, die with Grief.

CHAP. XLIII.

Ver. 1. AND the Famine was sore, &c.] Still increased to a greater Scarcity.

Ver. 2. When they had eaten up the Corn, that they brought out of Egypt.] So that they had nothing to live upon: but only the poor Crop that their own Country produced: Which could not long sustain them.

Buy us a little Food.] He hoped, it is likely, the next Year would be better; and so only desired a supply of their present Necessity.

Ver. 3. And Judah spake unto him, &c.] Reuben had spoken to him in vain, (xlii. 37, 38.) and Levi, perhaps, had not yet recovered his Interest in him, since the barbarous Action at Shechem: And therefore Judah took upon him to persuade his Father; being next in Birth, and of no small Authority among his Brethren.

Ye shall not see my Face.] But be taken for Spies; and so lose their lives.

Ver. 5. We will not go down.] Because it would not only have been to no purpose, but also endangered their lives.

Ver. 6. Wherefore dealt ye so ill with me, &c.] It was unkindly done of you, to tell him of another Brother. For what need was there to say any thing of one who was not with you?

Ver. 7. The Man ask'd us straightly, &c.] They having told him, they were all one Man's Sons, xlii. 11. he might well ask them, what Man's? And whether there were any more of them? And whether their Father and Brother were yet living?

And we told him according to the tenor of these words.] Answered every Question, as Truth required.

Ver. 8. Send the Lad with me.] Trust him with me. He calls him Lad, because he was the youngest of them all; and one of whom his Father was as tender, as if he had been a little Child: Tho' indeed he had Children of his own, xlii. 21.

That we may live, &c.] These were very moving Arguments; the Preservation of a whole Family;

U

Family, Benjamin and all: Who, if he went, might return in safety; but, if he staid at home, must perish with all the rest.

Ver. 9. I will be surety for him.] Be bound in what Penalty thou pleasest, to bring him back.

Of my hand shalt thou require him.] Punish me (who will be answerable for him) if he miscarry.

Bear the blame for ever.] Lie under thy Displeasure, as long as I live. All this signifies only, that he would do his utmost to secure him: And rather suffer the heaviest thing himself, than lose Benjamin.

Ver. 10. For except we had lingered, &c.] If thou hadst not hindered us by these scruples about Benjamin, we had been there and at home again, by this time.

Ver. 11. Take of the best Fruits.] The Hebrew Word Mizzimraib signifies of the most praised; or, as Bochart more literally interprets it, quæ in hac terra sunt maximè decantata, (P. ii. Hierozoic. Lib. v. cap. 9.) those Fruits which are most celebrated in the Land of Canaan: Which was as famous for the things following, as Egypt was for Corn. And it seems at this time did not want them; which might make them more acceptable in Egypt, where they grew at no time. For Egypt being a low and plain Country, and Canaan an hilly; it made their Products very different.

Balm.] Rather Resin, as was observed on xxxvii. 25.

Honey.] For which this Country was famous; especially in some parts of it, about Tekoa, as Bochart also observes. And therefore was a fit Present for a King, as we see in the Story of David, 2 Sam. xvii. 29. And was carried from hence to the Marts of Tyre, Ezek. xxxvii 17.

Spices.] The word Necoth signifies Storax; as was also observed before, xxxvii. 25.

Myrrb.] Which Bochart translates Mastich.

Nuts.] He also proves by many Arguments, that the word Botnim signifies those Nuts we call Pistachioes. Which may well be numbered among the best Fruits of the Land: Being very friendly to the Stomach and Liver; powerful against Poison; and highly esteemed by the ancients, as a delicious Food. And so Maimonides and Kimchi expound the Word.

Almonds.] They are fitly joined with Pistachioes, as he observes; being fructus congeneres: And Dioscorides treats of them together; and Theophrastus describes the Pistachio as ὁμοιον ᾤ ἀμυγδαλοῖς, like unto Almonds; vid. Canaan, Lib. i.

Ver. 12. Take double Money.] Other Money besides their first. Which if it signify as much more as the first; the reason was, because he thought Corn might now be grown dearer.

Ver. 14. If I be bereaved, I am bereaved.] I submit unto it, and will bear it as patiently as I am able. Or, as some paraphrase it; I have been bereaved of Joseph and Simeon, so now I am of Benjamin: No new things happen to me; but I have been used to such Afflictions; which I may therefore bear more equally.

Ver. 15. Stood before Joseph.] Presented themselves to him in his Office, (as we speak) or, in the Place where he gave Audience to those who came to petition him, or to buy Corn of him. For it is plain, by the next Verse, that he was not at his own House.

Ver. 16. Bring these men home.] Conduct them to my House.

And slay.] The Hebrew Phrase signifies a great slaughter; of several sorts of Creatures perhaps; that there might be a plentiful Provision.

Ver. 18. And the Men were afraid, &c.] Every thing (as was observed, xlii. 28.) terrifies a guilty Conscience.

And fall upon us.] i. e. Kill us.

And take us for Bond-men, &c.] Rather, or, take us for Bond-men and our Affes.

Ver. 19. They came near to the Steward, &c.] They desired to speak with him, before they entered into the House: That they might set themselves right in his Opinion.

Ver. 20. We came at the first time to buy Food.] And we paid for it what was demanded.

Ver. 21. When we came to the Inn, &c.] There we found that very Money, to a Farthing, in our Sack's Mouth, &c.

Ver. 22. We cannot tell who put our Money, &c.] We are ignorant how it came there; but suppose it was by some mistake: And therefore have brought it again, with new Money for another Purchase.

Ver. 23. Peace be to you.] Trouble not yourselves about that Matter.

Your God, and the God of your Fathers, &c.] This Steward had learnt of Joseph the Knowledge of the True God: To whose Kindness he bids them ascribe this Event.

And he brought Simeon out unto them.] Unbound; as free as themselves.

Ver. 24. Gave them Water.] Ordered Water to be brought, as the Custom was, to wash their Feet. See xviii. 4.

Ver. 26. Bowed themselves to the ground.] Here again was Joseph's Dream fulfilled. See xlii. 6.

Ver. 28. Thy servant our Father, &c.] Here they made a Reverence to him, in the Name of their Father: Whereby that part of the Dream (xxxvii. 9, 10.) which concerned him, was also fulfilled. And they speak likewise of him in an humble Stile; signifying his inferiority to Joseph.

Ver. 29. Saw his Brother Benjamin.] He had seen him before, ver. 16. but did not think fit to take notice of him at the first: Or, perhaps, was then full of business, when they presented themselves at their first appearance; and had not leisure to speak with them till Dinner-time.

God be gracious unto thee, my Son.] He blessed him, as Superiors were wont to do those below them: Whom they called their Sons, with respect to themselves, as Fathers of the Country.

Ver. 30. His Bowels did yern.] He felt a great commotion within himself; which he was not able to keep from breaking out: And therefore he made haste out of the Room where they were; as if some other business called him away.

Ver. 31. Set on Bread.] Set the Dinner upon the Table.

Ver. 32. And they set on for him by himself, &c.] There seems to have been three Tables. One where he sat alone in State: Another where his Brethren sat: And a third where the great Men of Egypt were entertained.

For the Egyptians might not eat Bread with the Hebrews, &c.] Because the Hebrews (saith Jonathan) did eat those Beasts which the Egyptians worshipped. And to the same purpose writes Onkelos. In which regard the Egyptians were as scrupulous to eat with a Greek in after-times, as now with an Hebrew. So Bochart observes out of Athenæus, L. vii. Deipnos. where Anaxandrides, a Comedian, jeers the Egyptians for worshipping an Eel, as a great God, whom we, saith he, think to be most excellent Meat: And out of Herodotus, who in his Euterpe, cap. 41. saith, no Egyptian Man or Woman would kiss the Mouth of a Greek; nor make use of a knife, a Spit, or a Pot, belonging to them; nor take a Bit of Beef cut with a Greek's Knife. See Bochart's Hierozytic. P. i. Lib. ii. cap. 53. And Dr. Spencer de Rit. Hebr. p. 125. But tho' it appear by such Passages, that in the time of Herodotus, and other fore-named Writers, several Animals were held so sacred among the Egyptians, that they would not eat them; yet it may be well questioned whether it were so in the Days of Joseph. For there is not the least sign of it in this Story; much less of their worshipping such Creatures: The worship of the famous Ox, called Apis, being a much later Invention, as many learned Men have demonstrated: And some of them having given probable Reasons that Joseph himself was the Person at first represented by that Figure under the Name of Ab, i. e. Father of his Country. See Ger. Vossius, L. i. de Idol. cap. 29.

Therefore it is most likely, that this Abhorrence is to be resolved only into the very different Manners of the Hebrews from the Egyptians: Particularly at their Meals, in the way of dressing their Meat, or in their eating. For we know some of the Jews themselves afterwards scrupled to eat with those who had unwashen Hands; and several Nations have avoided such Familiarity with others, merely on the account of their different Customs. Of which the Egyptians were exceeding tenacious, as Herodotus himself informs us; particularly in their eating. For he concludes his Discourse about their Feasts with this Observation (in his Book before-mentioned, cap. 28. Πατέριστοι δὲ χρεώμενοι νόμοισι, ἄλλον ἑτέρον ἐπικτίων): Using their own Country Customs, they receive no other. And in the Ninety first Chapter of the same Book, he saith, that as they would use no Greek Customs, so (to speak all in a word) μὴδ' ἄλλον μὴδαμὰ, &c. Neither would they use the Customs of any other Men in the World whatsoever. Nay, one Part of Egypt differed extremely from another: For in the Theban Province they abstained from Sheep, and sacrificed Goats; but, in the Mendesian, quite contrary, they abstained from Goats, and sacrificed Sheep; as he tell us in his Euterpe, cap. 42. And the wisest of them were so nicely superstitious, that some of them thought it unlawful to eat of the Head of any living Creature; others the Shoulder-blade; others of the Feet; others of some like Part. So Sextus Empiricus tells us, Lib. iii. Pyrrh. Hypot. cap. 24. Ἀγυπτιῶν δὲ οἱ σαρφὶν εἶναι νομιζόμενον, οἱ μὲν κεφαλὴν ζῶν φαγεῖν ἀνίσχον εἶναι νομιζουσιν, &c. Upon which score I do not know but such kind of People might be so whimsical, as to refuse to eat with one another.

Ver. 33. They sat before him.] For that was the Custom before the way of lying upon Beds was invented. See xxvii. 19. xxxvii. 25.

And the Men marvelled one at another,] That they should be so exactly disposed according to the order of their Birth, and so kindly treated by one that had lately used them very roughly.

Ver. 34. And he took and sent Messes, &c.] Ordered those that waited to take and carry Messes from his own Table unto theirs. For such was the ancient Custom, for great Men to honour such as were in their Favour, by sending Dishes to them, which were first served up to themselves: From whence they were called MISSA, Messes, things sent. The ancient way of eating also is to be observed, which was not like ours; as appears by Plutarch in his Sympos. Lib. ii. Q. ult. where he disputes which was the better Custom, to eat out of one common Dish, or, every one to have a Dish to himself; as the manner was in old time. When all the Meat being set on the Table, the Master of the Feast distributed to every one their Portion.

Benjamin's Mess was five times as much, &c.] He had five Dishes to their one: Which was intended as a peculiar Respect to him. Or, as others understand it, there was five times as much Meat in his Mess, as in one of theirs. Which might well be part of the cause of their wonder, ver. 33.

And they drank.] After they had dined, plenty of Wine was brought in, for every one to drink as much as they pleased. For such is the Custom of the Abyssines at this Day, not to drink or talk at Dinner, but after the Meat is taken away; as Ludolphus assures us from Telexius: Who takes it to have been the ancient Custom among other Nations, particularly the Romans: For which he alledges those Verses of Virgil, Æneid. i.

Crateras magnas statuunt, & vina coronat.*

I mention Wine here in Egypt: For tho' Herodotus saith in his Days they had no Vines, but used Drink made of Barley, i. e. such as ours, (Lib. ii. cap. 77.) yet in the time of Joseph it seems to have been otherwise. For it is not likely the Chief Butler would have dream'd of a Vine and Grapes, and pressing them into Pharaoh's Cup, (xl. 9, 10, 11.) if he had never seen them in Egypt.

And they were merry with him.] So we well translate the last words of this Chapter; which signify their drinking plentifully; more liberally than at home: Not till they were drunk (as R. Solomon saith some used to abuse this Place, to countenance that Vice) but till they were very cheerful. For they could not be so senseless, as before so great a Man, in a strange place, where they were also full of fear, to make themselves drunk.

C H A P. XLIV.

Ver. 1. FILL the Mens Sacks with Food, as much as they can carry.] This seems to be an Order, to load them more liberally than at their first coming, xlii. 25:

Ver. 2. And put my Cup, &c.] The Hebrew word Gabiab signifies an embossed Cup, (as we now speak) or a Bowl, or Goblet with a great Belly: Which St. Hierom translates Scyphus. This he ordered his Steward to put in Benjamin's Sack, that he might make a trial of his Brethren's Concern for him, and Affection both to him and to their Father. And whether they would discover an Envy to Benjamin, because of his extraordinary Kindness to him.

Ver. 3. The Men were sent away.] Had a Pass, we may suppose, from Joseph, to carry so much Corn out of the Country, as their Asses were loaded withal.

Ver. 4. Wherefore have ye rewarded evil for good?] Being entertained so kindly at my Master's Table, why have ye stole his Cup?

Ver. 5. Is not this it, wherein my Lord drinketh?] Did you not think this would be presently enquired after?

And whereby indeed he divineth?] The Hebrew word Nachash, which we translate Divine, it is very likely, was anciently of an indifferent signification. And therefore Grotius thinks that Joseph meant by this Speech, that he used this Cup in his Drink-offerings when he sacrificed, to prepare himself to receive Divine Presages. But I think, we had better say, there was a kind of Divination by Cups (tho' we know not what it was) as we are certain there was by many other things among the Greeks, (who borrowed much of their Religion from the Egyptians) than give this or other such-like Interpretation of these words, particularly their observing the sparkling of the Wine in their Libations. For it seems plain to me, that Joseph speaks of the Cup he used at his own Table: And it is not probable, that he used the same in Sacrifices to God. Such Vessels as were used in Divine Service, were not used in their own, being held sacred; and therefore separated from common use, and kept so safe, no doubt, that it was not easy to steal them. He speaks therefore of some Divination that was used at their Meals: Which doth not signify that Joseph practised it, nor doth his Steward say he did; but only asks such a Question, as might make them think he did. For, being a known Interpreter of Dreams, People perhaps thought he was skilled also in the Arts of Divination. But the words are still capable of a more simple Interpretation. For Nachash sometimes signifies no more than to make an Experiment; as in the words of Laban, xxx. 27. And so the meaning may be, (as Aben Ezra expounds this Passage) might you not have considered, that my Master made a trial, (so we interpret in the Margin) by laying this in your way, whether you were honest Men, or Filchers, as you are now proved to be? Or, as others will have it, This is the Cup wherein he drinks himself, and finds out what is in other Men, when they drink liberally with him at his Table as you lately did. But the former is more likely to be the meaning.

Ye have done evil in so doing.] You have rendered your selves very criminal by this Fact: Or, you have done very foolishly in stealing a thing of this Nature, which, being in continual use, would be soon missed.

Ver. 7. God forbid that thy Servants, &c.] They disclaim the Charge, with the greatest Vehemence.

Ver. 8. Behold the Money, &c.] And bring a very good Proof of their Honesty.

Ver. 9. Both let him die, and we also, &c.] Sometimes Innocence makes Men too confident, and less cautious, than in Prudence they ought to be. For their Money having been put into their Sacks they knew not how, it was reasonable to have suspected this also might prove true.

Ver. 10. Now also let it be according to your word, &c.] I desire not so much, but only that he with whom the Cup is found, be my Bond-man; as you propound.

My Bond-man.] He speaks in the Name and Place of his Master; by whom he was sent after them, and for whom he acted.

Ver. 11. Then they speedily took down, &c.] They were desirous to have their Innocence cleared, without delay.

Ver. 23. Rent their Cloaths.] As the manner was when any sad thing befel them, xxxvii. 29, 34.

Ver. 14. Judah and his Brethren came, &c.] He is mentioned by Name, tho' not the eldest Son; because he was chiefly concerned for Benjamin, (xlii. 9.) and, as the Jews fancy, stood to him in this Distress, when the rest would have delivered him up as a Bond-man: Resolving either to set him free, or to be a Bond-man with him.

For he was yet there.] Not gone from home since he gave order to his Steward to pursue them.

They fell before him on the ground.] The Dream of Joseph was again fulfilled. See xlii. 6.

Ver. 15. Wot ye not that such a Man as I can certainly divine?] Could not I, who foretold this grievous Famine, discover such a Theft as this, which you have committed?

Ver. 16. And Judah said.] He standing bound, as I said (ver. 14.) for Benjamin to his Father, took upon him to plead his Cause: Which, Benjamin, being young, could not do so well himself. And indeed Judah seems to have been a Man of the best Sense, Courage, and Eloquence, among them.

What shall we say to my Lord? What shall we speak? or how, &c.] A most pathetic beginning: And very apt to move Compassion.

God hath found out the Iniquity of thy Servants, &c.] Having made some pause, after those words, [How shall we clear our selves?] he proceeds to an ingenuous Acknowledgment, that he and his Brethren had been guilty of many Sins; for which God had now brought them hither to suffer the Punishment of them. Yet he neither confesses this particular Guilt, nor denies denies it, nor excuses it, but acknowledging God's Justice, casts himself and his Brethren upon Joseph's Mercy.

Ver. 18. Then Judab came near to him.] The Equity which appeared in Joseph (expressed in the words foregoing) emboldened Judab to approach nearer to him. For he seems to have spoken the former words, as soon as he entered the Room: When he and his Brethren cast themselves down on the Ground, ver. 14.

Speak a word in my Lord's Ears.] Have a favourable Audience for a few words more. For he doth not mean to speak them privately: And by a Word, he means all the following Speech, which he makes as short as it was possible.

And let not thy Anger burn against thy Servant.] And be pleased to hear me out with Patience.

For thou art even as Pharaoh.] I know before whom I speak; and therefore will not impertinently trouble thee, but barely lay the state of our Case before thee.

Ver. 20. A little one.] So Benjamin was, in comparison with themselves.

He alone is left of his Mother, &c.] We do not read, that they had said this to Joseph before, but only that the youngest was with their Father, xliii. 13, 32. But no doubt, Judab remembers him now of nothing, but what had been then delivered; but related more briefly than it is here.

Ver. 27. My Wife bare me two Sons.] He called Rachel his Wife, as if he had no other: Because she was the only Person he designed to marry, and was by consequence his principal Wife.

Ver. 30. His life is bound up in the Lad's life.] It so depends upon the Life of this Son, that if he think he be dead, he will die with Grief also.

Ver. 33. Let thy Servant abide instead of the Lad, &c.] It will be the same to thee, (nay, I may be able to do thee more service) and the greatest act of Pity to our aged Father.

Ver. 24. For how shall I go up to my Father, &c.] I must abide here too, if thou wilt not dismiss him; for I am not able to see my Father die.

There is nothing could be said more moving, than what is delivered in this Speech of Judab; which flowed, any one may see, from such natural Passions, as no Art can imitate. Which makes me wish that they who think these Historical Books of Scripture were written with no Spirit, but that with which honest Men now write the History of their Country, or the Lives of any famous Persons, would seriously read and consider this Speech of Judab's to Joseph, together with the foregoing Dialogue between Jacob and his Sons (from the 19th Verse of the xlii. Chapter, to the 15th of the xliii.) and, I hope, it may make them change their Opinion, and be of the Mind of Dr. Jackson, B. i. on the Creed, cap. 4. 'That seeing such Passages are related by Men who affect no Art, and who lived long after the Parties that first uttered them, we cannot conceive how all Particulars could be so naturally and fully recorded, unless they had been suggested by his Spirit, who gives mouth and speech to Men. Who being alike present to all Successions, is able to communicate the secret Thoughts of Forefathers to their Children; and put the very Words of the Deceased (never registred before) into the Mouths or Pens of their Successors, for many Generations after; and that, as exactly and distinctly, as if they had been caught in Characters of Steel or Brass, as they issued out of their Mouth. For it is plain, every Circumstance is here related, with such natural Specifications (as he speaks) as if Moses had heard them talk; and therefore could not have been thus represented to us, unless they had been written by his Direction, who knows all things, as well fore-past, as present, or to come.'

Philo justly admired this Speech, which he hath expressed in an eloquent Paraphrase: And Josephus hath endeavoured to out-do him.

CHAP. XLV.

Ver. 1. Could not refrain himself.] Tears began to run down his Cheeks; or, were ready to burst out with such Violence, that he could not hinder them.

Cause every Man to go out from me.] He would not have the Egyptians to be Witnesses of his Brethren's Guilt; nor did it become his Dignity to be seen by them in such a Passion; and therefore he commanded those that attended him to leave him alone with his Brethren.

Ver. 2. He wept aloud.] Which we express very properly in our Language, he cried. For Tears, having been long suppressed, are wont, when they break out, to be accompanied with some Noise.

And the Egyptians, and the house of Pharaoh heard.] They whom he sent forth being in the next Rooms, heard him cry; and reported what a Passion he was in to the whole Court.

Ver. 3. I am Joseph.] This word made them start; as appears by the next Verse.

Doth my Father yet live?] May I believe what you have told me? xliii. 28. He saith not this because he doubted of it, but to express his Joy at that good News.

And they could not answer him.] Being astonished, as it follows, at his Presence. For they could not but reflect upon their cruel usage of him; and now saw him in full power to punish them.

Ver. 4. Come near to me, I pray you.] This, I think, signifies, that they had started back as Men affrighted: And therefore he invites them kindly to approach him.

I am Joseph your Brother.] This word Brother, added to what he said before, ver. 3. was a Comfort to them. For it showed that his Greatness did not make him forget his Relation.

Whom you sold into Egypt.] Nor their Unkindness alienated his Affection from them.

Ver. 5. Now therefore be not grieved, &c.] Do not afflict your selves too much for your Sin, because God hath turned it into Good.

God sent me before you, &c.] When you thought only to be rid of me, God intended another thing: Which is now come to pass.

For

For he hath made me an Instrument of preserving all your Lives. A most happy Event of a most wicked Deed!

Ver. 6. Neither earing nor harveſt.] Or, no Ploughing, Sowing, or Harveſt. For to what purpose ſhould they ſow, when they knew (if they believed Joſeph) that nothing would come of it?

Ver. 7. And God ſent me before you, &c.] He repeats what he had ſaid, ver. 5. concerning the Hand of God in this buſineſs: That by fixing their Thoughts upon his Providence, they might be the leſs oppreſſed with the weight of their own Guilt.

To ſave your lives by a great deliverance.] In a wonderful manner.

Ver. 8. It was not you, but God, &c.] He mentions this a third time, that they might ſee he did not think ſo much on their Unkindneſs, as on God's great Goodneſs: And therefore be confident, he would not remember what they had done to him, but what God had done for them all.

Hath made me a Father unto Pharaoh.] Given me the Authority of a Father with him; ſo that he honours me, and doth nothing without my Advice and Counſel. And there was very good Reaſon for it, his Wiſdom being ſo great and experienced, Ut non ab homine ſed à Deo reſponſa dari viderentur, (as Trogus, an ancient Hiſtorian among the Heathen, obſerves) that his Anſwers ſeemed not to be given by a Man, but by God. Which made him Regi percharum, very dear to the King, as the ſame Author relates: Who tells alſo the Story of his being ſold by his Brethren, who envied his excellent Wit. See Juſtin, Lib. xxxvi. cap. 2.

Lord of all his Houſe.] The principal Perſon in his Court.

And Ruler throughout all the Land of Egypt.] Chief Governor of the whole Country: In which were ſeveral Provinces, which had diſtinct Governors; who were all under the Government of Joſeph.

Ver. 10. Thou ſhalt dwell in the Land of Goſhen.] This was that part of the lower Egypt, which lay next to Arabia and Paleſtine; abounding with fair Paſtures, being watered by many Streams from the Nile. Certain it is, it lay next to Canaan; for Jacob went directly thither, when he came into Egypt; and ſtaid there till Joſeph came to him, xlvi. 28.

And thou ſhalt be near unto me.] Therefore the Royal City (where Joſeph reſided, that he might be always near to Pharaoh) was at this time in the lower Egypt, at Zoan; Pſal. lxxviii. 43. which other Authors call Tanis. Which was ſituated not far from that Mouth of the Nile which Plutarch calls ταπινὸν εἶμα. For that part of Egypt is called the higher, where Nile runs only in one Stream: That, the lower, where it divides into many; and from its triangular Form, is called by the Greeks, Δέλτα. In the Eastern Part of which, or very near it, toward the Red-Sea, was this Country, called the Land of Goſhen.

This argues the great Authority of Joſeph, that he makes ſuch Promiſes as theſe, before he had aſk'd the Conſent of Pharaoh.

Ver. 12. And behold, your Eyes ſee, &c.] You cannot but be convinced by the Lineaments you ſee in my Face, and by the Language which I ſpeak, and by all the things which I have related concerning the ſtate of our Family, that indeed it is your Brother Joſeph who ſpeaks to you. Or, more ſimply; you have it not by hear-ſay, which might deceive you, but are Eye-witneſſes that I am alive, and ſay theſe things to you.

Ver. 13. Tell my Father of all my glory.] Of the great Honour which is done me in Egypt.

Ver. 13. His Brethren talked with him.] After their Fright was over, and he had ſo affectionately embraced them, they converſed freely and familiarly with him: Acknowledging, it's likely, their Crime; and acquainting him with what had paſſed in their Family ſince they committed it.

Ver. 16. And the ſame thereof, &c.] All the Court rang (as we ſpeak) with the News of Joſeph's Brethren being come; and that they were to fetch their Father and ſettle in Egypt. For Joſeph (it appears by the next Verſe) went and acquainted Pharaoh with his Deſire.

And it pleaſed Pharaoh well, and his Servants.] No wonder that Pharaoh, who had raiſed Joſeph ſo high, was pleaſed to be kind to his Father and Family: And the Court follows the Pleaſure of the King.

Ver. 17. Pharaoh ſaid unto Joſeph, &c.] This no doubt was the Anſwer Pharaoh made to Joſeph's Petition: Wherein he grants him not only what he aſk'd, but all conducing to it.

Ver. 18. I will give you the good of the Land, &c.] The richeſt part of the Country, which produces the nobleſt Fruits.

Ver. 19. Now thou art commanded.] Now that thou haſt my Warrant for it, go about it preſently.

Ver. 20. Regard not your ſtuff.] If there be not Waggonſ enough to bring all your Stuff, do not matter it; you ſhall have better here. But the Vulgar ſeems to take it in a quite contrary Senſe, as if he had ſaid, Leave nothing behind you, but bring all you have with you, if you think good: Tho' whatſoever the Land of Egypt affords, is all yours.

All the good of the Land of Egypt, &c.] You ſhall not want when you come hither, if it be to be had in Egypt.

Ver. 21. Gave them Waggonſ.] And Horſes, no doubt, to draw them; with which Egypt abounded.

Ver. 22. To each Man changes of Raiment.] Two Veſts, or Robes, as St. Hierom tranſlates it: Otherwiſe there would not have been a change. Theſe were part of the ancient Riches, as much as Money.

Ver. 23. After this manner.] The Hebrew word Cezoth ſignifies, according to that which he had given to Benjamin, i. e. Money, and ſeveral changes of Raiment, beſides what follows, ten Aſſes laden with the good things of Egypt, &c.

Bread and Meat.] i. e. All manner of Proviſion.

Ver. 24. See that ye fall not out, &c.] About what you have formerly done to me; or any thing, thing else that I have said to you; but when you reflect upon your selling me, adore the Providence of God, which by that means brought about your Happiness and mine.

Ver. 26. His Heart fainted.] At the mention of Joseph's Name he fell into a Swoon, being fully persuaded he was dead, and giving no Credit to what they said of his being alive.

Ver. 27. And they told him all the Words of Joseph.] When he was come to himself they related all that had pass'd between them and Joseph, how great a Man he was, and how desirous to see him, &c. ver. 13.

And when he saw the Waggon.] Had not only heard their Relation, but saw also those Carriages (which no doubt were splendid, and suitable to Joseph's Quality) that were come to bring him into Egypt, he look'd upon them as a sufficient Confirmation of the good News.

The Spirit of Jacob reviv'd.] Which Bochart translates, Pristino vigori restitutus est, he was restored to his former Vigor; not only recover'd perfectly from his fainting Fit, but raised to a greater Liveliness than he had felt since the Loss of Joseph.

Ver. 28. It is enough, &c.] I wish for no more but to live to see him, and then I shall be content to die.

CHAP. XLVI.

Ver. 1. Came to Beersheba.] Which was in his way from Hebron (where he now liv'd, xxxv. 27.) into Egypt, lying in the most southerly Parts of Canaan, near that Wilderness thro' which the Israelites went when they came from Egypt.

And offer'd Sacrifice.] Recommended himself and his Family unto God's Protection in his Journey to Egypt, and unto his Preservation when he came there; and he the rather call'd upon God in this Place, because both his Father and Grandfather had found Favour with him here, xxi. 33. xxvi. 23.

Unto the God of his Father Isaac.] Who was his immediate Ancestor, and had conferr'd the Blessing of Abraham upon him; and therefore he mentions him rather than Abraham.

Ver. 2. In the Visions of the Night.] See upon xx. 3.

Jacob, Jacob.] He redoubles his Name to awaken his Attention, and he calls him Jacob rather than Israel (as he is called in the beginning of the Verse) to remember him what he was originally; and that by his Favour he was made Israel.

Ver. 3. Fear not to go down into Egypt.] He was afraid perhaps that if Joseph should die his Family might be made Slaves, for which he had some reason from what was said to Abraham in a like Vision, xv. 13.

I will make of thee a great Nation.] He renews the Promise which at the same time was made to Abraham, that his Seed should be as numerous as the Stars of Heaven, xv. 5.

Ver. 4. I will go down with thee, &c.] Take care of thee in thy Journey, that no Evil shall befall thee, and preserve thee and thy Family there.

And bring thee up again.] i. e. his Posterity, who should multiply there; for the Scripture speaks of Parents and Children as one Person.

Put his Hands upon thine Eyes.] Be with thee when thou leavest this World, and take Care of thy Funeral when thou art dead; for this was the first thing that was done when one expir'd, to close his Eyes, which was perform'd both among Greeks and Romans (as many Authors inform us) by the nearest Relations or dearest Friends. See Mr. Selden, L. ii. de Synedr. cap. 7. n. 12. and Menochius de Repub. Hebr. L. viii. cap. 4. Qu. xi.

In short, by these Words God assures him that Joseph should not die while he liv'd (as Mr. Selden observes out of Baal-baturim in his Additions to the fore-nam'd Chapter, p. 737.) and that he should die in Peace, having his Children about him.

Ver. 7. His Daughters.] He had but one Daughter, and therefore the Plural Number is used for the Singular (as ver. 23. Sons is put for Son) or else he includes his Grand-daughter, who in Scripture Language is called the Daughter of her Grandfather; but the first seems the truest Account, if what is said ver. 15. be considered, where the whole Number of his Descendants from Leab being summ'd up, Dinah (under the Name of Daughters) must be taken in to make up three and thirty, reckoning Jacob himself also for one of them.

Ver. 9. Hanoch.] From whom came the Family of the Hanochites, as we read, Numb. xxvi. 5.

Phallu.] From whom in like manner sprung the Family of the Phalluites, as Moses there notes; and says the same of the rest of Reuben's Sons, that they were the Fathers of Families when they came into Egypt.

Ver. 10. Jemuel.] This Son of Simeon is call'd Nemuel in Numb. xxvi. 12. and 1 Chron. iv. 24.

Obad.] He is nam'd among the Sons of Simeon, when Moses was sent to bring them out of Egypt, Exod. vi. 15. but either he had no Posterity, or they were extinct; for shortly after there is no mention of him in Numb. xxvi. 12. nor is he to be found among his Sons in 1 Chron. iv. 24.

Jacbin.] Is call'd Jarib in 1 Chron. iv. 24. and is thought by some to have been the Grandfather of Zimri, whom Phineas slew in his Fornication with the Midianitish Woman.

Ver. 12. Er and Onan dy'd in the Land of Canaan.] And therefore are not to be number'd among them that went down into Egypt; but instead of them the two Sons of Pharez are set down, tho' perhaps not now born, to supply the Place of Er and Onan.

The Sons of Pharez were, Hezron and Hamul.] When Jacob went down into Egypt, Pharez was so young that one can scarce think he had two Sons at that time, but they were born soon after, before Jacob dy'd; and St. Austin seems to have truly judg'd, that Jacob's Descent into Egypt comprehends all the Seventeen Years which he liv'd after it; or we may conceive it possible that their Mother was with Child of them when Jacob went down into Egypt, for then Pharez is thought to have been Fourteen Years old, at which Age it is is so far from being incredible that he might have two Sons, that in these later Ages some have begotten a Child when they were younger. Ful. Scaliger, a Man of unquestionable Credit, assures us that in his Memory there was a Boy, not quite Twelve Years old, who had a Daughter by a Cousin of his, who was not quite Ten. Rem notam narro, & cujus memoria adhuc recens est in Aquitania. This was a known thing; the Memory of which was then fresh in Aquitain.

Ver. 13. And the Sons of Issachar, Tola.] Some have wonder'd that he should give his eldest Son a Name that signifies a Worm; perhaps it was (as Bochart conjectures) because he was a poor shrivel'd Child when he was born, not likely to live; and yet it pleas'd God that he became a great Man, from whom sprang a numerous Offspring, Numb. xxvi. 23. and so fruitful, that in the Days of David there were number'd above 22000 of them, 1 Chron. vii. 2. who were Men of Might and Valour.

Ver. 15. Which she bare unto Jacob in Padan-Aram.] She bare the Fathers of them there, but the Children were born in Canaan.

All the Souls of his Sons and Daughters, &c.] See ver. 7.

Ver. 19. Rachel, Jacob's Wife.] She was his only Choice, as was noted before, on xliv. 27.

Ver. 21. The Sons of Benjamin, &c.] He being now but about 24 Years old, we cannot well think he had all these Sons when he went down into Egypt; but some of them were born afterward, before Jacob dy'd, as was said before, ver. 12. yet they are all here mention'd, because they were most of them now born, and all became the Heads of Families in their Tribe: It is possible he might begin so early to beget Children as to have all these before they went into Egypt. See ver. 12.

Ver. 26. Come out of his Loins.] In the Hebrew, out of his Thigh; a modest Expression, the Parts serving for the Propagation of Mankind being plac'd between the Thighs.

All the Souls were threescore and six.] i. e. leaving out Joseph and his two Sons (who did not come with Jacob into Egypt, but were there already) and Jacob himself (who could not be said to come out of his own Loins) they made just this Number.

Ver. 27. All the Souls which came into Egypt were threescore and ten.] There is a remarkable difference between this Verse and the foregoing, there (ver. 26.) they only are number'd who came with Jacob into Egypt, which were no more than threescore and six; but here are number'd all that came into Egypt (viz. first and last) which plainly comprehend Jacob, Joseph, and his two Sons, and make up threescore and ten.

Ver. 28. And he sent Judah before him.] Who seems by the whole Story to have been the most eminent among Jacob's Children when Joseph was gone, as was noted before, xliv. 14.

To direct his Way, &c.] To give Joseph notice of his coming, and to receive Directions from him in what Part of Goshen he should expect him.

And they came into the Land of Goshen.] Into that Part of it which Joseph had appointed.

Ver. 29. Presented himself to him.] With such Reverence as a Son owes to his Father, who embrac'd him most tenderly; for some refer the next Words to Jacob, he fell on his Neck, &c. which expresses the highest Affection.

And wept on his Neck a good while.] We read before how Joseph fell upon Benjamin's Neck and wept, which was answer'd by the like Endearments on Benjamin's Part, xlv. 14. But the Affection wherewith Jacob embrac'd Joseph (as Maimonides understands it) or (as R. Solomon Jarchi) Joseph embrac'd his Father, far surpass'd that, for they continu'd longer enfolded in one another's Arms, where Tears of Joy flow'd so fast, that for a good while they could not speak.

Ver. 30. And Israel said unto Joseph.] Some make this an Argument that it was Joseph, who lighting out of his Chariot, threw himself into his Father's Arms and wept, &c. which made Moses now more distinctly mention who said the following Words.

Now let me die, &c.] These Words signify that he now enjoy'd the utmost Happiness he could desire on Earth, which therefore he was willing to leave, because nothing could be added to it; these were the first Thoughts which his Passion suggested to him; tho' to live with Joseph, and to enjoy his Conversation, was far more than barely to see his Face.

Ver. 32. The Men are Shepherds, &c.] He seems to have been afraid lest Pharaoh should have prefer'd his Brethren, and made them Courtiers, or Commanders in the Army, &c. which might have procur'd them the Envy of the Egyptians, and besides have separated them one from another; whereas by professing themselves Shepherds, and Traders in Cattle, they kept all together in a Body, separate from the Egyptians; which two Reasons are suggested by Joseph.

Ver. 33. What is your Occupation?] Your way of living? for Men did not live idly in those Days.

Ver. 34. Ye shall say, Thy Servants Trade hath been, &c.] He directs them to justify what he told them he would inform Pharaoh.

That ye may dwell in the Land of Goshen.] A rich Country, abounding with Pasturage, and also next adjoining to Canaan (as was noted before, xlv. 10.) unto which, when the Time came, they might the more easily return.

For every Shepherd.] Not universally, without Limitation, but every foreign Shepherd; for a considerable Part of the Egyptian People were Shepherds, as Diodorus Siculus tells us, (L. i. §. 2. p. 47. Edit. Steph.) where he saith the Country being divided into three Parts, the Priests had one, their King a second, and the Soldiers a third; and there were three other Ranks of Men under these, viz. Shepherds, Husbandmen, and and Artificers; the Husbandmen he saith serv'd their King, and Priests, and military Men, in tilling their Ground for small Wages, and spent all their Time in it. And the like Account he saith is given of their Shepherds, who from their Forefathers follow'd that way of living, which makes it plain they could not abominate those who were so serviceable to them, tho' they might condemn them as mean People, who never rose to any higher Employment; but we need not go to him for the Proof of this, it being apparent from this very Book that the Egyptians had Sheep and Oxen as well as Horses and Asses, which they fold to Joseph for Corn in the Time of Famine (xlvi. 17.) and that Pharaoh spake to Joseph, to make such of his Brethren as were Men of Skill, Rulers over his Flocks (xlvi. 6.) which is a Demonstration they bred Cattle as well as other Nations; and therefore if we will understand this to be true of all Shepherds, without Exception, then by Egyptians (to whom Shepherds are said to be an Abomination) we must not understand all the People of the Country of Egypt (Shepherds being a Part of them) but only the Courtiers and great Men; as in xlv. 2. the Egyptians are said to hear Joseph weep, i. e. those that belong'd to the Court, who it is likely despis'd Shepherds (as Rupertus Tuitiensis long ago expounded this Passage) but that is far short of abominating them, which the Hebrew Word imports. But after all this, I do not see how they could be contemptible, if it be true which the same Diodorus saith, p. 58. that when they bury'd a Corpse, and made the Funeral Encomium, they never mention'd the Parentage of the Deceas'd, ἡπολαμὲν ἄνθρωπος ἀπὸ τοῦ ἰσχυροῦ ἐν ἡρώεσσιν ἢ τοῦ ἰσχυροῦ Ἀιγυπτίων, making account that all the People of Egypt were alike born.

We must confine therefore this Assertion to foreign Shepherds; and it is not easy to give the Reason why they were an Abomination to the Egyptians, who were Shepherds themselves. Onkelos and Jonathan, with a great many others, think that they would not converse (for that is meant by Abomination) with the Hebrew Shepherds, because they had no greater Regard to those Creatures which the Egyptians worshipp'd, than to breed them up to be eaten; but there is no good Proof that they worshipp'd Sheep or Oxen in those Days; and on the contrary, it appears both out of Herodotus and Diodorus Siculus, that they sacrific'd such Creatures in their Days, and also eat of the Sacrifices when they had done. See Herodot. in Euterpe, cap. 40, 41. And therefore the Reason given by others for this Abhorrence is not solid, that the Egyptians did eat no Flesh, and upon that Score could not endure those that did. This is the Account which Aben Ezra gives of this Matter, who fancies they were like the Indians in his Time, who abominated Shepherds because they drank Milk, contrary to their Manners, who tasted nothing that came from any living Creature. But as it cannot be prov'd that this Superstition was so old as Jacob's Time, so the contrary is evident from this very Book, xliii. 16. where Joseph bids his Steward go home and slay, and make ready a Dinner for his Brethren, whom he did not intend to entertain after the Hebrew, but after the Egyptian Fashion, that he might not be known by them. And so Herodotus informs us, that in his Days tho' they abstained from some Animals, yet they did eat of others, both Fish and Birds, Euterpe, cap. 78. And Diodorus giving an Account after what manner their Kings liv'd, saith they us'd a simple Diet, eating Veal and Geese, &c. L. i. §. 2. p. 45. Edit. Steph.

Jos. Scaliger therefore thinks this Sort of Men were abominable because they had often rais'd Rebellion in Egypt, and made a King of their own, who erected that which is call'd the Pastoral Kingdom; this is embrac'd by many great Men, who have only the Authority of Manetho for it, who says these were Phœnician Shepherds (as Josephus tells us, Lib. i. contra Appion) who reign'd in Egypt, and burnt their Cities, threw down their Temples; in short, omitted no Sort of Cruelties. Upon this Account the famous Bockartus (Lib. iv. Canaan, cap. 4.) thinks it possible the Egyptians hated Shepherds who had done so much Mischief; and I may add, the Hebrew Shepherds Joseph might think would be more abominated, because they came out of that very Country from whence those Phœnician Rovers made their Invasion. But as it doth not appear that they who did the forenam'd Mischief were all Foreigners, so the Time which is assign'd for this Pastoral Kingdom doth not agree with the Scripture-Story; for it is said to have been in the 1112th Year before the Israelites going out of Egypt, in the xvth Dynaſty, as they call it, that is, about 42 Years after the Flood, when Mizraim, the Father of the Egyptians, was scarce born, or was very young.

Our great Primate Uſſer endeavours to avoid this Absurdity, by placing this Invasion (which he thinks was out of Arabia) 300 Years after the Flood, when they took Memphis, over-run all the lower Egypt, and their first King there reign'd 19 Years; but I have this to except, that Abraham coming a good while after this into Egypt, was well entertain'd there, tho' he was as much a Shepherd as his Grand-child Jacob. See Gen. xii.

From whence I conclude, that if this Story of Manetho be true, it happen'd after the Time of Abraham, and so was fresh in their Memory. Such a third Rebellion of the Shepherds the same Manetho mentions, within less than 200 Years before the Children of Israel's Departure out of Egypt. But this seems to be a Story fram'd from that Departure of the Israelites themselves (who were Shepherds) out of Egypt under the Conduct of Moses; and so Josephus, and several of the ancient Christians (Tatianus, Justin Martyr, and Clem. Alexand.) understood it. See Uſſer. ad An. M. 2179.

All this consider'd, Gaulmin (in his Notes upon the Book call'd, the Life of Moses, p. 267, &c.) hath more probably conjectur'd, that this Aversion to Shepherds arose from their being generally addicted in those Parts to Robbery, which Way of Life made them abominable; this he justifies out of Heliodorus, L. i. and Achilles Tatius, L. iii. who describe the Seat of these Βεκαλοὶ and Ποιμνῆς (whom the Egyptians call'd Hysch) and the Manner of their Life. To which Opinion I find Bockart himself inclin'd before he dy'd, and confirms it (in his Hierozeug. L. ii. c. 44. P. i.)

by

by many Proofs, that Shepherds anciently were furax hominum genus, a thievish Sort of People, which made them odious; against which I see no Exception but this, that Aulus Gellius tells us (Lib. xi. cap. 18.) out of an ancient Lawyer, that the old Egyptians held all manner of Thefts to be lawful, and did not punish them; and Diodorus Siculus mentions this Law among them, that they who would live by Robbery were to enter their Names, and bring what they stole immediately to the Priest; who must the Man that was robb'd a fourth Part, and gave it to the Thief; by which means all Thefts were discover'd; and Men were made more careful to look well after their Goods; but one cannot believe this Law was of such Antiquity as the Times of Joseph, or if it was, those Out-laws (as I may call them) who robb'd upon the Borders, were not concern'd in it; nor had their Neighbours, who were no less addicted to Theft, the Benefit of it; particularly those in Palestine, from whence Jacob came, one would guess by what we read 1 Chron. vii. 21, 22. were then much addicted to Robbery; for before this Generation ended, we are told there the Men of Gath slew several of the Sons of Ephraim (who himself was then alive) for they came down to take their Cattle, saith that holy Writer, that is, to get what Plunder they could in Goshen; where the Ephraimites defending their Cattle, were some of them kill'd by the Philistines, to the great Grief of their Father. The Ethiopians also are noted by Strabo (Lib. xvii. p. 787.) to live for the most part Νομαδικῶς ὡς ἀνέως, after a very poor, sharking, roving manner, by feeding Cattle where they could find Food for them; and immediately adds, Τοῖς δ' Ἀρμενίοις ἀπαντα πάντα οὐκ ἐχέουσι, that all things were quite contrary among the Egyptians, who were a more civiliz'd People, inhabiting certain and known Places, &c. which shews that their Manners were very different, which easily bred Hatred; which appears by what Plutarch saith (in his Book de Isid. & Osir.) that the Egyptians avoided the Conversation of black People, which was the Complexion of the Ethiopians; and for some such reason, he saith in the same Book, they avoided all Mariners (of other Nations, that is) as here Moses says they did Shepherds, upon some or other of the Accounts before mention'd.

It looks like a Piece of great Generosity in Joseph not to conceal from Pharaoh the Quality of his Family, tho' such kind of Men were under a very ill Character; he hoped they would distinguish themselves from such vile Shepherds as had made the Name odious; and if they did not gain the Love of the Egyptians, they would be the more secur'd in the Love of God, by not learning their evil Manners and Superstitions, from which they would be preserv'd by having no Conversation with them.

C H A P. XLVII.

Ver. 1: Joseph came and told Pharaoh, &c.] He had his Warrant some time ago to send for his Father and his Family, xlvi. 17, &c.

but it was good Manners to acquaint him they were come, and to know his Pleasure, how he should dispose of them.

Behold they are in the Land of Goshen.] They stop there (which was the Entrance of Egypt) till they know thy Pleasure.

Ver. 2: And he took some of his Brethren, &c.] The Hebrew Word Miktse (which we translate some) signifies in common Language, de extremitate, from the Fag-end, as we speak, of his Brethren, which hath made some imagine he presented the meanest of his Brethren to Pharaoh, that he might neither be afraid of them, nor think of advancing them to Employments in the Court or Camp; but this is a mere Fancy, the Word here denoting only, that he took from among all his Brethren five of them, as Bochart observes, who translates it, ex omnibus fratribus suis; taking it to be like that Phrase, xix. 4. where we translate it, from all Quarters, P. i. Hierozoic. Lib. iii. cap. 34.

Ver. 3: Both we and our Fathers.] It is not an Employment we have lately taken up, but were bred to it by our Ancestors, who follow'd the same Profession; for this was the most ancient Way of living, as Columella observes in his Preface; In rusticatione antiquissima est ratio pascendi, eademque quæstuosissima: In Country Business the most ancient as well as most gainful is the Way of feeding Cattle; from whence he thinks came the Name of PECUNIA, for Money, and PECULIUM, for Riches, à pecoribus, from Cattle; because the Ancients had no other Possessions. Et adhuc apud quasdam gentes unum hoc reperiunt divitiarum genus. And to this Day, saith he, there is no other Riches to be found among some Nations. Which is still true of the Abyssines, especially of the Beklenses, as Ludolphus assures us, L. i. Hist. Ethiop. cap. 10. §. 8. and Comment. in Histor. L. iv. cap. 4. n. 13.

Ver. 4: To sojourn in the Land are we come.] We do not desire to settle, but only to sojourn here during the Famine.

For the Famine is sore in the Land of Canaan.] It was an high Country in comparison with Egypt, and the Grass sooner burnt up there than in Goshen, which being a very low Country, they found some Pasture in it for their Flocks, and therefore beseech him to suffer them to dwell there; for as St. Austin observes from those that knew the Country, there was more Grass in the Marshes and fenny Parts of Egypt, when the Nile did not overflow enough to make Plenty of Corn. Quæst. clx. in Gen.

Ver. 6: The Land of Egypt is before thee.] It is all in thy Power, dispose of them as thou plearest.

Any Man of Activity.] Vigorous and industrious, and that understands his Business.

Make them Rulers over my Cattle.] Such as Doeg was to Saul, 1 Sam. xxi. 7. and those great Officers mention'd 1 Chron. xxvii. 29, 30, 31. were to King David; for the Eastern Kings raised Part of their Revenue from Cattle; and so did the Egyptian (it appears by this Place) who had some prime Officers, to oversee the lower Sort of Shepherds; this shews that all Shepherds were not an Abomination to the Egyptians.

Egyptians, but only those of other neighbouring Nations, (the Arabians, Phœnicians, and Ethiopians) who were either an ill sort of People, or forbidden by the Law of Egypt (which abounded with Cattle) to traffick with them there.

Ver. 7. Jacob blessed Pharaoh.] Gave him Thanks for his Favour, and prayed for his Health and Safety: For that's the Blessing of an Inferior to a Superior. Thus Naaman prays Elisha, Take a Blessing of thy Servant, i. e. an Acknowledgment of my Obligations to thee.

Ver. 9. Pilgrimage.] So good Men are wont to call their Life, tho' they never stir from their native Soil: Looking upon it as a Passage, not a Settlement. But Jacob had reason to call his Life so, more literally; having been tossed from place to place ever since he went from his Father's House in Mesopotamia, and returned from thence into Canaan: Where he dwelt a while at Succoth; and then, at Shechem; and after that, removed to Belel; and so to Hebron, unto his Father Isaac; from whence he was now come into Egypt.

Few and evil have been the Days, &c.] They had been few, in comparison with his Fore-fathers; and evil, because full of Labour and Care, Grief and Sorrow, upon many occasions.

Ver. 10. Jacob blessed Pharaoh.] At meeting, and at parting, such Salutations were usual. See Ver. 7.

Ver. 11. In the Land of Rameses.] In that Part of Goshen, which in the Days of Moses was called Rameses; from the Name of the City which the Hebrews built there for Pharaoh: Unless, perhaps, the City was called so from the Country of Rameses, wherein it stood.

Ver. 12. And Joseph nourished his Father, &c.] Tho' there was some Pasture in this Country for their Cattle, yet not Food enough for themselves; which Joseph therefore took care to supply them withal.

According to their Families.] According as their Children were more, or fewer, so he proportioned their Allowance.

Ver. 13. There was no Bread in all the Land.] This was the third Year of the Famine, (xlv. 6.) in which all the Corn, which Men had stored up in their several Families, was wholly spent.

Ver. 14. And Joseph gathered up all the Money, &c.] As long as the Egyptians had any Money left, they bought Corn of Joseph: Which supported them all the third, and, it is probable, the fourth and fifth Year of the Famine.

And Joseph brought the Money into Pharaoh's House.] Into the Treasury, which he filled; and not his own Coffers, as Philo observes.

Ver. 15. And when Money failed.] This, we may probably conceive, was in the sixth Year of the Famine, when they were forced to sell their Cattle for Food.

Ver. 18. They came the second Year.] i. e. The next Year after the sale of their Cattle; which was the last of the Famine, as appears from the next Verse.

Ver. 19. Wherefore should we die, we and our Land?] The Land is said to die, (as Bochart observes in the beginning of his Hierozyicon) cum inculta jacet & desolata, when it lies untill'd and desolate: As he shows by Examples out of some Poets.

VOL. I.

We, and our Land, will be Servants unto Pharaoh.] We that were Free, will become the King's Bond-men; and our Land, which was our own, we will hold of him.

And give us Seed, &c.] This shows it was now the last Year of the Famine: They desiring Corn not merely for Food, but also to sow, in hopes to have a Crop the next Year. For Joseph had told them, there should be but seven Years of Famine: And it is likely, Nilus had now begun to overflow the Country, as formerly; which confirmed his word.

Ver. 20. And Joseph bought all the Land of Egypt for Pharaoh.] So the whole Country became the King's Demesne; in which no Man had any Propriety but himself.

Ver. 21. As for the People, he removed them to Cities.] Remote from those wherein they had formerly dwelt. Under the word Cities, are comprehended all the Villages about them.

From one end of the borders of Egypt, &c.] Transplanted them into far distant Parts of the Country; from whence he brought others, in like manner, into their places: That they might in time forget the Dominion they formerly had in the Lands they had sold; and that there might be no Combination afterward to regain them, the old Owners being separated far one from another.

Ver. 22. Only the Land of the Priests he bought not.] This is commonly noted as a great piece of Religion in Joseph, that he took not away the Land of those who were God's Ministers, tho' engaged, it's thought, in superstitious, if not idolatrous, Services, (for that the word Cobanim here signifies Priests, not Princes, as sometimes it doth, the ancient Versions generally agree.) But it is plain, they were in no necessity to sell their Lands, having their Diet continually from the King: Which is given as the reason (in the following part of this Verse) why he did not buy them. This therefore is rather to be observed, that the Priests had anciently some Publick Lands allotted to them for the support of their Dignity. For both Herodotus and Diodorus tell us, they had a Publick Maintenance; as Vossius observes, Lib. i. de Idolol. cap. 29. The Priesthood being confined to certain Families, (as it was in Israel to that of Aaron) and held in such Veneration, that they were all not only ἀπλῆς, free from paying Tributes, and δευτερεύοντες μὴ τῇ βασιλείᾳ, next to the King in Honour and in Power, but received a third of the Royal Revenues: Out of which they maintained the Publick Sacrifices, and their Servants, and τὰς ἰδίας ἐχρήσταν, provided for their own Necessities. Thus Diodorus Siculus, L. i. as I find him alledged by Jac. Cappellus, in his Hist. Sacra & Exot. ad A. M. 2294. Constantine the Great, in part, imitated this Constitution, in that Law of his, which made even all the Professors of Learning free from all Publick Charges of any sort, besides the Salary he allowed them, that they might the more cheerfully follow their several Studies.

Ver. 23. Behold, I have bought you this day, and your Land, &c.] The Bargain could not be denied; denied; but he would not be so rigid as to tie them strictly to it. For in the next Verse, he requires only a fifth part of the Increase of their Ground for the King; and tells them, the rest should be their own. An act of great Humanity and Equity: Wherein he show'd himself both a good Man, and a wise States-man; in taking away all matter of Complaint from the People. For a tenth part of the Increase was due, in all likelihood, to the King before, (xxviii. 22.) which he now only doubles: When he might have taken all; or given them but one or two parts, and kept all the rest for the King.

Ver. 35. Thou hast saved our lives, &c.] We owe our very Lives to thee; and therefore let us but have thy Favour, and we shall willingly be Pharaoh's Servants. This is an high Expression of their Thankfulness, for such good Terms as he offered them; which they readily accepted, with professions of their Obligation to be Pharaoh's Bond-men.

Ver. 26. Joseph made it a Law.] By his Advice this Law was enacted; whereby the Power of the Egyptian Kings was mightily increased; for we read not of the like Constitution in any other Nation. Thucydides indeed relates that the People of Attica paid to Pisistratus the twentieth part of their Corn; and Appianus Alexandr. says, the old Romans paid the tenth of their Corn, and the fifth of their Fruit: But it was the peculiar Prerogative of the Egyptian Kings, to have the fifth of all the Increase of the Field: Which Joseph procured them by his admirable Management.

Ver. 27. And Israel dwelt in the Land, &c.] Ver. 11.

And they had possessions therein.] They could have no Land of their own, (for all the Country was become Pharaoh's) but the meaning is, they farmed (as we speak) Land of the King, to whom they became Tenants.

And grew and multiplied exceedingly.] And consequently enlarged their Habitation beyond the Territory of Rameses, where they were first placed, into other Parts of Goshen. Which we must not fancy to have been a Country now empty of People: For tho', perhaps, about Rameses there might be some vacant Ground sufficient for Jacob's Family, when they came first to plant there; yet when they increased very much, no doubt they lived among the Egyptians, where they could find admision. This plainly appears at their going from thence, Exod. xii. 22, 23. where God commands them to sprinkle their Door-posts with the Blood of the Paschal Lamb, to secure them from the Destruction, which was coming upon their Neighbours, who wanted this Mark of Safety.

Ver. 29. If I have now found grace in thy sight.] This is a Phrase used a little before, ver. 25. in a little different Sense. For there it signifies the Favour shown to another: But here is as much as, if thou lovest me.

Put thy Hand under my Thigh.] i. e. Swear to me, as it is explain'd in ver. 31. See xxiv. 2.

Deal kindly and truly with me.] Shew me true Kindness, in promising and performing what I desire. See xxiv. 27, 49.

Ver. 30. I will lie with my Fathers, &c.] So all Men naturally desire to do: But he had a peculiar reason for it. Which was his belief that the Country where their Bodies lay, was his in Reversion; and that God, in due time, would put his Children into possession of it. For which time they could not but the more earnestly long, because the Bodies of their Ancestors were there buried. See l. 5. Which explains the Reason why Jacob expects an Oath of Joseph; not because he doubted he might not otherwise fulfil his Desire, but that Pharaoh might be willing to let him carry his Body thither, when he found he lay under so sacred an Obligation to do it.

Ver. 31. And Israel bowed himself upon the Bed's head.] Raised up his Head from his Pillow, and bowed: Either to Joseph, in Thankfulness for his Promise; or to God, for the Assurance he had received, that he should be buried with his pious Fore-fathers: Or else this bowing was the usual Ceremony wherewith an Oath was attended. The Chaldee Paraphrast thinks the Divine Glory now appeared; which Jacob devoutly worshipped. But, if the Author to the Hebrews had not understood his bowing to be an Act of Worship, the Interpretation of some modern Writers might, perhaps, have been thought reasonable; who translate these words thus, He laid himself down upon his Pillow: As weak Men are wont to do, after they have set up a while to dispatch some business. For the Hebrew word Schacab, which signifies to bow the Body, signifies also to fall down upon the Earth; and therefore might be here translated, lie down. But the Apostle, as I said, hath overruled all such Conceits, if we suppose him to translate this Passage, Hebr. xi. 21. Which to me indeed doth not seem evident. For the Apostle is there speaking of another thing; not of what Jacob did now, when Joseph swore to him, but of what he did after these things, (xlviii. 1.) when he blessed Joseph's Sons. Then the Apostle says, he worshipped upon the top of his Staff. Which is not the Translation of Moses his words in this place, but the words of his own, whereby he explains the following Story; and shows how strong his Faith was, when his Body was so weak, that he was not able to bow himself and worship, without the help of his Staff. This clearly removes all the difficulty, which Interpreters have made, about reconciling the words of Moses here in this Verse, to the Apostle's words in that.

But however this be, Jacob's bowing here, I doubt not, signifies worshipping; as the Vulgar Latin takes it: Where the word God is added, (which is not in the Hebrew) and these words thus translated, Israel worshipped God, turning himself to the bed's head.

C H A P. XLVIII.

Ver. 1. After these things.] Some time after, tho' not long, (for Jacob was nigh his end, when he sent for Joseph to make him swear he would bury him with his Fathers) he grew so weak, that he concluded he could not live long.

One told Joseph.] A Messenger was sent from his Father's House, to acquaint Joseph with his weak Condition. So the next Verse teaches us to understand it.

He took with him, &c.] Immediately he went to receive his Blessing, and took with him his two Sons, that he might bless them also.

Ver. 2. One told Jacob, &c.] Joseph sent a Messenger before him, to let his Father know he was coming to him.

Israel strengtheneth himself.] This Message revived him; and made him stir up all his Spirits to receive him cheerfully.

And set upon his bed.] Leaning, it's likely, upon his Staff, for the support of his feeble Body. See xlvi. ult.

Ver. 3. Appeared to me at Luz.] He appeared twice to him in this place. First, when he went to Padan-Aram, xxviii. 13. (upon which he gave this Place the Name of Bethel, ver. 19.) and when he returned from thence, xxxv. 6, 9, &c. and both times made him the Promise which here follows; and therefore it is likely, he hath respect to both.

And blessed me.] Promised to me the Blessing which follows:

Ver. 4. For an everlasting possession.] We do not read this in either of the Appearances, in so many words: But he said it in effect, when he told him, in the last Appearance there, xxxv. 12. The Land which I gave to Abraham, and Isaac, to thee will I give it, &c. Now he gave it to Abraham and his Seed for ever, xiii. 15.

Ver. 5. And now thy two Sons, &c.] Having assured him God would be as good as his Word, in giving the Land of Canaan to his Posterity, he tells him what share his Children should have in it.

Are mine.] Thy two Sons shall be reckoned as if I had begotten them: And accordingly have each of them an Inheritance equal with the rest of my Sons, and be distinct Tribes.

As Reuben, and Simeon, shall they be mine.] He instances in them, because they were his eldest Sons: Who, he says, should have no more than Ephraim and Manasseh. And, perhaps, the meaning may be; these two shall be accounted as the First-born of my Family. For he gives Joseph the Primogeniture, (who was indeed the First-born of his first intended Wife) and bestows a double Portion upon him; by making his two Sons equal to the rest of his Children.

Ver. 6. And thy issue which thou begettest after them, shall be thine.] I will make no distinct Provision for them, as I have done for these two, but they shall be called after the Name of their Brethren in their Inheritance, i. e. be reckoned among these two, Ephraim and Manasseh; and not make distinct Tribes, as they shall, but be comprehended in them.

Ver. 7. And as for me, when I came from Padan-Aram, Rachel died by me, &c.] He mentions her death, (which doth not seem to belong to the foregoing Discourse) because it happened presently after that last Promise in Bethel, xxxv. 18. and he thought it would be grateful to his Son, to hear him remember his dear Mother. For it is as if he had said, And now my Son, this puts me in mind of thy Mother, who died immediately after that Promise of multiplying my Seed: And yet I see it fulfilled in those Children which God hath given thee. Or we may look upon these words, as giving the reason why he took Ephraim and Manasseh to be his own Children, and the Sense to be as if he had said, Thy Mother, indeed, and my beloved Wife, died soon after she began to bear Children; when she might have brought many more: And therefore I adopt these her Grand-children, and look upon them as if they had been born of Rachel. And I do it in memory and honour of her, supplying by Adoption, what was wanting in Generation.

And I buried her there.] He could not carry her to the Cave of Machpelah, where he desired to be laid himself; because she died in Childhood: Which constrain'd him to bury her sooner than otherwise he might have done. And it is to be supposed he had not in his Travels all things necessary to preserve her Body long; by embalming her, as Joseph did him.

Ver. 8. And Israel beheld Joseph's Sons, &c.] He saw two others stand by Joseph, but could not discern distinctly who they were, by reason of the dimness of his Sight, ver. 10.

Ver. 9. And I will bless them.] As he had just before promised, ver. 5.

Ver. 10. And he brought them near unto him,] And made them kneel down before him; as the twelfth Verse seems to intimate.

And he kissed them, &c.] Expressed the greatest Affection to them.

Ver. 12. Brought them out from between his Knees.] It appears by Ver. 2. that Jacob sat upon his Bed, and his Legs hanging down, they kneeled between his Knees: From whence Joseph took them. And then seems to have placed himself in the same posture, bowing himself with his Face to the Earth, (as the following words tell us) to give his Father Thanks for his Kindness to his Children. Or rather, we may conceive, that while Jacob embraced them in his Arms, and kissed them with more than ordinary Affection, Joseph was afraid that they might lie too long, or press too hard upon his Father's Breast, and create some trouble to a feeble old Man: And therefore he withdrew them from thence, and disposed them to receive his Blessing.

Ver. 13. And Joseph took them both, &c.] Made them kneel down by himself, before Jacob: Placing Ephraim towards Jacob's Left Hand, &c.

Ver. 14. Stretched out his right hand, and laid it on Ephraim's head.] Laying Hands on the Head of any Person, was always used in this Nation in giving Blessings, and designing Men to any Office, and in the Consecration of Publick and Solemn Sacrifices. This is the first time we meet with the mention of it, but in after-times we often read of it; particularly when Moses constituted Joshua to be his Successor, God orders him to do it, by laying his Hands on him, Numb. xxvii. 18, 23. Deut. xxxiv. 9. Thus Children were brought to our Blessed Saviour, that he might lay his Hands on them and bless them; and so he did, Matth. xix. 13,

15. And the Right Hand being the stronger, and that wherewith we commonly perform every thing; the laying that on Ephraim's Head was giving him the Pre-eminence.

Who was the younger.] It is observed by Theodoret, upon 1 Sam. xvi. that God was wont from the beginning to prefer the younger before the elder: As Abel before Cain; Sem before Japhet; Isaac before Ishmael; Jacob before Esau; Judah and Joseph before Reuben; and here, Ephraim before Manasseh; as afterwards, Moses before Aaron; and David, the youngest of all, before his elder Brethren. Which was to show that the Divine Benefits were not tied to the Order of Nature, but dispensed freely according to God's most wise Goodness.

Guiding his Hands wittingly.] He did not mistake by reason of his Blindness, but foreseeing by the Spirit of Prophecy, how much Ephraim would excel the other, he designedly, and on purpose, thus laid his Hands across: So that the Right Hand lay upon the Head of Ephraim, who was next to his Left, &c.

Ver. 15. He blessed Joseph.] In the Blessing he bestowed on his Children.

All my Life long.] The Hebrew word Mebodi signifies, à die quo ego sum (as Bochart interprets it, Hieroziac. P. i. Lib. ii. c. 14.) ever since I had a being.

Ver. 16. The Angel which redeemed me.] Who by God's Order, and as his Minister, preserved me in all the Dangers wherein I have been. Many of the ancient Fathers (as Athanasius, L. iv. contra Arianos; Cyril upon this place; Procopius, Gazæus, &c.) understand hereby an increated Angel, viz. The Second Person of the Blessed Trinity. 'But the Discourse is not concerning the sending of the Son of God, in our Flesh to redeem Mankind, but only concerning the Preservation and Prosperity of one Man; and therefore I do not know whether it be safe to call him an Angel, i. e. a Minister, or Messenger, lest we detract from his Divinity. For, in conferring Blessings, he is not a Messenger, or Minister, but a principal Cause together with his Father.' They are the Words of that famous Divine Georg. Calixtus, who follows St. Chrysostom; who takes this Angel to be one properly so called: And thence proves, the Heavenly Ministers take care of Pious People. And so doth St. Basil in no less than three places of his Works: Which show it was his settled Opinion. But it did not enter into their Thoughts that Jacob here prayed to an Angel, but only wish'd these Children might have the Angelical Protection, by the special Favour of God to them. For it is just such an Expression as that of David, to a contrary Purpose, Psal. xxxv. 6. Let the Angel of the Lord persecute them. Where no body will say he prays to an Angel, tho' his Words are exactly like these of Jacob.

And let my Name be named on them.] Here he plainly adopts them to be his Children, as he said before he would, ver. 5. For, to be called by one's Name, (which is the same with having his Name named on them) is as much as to be one's Children. For thus they that are said to be called by God's Name, became his peculiar People: Therefore Tostatus well interprets it, Sint duo Capita tribuum inter Filios Jacob: Let them be the Heads of two Tribes among the Sons of Jacob. But none so plainly as David Chytraeus; whose Words are these: Vera & simplicissima sententia hæc est; Isti pueri à me adoptati, &c. The true and most simple Sense is, These Toutbs, Manasseh and Ephraim, who are adopted by me, shall not hereafter be called the Sons of Joseph, but my Sons: And be Heirs, and in the division of the Inheritance of the Land of Canaan, receive an equal Portion with my Sons.

Grow into a multitude.] The Hebrew word, as Onkelos interprets it, signifies, increase like Fishes, (as we also in the Margin translate it) which are the most fruitful of all Creatures, as Authors commonly observe. See Bochart, P. i. Lib. i. cap. 6. Hierozoic.

Ver. 19. His younger Brother shall be greater than he.] His Family multiplied faster, according to the signification of his Name; as appears from Numb. i. 33, 35. And the Kingdom was afterwards established in him; and all the ten Tribes called by the Name of Ephraim.

Shall become a multitude of Nations.] In the Hebrew, the Words are, fulness of Nations, i. e. of Families. As much as to say, his Seed shall replenish the Country with numerous Families: For that which replenishes the Earth is called the fulness of the Earth, Psal. xxiv. 1. and that which replenishes the Sea, the fulness of the Sea, Psal. xcvi. 11. Isai. xlii. 10. See L. de Dieu.

Ver. 20. And he blessed them that day.] He concluded with a solemn Benediction upon them both: And when he pronounced it, worshipped God, (as the Apostle tells us, Hebr. xi. 21.) leaning upon the top of his Staff. Whereby he was supported from falling; of which he would have been in danger when he bowed, if he had not leaned on it.

In thee shall Israel bless.] When my Posterity would wish all Happiness to others, they shall use this form of Speech, God make you like Ephraim and Manasseh. Which continues, they say, among the Jews to this Day.

Ver. 21. Bring you again into the Land of your Fathers.] Where your Fathers sojourned; and which God bestowed upon them in reversion.

Ver. 22. Which I took out of the Hand of the Amorite, &c.] He doth not mean the City of Shechem; which his Sons took unjustly and cruelly, (and not from the Amorites, but the Hivites) without his knowledge, and contrary to his will, but that piece of Land which he bought of Hamor the Father of Shechem, Gen. xxiii. 19. compared with St. John iv. 5. Which seems to be the reason why Joseph was himself here buried in his own Ground, given him by his Father, Josh. xxiv. 32. and not in the Cave of Machpelah. The only difficulty is, how he could say, that he took this Land from the Amorite, by his Sword, and by his Bow, (which comprehend all warlike Instruments) when he bought it for an hundred Pieces of Silver of Hamor the Hivite. It is to be supposed therefore that he took it, i. e. recovered it from the Amorites, who had seized on it, after his removal to another part of Canaan; and would not restore it, but constrained him to drive them out by force. We read nothing indeed in the foregoing History, either of their invading his Possession, or his expelling them thence: But the Scripture relates many things to have been done, without mentioning the Circumstances of Time and Place; as Bochartus observes. And among other Instances gives that in xxxvi. 24. where Anab is said to have met with the Emims (so he understands it) in the Wilderness: Of which encounter we find no mention in any other place. See his Hierozytic. P. ii. L. iv. cap. 13. And, as I take it, we have a plainer Instance in the place a little before-mention'd, Heb. xi. 21. where the Apostle says, Jacob, when he was a dying, blessed both the Sons of Joseph, and worshipped, leaning upon the top of his Staff. Of which there is not a word in this History, but only of his blessing them, ver. 20.

There are those, who, with St. Hierom, understand by Sword and Bow, his Money: Which he calls by those warlike Names, to signify this was the only Instrument he used to acquire any thing. Just as the Romans, when they would signify they had got any thing, without any other help, but their own Industry alone, say they obtained it Proprio Marte; using a similitude from Military Expences and Labours. If this do not seem harsh, it is not hard to give an account why he calls those Amorites, who before were called Hivites: For Amorites seems to have been the general Name of all the seven Nations of Canaan, they being the Chief; just as all the People of the seven United Provinces, are now commonly called Hollanders, who are the most Potent of all the rest.

CHAP. XLIX.

Ver. 1. J Jacob called unto his Sons.] When he had done speaking with Joseph, perceiving his End approaching, he sent one to call the rest of his Sons to come to him.

Gather yourselves together.] Come all in a Body to me. Let me see you all together before I die.

What shall be in the last Days.] The Condition of your Posterity in future Times. Jacob is the first, that we read of, who particularly declared the future State of every one of his Sons, when he left the World. But it hath been an ancient Opinion, That the Souls of all excellent Men, the nearer they approached to their departure from hence, the more Divine they grew; and had a clearer prospect of things to come. Whence Xenophon, L. viii. makes his Cyrus say, when he was near his end, That the Souls of Men, at the point of death, become Propheticke. Which was universally true; for Prophecy is not a natural thing; nor were all excellent Men partakers of it; and God communicated it in what measures he pleased, to those who had any thing of it; and to Jacob more than had been bestowed upon his great Ancestors. For these last Words of his may be called Prophecies rather than Benedictions: Some of them containing no Blessing in them; but all of them Predictions.

Ver. 2. Gather yourselves together.] This is repeated, to hasten them; as the two next Words, hear and bearken, are used to excite their attention. It was the manner of good Men among the Hebrews to call all their Children before them, and give them good Counsel, together with their Blessing, when they drew near to their end: The Words then spoken, being likely to stick fast in their Mind.

Ver. 3. Reuben, &c.] It is commonly observed, that the Style wherein he speaks to his Sons is much more lofty than that hitherto used in this Book. Which hath made some fancy that Jacob did not deliver these very Words; but Moses put the Sense of what he said into such Poetical Expressions. But it seems more reasonable to me, to think that the Spirit of Prophecy now coming upon him, raised his Style as well as his Understanding: As it did Moses's also; who delivered his Benedictions (in Deut. xxxiii.) in a strain more sublime, than his other Writings.

Thou art my first-born.] So we read xxix. 32. To whom the Jews commonly observe belonged three Prerogatives, a double Portion of the Father's Estate, the Priesthood, and the Kingdom, (as they speak) i. e. chief Authority among his Brethren. The first of these, saith the Chaldee Paraphrast, was given to Joseph, the second to Levi, the third to Judah, because Reuben had forfeited all the Rights of his Primogeniture, by his Incest with his Father's Wife. But Mr. Selden himself (who gives a full account of the Jews Opinion in this matter) acknowledges the Priesthood was not confined to the First-born before the Law; as appears by Abel's offering Sacrifice as well as Cain, and Moses being a Priest as well as Aaron, (Psal. xcix. 6.) unless we understand thereby the Office of Chief Priest. And so Jonathan here reports the ancient Opinion of the Jews, that Reuben lost the High-Priesthood. L. i. de Synedr. cap. 16. pag. 643, &c.

My might.] Whom I begot, when I was in my full Vigor.

The beginning (or the first-fruits) of my strength.] The same thing, in more words. Or, it may be interpreted, the prime support of my family. The First-born is called, the beginning of strength, in Deut. xxi. 17. Psal. cv. 36.

The excellency of dignity.] Who hadst the Preheminence among thy Brethren, (being the First-born) if thou hadst not fallen from it by thy Folly; as it follows afterwards.

And the excellency of Power.] Who wast born to the highest Authority among them. The Hebrews refer Dignity to the Priesthood, and Power to the Kingdom. But there being no solid ground to think the Priesthood, as I said before, was confined to the eldest Brother; I take Dignity to signify the double Portion of the Estate; and Power, Authority among them, while they remained in one Family.

Ver. 4. Unstable as Water.] The Hebrew word Pachaz signifying haste, and in the Chaldee having the signification of leaping; the Interpretation of St. Hierom seems most reasonable; which is, poured out like Water out of a Vessel upon the Ground. And then it denotes Reuben's falling from his Dignity, and losing his Preheminence; as Water suddenly disappears, when it is poured out on the Earth, and sucked up into it. Many refer it, particularly Ca. Vitringa in his late Sacred Observations (Lib. i. cap. 12.) to his unbounded Lust: but that is taken notice of in the latter part of this Verse, and given as a reason son of his being degraded. Others therefore translate the Hebrew word Pachaz by the Latin word, Levis, a light or vain Person, (as we speak at this day) and then the meaning still is, Water is not more prone to flow, when it is poured out, than thou wast to lose thy Dignity. So Georg. Calixtus.

Thou shalt not excel.] There is nothing Great said to be done by this Tribe in Scripture. And they were not so numerous (to which the Vulgar Latin refers this) by more than a third part, as the Tribe of Judab (to whom God gave part of Reuben's Prerogative) when Moses by God's Command took the Sum of all the Congregation, Numb. i. 21, 27.

Because thou wentest up to thy Father's bed.] Committedst Incest with my Wife, xxxv. 22.

Then defilest thou it: He went up to my Couch.] Or, rather, When thou defilest my Couch, it vanished, i. e. his Excellency departed. For the word Halab, which is here translated to go up, signifies often in Scripture, to vanish or perish. As in Psal. cii. 25. Isai. v. 24. which makes the easiest Sense of this place, in this manner; 'Ex quo polluisi thorum meum, ascendit ut vapor aut fumus excellentia & dignitas tua, i. e. dilapsa est, extincta est, evanuit. From the time that thou defilest my Couch, thy Excellency and Dignity went up like a Vapour or Smoke, i. e. it slid away, it was extinct, it vanished.' They are the Words of the fore-named Calixtus; who well observes that this is explained in 1 Chron. v. 1.

Ver. 5. Simeon and Levi are Brethren.] So were all the rest; but the meaning is, they are alike in their Dispositions, and link'd together in the same wicked Designs: For so the Word Brother sometimes signifies, a Companion, or Associate, that agrees in the same Inclinations or Undertakings with others, As Prov. xviii. 9.

Instruments of cruelty are in their habitations.] The word Mecheroth (which we translate Habitations) is no where else found; nor is there any root in the Hebrew Language, from whence it may derive that signification. Therefore Lud. de Dieu, from the Æthiopick Language, translates it Counsels: For so the Word signifies in that Tongue; and in an ill Sense, Conspirations, Machinations; or mischievous Devices. This Job Ludolphus approves of, and translates this Sentence after this manner; Consilia eorum nihil sunt nisi vis & arma: Their Counsels are nothing, but Force and Arms. Vid. Comment. in Histor. Æthiop. Lib. i. cap. 15. n. 106. Aben Ezra is not much different, who translates it, their Compacts: As G. Vorstius notes upon Pirke Elieser, cap. 38. where there are other various Interpretations: With which I shall not trouble the Reader, because I have given that which I think most natural.

Ver. 6. O my Soul, come not thou, &c.] He utterly disclaims all Knowledge of their wicked Fact before-hand; or, approbation of it afterward. For by Soul is meant himself; and so the word Honour or Glory seems to mean, in the following words; which are but a repetition of this. Or, else it signifies the Tongue, as in many places of Scripture, (particularly Psal. xxx. 12.) and the meaning is, He never in Thought, much less in Word, assented to what they did. They gloried in the slaughter they made; but God forbid that I should so much as approve it.

Secret signifying the same with Assembly, is, in reason, to be interpreted a secret Place, or Closet; where Cabals (as we now speak) are wont to be held.

Slew a Man.] i. e. Shechem; a great Man: Or, the Singular Number is put for the Plural.

In their self-will.] The Hebrew word Ratsion may well be translated Humour. When they were in a fit of Rage.

They digged down a Wall.] Broke into Hamor's House, where Shechem was. In the Margin we translate it houghed Oxen: And indeed the Hebrew word Schor signifies an Ox, not a Wall; which they call Sbur. Yet the Vulgar, the Syriack, Arabick, Chaldee, and a great Number of the Hebrew Authors interpret it a Wall. And tho' the LXX translated it ἐκδομήσαν τείχος, they hamstring'd an Ox; yet the Author of the Greek Scholion (as Bochart acknowledges) translates it ἐξέπλεον τείχος, they undermined a Wall. The Truth is, we read of neither in the Story, but only of their taking their Sheep and their Oxen, xxxiv. 28. which signifies not their houghing them; but their driving them away. Perhaps, they both broke down a Wall to come at their Flocks; and also houghed those, which they were afraid would otherwise have escaped their Hands and got away.

Ver. 7. Cursed be their Anger.] Their Fury was most execrable, and detestable; and brought a Curse upon them.

For it was fierce.] Outrageous; or, as the Vulgar translates it, pertinacious. Not a sudden, impetuous Passion, that was soon over: But a settled, inflexible Rage. So he condemns them upon a double account. First, that they had such an implacable desire of Revenge; and then, that their Revenge was too cruel.

I will divide them in Jacob, &c.] This is the Punishment, which by a Prophetick Spirit he foretels God would inflict upon them: That they who were associated in Wickedness, should be disjoined one from another; when his Children came to inherit the Land of Canaan. And so it fell out; for Simeon's Posterity had not a separate Inheritance by themselves, but only a Portion in the midst of the Tribe of Judab, as we read Josh. xix. 1, 9. and accordingly we find them assisting one another, to enlarge their Border, Judg. i. 3. 17. And their Portion being too strait for them, we read how in after-times they acquired Possessions where they could, far from the rest of their Brethren: Five hundred of this Tribe, under several Captains, going to Mount Seir, and there settling themselves, 1 Chron. iv. 39, 42. It is a constant Tradition also among the Hebrews, (as P. Fagius observes) that a great many of this Tribe wanting a livelihood, applied themselves to the teaching of Children; and were employed as School-Masters in all the other Tribes of Israel: Where few followed this Employment but Simeonites. If this be true, it is a further Proof of their scattered Condition.

As for the Tribe of Levi, it is manifest they had no Inheritance allotted to them, among their Brethren; but were dispersed among all the Tribes: Having certain Cities assigned to them, with a little Land about them. This indeed indeed did not prove a Curse to them, they having the Tenth of all the Increase of the Land throughout the whole Country; for this Curse seems to have been taken off, upon that eminent Service they did in falling upon the Worshippers of the golden Calf, and thereby consecrating themselves unto the Lord, Exod. xxxii. 26, 29. upon which Account Moses blesses this Tribe a little before he dy'd, Deut. xxxiii. 9. whereas he gives no Blessing at all to the Tribe of Simeon, but leaves them under this Curse, a great Ringleader of the Idolatry with Baal-Peor, being a Prince of this Tribe, whom Phineas, of the Tribe of Levi, slew in his Zeal for the Lord, Numb. xxv. 11, 14.

Ver. 8. Judab, thou art he whom thy Brethren shall praise.] Or, thou art Judab, and well may'st thou be so call'd, for thy Brethren shall praise thee: The Name of Judab signifies Praise, unto which his Father alludes; it was given him by his Mother, in Thankfulness to God for him, xxix. 35. And now his Father gives another Reason of his Name, because all his Brethren should applaud his worthy Acts, and praise God for them; which is not spoken of Judab's Person, but of his Family or Tribe, who in future Times were very famous.

Thy Hand shall be in the Neck of thy Enemies.] To overthrow them, and bring them under; which was eminently fulfill'd in David, as he himself acknowledges, Psal. xviii. 40. And so were the foregoing Words, when all the Daughters of Israel came forth of their Cities singing his Praises in such an high Strain as offended Saul, 1 Sam. xviii. 6, 7.

Thy Father's Children shall bow down to thee.] Acknowledge thee their Superior.

Ver. 9. Judab is a Lion's Whelp, &c.] He sets forth in this Verse the warlike Temper of this Tribe, and their undaunted Courage and Terribleness to their Enemies; and he seems to express the Beginning, Increase, and full Growth of their Power by a young Lion, a Lion, and a Lioness, which is the fiercest of all other.

A Lion's Whelp.] This Tribe gave early Proof of their Valour, being the first that went to fight against the Canaanites after the Death of Joshua, Judg. i. 1, 2. And David, who was of this Tribe, when he was but a Youth kill'd a Lion and a Bear, and the great Giant Goliath.

From the Prey, my Son, thou art gone up.] He speaks as if he saw them returning in Triumph with the Spoils of their Enemies, alluding unto Lions, who having gotten their Prey in the Plain, return satiated to the Mountains, as Bochartus observes, P. i. L. iii. cap. 2. Hierozoic.

He stoopeth down, he coucheth as a Lion.] The Hebrew Word Ari signifies a grown Lion, come to his full Strength; by whose stooping down (bending his Knees the Hebrew Word signifies) and couching to take his Rest (which all four-footed Beasts do, but the Lion is observ'd to sleep whole Days in his Den, or in Thickets, that he may be fresher for his Prey in the Night) Jacob sets forth the Ease and Quiet that Judab should enjoy after their Victories, without any Fear of Disturbance.

And as an old Lion.] I think Bochart hath plainly demonstrated that Labi signifies a Lioness, which is rather fiercer than a Lion, as he observes out of Herodotus, and other Authors, P. i. Hierozoic. Lib. iii. cap. 1.

Who shall rouse him up?] Having overcome his Enemies he shall live in secure Peace, free from their Incurfions, none daring to invade him, no more than to stir up a sleepy Lion.

Ver. 10. The Scepter shall not depart from Judab, &c.] That the first Word Schebet is rightly translated Scepter, we have the unanimous Testimony of the three Targums, of the ancient Book Rabboth, with a great many of the modern Rabbins (such as Caskuni, Bechai, Abarbinel, &c.) who all think the Word signifies a Scepter, and not a Tribe, as some few would have it; whom some Christians follow, particularly Jac. Altingius hath lately asserted it in his Schilo, but in my Judgment against the clearest Evidence for the other Signification; for as Schebet doth not originally signify a Tribe, but a Rod or Wand shooting from the Root of a Tree (from whence it was translated to signify a Tribe who springs out of a common Stock, i. e. the Father of a Family) so the Verse foregoing being a plain Prediction of Judab's Dominion, not only over external Enemies, but over his Brethren, what can we so reasonably think to be the Design of this Verse, as to foretel the Continuance and Duration of that great Power and Authority promised in the foregoing? It is observable also, that the very same Phrase is used in this Sense, and cannot have another. Zeck. x. 11. The Scepter of Egypt shall depart away; where there are two of the Words here used, signifying the Dominion which the Egyptians then exercised over the poor Jews, should quite cease; and if Moses had meant a Tribe in this Place, he would not have said, the Tribe shall not depart from Judab, but the Tribe of Judab shall not cease; for the former looks like a Tautology.

The Meaning of this Word then being settled, it is manifest Jacob here gives Judab the highest Superiority over his Brethren, and informs them, that from the Time his Authority should be establish'd, there should continue a Form of Government in this Tribe till the coming of the Messiah. The Word Scepter is more used in ancient Times (as Mr. Selden observes in his Titles of Honour) to signify Kingly Power, than either Crown or Diadem, which have been used more in later Times; and therefore the LXX translate it Ἀρχον, of whose Authority the Rod, Staff, or Scepter, was the Ensign; and accordingly in the Prophecy of Amos i. 5. He that boldeth the Scepter is used absolutely for a King. Now this regal Power began in the Tribe of Judab, when David was King over all Israel, 1 Chron. xxviii. 4. and his Posterity held it till the Captivity of Babylon.

But then the next Word in this Verse, Mechokek (which we translate Lawgiver) signifies a Diminution of this Dignity before the finishing of this Prophecy; for Mechokkim were not of equal Power with Kings, and therefore we translate the Word elsewhere Governors, Judg. v. 9, 14. who were not endu'd with an absolute Power, but depended on the Power of another. And thus R. Solomon Jarchi expressly says (in his Commentaries on the Sanbedrim) that as Schebet signifies the highest Authority, so Mechokkek signifies a lesser Magistrate or Ruler, who was set over the People by the Authority and License of the Kings of Persia; for this Kind of Power was settled among them at their Return from Babylon, when Zorobabel was made their Governor; and after they were invaded by the Seleucidae, this Authority was recovered and maintained by the Maccabees, till they were depriv'd of it by Herod and the Romans; at which Time Christ came, when it is evident they were become Subjects to the Romans, by the very Enrolling that was made of them at the Birth of our Saviour, which was a publick Testimony of Augustus's Sovereignty over them; so that the Meaning of this Prophecy is, There shall be either Kings or Governors among the Jews till Christ come. So J. Christoph. Wagenfeil (who hath discuss'd this Place with great Exactness) gives the Sense of these Words, and it is literally true; till the Captivity they had Kings, after their Return they had Governors, under the Persians, Greeks and Romans. See his Consul. Carm. Memorialis Libri Nitzachon. R. Lipmanni, p. 293, &c.

To strengthen which Interpretation he makes this judicious Remark in another Place of the same Book, p. 373. That the whole Time, from the Beginning to the End of Judab's Authority, was well nigh equally divided between Kings and Governors; for according to Josephus, L. xi. Antiq. cap. 4. they liv'd under Kings from David's Time to the Captivity, 532 Years; and under the Mechokkim or Governors after the Captivity, much about the same Number of Years; for there being 588 Years from the Captivity to our Saviour's Birth, if 70 Years be deducted (which was the Time their Captivity lasted) and 10 be added (in which, after the Birth of Christ, Herod and his Son Archelaus reign'd in Judaea, and it was not yet reduc'd into the Form of a Province) there were just 528 Years; that is, the Space in which they were under Kingly Authority, and under subordinate Governors, was in a manner of the same Length; which makes it the more wonderful, that Jacob should so many Ages before exactly divide the whole Power he foresaw would be in Judab, between them that wielded a Scepter, and those who were only subordinate Governors.

That the Letter Vau before the Word we translate Lawgiver, hath the Force of a Disjunctive, and is not a mere Copulative, all allow; and there are many Examples of it in other Places, particularly in the Tenth Commandment, Exod. xx. 14. The greatest Objection that I can find against this Interpretation is, That tho' Zorobabel, the first Governor after the Captivity, was of the Tribe of Judab, yet the Maccabees, who were their Governors most of the Time after the Captivity, were of the Tribe of Levi; but it is to be consider'd, that the Prophecy doth not say these Rulers or Governors should be of the Tribe of Judab, but only in that Tribe which had a Government of their own, till the coming of Christ; besides, by Judab is not to be understood merely the People of that Tribe, but all those that were call'd Jews, consisting also of the Tribes of Benjamin and Levi, who were incorporated with them, and were all call'd Judab, in opposition to the Kingdom of Israel; for Benjamin it is evident was so near to Judab, that they were reputed the very same; whence it is that Mordecai, who was of the Tribe of Benjamin, is call'd Isch Jehudi, a Jew, in Esther ii. 5. because that Tribe was comprehended under Judab from the Time that the rest rent themselves from the House of David; when Jeroboam also set up the meanest of the People for Priests, who were not of the Tribe of Levi, 1 Kings xiii. 33. this made the Levites fly to Judab, and become one with them; and therefore the Maccabees were in effect Jews, who held the chief Authority among them, till Antigonus was driven out and kill'd by Herod, who was an Edomite, set over them by the Romans.

From between his Feet.] The common Interpretation every Body knows, which is, of his Seed, or Posterity; but Ludolphus, instead of Raglau, Feet, would have us read Daglau, Banners, according to the Samaritan Copy; which is well confuted by the fore-named Wagenfeil, p. 269. of the fore-named Book, where he translates these Words thus, Even to the last End of that State; for so the People at the Feet signifies (Exod. xi. 8. 2 Kings iii. 9.) those that bring up the Rear, as we now speak; and so some ancient Interpreters in the Talmud he shews expound it here, of the last Posterity of Judab, and the Times when their Commonwealth was coming to a Conclusion.

Until Shiloh come.] Let the Original of this Word Shiloh be what it will (which some translate to be sent; others, his Son, or Child, or his Seed; others, quiet, peaceable, pacifick, prosperous, and consequently, renowned, august, to whom Gifts or Offerings shall be made, as R. Solomon takes it; others, whose is, viz. the Kingdom) the Messiah or Christ is certainly hereby meant, as all the three Targums agree, and the Talmud in the Title Sanbedrim, cap. xi. and Baal-Hatturim, Berechbit-Rabba, and many other ancient and modern Jews. I will mention only the Words of R. Bechai, who confesses it is right to understand this Verse of the Messiah, the last Redeemer; "which is meant when it saith, till Shiloh come, i. e. his Son, proceeding from his Seed. And the reason why the Word Beno is not used in this Prophecy, but Shiloh, is, because he would emphatically express a Son, who should be brought forth of his Mother's Womb, after the manner of all those that are born of a Woman." Of this Interpretation they are so convinc'd, that to evade the Argument we argue from hence to prove the Messiah is come, they have invented a great many Tales of the Power they have still in some remote Parts of the World. There is a Book written on purpose, called, The Voice of glad Tidings, wherein they labour to prove they have a Kingdom still remaining; which, if it should be granted, signifies nothing; for this Prophecy is concerning their Government in their own Country, the Land of Canaan; as they themselves very well know, which makes them so desirous desirous to return thither again, that the Hand of Judah may be upon the Neck of his Enemies, and he may go up from the prey like a Lion, and tie his As to the Vine, and wash his Garments in Wine, &c. as the words are in the rest of this Prophecy. And whatsoever some of them are pleased to say concerning their Power, no body knows where, they are sometimes in a contrary humour: For in the Gemara Sanbedrim they say, Cap. xi. §. 32. There shall not be the least Magistrate in Israel when the Messiah comes.

Unto him shall the gathering of the People be.] So this Clause is expounded by Abarbinel himself, whose words are, The People of the Nations shall be gathered to worship him, i. e. the Messiah. See L'Empereur in Jacobiad. p. 164. and Codex Middoth, p. 106, 107. Wagenseil indeed thinks the most literal Interpretation to be this: To him shall be the Obedience of the People: Which is the Interpretation of Onkelos and the Hierusalem Paraphrast. Kimchi also (Lib. Radic.) so expounds it, The People shall obey him; taking upon them to observe what he shall command them. And in Prov. xxx. 17. which is the only place besides this, where this word Jikkab is found, it seems to signify Obedience.

See Confut. Carm. R. Lipmanni, p. 295. where Wagenseil, after the examination of every particular word in this Verse, thus sums up the Sense of it in this Paraphrase.

That Royal Power and Authority which shall be established in the Posterity of Judah shall not be taken from them; or, at least, they shall not be destitute of Rulers and Governors, no, not when they are in their declining Condition, until the coming of the Messiah. But when he is come, there shall be no difference between the Jews and other Nations; who shall all be obedient unto the Messiah. And after that, the Posterity of Judah shall have neither King, nor Ruler of their own: But the whole Commonwealth of Judah shall quite lose all Form, and never recover it again.

The Truth of this Exposition appears exactly from their History: Of which it will be useful here to give an account. For from David to the Captivity of Babylon they held the Scepter, for five whole Ages and more, as I observed above. After which, when seventy Years were finished in that Captivity, they lived by their own Laws in their own Country; but had no absolute Authority of their own independent upon others, nor ever enjoyed a full Liberty. For they were at first under the Persian Monarchs: Afterwards, upon the Conquest made by Alexander, under the Greeks: And then, under the Kings of Asia Minor and Egypt, till the Roman Yoke was imposed upon them. Yet all this time, while they were under the Empire of others, they enjoyed Governors or Rulers of their own; who administered their Affairs under those Monarchs. The first was Zerobabel, called the Captain, or Prince of Judah, Haggai i. 1. After him, Ezra, and Nebemiah. And before them, it is likely, there were some others, as Jos. Scaliger gathers from Neb. v. 15. After the death of Nebemiah, the Government came into the Hands of the High-Priests, as appears from Josephus, Lib. xi. cap. 8. where he shows how Jaddus the High-Priest met Alexander in his Expedition against Persia: Which Power was confirmed in that Order, by the Maccabees, as we commonly call them. It began in Mattathias; and was continued in his Sons. The third of which, Simon, raised it to such a Splendor, that he looked like a Prince, as the Reader may see it described in 1 Maccab. xiv. From whence his Grand-child Aristobulus seems to have taken occasion to affect the Name of King, tho' he had but the Shadow of that Power. Yet his Posterity kept that Name to the time of Herod; who stript them of all their Power, and destroy'd their Family. After his death the Kingdom was divided by Augustus into Tetrarchies: Archelaus being made Tetrarch of Judea, and the rest of the Country divided between Philip and Antipas. But Archelaus misbehaving himself, he was deprived of his Government, and banished to Vienne in France: And then Judea was reduced into the Form of a Province, and ruled by Roman Governors. After which there was no King nor Ethnarch of Judea: So that after this time we may safely conclude, the Jews lost even their Mecbokkim or Governors, as they had long ago lost the Scepter; and had no power remaining among them of administering the Affairs of their Commonwealth.

Now at this time our Blessed Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, the true Shileh, came; who was the Founder of a new and heavenly Kingdom. And nothing more was left to be done for the fulfilling of this Prophecy, but after his crucifying, to destroy Jerusalem and the Temple, and therewith the whole Form of their Government, both Civil and Sacred. Then all Power was entirely taken from Judah, when Christ had erected his Throne in the Heavens, and brought many People in several parts of the Earth unto his Obedience, and made them Members of his Celestial Kingdom. Till which time this Prophecy was not compleatly fulfilled: Which may be the reason possibly, that it is not alledged by Christ and his Apostles; because the Jews might have said, We have still a Government among us: Which could not be pretended after the destruction by Titus. Which is now above Sixteen hundred Years ago; and there is not the least sign of their Restitution. Which so perplexed R. Samuel Moraccanus, that it made him write thus to a Friend of his, above Six hundred Years since:

I would fain learn from thee, out of the Testimonies of the Law, and the Prophets, and other Scriptures, why the Jews are thus smitten in this Captivity wherein we are: Which may be properly called, the PERPETUAL ANGER OF GOD, because it hath no end. For it is now above a thousand Years since we were carried captive by TITUS; and yet our Fathers, who worshipped Idols, kill'd the Prophets, and cast the Law behind their back, were only punished with a seventy Years Captivity, and then brought home again: But now there is no end of our Calamities, nor do the Prophets promise any.

If this Argument was hard to be answered then in his Days, it is much harder now in ours; who still see them pursued by God's Vengeance: Which can be for nothing else but rejecting, and crucifying the Messiah, the Saviour of the World.

Ver. 11. Binding his Foal unto the Vine, &c.] This Verse sets forth the great Fertility of Judah's Country

Country (abounding with Vineyards and Pastures) by two hyperbolical Expressions: First, That Vines should be as common there, as Thorn-hedges in other Places; so that they might tie Asses, with their Colts to them: Or, as some will have it, lade an Ass with the Fruit of one Vine. Secondly, That Wine should be as common as Water; so that they should have enough, not only to drink, but to wash their Cloaths in it. Which doth not imply that they made it serve for that Use, but only denotes its Plenty; which was so very great, that in treading the Grapes, and pressing out the Juice, their Garments were all sprinkled with Wine, which one might wring out of them.

Choice Vine.] The Vine of Sorek (which we here translate choice, and in Jerem. ii. 21. noble Vine) was the most excellent in all that Country. For Sorek was a Place not above half a Mile from the Valley of Eshol; from whence the Spies brought the large Bunches, as a Sample of the Fruitfulness of the Country. See Bochart. P. i. Hierozoic. Lib. iii. cap. 13.

Ver. 12. His Eyes shall be red with Wine, &c.] This Verse sets forth the Healthfulness and Vigor of the Inhabitants of that fertile Country. But Dr. Castell thinks this not to be a good Translation; because it can be said of none but a Drunkard, that his Eyes are red with Wine. And therefore it ought to be translated, his Eyes (or his Countenance, for so Eyes sometimes signifies) shall be brighter and more shining than Wine. So the word we render red signifies in the Arabick Tongue, as he shows in his Oratio in Schol. Theolog. p. 31. and in his Lexicon. Yet the same word in the Proverbs, xxiii. 29. cannot have any other signification than red; and the red Colour of the Eyes answers very well here to the Whiteness of the Teeth, which follows; and there is no more reason to think he means, they should make their Eyes red with drinking Wine, than that they should wash their Cloaths in it; but it may only express the great abundance of Wine, to serve not only their necessity, but excess.

And his Teeth white with Milk.] Milk doth not make the Teeth white, but gives such an excellent Nourishment, that they who live upon it are healthy and strong; and their Teeth not so apt to rot as theirs who feed upon greater Dainties. So the meaning is, the rich Pastures in that Country should feed great Flocks, and consequently, they should have abundance of Milk, so good and nourishing, that the Teeth of the Countrymen who lived upon it should be as white as the Milk they drank. Or if the foregoing Words be translated, His Eyes shall be brighter than Wine, these are to be translated, His Teeth whiter than Milk.

Out of these three Verses foregoing Bochartus thinks the whole Story of Silenus was forged by the Poets. See his Canaan, Lib. i. cap. 18. p. 482.

Ver. 13. Zebulon shall dwell at the Haven of the Sea,] Near the Lake of Tiberias; called in Scripture the Sea of Galilee.

He shall be a Haven for Ships.] The Lot that fell to him extended from thence to the Mediterranean, where there were Ports for Ships.

His Border shall be unto Zidon.] He doth not mean the City of Zidon; for the Tribe of Zebulon did not extend themselves beyond Mount Carmel, which is forty Miles at least from thence: But the Country of Zidon, i. e. Phœnicia, (as Bochart observes in his Phaleg, L. iv. cap. 34.) which the Zebulonites touched. For as the Phœnicians were called Syrians from Sur, i. e. Tyre, so they were called Sidonians from Sidon, as Hesychius tells us, who interprets Σιδωνίαι by Φοίνικες. Whence the LXX have Phœnicians for Sidonians, Deut. iii. 9. and Phœnice for Sidon, Isai. xxiii. 2.

It is very much to be admired, That Jacob should foretel so many Years beforehand, the Situation of his Posterity in the Land of Canaan, when their several Portions fell to them by Lot, and not by their own choice; Josb. xix. 10, 11. This could not have been, but by the Spirit of Prophecy. And it is remarkable also, that he mentions Zebulon before Issachar, who was his elder Brother, (xxx. 11.) for no other reason that I can discern, but because Zebulon's Lot was to come up before Issachar's in the Division of the Land, his being the third, and Issachar's the fourth; Josb. xix. 10, 17. By this they were taught that their Habitation in the Land of Canaan was the Gift of God, and did not come by chance, their Forefather having so long before predicted the very Portion they should inherit.

Ver. 14. Issachar is a strong Ass.] As he compared Judab to a Lion, because of his Valour; so he compares Issachar to an Ass, and a strong Ass, because he foresaw they would be very patient and unwearied in rustical Labours: In which Asses were principally employed in those Countries.

Couching down between two burdens.] There are various Opinions about the signification of that word, which we translate Burdens; but none seem to me so apt as that, to express the great Strength of an Ass, which lies down with its Load hanging down on both sides. Whence a She-Ass is called Atton (as Bochart observes) from the word Eitban, which signifies Strength; because no Beast of that bigness can carry such heavy Burdens.

Ver. 15. And he saw that rest was good.] Or, as some will have it, their resting place; the Country that fell to their share in the Land of Canaan; no part of which was more fruitful, than some parts of Issachar's Portion. Which way soever we take it, he seems to foretel they would chuse to follow Husbandry rather than Merchandize (as Zebulon did) and love Quiet and Peace, as Husbandmen do; especially when they live in a rich Soil, as this Tribe did. For so it follows:

And the Land, that it was pleasant.] The famous Valley of Jezreel was in this Tribe: Whose Border extended as far as Jordan, where there was a very pleasant Country; Josb. xix. 18, 22.

Bowed his Shoulder to bear.] Taking any pains to till the Land; and to carry in the Corn, with other Fruits of the Earth.

And became a Servant unto Tribute.] Submitting to the heaviest Taxes, rather than lose their Repose: For the preservation of which they were were content to give any Money, that they might redeem their Services in the Wars, or otherwise by large Contributions.

Ver. 16. Dan shall judge his People, &c.] In the word Judge he alludes to the Name of Dan: Which signifies Judging, i. e. Ruling and Governing. A great many follow Onkelos, who expounds it thus: A Man shall arise out of the Tribe of Dan, in whose Days the People shall be delivered, &c. And accordingly we read that Samson, who was of this Tribe, judged Israel twenty Years. So the meaning is, the Tribe of Dan shall have the honour to produce a Judge, as well as other Tribes. But there is this Exception to this Interpretation, that all the Tribes did not produce Judges; and all Israel (whom the Judges governed) cannot be said to be Dan's People. But by his People (whom he is said here to judge) are properly meant those of his Tribe. And therefore Jacob's meaning is, that tho' he were the Son of a Concubine, yet his Posterity should be governed by a Head of their own Tribe, as the other Tribes of Israel were. So by this he took away all distinction between the Sons of his Concubines (of whom Dan was the first) and those which he had by Leah and Rachel.

Ver. 17. Dan shall be a Serpent by the way.] The next Words show, what kind of Serpent he should be like, An Adder in the Path. The Hebrew word Schephiphon, some take for a Basilisk; others for an Asp, or a Viper; others a Snake, or Adder. The Vulgar translates it, Cerastes; which is a kind of Viper: And Bochartus (in his Hierozyicon, P. ii. L. iii. c. 12.) hath confirmed this Translation, by showing how well it agrees to the Characters which Authors give of it: That it lies in Sand, and in the Ruts which Cart-wheels make in the Highway; and so is ready to bite Travellers, or their Horses. Which is the harder to be avoided, because it is of a sandy Colour; so that οἱ πολλοὶ ἀγνοῦντες πάντες, many tread upon it unawares: And Nichander says, the Poison of these Serpents is chiefly felt in the Thighs and Hams of those they bite. Which perfectly agrees with what Jacob saith in the following Words:

That biteth the Horse-beels, so that his Rider shall fall backward.] The Horse not being able to stand when the Venom works in his Legs, the Rider must needs fall with him. All this, some make to be a Description of Samson, who led no Armies against his Enemies, but overthrew them by Subtlety and Craft. But it rather belongs to all the Danites (as what was said before to all the Zebulonites and Issacharians;) who Jacob foresaw would, astu potius, quam aperto Marte rem gerere, manage their Wars rather by Cunning and Craft, than by open Hostility, as Bochart speaks. An Example of which we have in Judg. xviii. 27.

Ver. 18. I have waited for thy Salvation, O LORD.] They that refer the foregoing Words to Samson, make an easy Interpretation of this Verse. Which is, That Jacob foreseeing his great Achievements for the Deliverance of his Children, prays that God would upon all occasions vouchsafe to send such Deliverers unto them from their Oppressors. And the Chaldee Paraphrasts make him look beyond such Deliverers unto Christ, the great Saviour of the World. For these are the Words of Onkelos (in the Compluientian Edition, for they are not to be found in Buxtorf's, or Bomberg's) I do not wait for the Salvation of Gideon the Son of Joash, which is temporal Salvation; or of Samson the Son of Manoah, which is also a transitory Salvation; but I expect the Redemption of Christ, the Son of David, &c. Jonathan and the Hierusalem Targum say the same. And if we take all this Prophecy to belong to the whole Tribe, (as I believe it doth) that doth not exclude such a Sense. But Jacob foreseeing the Distresses wherein they would be, (Josh. xix. 47. Judg. i. 34.) prays God to help them, and deliver them, and teach them to look up to him in all their Straits and Necessities: And especially to wait for the Messiah. Yet after all; I think, the Words may have another meaning, which is this: Jacob perceiving his approaching death, and his Spirits beginning to fail him, in the middle of his Speech to his Sons, breaks out into this Exclamation, (which belongs to none of them) saying, I wait, O LORD, for a happy Deliverance out of this World, into a better Place.

And then having rested himself a while, to recover his Strength, he proceeded to bless the rest of his Sons.

Ver. 19. Gad, a Troop shall overcome him,] Or invade him. There is an allusion in every word to the Name of Gad: Whose Inheritance being in a Frontier Country beyond Jordan, was very much exposed to the Incursions of the Ammonites, and Moabites, and the rest of those envious Neighbours, that dwelt in or near Arabia. And some think the word Troop hath a great Propriety in it; signifying not a just Army, but a Party, as we speak, a Band of Men that came oftentimes to rob and spoil. But it appears by the Prophet Jeremiah, xlix. 1. that the Ammonites sometime possessed themselves of the Country of Gad, or at least, of some part of it, and exercised great Cruelties there, Amos i. 13. Long before which, the Book of Judges informs us, how they were oppressed by these People for eighteen Years together, x. 8. and came with a great Army and encamped in Gilead, (ver. 17.) which was in the Tribe of Gad.

But he shall overcome at the last.] This was eminently fulfilled when Jephthah the Gileadite fought with the Children of Ammon, and subdued them before the Children of Israel, Judg. xi. 33. and when this Tribe (together with their Brethren of Reuben and Manasseh) made War with the Hagarites, and possessed themselves of their Country: Which they kept till the Captivity, because the War was of God, 1 Chron. v. 22.

Ver. 20. Out of Ashur.] i. e. Of his Country. His Bread shall be fat.] Shall be excellent Provision, of all sorts, for the sustenance of human Life. For Bread comprehends not only Corn, but Wine and Oil, and all sorts of Victuals, xxi. 14.

And he shall yield royal dainties.] His Country shall afford not only all things necessary, but the choicest Fruits, fit to be served up to the Table of Kings. For part of it lay about Carmel (Josh. xix. 26.) where there was a most delicious Valley.

Ver. 21. Naphtali is a Hind let loose.] As he had compared Judab to a Lion, and Issachar to an Ass, and Dan to a Serpent, so he compares this Son to a Hind; which is not confined within Pales or Walls, but runs at large whither it pleaseth. Whereby is signified, that this Tribe would be great lovers of Liberty.

He giveth goodly (or pleasing) words.] Which denotes their Address (as we now speak) charming Language and Affability, to win the Favour of others; and thereby preserve their Peace and Liberty. Mercer makes this Verse to signify their speed and swiftmess in dispatch of Business, and their smoothness in the management of it: Which might render them acceptable to all Men. There are no Instances indeed in Scripture to make out this Character: For Barak, who was of this Tribe, was very slow in undertaking the Deliverance of Israel. Nor do we read they were more zealous Asserters of Liberty than others. But yet this will not warrant us to alter the punctuation of the Words (as Bochart doth, P. i. Hierozoic. L. iii. cap. 18.) to make a quite different Sense, which is this: Naphtali is a well-spread Tree, which puts out beautiful Branches. For we do not find that they were either more beautiful, or numerous, than other Tribes: But we find, quite contrary, that Simeon, Judab, Issachar, Zebulon, and Dan, were all more numerous than they, when Moses took an account of them, Numb. i. 23, 27, 29, 31, 39. Besides, this Interpretation makes this Verse, in a manner, the very same with the next concerning Joseph. Therefore, tho' the LXX agree to Bochart's Version, we had better stick to our own; which makes a Sense clear and proper enough.

Ver. 22. Joseph is a fruitful Bough,] Or young Plant. It is an Allusion to his Name; which imports Growth and Increase: And may well be understood of the great Dignity to which he was risen in Egypt. Unto which he was advanced in a short time after Pharaoh took notice of him: Like a Bough or young Plant, which shoots up apace; and thence compared in the next Words to

A fruitful Bough by a Well,] Or Spring of Water: Which in those dry Countries, made the Plants which were set near them to grow the faster, and to a greater height (Psal. i. 3.) and therefore signifies his extraordinary advancement.

Whose Branches run over the Wall.] Cover the Wall that surrounds the Spring, or the Wall against which the Tree is planted. Which seems to denote the two Tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh; which sprang from him, and were very flourishing: As appears from Josh. xvii. 14, 17. where they tell him, they were a great People, whom the LORD had blessed hitherto. And Joshua there acknowledges as much, saying, Thou art a great People, and hast great Power: And therefore assigns them a larger Portion of Land than they had at first. The Hebrew word Banoth, which we translate Boughs, literally signifying Daughters, some think that as he speaks of the Sons of Joseph in the foregoing part of the Verse, so in this he speaks of his Daughters that they should go to the Wall, i. e. saith Dr. Lightfoot, even to the Enemy, to repair the hostile Tribe of Benjamin; which otherwise had decayed for want of Wives. For so the word Schur signifies, and is translated by us, an Enemy, Psal. xcii. 11. And D. Chytræus understands here by Daughters, the Cities of the Tribe of Ephraim which should be well governed, tho' some should set themselves against it.

Ver. 23. The Archers.] In the Hebrew the word Baale chitfim signify Masters in the Art of Shooting; and therefore denotes those here spoken of to be skilful in doing mischief: Such were his Brethren, who were full not only of Envy, but Hatred to him, xxxviii. 4, 5, 11. Some refer it also to Potiphar's Wife; who wickedly slandered him: And others to the whole Tribe of Ephraim; who were encompassed with Enemies (who in general are meant by Archers) when the Kingdom was settled in them over the ten Tribes.

Having sorely grieved him,] By their unkind, or rather churlish Behaviour towards him; for they could not speak peaceably to him, (xxxviii. 4.) and it's likely, they reviled him, and threw out bitter words against him: Which are properly compared to Arrows, Psal. lxiv. 3.

And shot at him.] Designed to destroy him; and did actually throw him into sore Afflictions, xxxviii. 22, 24, 28.

And bated him.] Which arose from their Hatred to him.

Ver. 24. But his Bow abode in strength.] He armed himself with invincible Patience, having nothing else to oppose unto their malicious Contrivances. It seems to be a Metaphor from those Soldiers, who have Bows so well made, that tho' often, never so often bent, they neither break, nor grow weak. Such was the Temper of Joseph's Mind.

And the Arms of his Hands were made strong.] i. e. He was strengthened and supported: Being like to a strenuous Archer, the Muscles and Sinews of whose Arms are so firm and compact, that tho' his Hands draw his Bow continually, he is not weary.

By the Hands of the mighty God of Jacob.] Which Fortitude he had not from himself, but from the Almighty; who had supported Jacob in all his Adversities; and made all that Joseph did (when he was sold and imprisoned) to prosper in his Hands, xxxix. 3, 22, 23. The Hebrew word Abir, which signifies potent or powerful, and we translate, mighty One, is as much as the LORD of Jacob. For, from Power, it comes to signify Potestas, Authority and Dominion also; as Bochart observes.

From thence.] From the Divine Providence over him, before-mentioned.

Is the Shepherd.] Joseph became the Feeder and Nourisher of his Father, and of his Family, and of their Flocks and Herds, preserving them all from being famished.

And the Stone of Israel.] Who upheld them all, and kept them from being ruined. Or Shepherd may signify his being made Governor of all the Land of Egypt; and the Stone of Israel, the Support of his Family; for Shepherd is a Name of Dignity and Authority: And Stone signifies the Foundation (as Abarbinel here expounds it) upon which the whole Building relies:

lies, as Jacob and all his Children did upon Joseph for their Sustainance.

Some I find (particularly D. Chytræus) refer the Words from thence unto Joseph; and then by the Shepherd and Stone of Israel, understand those excellent Men who by their Wisdom and Valour supported the Commonwealth of Israel; such as Joshua, the Captain of the Lord's Host, and Abdon, one of the Judges, who were of the Tribe of Ephraim; and Gideon, Jair, and Jephthab, who were of the Tribe of Manasseh; but the following Words incline rather to the former Sense.

Ver. 25. Even by the God of thy Father.] Or from him that blessed me, and advanc'd thee to be the Support of my Family; for it refers to all that went before.

Who shall help thee.] Having said what God had already done for him, he now foretels what he would do hereafter, which relates to all his Posterity, whom God would protect and defend.

And by the Almighty.] Or from him who is all-sufficient, by which Name he reveal'd himself unto Abraham, when he enter'd into Covenant with him, and with his Seed, xvii. 1.

And blest thee with the Blessings of Heaven above, Blessings of the Deep that lieth under.] The Meaning seems to be, that his Posterity should be planted in a very fertile Soil, water'd from above with the Dew of Heaven, and with Showers of Rain; and water'd beneath with Springs and Rivers; as G. Vossius well interprets it, Lib. i. de Idolol. cap. 77.

Blessings of the Breasts, and of the Womb.] A Promise of a numerous and thriving Progeny, or of a vast Increase of Cattle, so well fed that they should bring up their Young prosperously, as well as bring them forth abundantly.

Ver. 26. The Blessings of thy Father.] Either the Blessings bestow'd by God upon Jacob, or the Blessings Jacob conferr'd on his Son Joseph.

Have prevailed.] Are greater.

Above the Blessings of my Progenitors.] Than the Blessings God bestow'd upon Abraham and Isaac, who had not so many Sons as God had blest'd him withal, upon every one of whom also he conferr'd a Share in the Inheritance of the Land of Canaan; whereas Ismael was excluded by Abraham, and Esau by Isaac. Or the Meaning may be, I have done more for thee, than they for me; i. e. thou shalt be happier than I; for Jacob led an unsettled Life, but Joseph flourish'd in great Splendor in Egypt to the End of his Days.

Unto the utmost Bounds of the everlasting Hills.] As long as the World shall last; for Perpetuity is express'd in Scripture by the Durableness of Mountains, Isai. liv. 10. and here he seems to allude to the noble Mountains, which fell to be the Portion of Joseph's Children, viz. Bashan, and Mount Ephraim; but there are those who think he hath not respect to the Durableness of these Mountains, but to their Fruitfulness, translating the Hebrew Word Tavath, not Bounds, but Desires, as the vulgar Latin doth; and then the Sense is, unto all that is most desirable in those ancient Hills, which abounded with the most excellent Fruit; and this Translation is grounded on Moses's Blessing, which seems to be an Interpretation of Jacob's, Deut. xxxiii. 15. where he blesses him for the chief Things of the ancient Mountains, and for the precious Things of the lasting Hills.

Of him that was separate from his Brethren.] The Word Nazir, which we translate separate, signifies one that is separated from others, vel Voto, vel Dignitate (as Bochart observes, P. ii. Hierozoic. L. v. cap. 6.) either by a Vow, or by his Dignity; and in the latter Sense Joseph is called Nazir, because of his eminent Dignity, whereby he was advanc'd above all his Brethren, being the Viceroy of Egypt.

Ver. 27. Benjamin shall raven as a Wolf.] This sets forth the warlike Temper of this Tribe, a Wolf being both a strong and undaunted, and also a very rapacious Creature, and thence in After-times dedicated to Mars, from whence Wolves are call'd Martii and Martiales in Virgil and in Horace; and warlike Men are call'd by the Greeks Λυκοειρες, of a Wolf-like Temper; and the History justifies this Character, the Tribe of Benjamin alone maintaining a War with all the other Tribes, in which they overcame them in two Battels, tho' they had 16 to one against them; and they kill'd then more Men of Israel than they had in their whole Army. See Bochart, P. i. Hierozoic. L. iii. cap. 10.

In the Morning he shall devour the Prey, and at Night he shall divide the Spoil.] This doth not signify (as the fore-named Author observes in the same Place) the whole Day, but the whole Night, one Part of which is the Evening, and the other the Morning; and therefore the Particle and signifies here as much as after, and this is the Sense, The Tribe of Benjamin shall be like a ravening Wolf, who shall have his Prey to eat till Morning-light, after he hath divided it in the Evening; for the division of the Prey goes before the eating of it. This Passage is like that Josb. vii. 25. They burnt them with Fire, and stoned them with Stones; i. e. burnt them after they had stoned them, as we there rightly translate it; and this apply'd to Benjamin, signifies such Success in their Wars, that they should come home loaded with the Spoils of their Enemies.

I omit the Fancy of the Talmudists, who imagine Benjamin is compar'd to a Wolf, because the Altar of Burnt-offering, where the Morning and Evening Sacrifices were daily consum'd, stood in this Tribe. They that would know what they say of this, may look in Codex Middoth, cap. iii. §. 1. and L'Empereur's Annotations there.

Ver. 28. All these are the Twelve Tribes of Israel.] From these sprang the Twelve Tribes of Israel, or these are the Blessings of the Twelve Tribes; for these Words plainly shew, that what he had said was not to be fulfill'd in their Persons, but in their Posterity.

And blessed them, every one according to his Blessing, &c.] He did not give them a new Blessing after all this; but the Meaning is, he blessed them (in the manner foregoing) every one according to the Blessing design'd by God for them. There seems indeed to be no Benediction bestow'd on the three first Tribes, but that is to be understood stood only comparatively, for he provided for them all a Portion in the Land of Canaan.

Ver. 29. I am to be gathered to my People.] Must die shortly.

Bury me with my Fathers, &c.] The reason of this Injunction is well explain'd by Mercer, to whom I refer the Reader.

Ver. 30. In the Cave that is, &c.] He describes the Place so particularly in this and the two next Verses, because he would not have them mistake it when they went to bury him, and that he might shew his Title to it if the Inhabitants of Canaan (from which he had been absent some Years) should dispute the laying his Body there.

Ver. 33. When Jacob had made an end of commanding his Sons.] Concerning his Burial, which he briefly added to his Prophecy.

He gather'd up his Feet into the Bed.] The Hebrews think that out of Reverence to God he sat up when he pronounc'd a Blessing on his Sons, his Feet hanging down upon the Ground; and indeed it is very probable he endeavour'd to put himself into a Posture of Authority at least, and therefore sat on his Bed-side while he spake; and now the prophetick Spirit, which had rais'd his natural Spirits above their ordinary Pitch, departing from him, they presently sunk so much the lower, and in a short Time he expir'd.

Yielded up the Ghost.] The Hebrews will have it to express an easy Death.

And was gathered to his People.] To his Ancestors, from whence there are some (particularly Theodore) who infer the Belief they had in those Days of another Life, in Society with those who were departed out of this Life; for Brutes are never said to be gather'd to those of their Kind that dy'd before them.

CHAP. L.

Ver. 1. Joseph fell on his Father's Face.] He was transported by his Affection to the tenderest Expressions of it, tho' he was a Man in great Dignity and Authority.

And kissed him.] It is likely he first clos'd his Eyes, as God promis'd he should do, xlv. 4. (and as the Custom was) and then parted from his Body with a Kiss; of which we find many Examples both among Heathen and Christian People; but they will not warrant us to say that it was done by every Body, for all that I have observ'd were such near Relations as Joseph was to Jacob; thus Ovid represents Niobe as kissing her slain Sons, and Meleager's Sisters kissing him when he lay dead; and Corippus represents Justin the younger falling upon Justinian, and weeping, and kissing him, just as Joseph did here:

Incubuit lachrymans, atque oscula frigida carpsit
Divini patris.*

Yet Dionys. Areopag. cap. vii. Eccles. Hierarch. describing the Funerals of Christians, saith, the Bishop pray'd over the Corpse when it was brought into the Church, and after Prayer, Αὐτὸς ἀπαύξεν ἃ καὶ οἱ κληρικοί, &c. Both he himself kissed the dead Person, and after him all that were present did the same; so it seems to have been their taking a solemn Leave of the Dead till they met in another World:

Ver. 2. His Servants the Physicians.] Great Men anciently, among other Servants that waited on them, had a Physician; and Joseph being Viceroy of Egypt, may well be suppos'd to have kept more than one in his Retinue.

To embalm his Father.] Of which there was now the greater Necessity, because his Body was to be carry'd a great way to its Sepulchre; and both Herodotus and Diodorus Siculus tell us there were those in Egypt who profess'd the Art of preserving Bodies from Corruption, which it is likely was Part of their Physicians Employment; for the Word Ropheim (which we translate Physicians) constantly signifies in Scripture such as cure or heal sick Bodies; but the LXX here aptly enough translate it Ἐσφαριστῆς (those that prepared and fitted Bodies for their Interment, by embalming them, as we translate it) because this now was their proper Business; whence it is that Pliny saith, Lib. xi. cap. 37. Mos est Egyptiis cadavera asservare medicata, it is the Custom of the Egyptians to preserve dead Bodies order'd by the Physicians Art; in which Art they excell'd all other People, Bodies of their embalming remaining to this Day, and are often brought into these Countries under the Name of Mummy; concerning which a late German Physician (Joach. Strupp) hath written a peculiar Treatise.

And the Physicians embalmed Israel.] The fore-named Authors (Herodotus and Diodorus Siculus) tell us the Manner how it was perform'd, and at what Rates, there being three several Prices, according to the Cost that Men would bestow upon their Friends; upon the first Rank of Funerals they spent a Talent of Silver, the second cost about 20 Pound; about the third they made small Expence, as Diodorus expressly tells us, L. i. §. 2. p. 57. Edit. Hen. Steph. And Herodotus in three distinct Chapters shews how they order'd the Bodies of the better, middle, and meaner Sort, so as to preserve them, and yet with greater or lesser Expence. Vid. Euterpe, cap. 86, 87, 88. If Things were thus in Joseph's Days, it is not to be thought that he would spare any Cost, but had his Father's Body embalm'd in the noblest manner.

Ver. 3. And forty Days were fulfilled for him.] That is, for his Embalming, which could not be finish'd in a little Time; for Diodorus tells us of several Officers who were employ'd about it, one after another, and says expressly they spent more than thirty Days in it, which differs something from what is here related; but it is likely in future Times (when Diodorus liv'd) they might have attained to a greater Perfection in this Art, and made their Spices penetrate the whole Body in less than Forty Days, but more than Thirty. And Herodotus doth not really really differ from this, when he saith in the Place before named, ταῦτα ποιοῦντες, when they had done these things (stuffed the Body with Myrrh, Cassia, and other Spices, except Frankincense) περιχύουσιν νίτρω, κρυψάνες ἡμέρας ἐβδομήκοντα, they pickled it in Nitre, where it lay soaking 70 Days, that is, 30 Days more, till the 40 were made up 70, longer than which neither the Bodies of the better nor the meaner Sort were to be salted; but after that they were wrapt in fine Linnen and Gums, to make it stick like Glue; and so they deliver'd the Body to the Kindred of the Deceased entire (as Diodorus writes, p. 58.) in all its Features, the very Hairs of the Eye-lids being preserved.

There have been some so morose as to censure Joseph for following the perverse Customs, as they call them, of the Egyptians, who spent too much upon dead Bodies; but they should have consider'd how much more perverse it is not to follow the decent Customs of the Country where we live, and that dead Bodies, especially of the Faithful, are not to be neglected, but treated (as St. Austin speaks, L. i. de Civ. Dei, cap. 13.) as the Organs of the Holy Ghost, which the Ancients, he thinks, did well to carry to their Funerals, officiosa Pictate.

And the Egyptians mourn'd for him seventy days.] i. e. All that Time they were preparing his Body in the manner before related for its Funeral, which Herodotus says was just 70 Days; he also and Diodorus describe their manner of Mourning, and say, that they daub'd their Heads with Mud (as the Jews sprinkled Ashes on their Heads) and went about lamenting till the Corpse was bury'd, abstaining from bathing, and from Wine, and from all delicate Food, or fine Cloaths; which latter Part of their Mourning it is likely might be in use in Joseph's Time, tho' not the former, of besmearing their Heads and Faces with Mud; but it is sufficient to say that they appear'd in the Habit of Mourners (all the Time the Body was embalming) which was very various in different Times and Places, and continu'd in some Countries a great many Days longer than in others. This Time of 70 Days may seem to some too long; but Jacobus Capellus proposes this to their Consideration (Hist. Exot. & Sacra, ad A. M. 2310.) that Joseph being next to their King, the Egyptians honour'd his Father with a royal Funeral, and a Mourning of 70 Days, which he thinks is a round Number for 72; for Diodorus says so many were the Days of Mourning for their King. "It seeming reasonable to them, that as they gave the fifth Part of the Increase of their Land to their King when he was alive, so they should bestow the fifth Part of the Year upon him in mourning for him when he was dead, which was just 72, not reckoning the five odd Days, which did not come into their Account. As to those who object, that this was immoderate Mourning, having more of Ambition than Piety in it; his Answer is, That (granting it to be true) Joseph did not bring in this Custom, and had peculiar reason to follow what he found in use there, that they might be the more condemn'd who vex'd the innocent Posterity, on whose Parent they had be-

VOL. I.

"flow'd royal Honours; besides, there is something due to Kings and great Men, to distinguish them from the Dregs of the People.

Ver. 4. And when the Days of Mourning were past.] That is, the 70 Days before-nam'd.

Joseph spake unto the House of Pharaoh.] To the great Officers of the Court, unto whom it is most probable he spake by a Messenger, strict Mourners (such as Joseph was) using to keep close in their Chambers, and not to appear in publick, or make Visits, at least it was against the Custom to appear in the Court (if the same Usage was there in these Days, which was in the Persian Court in Mordecai's Time, and such rational Customs one cannot but think were very ancient) in the Habit of a Mourner, Esther iv. 1, 2. for which reason he did not go himself to make the following Request to Pharaoh, they who were in the State of Mourning being look'd upon as desil'd.

Ver. 5. My Father made me swear, &c.] See xlvii. 29, 30. where Jacob engag'd him by an Oath to carry his Body into Canaan, to be bury'd there, that he might keep up some Claim to that Country, by virtue of the Sepulchre which his Grandfather had there purchas'd, and where his Father Isaac lay bury'd.

Which I have digged for me.] In the Cave that Abraham had bought, Gen. xxiii. (which was a large Place) Jacob it seems had taken care to have a Grave digg'd for himself; from which, and such like Examples, St. Austin argues (in the Place quoted above, ver. 3.) the Bodies of the Dead, especially of good Men, are to be treated with such a Regard as they themselves thought was due to them.

Ver. 6. According as he made thee swear.] The Religion of an Oath, it appears from hence, was in those Days so sacred, that the King, who had not sworn himself, would not have another Man violate it for his Sake, who might have pretended he could not spare Joseph so long from his Business, being his chief Minister in the Land of Egypt. Such heathen Kings as these will rise up in Judgment against those Christian Princes who make a Jest of their Oaths.

Ver. 7. All the Servants of Pharaoh.] This seems to be explain'd by the next Words, the Elders of his House, the principal Officers of Court; for the Word all must be understood with some Limitation, as usually in Scripture, some being left behind no doubt to wait upon the King; thus in Matth. iii. 5. all Judea is said to have gone out to John's Baptism, i. e. a great many.

The Elders of his House, &c.] I have observ'd before on xxiv. 2. that Elder is a Name of Dignity, as the Hierusalem Targum there expounds it, instead of his Servant the Elder of his House, having these Words, his principal Servant, who was set over all the rest, as their Governor; and it appears by this Place that this was used not only by the Hebrews, but by the Egyptians, long before Moses's Time, as a Title of Honour and Dignity; as it hath since been by all Nations whatsoever. See Mr. Selden, Lib. i. de Synedr. cap. 14.

All the Elders of the Land of Egypt.] The principal Persons in Authority and Dignity throughout the whole Country, as well as those of the Court, such as were Governors of Provinces and Cities, and Counsellors, &c. which Honour they did to Jacob in all likelihood by Pharaoh's Command; for how well soever they might stand affected to Joseph, they could not of their own Accord desert their Charge.

Ver. 8. All the House of Joseph, &c.] Their whole Family, except such as were necessary to look after their little Ones and their Flocks, &c. This Verse also shews the Word all must have a limited Sense.

Ver. 9. And there went up with him both Chariots and Horsemen.] As a Guard to him, which it is likely always attended him, as Viceroy of the Kingdom, but now might be necessary for his Safety as he pass'd thro' the Desarts, in case he should meet with any Opposition when he came to challenge his Burying-place, tho' it is probable that Matter was settled beforehand with the Canaanites, who were in no Condition to oppose the Kingdom of Egypt, which was grown very rich, and they very poor by the late Famine.

And it was a very great Company.] That he might appear in greater State at such a Solemnity.

Ver. 10. And they came to the Threshing-floor of Atad.] Some take Atad for a Place, and translate the Word before it in the same Sense as if he had said they came to Goren-Atad; but Forsterus in his Lexicon thinks Atad was the proper Name of a Man, who was eminent in that Country for his Threshing-floor; tho' there are those who take it for a Bramble, with which that Floor was fenc'd in; for so the Word signifies, Judg. ix. 14. And the Africans call'd a Bramble Atadim (as Bochart observes, L. ii. Canaan, cap. 15.) which is the Plural Number of Atad. But the Talmudists are so fanciful, that not satisfy'd with such Reasons, they say Jacob's Coffin was here furrounded with Garlands (Crowns they call them) just like a Threshing-Floor, which is hedg'd about with Thorns; for the Tradition they say is, that the Sons of Esau, Ismael and Keturah, all met here, and seeing Joseph's Crown hanging over the Coffin, they all pull'd off theirs, and hang'd them up in the same manner. So the Excerpt. Gemaræ in Sota, cap. i. §. 45.

Beyond Jordan.] Some translate it, on this side Jordan; both are true with respect to several Places, for it was on this side Jordan with respect to those in Canaan, but beyond Jordan with respect to those who came unto Canaan thro' the Desarts, as Joseph did now, and the Israelites afterward; why Joseph pass'd this Way, which was very much about, and not the direct Road, which was a great deal shorter, is hard to tell; perhaps it was a better Way for Chariots, for it is not probable they fear'd any Opposition from the Philistines or Edomites, with whom the Matter might have been concerted (as we now speak) beforehand, if they had apprehended their Passage would meet with any Hindrance from them.

There they mourned, &c.] Wherein this great and fore Lamentation consisted, we are not able to give a certain Account, but in After-times they sat with their Faces cover'd, having Ashes sprinkled on their Heads, crying out with a mournful Voice, sometimes wringing, sometimes clapping their Hands together, smiting their Breasts or their Thighs, with many other Expressions of Grief and Sorrow; but why they made this Lamentation at the Floor of Atad, rather than at the Grave, is harder to resolve; perhaps it was a more convenient Place to stay in Seven Days than that where he was to be bury'd, and the Mourning being made in the Country where the Body was laid, was the same as if it had been made at the Grave; or it was the Fashion perhaps at the very Entrance of the Country where they carry'd a Corpse to be bury'd to fall into a Lamentation; and they made the same again when they came to the Place where it was interr'd; tho' there is nothing of that here mention'd.

Seven Days.] That that was the Time of publick Mourning among the Jews in succeeding Ages, it appears from many Instances, particularly 1 Sam. xxxi. 13. Ecclef. xxii. 13. Judith xvi. 29. And just so long their Joy lasted at solemn Weddings, as we read in xxix of this Book, ver. 27.

Ver. 11. This is a grievous Mourning to the Egyptians.] By this it appears this was a solemn publick Mourning, in which the Egyptians themselves join'd, tho' not related to him, and therefore it is likely consisted in such Wailings, and outward Expressions of Sorrow, as were made even by those who had no inward Grief; for in following Times there were a Sort of Men call'd ספריני, Lamenters (from the Hebrew Word Saphad, used in the foregoing Verse) who had a publick Office, as our Bearers have, to attend upon Funerals, and make doleful Lamentations. See Buxtorf. Lex. Talm. f. 1524.

Abel-Mitzraim.] This shews the Lamentation was exceeding great, that it chang'd the very Name of the Place where it was made, or at least gave a Name to it.

Ver. 14. And Joseph return'd into Egypt, &c.] They had a prosperous Journey; and there is no ground for what some Jews bid us here note, that not one Man was lost, tho' they had a Battel with the Edomites in their Way to Canaan.

Ver. 15. Joseph will peradventure hate us; &c.] Their Guilt was so great, that it continu'd to make them suspicious.

Ver. 16. And they sent Messengers unto Joseph.] The same Guilt made them fearful to go themselves, but they first try'd how he would answer a Messenger they sent to him (for it doth not appear there was more than one) in all their Names, with a Letter perhaps confirming what he deliver'd by word of Mouth. Some think this Message was sent before they went to bury their Father, while the Time of Mourning lasted, when Joseph's Heart they thought was tender, and his Father fresh in Memory; but this is not a sufficient Reason to make us think it was not done in Order of Time, as it is here plac'd in the Story.

Thy Father commanded before he dy'd.] This was a feigned Story, for we do not find that Joseph had acquainted his Father with their their Usage of him. Or, if he did, it would have been more proper to have left this Charge with Joseph, than with them; or, rather, he knew him so well, that he needed not to command him to take no Revenge.

Ver. 17. Forgive the trespass.] So we well translate the Hebrew Phrase, Take away the Trespass: Which is used elsewhere in this Book, xviii. 24, 26. and in Hosea xiv. 2. And by forgive, is meant, Remitte pœnam, quam ab illis possis jure exigere propter peccatum in te commissum: As Bochart well explains this Passage, P. i. Hierozoic. Lib. ii. cap. 41. Remit the Punishment, which thou may'st justly exact of them, for the Offence they committed against thee.

Of the Servants of the God of thy Father.] They urge besides the Command of their Father, and the Relation they had to him as his Brethren, that they were of the same Religion with him; which makes the greatest conjunction of Minds and Affections, if it be rightly understood and practised. For how can the Worshipers of the same God hate one another? There are those who think they call themselves the Servants of God, not merely upon the account of their worshipping the True God, but because they were Teachers also of the true Religion: For this made them, above other Israelites, to be the Servants of God. So Jac. Alting. L. iii. Shilo, cap. 14.

And Joseph wept, when they spake unto him.] By their Messenger. Which shows he was so far from being angry at them, that he pitied them, and had a tender Affection to them.

Ver. 18. And his Brethren also went, &c.] The Messenger acquainting them how he stood affected to them, and, it's likely, carrying back a kind Message from him, and an Invitation to come to him, they went to his House, and humbled themselves at his Feet. In which Joseph's Dream was still further fulfilled.

We are thy Servants.] They had not yet overcome their Fear (so close did their Guilt stick to their Consciences) and therefore call themselves his Servants, not his Brethren. They had fold him to be a Servant; and now they offer themselves to be so to him.

Ver. 19. For am I in the place of God?] His Father Jacob had said the same to Rachel, xxx. 2. to persuade her to submit to Divine Providence: Which seems to be the Scope of the Words here: Shall I presume to oppose myself to what is come to pass, as if I were God; and not He, who hath ordered things so much for our good? This appears to be the Sense, by what follows; and may be thus expressed: Shall I punish you for that (for that may be meant by being in the place of God, to whom Vengeance belongs) which God hath turned so much to all our Advantage? Tho' the Words may be simply rendered, I am in the place of God, without an Interrogation. As much as to say, I have nourished and sustained you all this while, and can you think I will now do you hurt?

Ver. 20. But as for you, ye thought evil against me, &c.] It is true indeed, ye thought to destroy me: But God designed by that very evil Contrivance of yours, to bring about the greatest Good both to you and me.

To bring it to pass, as it is this Day, &c.] To accomplish what you now see, the Preservation of our whole Family: Which he understands by much People, in the next Words, who by this means were saved from perishing. Herein appears the wonderful Wisdom of God's overruling Providence: Which, contrary to the Nature of Sin, and the Will of Sinners, turns the Evil they do into Good; and directs it to the most excellent Ends.

Ver. 21. Now therefore fear you not.] He again encourages their Hope, by repeating what he had said, ver. 19.

I will nourish you, &c.] I will still take care of you all, as I have done hitherto.

And he comforted them, &c.] With such Discourse as this he raised up their drooping Spirits: For he spake most kindly to them.

Ver. 22. And Joseph dwelt in Egypt, &c.] He continued in Egypt; and so did his Brethren to their Dying-day. And, no doubt, made his word good to them; being one of the greatest Examples of heroick Virtue, to which none can arrive, unless they be meek and placable as he was. For, Nihil est magnum, quod non idem sit placidum; as Seneca truly said.

Joseph lived an hundred and ten Years.] Not so long as his Forefathers; for he was the Son of his Father's old Age, and lived a great part of his time full of Thought and Care; having the Weight of a great Kingdom's Affairs lying on him. For eighty of these Years he spent in Egypt (being but thirty Years old when he first flood before Pharaoh) in great Prosperity indeed, but in no less Solicitude to discharge so great a Trust as was committed to him.

Ver. 23. Ephraim's Children of the third Generation.] i. e. His great Grand-children. In which Jacob's Prediction began to be fulfilled, xlviii. 19, 20. xlix. 25. We find indeed, that after Joseph's death (I suppose) Ephraim had some of his Children slain, 1 Chron. vii. 21, &c. But God so blessed those who remained, that when Moses took an account of them after their coming out of Egypt, they were increased to above eight thousand more than the Children of Manasseh, Numb. i. 33, 35.

Brought up upon Joseph's Knees.] He lived to embrace and dandle them (as we now speak) in which old Men and Women much delight. Manasseh had only Gilead by his first Wife; but he had more Children by a second, as we read, 1 Chron. vii. 16. All which were born before Joseph died; and perhaps, by Children, he means the Children of his Grand-children.

Joseph's great Authority, and his Children's great Increase, over-awed his Brethren, so that they never durst dispute their Father's Will: In which he gave a double Portion unto them. Which one would guess by their Temper, was as displeasing to them, as their Father's Kindness to Joseph anciently had been: But they durst not oppose it; nor do we find they quarrelled at it.

Ver. 24. God will surely visit you.] He explains his meaning by what follows; and bring you out of this Land, &c. For the word visit is used indifferently, either for bestowing good things, or inflicting evil. Thus he died in the same Faith with his Ancestors; That God would make good his Promises to them.

Ver. 25. And Joseph took an Oath.] As his Father had done of him, xlvi. 30, 31.

Of the Children of Israel.] Not only of his Brethren mentioned before, ver. 24. but of all their Family, who were to succeed them; and might live (when his Brethren were dead) to carry his Body out of Egypt; which he desired, for the same reason his Father had done.

Carry up my Bones from hence.] He did not desire to be carried immediately after his death as his Father was when his Embalming was finished, but that they should carry him when they themselves returned to Canaan: By which time he knew his Flesh would be quite dried up, and nothing left but Bones. The reason why he did not desire to be carried away presently, was, that his Body remaining with them, they might look upon it as a Pledge and Security of the Promise God had made, of giving them the Possession of that Land, wherein he desired to be buried, or not buried at all. But he had repeated it twice, that God would surely visit them (ver. 24, 25.) and was so confident of it, that he desired to be kept unburied till the time of that Visitation. Perhaps also he considered that they could not be of such Authority as he had been, to prevail to have his Body carried to Canaan as his Father's was, and therefore desired them not to think of laying him there till that time came when they should make a solemn and universal Departure thither.

We read nothing what became of the rest of his Brethren; but Josephus saith they were all carried into the Land of Canaan to be buried. For they had the same desire, in all likelihood; and gave the same charge concerning their Bodies, to keep Posterity in hope that God would certainly bring them thither. Which the words of St. Stephen also may seem to import, when he saith, Acts viii. 15, 16. Jacob died, and our Fathers, and were carried over into Sychem; &c. Tho' we read of none of their Fathers beside Joseph, yet it seems the Tradition was, that they were all carried thither after his Example. And so St. Hierom saith, That he saw at Sychem the Sepulchres of the Twelve Patriarchs. Epitaph. Paulæ, cap. 6.

Ver. 26. So Joseph died.] After he had taken the fore-named Oath of them, and assured them again of the Truth of God's Promise: Which were the last things he did.

Some, perhaps, may think it strange that so wise and great a Man as Joseph, whose dying words, one cannot but think, would have left a deep impression upon his Brethren, should not give them abundance of good Counsel at his departure from this World, and lay some other Charge upon them, besides this of carrying up his Bones to the Land of Canaan. But Moses did not intend to write all that excellent Men said and did: And we may very well think, when he declared his stedfast Faith in the Promise made to Abraham (which the Apostle takes notice of, Hebr. xi. 22.) and assured them God would perform it, he enlarged himself on that Subject in more words than are here related.

Being an hundred and ten Years old.] This was said before, ver. 22. but here repeated to signify he did not live a Year beyond it; and so died just fifty four Years after his Father, and an hundred forty four Years before their departure out of Egypt.

And they embalmed him.] His Brethren took the same care of his Body, that he had done of his Father's, ver. 2. See there. For that Joseph died before any of his Brethren, the Jews gather from Exod. i. 6. where 'tis said, Joseph died, and all his Brethren: He first, and they followed him. But not content with this, some of them adventure to tell us how many Years every one of them lived; nay, the very Month and Day of their Birth; as may be seen in R. Bechai. Reuben, for instance, they say was born the 14th Day of Cisleu, and died when he was 125 Years old, &c.

And he was put in a Coffin in Egypt.] To be preserved in that Chest or Ark (as the Hebrew word is commonly translated) till they themselves went from thence: Herodotus in the Book above-named (Euterpe, cap. 86, 90.) speaks of the Θήκαι, Chests wherein dead Bodies were enclosed after their embalming: Which they laid, ἐν οἰκῇ μασί θνήσκουσιν, in the House or Cell where these Chests were reposed, reared against the Wall of it. Whether Joseph's Coffin was put into such a common Repository, or rather preserved in a Place by it, we cannot determine. But the Chaldees hath an odd Conceit (as G. Schickard observes in his Jus Regium, p. 159.) that it was kept in the River Nile. Which arose perhaps, from a mistake of the relation, which that Author had met withal, of the Place where they laid their Bodies: Which were let down very deep Wells, or Vaults, some call them (some of which were not far from the River Nile) and so put into a Cave which was at the bottom of those Wells. For so F. Vansleb and others, who have gone to search for Mummies, describe the Place where they lie: And tell us, they found some of the Coffins made of Wood (not putrefied to this Day) and others of Clothes pasted together forty times double, which were as strong as Wood, and not at all rotten.

The Reader cannot but observe, That from the time of Joseph's advancement to the Government till the time of his death, i. e. for 80 Years, there is no mention of the death of any King in Egypt. For it was not Moses's Intention to write the History of that Kingdom, or give us the Series of their Kings, but only to acquaint us with the Series of the Patriarchs, and give some account of them, from the Creation to his own time. All other things must be learnt out of other Authors. And, according to Eusebius, whom Jac. Capellus follows; the first King of the 18th Dynasty (when the Egyptian History he makes account ceased to be fabulous) was Amos: Whose Dream Joseph interpreted; and was by him preferred. After he had reigned 25 Years he left the Kingdom to Chebro; who reigned 13 Years. Next to whom was Amenophis (as much as to say, a Servant of Noph, i. e. Memphis) who reigned 21 Years, and then left the Kingdom to Mephres, who held it 12 Years. To whom Josephus, out of Manetho, substitutes Amerfis, and says he reigned 22 Years. And then succeeded Mephramatbosis, who reigned 26 Years: In the beginning of whose time Joseph died.

 UPON THE
 Second Book of M O S E S, CALLED EXODUS.

C H A P. I.

THIS Book hath its Name from the principal Subject of it, viz. the Departure of the Children of Israel out of Egypt: For so the Greek word ἔξοδος, signifies, going out, or departing from one place to another. It contains an History of about an hundred forty five Years (some make it two or three Years less) from the death of Joseph, to the building of the Tabernacle. For it treats of several things which went before their Departure, and which followed after it; but they all relate to that, and depend upon it.

Ver. 1. Now these are the Names of the Children of Israel which came into Egypt, &c.] Being to relate the Departure of the Children of Israel out of Egypt, it was very proper first to set down the Number of those who came into it, and the Heads of them: Whereby it might the better appear also, how God had fulfilled his Promise to Abraham, of multiplying his Seed: Which Moses had recorded in his first Book (Genesis) where he shows this Promise was made at that very time when he declared, after a long Affliction in Egypt, he would conduct his Posterity into Canaan, Gen. xv. 5, 13, 18.

Ver. 2, 3, 4. Reuben, Simeon, &c.] He doth not set down their Names (in these three Verses) according to their Birth, but first, the Children of Leah; then one of Rachel's; and then those of his Handmaids; and last of all (in the next Verses) Joseph, who was in Egypt before.

Ver. 5. And all the Souls.] i. e. Persons, Who came out of the Loins.] In the Hebrew, out of the Thigh, which signifies that part whereby Mankind is propagated; as was observed upon Gen. xlv. 26. And so the Author of the Tripartite History uses the word femur, when he speaks of the Martyrdom of Benjamin (as Bochart observes, P. ii. Hierozoic. L. v. cap. 15.) Alium rursum acutum Calamum in ejus femur; unde humana origo descendit, jussit immitti.

For

For Joseph was in Egypt already.] In the Hebrew the Particle Vau (which we commonly translate and, and here, for) sometimes also signifies with, see Gen. iv. 20. and so it doth in this place; which should be translated, seventy Souls, with Joseph; who was in Egypt already. For Joseph is not to be added to the seventy, but reckoned among them, to make up that Number; as appears from Gen. xlv.

Ver. 6. And Joseph died.] See Gen. i. 26.

And all his Brethren, and all that Generation.] All that came with Jacob into Egypt.

Ver. 7. And the Children of Israel were fruitful, &c.] Here are several words for the same thing, to show their extraordinary Increase, beyond what was usual in that or any other Country. And because there are six words in all, to express this great Increase, some of the Hebrews conclude they brought forth six Children at a Birth. Which others of them gather from the second word here used, Fischretzu; which is a word whereby the Increase of Fishes is expressed in Gen. i. 20. So Theodorick Hackspan observes out of Baal-hatturim and Falkut, and thinks the Tradition is not to be rejected, because they bring frivolous Conceits to support it. For Aristotle saith, L. vii. Histor. Animal. c. 4. the Egyptian Women were so fruitful, that some of them at four Births brought twenty Children. No wonder then if some of the Israelites brought six at a time, by the extraordinary Blessing of God upon them. For Caspar Schottus names the Wife of a Citizen in Florence, who had two and fifty Children, and never brought less than three at a Birth, L. iii. Phys. Curiosæ, cap. xxix. where he hath collected a vast number of Examples of such strange Fruitfulness.

But no body hath explained this Verse more soberly and unexceptionable than Abarbinel; who considers every one of the words here used very judiciously, and shows they are not multiplied in vain. For as the first word,

Were fruitful,] Signifies, he thinks, that none among them were barren, but brought forth every Year, as Trees are wont to do. So the next word,

And increased abundantly,] Signifies, that they commonly brought forth more than one at a time, as creeping things do; to which this word alludes. And because when more than one are born at a Birth, they are frequently very weak, and not long-lived. Therefore he adds,

And multiplied.] Which signifies, that they grew up to be Men and Women, and lived to have Children of their own. And those not feeble, but lusty and strong; as the next words, he thinks, imports waxed exceeding mighty; of which more presently.

Now this vast Increase began at their first coming into Egypt, Gen. xlvii. 27, 28. and so continued till the death of all that Generation, mentioned in the foregoing Verse. When it began to be taken notice of by the Egyptians; who thought it might prove dangerous to them; for the Israelites having multiplied exceedingly, during the space of 17 Years that Jacob lived in Egypt; there is no doubt they increased proportionably in the space of 54 Years more, which Joseph lived after the death of his Father. And so in 64 Years more, from the death of Joseph to the Birth of Moses, must needs be grown so numerous, as to fill the Country. So that in 80 Years more, they were increased to six hundred thousand Men besides Children, Exod. xii. 37. And the next Year their Number being taken, they were found to be six hundred and three thousand, five hundred and fifty Men, from twenty Years old and upward; as we read, Numb. i. 45, 46. And therefore reckoning Women, Children, and Youths under the Age of twenty, we cannot but think they were three times as many; or perhaps two Millions. Which is not incredible, by a moderate Computation, if we consider how many might spring from 70 Persons in the space of two hundred and fifteen Years, (which the fore-named Sums make) as Bonfrerius, and several others from him in our own Language, have been at the pains to demonstrate.

And waxed exceeding mighty.] This is commonly thought to signify, that they were not only numerous, but robust and strong. And it may as well denote, that their vast Numbers made them very formidable to the Egyptians; who began, it appears by the Sequel, to be jealous of their Power, if they should have a Will to attempt any thing against them.

And the Land was filled with them.] i. e. The Land of Goshen; and perhaps some other Parts of the lower Egypt.

Ver. 8. Now there arose up a new King over Egypt.] Some, by a new King, understand a King of another Family, or Race (as Josephus interprets it) nay, a Stranger, of another Nation; just as new Gods are strange Gods, in Scripture Language. Thus Sir John Marsbam: And then it is no wonder that he knew not Joseph, as it here follows: But this is not certain; and the Conceit whereby Aben Ezra justifies it (which is, that the word rose up implies as much) is justly censured by Abarbinel as frivolous; it being the common word which is used every where when a new King succeeds his Predecessor. It is most likely therefore that Moses means no more, but that the King in whose time Joseph died, being dead likewise (whom many take to have been Mephramuthosis) and another after him, whom they call Thutmosis, the next Successor in the Throne (Amenophis) either had heard nothing of Joseph, or did not mind what was said of him. Our great Primate of Ireland gives a different account of the Succession of the Egyptian Kings; and takes this King to have been Rameesses Miamum; but still supposes him to have been of the old Line, and not a Stranger.

Who knew not Joseph,] There is no doubt that Joseph died, as he lived, in high Esteem and great Reputation in that Country; and that his Memory continued precious as long as any of that Generation lasted. For Diodorus Siculus saith (L. i.) that the Egyptians, above all other People, ευχαρίστας διακείμενοι πρὸς πᾶν τὸ εὐεργετῆν, were disposed to be grateful to all those who had any way merited of them: looking upon the requital of the kindness of Benefactors, to be one of the greatest Supporters of human Life. And something to the same purpose is noted by Clemens Alexandrinus (L. i. Strom. p. 303.) where having said that Barbarous Nations highly honoured, ἀντὶν νομιμάδας καὶ διδασκαλούς, their Lawgivers and Instructors, whom they called called Gods; he presently adds, that the Egyptians ἐθεολόγησαν ἀνελκώς, were very careful to deify such Persons; but if this was their Inclination in Times so ancient as these of Moses, we must not think them all to have been so dispos'd, or that Time did not obliterate the Memory of Benefits; for this Prince (whom Artapanus in Eusebius, L. ix. Præp. Evang. c. 27. calls Palamathes, so uncertain is his Name) not having seen Joseph himself, nor having any Knowledge perhaps of the Benefits his Country had receiv'd by his Means, did not treat his Kindred so kindly as they had been used in former Times. But this Phrase, he knew not, is commonly interpreted, he regarded not the Services which Joseph had done, of which he is supposed not to have been ignorant; for Words of Knowledge in Scripture include the Affections also; as God is said to know those whom he loves, and not to know those whom he doth not love, Psalms i. 6. Matth. vii. 23. Whence the Jews have rais'd this Observation, That he who forgets the Benefits he hath receiv'd from other Men, at last forgets those he hath receiv'd from God. For he of whom it is said here, that he knew not Joseph, said not long after, I know not the Lord, ver. 2. but this is grounded upon a Mistake, for it was another Pharaoh, long after this King, who spake those Words.

Ver. 9. And he said unto his People.] He called a Council of the great Men of the Nation, to whom he represented how necessary it was to lessen the Number and weaken the Power of the Israelites.

Behold, the People of the Children of Israel are more and mightier than we.] This was not true (unless he meant, that no Part of Egypt of that Bigness had so many People, and so strong as the Israelites in Goshen) but he said it to awaken his People, to consider how to suppress them; and perhaps he was afraid of their Power, or out of Popularity would in the beginning of his Reign give a Proof of his Care of his People, by suppressing Foreigners.

Ver. 10. Come on.] The Hebrew Word Habab is sometimes used in Petitions (Psalms lx. ult.) but most commonly in Exhortations, when Men excite and stir up one another, not to be slack in any Business. See Gen. xi. 3.

Let us deal wisely with them.] He would not go about to destroy them by Force, being loth to lose so many Subjects, but was desirous to diminish them by subtle Devices.

Lest they multiply.] Grow still more numerous and mighty.

Lest when there falls out any War.] With the Arabians, Ethiopians, or other neighbouring Nations, for I see no reason to believe that he means the ancient Egyptians (with whom the Israelites had liv'd in great Friendship, but now were expell'd by the Shepherd Kings) and the People of Thebais, who at length made War with those Kings who reign'd in the lower Egypt. This is Sir J. Marsham's Conjecture (in his Canon Chron. Sec. viii.) which I thought good to mention, tho' I do not follow it.

They join also to our Enemies, and fight against us.] As it was natural for Men to do who were under grievous Oppressions, and hoped thereby for Relief.

And so get them out of the Land.] They had heard the Israelites discourse it is likely that they never meant always to stay there, their Fathers coming only to sojourn in Egypt; and the nearer the Time approach'd when God promis'd to bring them from thence, the more we may well think they spake of it; which rais'd this Jealousy, that in case of any War they would join with their Enemies, that by their Assistance they might be deliver'd.

Ver. 11. Therefore they did set over them Taskmasters, &c.] This was the Result of the Council, that they should be brought low, by laying heavy Taxes upon them, to squeeze them of their Money, and by making them labour very hard, whereby they thought to weaken their Bodies; for the Hebrew Word Missim, coming from Mas, which signifies Tribute, it may be reasonably thought that these Taskmasters (as we call them) exacted great Sums of Money of them, as well as afflicted them with their Burdens, i. e. hard Labours of all Sorts, as the Eastern Writers expound it.

And they built for Pharaoh.] They did not labour for themselves, but for the King, who it is likely gave them no Wages, but used them as mere Slaves.

Treasure Cities.] Fortify'd Cities, wherein he had his Magazines (as we now speak) of all Sort of Ammunition, and Stores of Corn and publick Provisions, as well as Treasures of Money; for so we translate this Word Miskenoth, 2 Chron. xvi. 4. xvii. 12. Store-houses; and xxxvi. 28. Store-houses for Corn, and Wine, and Oil; there was great Labour no doubt employ'd in building such Cities, surrounded with Walls, and Towers, and deep Ditches, &c.

Pithom.] This is thought by Bochart to be the City which Herodotus calls Πάτμου, L. ii. c. 158. but Herodotus there saith it was πόλις τῆς Ἀραβίας, a City of Arabia; and therefore Sir J. Marsham's Conjecture seems more reasonable, who takes it for Pelusium, which was the most ancient fortified Place in Egypt, called by Ezekiel xxx. 15. the Strength of Egypt; and by Suidas, long after him, κλεις τῆς Ἀιγύπτου, the Key of Egypt, because it was the Inlet from Syria into this Country; which was the reason, as Diodorus saith (Lib. xv.) that they most of all fortified, τὸ Πελοπιανὸν ὄμμα, as his Words are; and this agrees with the Signification of Pithom, if D. Chytræus guesses aright, which is as much as Pi and tehom, i. e. the Mouth of the Deep, being seated near the Sea, at the Mouth of one of the Streams of Nile; and thus I find it expounded in the Talmud, Tit. Sota, in the Gemara, cap. i. §. 32.

And Rameses.] It is an ignorant Conceit of Benjamin Tudelensis, that this City is that call'd Ein-Alschemes, i. e. the Fountain of the Sun, in Greek Heliopolis. (See his Itiner. p. 120. and L'Empeur's Annot. p. 223.) for the City was in the upper Egypt; whereas Rameses was in the lower, in the Land of Goshen, and gave Name to the whole Country where the Israelites dwelt, Gen. xlvii. 11. and it is most likely it was a frontier Town, which lay in the Entrance of Egypt from Arabia, or some of the neighbouring Countries. They that take the Name of the King who now reign'd to have been Rameses, think this City had its Name

Name from him; and the other, called Pitbom (as Mercator thinks) from the Name of his Queen.

Ver. 12. But the more they afflicted them, the more they multiplied and grew.] Here is a new Word, different from all the former (ver. 7.) to express their extraordinary Increase, for so jipbrot signifies breaking out, as Water doth, which bursts out with a greater Force when it hath been pent up. This, as St. Austin observes (L. viii. de Civ. Dei. c. 6.) is to be ascribed to the divine Blessing; for naturally tiresome Labours would have dispirited them, and made them less fruitful.

And they were grieved because of the Children of Israel.] It vex'd them to see this Device prove so unsuccessful, that it promoted what they thought to hinder.

Ver. 13. And the Egyptians, rather therefore.] The Egyptians resolved to take a more severe Course with them.

Made the Children of Israel to serve with Rigor.] Used them more tyrannically and cruelly, without any Mercy, whereby their Strength in all likelihood would be broken, as the Hebrew Word signifies; some of the Jews think they beat and scourg'd them sorely.

Ver. 14. And they made their Life bitter.] The Hebrews call all things bitter which extremely grieve and afflict the Soul, Gen. xxvii. 34. Lament. iii. 15. whence Naomi bids her Daughters call her no more by that pleasant Name, but call her Mara, i. e. bitter, because of the very great Afflictions she had endured in a strange Country.

With hard Bondage.] Such Drudgery, as if they had been mere Bondslaves.

In Mortar and in Brick.] Πηλόν εἰς πλῆθυν ἡμαπίζοιτες, by making Clay into Bricks (as Philo well interprets it, L. i. de Vita Moysi) or in working the Clay, and then turning it into Bricks; and so Bocbart expounds it, by the Figure of ἔν δὲ δοῦν, lateribus ex luto conficiendis; there was great Store of Clay in that Place, Pelusium (one of the Cities which they built) having its Name from thence both in the Greek and in the Hebrew Languages; for Sin signifies the same with πηλόν, Clay, or Dirt.

And in all manner of Service in the Field, &c.] Not merely in ploughing, &c. but in digging Trenches, to convey the Water of Nile into their Ground (as Philo expounds it) and in cleansing those Trenches that had been formerly made; and in carrying Dung, as others add, into the Field, and such like nasty Services; and all these, Moses adds, were rigorously exacted of them; i. e. they did all they could to break their Hearts, as we speak.

Ver. 15. And the King spake to the Hebrew Midwives.] The former Device failing him, or contributing little to his End, he betakes himself to one, that, if it were pursu'd, could not but prove effectual. Some will have these Midwives to have been Egyptians, but called Hebrew because the Women of that Nation made use of their Assistance when they were in Labour; but it is not likely that the Hebrews had not Midwives of their Nation, or that Pharaoh would impose his Midwives upon them, and let them have none else, for that would have too plainly discovered his Drift; whereas he intended to hide it, and to act cunningly against them, ver. 10.

The Name of the one was Siphrah, &c.] We cannot well think there were only two Midwives to serve the whole Nation, but these were the chief, who had the rest under their Government, and gave Orders and Directions to them; so Aben Ezra, whom Abarbinel contradicts, but with slight Reasons, to advance a subtle rather than solid Conceit of his own, that every Woman in Egypt had two Midwives, and those were the common Names of them, signifying what each of them were to do for the Women in Travail. There are those among the Jews who have fanci'd Jochebed, the Mother of Moses, to be one of those here named; and some of them, who are pleased with seeming ignorant of nothing, say she is the Person here call'd Siphrah, her Daughter Miriam being the other, call'd Puah; so the Hierusalem Targum.

Ver. 16. When ye do the Office of a Midwife, &c.] Are called to their Assistance in their Labour.

And see them upon the Stools.] The Hebrew Word Obanajim, which we translate Stools, is so obscure, that the LXX content themselves to translate this Passage thus: when you see them deliver'd, which fully expresses the Sense, and must be supposed to be the Meaning, if we take Stools for such Seats as are purposely contriv'd for labouring Women to sit on, that the Midwives might the better do their Office; for they could not tell whether they brought forth Male or Female till they were deliver'd; unless the Hebrew Doctors say true, who constantly affirm that Boys come into the World with their Faces downward, and Girls with their Faces upward; whereby they might know what Sex a Child was of before it was quite born. See Tit. Sota in the Gemara, cap. i. sect. 33.

If it be a Son, then ye shall kill him.] The Egyptians fear'd the Men of Israel only, without whom they could have no Children at all, but such as would be half Egyptians, and in Time be wholly ingrafted into that Nation.

But if it be a Daughter, then she shall live.] For as Clemens Alexandr. well observes (L. i. Stromat. p. 343.) ἀδελφὴ εἰς πλεονὸν γυνή, Women are feeble, and unfit for War; therefore they had no fear of them, but reserv'd them to increase the Egyptian Breed.

Ver. 17. But the Midwives feared God, &c.] They that take them for Egyptians, say these Midwives were Proselytes to the Jewish Religion; but such Faith in God as made them not fear a great King, is hardly to be expected from any but those who had been always bred up in a deep Sense of his divine Majesty; which gave them such Courage, that as Cyrtæus expresseth it in Herodotus's Phrase (which is in a manner the same with St. Peter's, Acts v. 29.) τὰ θεῶν προσέβηκεν ὑπομείνειν ἢ τὰ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, they made account the Things of God were to be preferr'd before those of Men, and therefore would not obey the King's Command, by doing contrary unto God's.

Ver. 18.

Ver. 18. And the King called for the Midwives.] Sent out a Summons to appear before him.

And said unto them, Why have ye done this thing? &c.] Their being question'd for their Disobedience, made their Constancy the more remarkable.

Ver. 19. For they are lively, and are deliver'd &c. the Midwives come in unto them.] It doth not appear that these Midwives told a Lie, but only conceal'd some of the Truth, which is not unlawful, but commendable, when it is to preserve the Innocent; for many of the Hebrew Women might be such as they are describ'd, tho' not every one of them. The Hebrew Word Chajib signifies three things, either Vivaces, i. e. lively, or Obstetrices, Midwives (as Kimchi tells us) or Animantia, living Creatures; the LXX follow the first Notion, and so do we, which is very proper; Aquila follows the second, who translates this Passage thus: Μαῖα ὧν, ἃ ἐστὶν ἰσχυρὸν τὸ Μαιεῖν αὐτῶν; they can do the Office of Midwives themselves, and are brought to-bed before we can get to them; thus the Vulgar also take it, They have Skill in Midwifery; and the Author of the Life of Moses (as several other Jews do) take it in the third Sense, expounding it thus, They are like other living Creatures, who do not need any Midwives to help their young Ones into the World. And so Rasi also, and Treodation, who thus translates it, ζῳοντὶν αὐταί, which doth not signify (as Gualmyn observes) they bring forth living Children, but ad instar animantium pariunt, they bring forth like Animals. Such lively Women undoubtedly there have been, and are still in some Parts of the World; for Varro reports (L. ii. de R. R. cap. 10.) that the Women of Illyricum, when they found their Pangs coming, were wont to go a little aside from the Work they were about, and presently were deliver'd of a Child, quem non peperisse, sed invenisse pates; which one would think they had found, not brought forth out of their Womb; which Place our Gatsaker mentioning in his Cinnus, p. 213. saith it is credibly reported by those who had liv'd there a great while, that the Irish Women sometimes rise from Table and are deliver'd, and return to the Company again before all be taken away.

Ver. 20. Therefore God dealt well with the Midwives, &c.] He rewarded their Service, whereby the Children of Israel still more multiplied, and waxed very mighty.

Ver. 21. Because the Midwives feared God he made them Houses.] These Words seem to declare wherein God rewarded them, which was, in making them Houses. Some indeed (particularly Mr. Calvin) refer this to the Israelites, because the Word them is of the Masculine Gender, and therefore cannot, they think, be meant of the Midwives; but must be interpreted, by this means the Children of Israel were exceedingly increased. But besides that this was said just before, it is not unusual in Scripture, when the Speech is of Women, to use the Masculine Gender. Thus Ruth (i. 8.) prays for her Daughters-in-law in these Words, The Lord deal kindly with you; where in the Hebrew the Masculine Gender is used, and not the Feminine. But we need go no further for an Instance of this than the very next Chapter to this (Exod. ii. 17.) where Moses is said to water their Flock, speaking of Jeibro's Daughters, and the Word for their is of the Masculine Gender; it agrees also best with the whole Story to take it so here, that God made the Midwives Houses (so the Chaldee and the LXX understand it) that is, gave them a numerous Off-spring, out of which arose many Families, which in Scripture Language are called Houses, Gen. xxx. 30. When shall I make myself an House? (the same Phrase with this) i. e. take Care of my own Family, Deut. xxv. 9. Ruth iv. 5. Or else the Meaning may be, be increased their Estate, and gave them great Riches, which the Psalmist may be thought to mean when he saith, Except the Lord build the House (i. e. preserve and increase the Estate of a Family) their Labour is in vain that endeavour it. See also 2 Sam. vii. 11. Psalm cxiii. 9. Some that take these Midwives to have been Egyptian Women, proselyted to the Jewish Religion, think the Sense may be, that they marry'd to Israelites, and God made their Families eminent in Israel.

Ver. 22. And Pharaoh charged all his People, saying, every Son, &c.] Not being able to effect his End by the Midwives, he commanded every Body to inform his Officers when any Hebrew Woman fell in Labour, and appointed Searchers (it is likely) to examine whether they were deliver'd of Male or Female, and to act according to what is here order'd. Some that understand the foregoing Words of the Israelites, make this the Sense of the two last Verses: Because the Midwives feared God, and thereby the Families of the Israelites were increased, not diminished, Pharaoh took a new Course, and charged all his People to see that done which the Midwives refused. The Jews (in the Book call'd, The Life of Moses) say, that many of their People, upon this Decree of Pharaoh, resolved not to marry, or not to come near their Wives; and those who did, were forced to have them brought to-bed alone, and throw their Children into the Fields, where the Angels took care of them, &c. But this is confuted by what follows in the next Chapter; and yet they are so fond of such Fables, that in one of their Medrasebim (or Books of Homilies) they say, God made Milk to come out of one Stone, and Honey out of another, to suckle them while they lay hid in the Earth. See Buxtorf, of the Education of their Children, Synag. Judaic. cap. vii.

CHAP. II.

Ver. 1. AND there went a Man of the House of Levi, &c.] We are told both the Man's Name, and the Woman's whom he marry'd, Exod. vi. 20. Numb. xxvi. 59. where Amram, Grandson of Levi, is said to have been Moses's Father, and Jochabed, Daughter of Levi, to have been his Mother; so Amram marry'd his Father's Sister (as the Text expressly tells us) which Moses was so ingenuous as not to conceal, though it might not be for his Credit in future Ages, when such Marriages were forbidden by that Law which he gave them from God, tho' practis'd before the giving of his Law. See Selden, L. v. de Jure N. & G. c. 9. The Jews also, fancying his Mother Jochebed to have been born as soon as the Israelites came into Egypt, make the Birth of Moses a Miracle, because she must be by that Account 130 Years old when he was born. But it may as well be thought that he was born to Levi in his Old Age by another Wife, and so she was younger than her Nephew Amram, and but his half Sister, which makes their Marriage no more strange than Abraham's Marriage with Sarah; besides, it is not certain she was his Father's Sister (in the strict Sense of that Word) but might be only one of his Cousins, who in Scripture are frequently called Sisters; and then when it is said she was a Daughter of Levi, the Meaning must be, his Grand-daughter, or the Child perhaps of one of his Grand-daughters, who in these Writings are commonly call'd Daughters; and so all the Objections against this Marriage vanish, and the first Words of this Verse expound the last: A Man of the House of Levi took to Wife a Daughter of Levi; that is, one of the same House or Family. But see vi. 20.

Ver. 2. And the Woman conceiv'd and bare a Son.] She had one before this, viz. Aaron, who it is probable was born before this Persecution begun, being three Years older than Moses, vii. 7.

And when she saw him, that he was a goodly Child.] His goodly Aspect (which seems to have been an early Indication of future Greatness) is taken notice of by Strangers, particularly by Justin, out of Trogus, an ancient Heathen Historian, L. xxxvi. c. 2. where he saith, that besides the Inheritance of his Father's Knowledge (whom he takes to have been Joseph) etiam formæ pulchritudo commendabat, the Gracefulness of his Person recommended him to others; inasmuch that the whole Fable of Adonis among the Heathen was fram'd (as Huetius conjectures) out of this Story of Moses; for Apollodorus relates (L. iii.) how Venus admiring the great Beauty of the Infant, took him away privily, without the Knowledge of the Gods, and hiding him in an Ark, deliver'd him to Proserpine, &c. See Demonstr. Evang. Propos. iv. cap. iii. n. 3.

She hid him three Months.] R. Simeon in Pirke Eliezer, cap. xlviii. saith, she hid him in a Vault under Ground; but in Sota they say (in the Gemara, cap. i. §. 38.) he being hid in a secret inner Room of their House, was in danger to be detected by his Crying, when some of the Egyptians came into the outer Room, and brought a crying Child with them on purpose, supposing the Israelites Infants would answer, if any were in the House; but there is no Certainty of this.

Ver. 3. And when she could no longer hide him.] Some Discovery being made of him by some means or other by their Neighbours, or the Search after new born Children being now more narrow and diligent, she thought he could be no longer conceal'd, and therefore resolv'd to expose him in the manner following.

She took for him an Ark of Bulrushes.] Or of Wicker, for Kimchi observes the Hebrew Word Gome signifies the lightest Wood. Patricides, an Arabian Writer, saith it was made of that which the Ancients call Papyrus, and so the LXX., and Josephus, and Clemens Alexandrinus (Strom. i. p. 343. ἐξ ἐλάτης τῆς ἐσχάτης οὐχὺς π. ποινιστάριον) which was a Frutex, that grew particularly upon the Banks of Nile, as Salmasius shews in Solin. p. 1002, &c.

And daub'd it with Slime and with Pitch.] Of this Word Slime, see Gen. xi. 3. It is most probable that this was used within and Pitch without to keep the Water from coming into the Ark; and so I find in the Gemara of that Title, in the Talmud called Sota (cap. i. §. 29.) where this is said to have been an ancient Tradition; only they say, as many of the Rabbins do, that Chemar signifies Plaster, not Bitumen, because the bad Smell of that they think would have been noisome to the Child. R. Solomon's Opinion is, that it was pitch'd both within and without, and plaister'd within over the Pitch.

And she laid it in the Flags by the River's Brink.] That it might not be carry'd away with the Stream, but she might come in the Night and suckle it; some think that the Ark notwithstanding was made below in the Form of a Boat, that if it should chance to be carry'd from among the Flags upon the Shore, it might swim in the River; for it is certain the Egyptians made Ships of the fore-named Reed, as we find in Pliny and Solinus, who both mention Papyraceæ Naves; and in Theophrastus, who mentions Πλοῖα ἐξ αὐτῶν, speaking of Papyrus, as Salmasius observes in his Plin. Exercit. p. 1003, 1115, 1116. Herodotus also mentions Πλοῖα ἐκ τῆς ἀκρότης ποταμῶνα, in his Euterpe, Cap. xcvi. See Isa. xviii. 2.

Ver. 4. And his Sister stood afar off, to wit what, &c.] By her Mother's Order no doubt, that she might not seem to be set there, on purpose to watch him. We read of no other Sister he had but Miriam, Numb. xxvi. 59. who therefore is thought to be the Person.

Ver. 5. And the Daughter of Pharaoh.] Called Thermutis by Josephus (L. ii. Antiq. c. 5.) but by Artapanus in Eusebius's Præpar. Evang. (L. ix. c. 27.) called Meris, or Merris; which is her Name (as Jacobus Capellus observes) in his Fasti Siculi. The same Artapanus there says, she was marry'd to Cenephres, King of the Country above Memphis, but had no Child by him. Clemens Alexandrinus says the same, that she was not only a marry'd Woman, but had been long marry'd, without being with Child, τέκνον δ' ἐμδυμῆσα, but very desirous to have one, L. i. Strom. p. 343.

Came down to wash herself at the River.] Not for Pleasure, but for Purification, this being an ancient Rite of Religion in all Nations, to cleanse themselves, by washing their Bodies, after any Defilement. Thus Philo seems to understand it, in his Book of the Life of Moses, where speaking of this Matter, he uses the Word καθάρσις, which is proper to sacred cleansing; and it seems far more probable, than that the scorching Heat of the Weather (caused by an extraordinary Hand of God) made her betake herself to the cool cool Streams for her Refreshment, (as the Tale is told in the Hebrew Book, called, The Life of Moses) or that the desire of Children carried her hither; the Waters of Nile being thought to make Women fruitful. Clemens Alexandrinus seems to have put both these together, Refreshment, and Religion; when he saith she came hither, ἀπὸ τῆς καὶ παρὰ τὴν ἑσπέρην χερσαίαν, L. i. Strom. p. 343. It is still a further fetch of Jonatban, who would persuade us that at this time God had smote the Egyptians with a burning Ulcer, which made their Flesh so hot, that they could not endure it, but run to the River to cool their Bodies. And in Pirke Eliezer, cap. xlviii. this Inflammation is said to have seized on Pharaoh's Daughter, whom he calls Bathia. Which is indeed the Name of a Daughter of one Pharaoh, 1 Chron. iv. 18. but to make her the Daughter of Pharaoh King of Egypt (as G. Vorstius observes they do, in Schemoth Rabba, and Vajira Rab.) is altogether senseless. And yet it is upon that ground they make her a Profelyte also, and say in the Title of the Talmud before-mentioned, called Sota (cap. i. of the Gemara, Sect. 40.) that she went into the River, to purge herself from the Idolatry of her Father's House: i. e. to become a Profelyte, who was received (in following times) into the Jewish Religion by Baptism.

And her Maidens walked along by the River side,] While she washed herself, in a private place, which, no doubt, was made by the King for that purpose. For it is not to be imagined, that she washed herself publicly in the River, but in some Inclosure, whereby she was separated from the sight of Company. For Zoan (or Tanis) the Royal City, it is certain, lay near the River; and it is likely, the King's Gardens extended themselves to the very Bank of it; where convenient Bathing-houses were contrived for himself and the Royal Family, to bathe in the River when they pleased. Patricides seems to say, that the River run thro' the City, or by the side of it; for so the Words are: The Ark was put in the Banks of the River Nile, where the Water was shallowest, in the City of Tzana, which was the Metropolis of that Part of the Country. And to the same purpose Elmacinus, another Arabian Writer, as Hottinger observes in his Smegma Orientale, L. i. c. 8. p. 400.

And when she saw the Ark among the flags.] In such a Bathing-house, as I suppose her to have now been, there were Latices, thro' which she could see what was done in the River, tho' no body could see her. And she spying an unusual Vessel among the Flags, commanded it to be brought to her. Patricides saith, she heard the Child cry. And Cbyskuni observes, it was more easy for her, who was in the River, to espy the Ark, than for her Maidens, who walked above upon the Banks.

She sent her maid to fetch it.] The Hebrew word Anatba, which we translate Maid, is much different from that for Maidens mentioned just before, signifying one that waited immediately upon her, whom we call an Handmaid; the other properly signifying only young Women, who were such perhaps as we now call Ladies of Honour.

Ver. 6. And when she had opened it, she saw the Child.] And together with him, the SCHECHINAH or Divine Majesty, as Rabbi Jose saith in Sota: Which is agreeable to their Opinion, who make her to be now profelyted; but hath no other Foundation.

And behold, the Babe wept.] There is nothing strange in this, that a Babe (which perhaps had been a good while without the Breast) should weep: But it is remarkable, that Pharaoh's Daughter should not find it till Tears run down its Cheeks; because this helped to move her compassion towards it, as it here follows:

And she had compassion on him.] Resolved to preserve him, contrary to her Father's Order.

And said, this is one of the Hebrews Children.] None else, she thought, would expose so goodly a Child; and she was confirmed in her Opinion, when she found he was circumcised, as the same Ri Jose conjectures. And the truth is, we have no good reason to believe that the Egyptians had as yet received Circumcision.

Ver. 7. Then said his Sister to Pharaoh's Daughter, &c.] We cannot think his Sister would be so imprudent, as to step in immediately upon the finding of the Child, and ask if she should call a Hebrew Nurse for it; but staid some time (that she might not seem to know any thing of him, but what she heard them say) till they had tried other Nurses (as the Hebrew Doctors in Sota understand it, Cap. i. Sect. 43.) whose Breasts the Child refusing to suck, she took the opportunity to ask if she might see for a Nurse among the Hebrew Women. Josephus saith the very same.

Ver. 8. And Pharaoh's Daughter said unto her, Go.] It is likely, that Miriam addressed herself to her so discreetly, that it moved her easily to agree to her Proposal. Tho' a singular Providence of God guided this whole business.

And the Maid went and called the Child's Mother.] Whose Breast the Child readily taking (having been used to it) she was instantly accepted to be his Nurse. So it follows in the next Verse:

Ver. 9. Take this Child away, and nurse it for me, &c.] Thus by the wonderful Providence of God, Jochabed had the pleasure of suckling her own Child; and was also well paid for her pains.

Ver. 10. And the Child grew, and she brought him unto Pharaoh's Daughter.] The Hebrew Writers say, that when he was two Years old, he was taken from her: Which is not so likely, as that he continued with her till he was grown capable to be instructed in true Religion, and to understand and remember whose true Child he was; whereby he was disposed to behave himself accordingly, when he came to live at Court.

And he became her Son.] She having no Child of her own, adopted him for her Son, with the Consent, no doubt of Pharaoh, not to succeed in the Throne, as some have fancied, but to be the Heir of her private Estate. And accordingly she gave him a Princely Education, and took care he should be instructed in all the Wisdom of the Egyptians; as St. Stephen hath remembered, Acts vii. 22. and, as Philo (in the Life of Moses) would have it believed, sent for the ablest Masters out of Greece (as well as out of Affyria, and other Eastern Countries) to teach him their Learning. Which is a piece of Jewish Vanity; for there was no Learning among the Greeks in the Days of Moses; who was ancients, not only than their Philosophers and Poets, but than most of their Gods, as Clemens Alexandrinus demonstrates, Καὶ Θεῶν ἄρα ἤν' πλείων πρ' Ἑλλήνων ἔμνον ἤν' ἀγομάνων σωφῶν τε καὶ ποιητῶν ὁ Μωσῆς ἔρεσεν, L. i. Strom. p. 323. And what Learning there was now in Egypt, is not certain; for there is no Evidence that the Wisdom St. Stephen speaks of, comprehends the Knowledge of so many things, as some learned Men are pleased to ascribe to them in those Days.

Life

And she called his Name Moses.] The reason of this Name is given in the following words:

And she said, because I have drawn him out of the Water.] This Name seems to be derived from the Hebrew word Masbah, which is never used in the Bible, but for drawing out of the Water, 2 Sam. xxii. 17. Psalm xviii. 17. Isai. lxiii. 11. And therefore there is no need to have recourse to any other Language for the Original of his Name; which Philo, Josephus, and Clemens Alexandrinus, will have to be derived from the word Mō, which in the Egyptian Tongue, they say, signifies Water, and ūs, which signifies saved; so that it is as much as, saved from the Waters, or preserved from drowning. It may be said indeed, that it is not likely he should give him a Name from any other Language than her own: But it is to be considered, that the word Masbah (from whence this Name must naturally flow, and to which she herself said she had respect) might have the same signification in her Language, that it had in Hebrew; there being a great affinity between these two Tongues. See Gen. xl. 45. Alexandrinus saith, that the Name he had given him by his Parents at his Circumcision was Joachim. Which he had, I suppose, out of some fabulous Book; for, in the same place, he speaks of the Name that was given him after he was translated to Heaven, L. i. Strom. p. 343.

Ver. 11. And it came to pass in those days when Moses was grown.] When he was not only arrived at Man's estate, but was full forty Years old, as St. Stephen observes, (Acts vii. 23.) and may be gathered from this History.

That he went out unto his Brethren, &c.] He had a motion from God (as St. Stephen there seems to interpret it) to go, and acquaint himself with the Condition of his Brethren; and to own himself, more than he had done hitherto, to be one of them. The Jews tell many Tales what passed between him and Pharaoh till this time; but there is no more credit to be given to them, than to what Artapanus, an Heathen Historian, relates of his Military Exploits in a War with the Ethiopians; against whom Cenephres sent him as General of his Forces: Tho' this is remarkable, that his Name and several Passages of his Life (mixed with some Fables) were known to other Nations, and by them magnified and admired. As appears by what Eusebius hath extracted out of Artapanus, Eupo- lemus, Demetrius, and other Heathen Writers, L. ix. Præpar. Evang. c. 26, 27, &c.

And looked upon their burdens.] Which he did very often, (as Philo understands it, L. i. de Vita Mosi) and not without great Grief and Heaviness, that he was neither able to hinder their Oppression, nor to help them under it. But he exhorted Pharaoh's Officers to moderate their Severity; and the Israelites to be patient, in hope of Deliverance.

And he spied an Egyptian, smiting an Hebrew.] The Cause of it is reported (in the Life of Moses, in Hebrew, and in Schalschalah Hakkabalah) that this Egyptian had broken the Hebrew's House, and bound him, and ravished his Wife, and now endeavoured to murder him. But this looks like a Tale; which is a little better told by the Author of Schemoth Rabba, and others mentioned by Mr. Selden, L. ii. de Synedr. c. 1. who say, that this Egyptian was one of the Taskmasters, who called this Man out of his Bed in the Night, to go to work, and then took his opportunity to slip into it, and lie with Selomith his Wife, who took him for her Husband. The plainest account, and most likely, is this of Philo (in the place above-mentioned) that some of Pharaoh's Officers, little differing from the most furious Beasts, not at all mollified, but more exasperated by Intreaties; one of them, of the most violent temper, fell in an outrageous manner upon an Hebrew, because he did not do his work so fast as he would have him, beating him most cruelly till he had almost killed him.

One of his Brethren.] All the Hebrews were his Brethren; but this Man was of his own Tribe, and one of the Children of Kobath, as the fore-named Authors take it.

Ver. 12. And he looked this way and that way, &c.] Round about him; that he might not run into danger himself, by delivering his Brother from it.

He slew the Egyptian.] Being stirred up to it by a Divine Motion; otherwise he could not have justified this Fact to God and his own Conscience. And therefore St. Stephen plainly makes this an Indication to the Children of Israel, that God intended to deliver them by his means; and says, Moses thought they would have so understood, Acts vii. 25. Nay, Maimonides himself gives this account of it, (Part ii. cap. xlv. More Nevocchim) where, he making this the first Degree of Prophecy, when a Man is moved and animated by God to some great and heroick Enterprize (either for the Preservation of the whole Church, or the Deliverance of eminent Men from Oppression) he reckons Moses, among others, as an Instance of it, in these words: Moses was endued with this Power, when he grew up to be a Man; by the impulse of which he slew the Egyptian, and checked him who unjustly strove with one of his Brethren, &c. The Hebrews generally say, that Moses did not kill this Man with a Sword, or any other Weapon, but merely by the word of his Mouth, pronouncing him dead in the Name of God. Which Tradition is so old, that it is mentioned by Clemens Alexandrinus, L. i. Strom. παρὶ δὲ οἱ Μῦσαι λόγῳ μόνῳ ἀνέλεν ὁ Αἰγυπτῆιον, &c. They that pretend to Secrets, say, that he killed the Egyptian with his word alone, as Peter afterwards, in the Acts, killed Ananias and Sapphira.

And bid him in the Sand.] An inaccessible Desert lay on the West of Egypt, as Diodorus Siculus observes; and there was another also on the East of it: So that if this happened upon the Borders, there was Sand enough wherein to bury him.

Ver. 13. And when he went out the second day.] Having begun to act by the Divine Commission, he seems to have resolved every day to give proofs of his Authority, and awaken the People to expect deliverance by his means. And therefore went out among them this day, as he had done the day before.

Behold, two Men of the Hebrews strove together.] He was surprized to find two of his Brethren contending one with another, when they were so grievously oppressed by the Egyptians.

And he said to him that did the wrong, Wherefore smitest thou thy Fellow?] He had no less authority to admonish and reprove his Brethren, than to chastise their Oppressors.

Ver. 14. And he said, Who made thee a Prince and a Judge over us?] It is plain by this, that he acted as one that had authority; but this Man questioned from whence he had it.

Intendest thou to kill me, as thou killedst the Egyptian?] It is not likely, the Man thought he had any such Intention, but meant only to fright Moses from meddling in his matters, by letting him know that what he had done already, was not such a secret as he thought it.

And Moses feared.] He had not yet received a Commission from God to act publicly as their Governor, and therefore durst not stay to answer a Charge against him (which he thought might be possibly brought) for what he had done privately. Some have troubled themselves to reconcile this with what the Apostle saith, Hebr. xi. 27. that he feared not the wrath of the King; which doth not seem to agree with what is said here, that Moses feared. But there he may very well be thought to speak, not of his Flight out of Egypt, but of his last Departure with the whole Body of the Israelites. Tho' if we should allow Moses, and the Apostle, to speak of the same thing, there would be no contradiction between them. For he might so fear, as to make him cautious, and consult for his Safety, rather than basely either deny, or excuse what he had done, or ask pardon for it; unto which no fear of the wrath of the King could have moved him.

Ver. 15. Now when Pharaoh heard this thing.] Which was soon brought to his Ears, as Moses suspected, and aggravated extremely by the great Men of the Court, as Philo represents it, L. i. de Vita Mosi.

He thought to slay him.] Not so much because he had killed the Man, as because he pretended to assert the Liberty of the Israelites, and to be their Deliverer. Demetrius bears witness to this Story, just according to what is here related, in Eusebius's Præpar. Evang. L. ix. c. 29.

And Moses fled from the face of Pharaoh.] Wisely foreseeing the Danger, he avoided it by flight into another Country, where he was out of his reach. For tho' the time of Israel's Deliverance was not yet come, he was assured, that God intended to work it by his hand; and therefore thought it prudent to reserve himself till he received a further Commission from God. But tho' this Flight of Moses be here so plainly affirmed, yet the Jews are so fond of their own Conceits, and so bold in their Invention, that they say he was not only condemned to have his Head cut off, but brought to the Block; and when the Executioner came to do his Office, his Sword would not enter; Moses's Neck being by a Miracle turned into a Pillar of Marble; and from thence he called his Son Eliezer, &c. So the Tale is told by the Author of Moses's Life. What Pharaoh this was, is not certain; but Eusebius calls him Orus (who succeeded Amenophis, in whose time Moses was born) and he is said to have reigned two and forty Years.

And dwelt in the Land of Midian.] Where some of Abraham's Posterity were settled (Gen. xxv. 2.) in a part of Arabia Petraea. And therefore Philo only saith, ὁ παροχθιστὴν εἰς τὴν ὁμιαν 'Aeghiay, he withdrew into the neighbouring Arabia. Into which Country he chose to flee, both because his Escape was easy thither, and because they were descended from the same Stock with himself, and continued still good People; or at least had some good Governors and Families among them; as appears by what follows.

And he sat down by a Well.] To refresh himself; and expecting, it's likely, to meet some Company there, at the time when the Flocks came to water.

Ver. 16. Now the Priest of Midian,] Or Prince, as it is in the Margin. For the word Cohen indifferently signifies either Priest or Prince; but most anciently it signifies the latter (a Prince) for so it is used in the Book of Job xii. 19. He leadeth Cohenim (Princes) away spoiled. And in after-times it continued to have the same signification; David's Sons being called by this Name of Cohenim, 2 Sam. viii. 18. which in 1 Chron. xviii. 17. is expounded, were chief at the band of the King. And so Ira is called, 2 Sam. xx. 26. Cohen, a chief Ruler about David. And so I think it is to be taken here, for a Ruler or Governor (see Gen. xli. 50.) not of the whole Country of Midian, but of some Province of it. And it may be most truly rendered a Prince (i. e. one of the Princes or Rulers) of Midian. But in ancient time Princes executed the Priesthood also, as Plato observes they did among the Egyptians; and the Consuls and Emperors of Rome were ambitious of the same Dignity: By which means the word Cohen came to signify both. Tho' where the Place or Territory of which any Person was Cohen is mentioned, there it always signifies him to have been Prince or Civil Governor of that Place. So S. Jarchi observes, The word COHEN always denotes some Divine Ministry or Function, except where there is an addition of some particular Principality to it, as COHEN of Midian, and COHEN of On, (referring to this place, and that I now mentioned in Genesis) where it signifies a Prince, tho' the Priesthood might be joined with with it. And so Artapanus in Eusebius, L. ix. c. 27. relating Moses's Flight into Arabia, saith, he came to Raguel, τὸ πρῶτον ἀρχιεπί, the Ruler of those Parts. And the Jews in the German Translation of the Bible, call him Heer, Lord of Midian. See our most learned Selden, L. i. de Synedr. c. ult. p. 648. I shall only add, that it is most likely, that this Prince (or Priest) was a Worshipper of the True God, and not an Idolater: For Moses, we may be confident, would not have married his Daughter, if she had been bred in a false Religion.

Had seven Daughters, and they came and drew Water, &c.] He was but a small Prince it appears by this; tho' it must be acknowledged it was a noble Employment in old time (as I observed upon Genesis) to look after Sheep: And we must not imagine these young Women drew the Water themselves, but had Servants to attend them and obey their Orders.

Ver. 17. And the Shepherds came and drove them away.] Some rude and idle Shepherds would have made use of the Water, which they had drawn; and had the benefit of their pains, without any labour of their own. This looks like an Argument that their Father was not a Prince; for then, one would think, these Shepherds would not have dared to contest with them. But it is as much an Argument that he was not a Priest; for they were great Men also in those days. And it seems probable to me, that these were the Shepherds of some other greater Prince, in those Countries; who made thus bold with Jethro's Daughters and their Servants. For one cannot think, as I said, that they alone look'd after his Flock, but were Overseers of those that did, like Rebekah and Rachel. See Gen. xxix. 9.

But Moses stood up and helped them, &c.] This was an Act (as Maimonides suggests) of the same heroic Spirit mentioned before, ver. 12. which still rested on him, and moved him here, as it had done in Egypt. And thus Philo also represents him as, ἐνθυσία μεταμορφούμενος, transported by such an Enthusiasm, when he spake to the Shepherds, that it affrighted them from their Attempt. Tho' it is not certain that he overcame them by Persuasions, but the whole Discourse seems rather to imply that he forced them to desist; which he could not do alone, but at the head of those Servants that belonged to these young Women: And it is not improbable, he had some Servants of his own, who attended him in his Flight. Certain it is, that the Arabians great Employment was feeding of Cattle, as Philo there notes, (L. i. de Vita Moses, ἀνθρώποις ἄρχουσιν ἄγελλες, &c.) 'And that not only Men, but Women, young Men, and Virgins, looked after them; and not those only of the meaner sort, ἀλλὰ καὶ οἱ ἀγαθοὶ ἐπαυρῶν, but they that were of Noble Families.

Ver. 18. And when they came to Reuel their Father.] He is thought to be the same with Jethro, iii. 1. or was Jethro's Father; and so the Grandfather of these young Women; which Drusius thinks most probable, Miscell. Centur. 2. c. 69.

He said, How is it you are come so soon to day? It seems, Moses not only valiantly defended and protected them; but so vigorously assisted them also in all their Business, that they dispatch'd it sooner than they were wont to do.

Ver. 19. And they said, An Egyptian.] So they took Moses to be, by his Speech and his Habit; and perhaps he told them he came out of that Country.

Delivered us out of the band of the Shepherds.] This justifies what I said (ver. 17.) that these Shepherds belonged to some other Prince in those Parts, who were wont, it seems, to infect those that were weaker; and that Moses by his extraordinary Courage drove them away.

And also drew water enough for us, &c.] They had drawn water before (ver. 16.) which the Shepherds took from them; and he now did it with greater expedition, and in great plenty.

Ver. 20. And he said unto his Daughters, Where is he? This is a form of chiding, as Philo observes; or upbraiding for their Ingratitude, as appears by what follows:

Why is it that ye have left the Man?] Suffered him to remain in the Field. Ye ought (as Philo explains it) to have invited him to my House; and if he had declined it, to have intreated and urged him to it.

Call him, that he may eat Bread.] Go back (as he goes on) with all speed, and pray him to come and refresh himself; and receive my Thanks, which are due to him. This shows Moses had done them some considerable Service.

Ver. 21. And Moses was content to dwell with the Man.] After some Conversation with him, Raguel liked Moses so well, that he offered him such terms as he accepted, and became one of his Domesticks.

And he gave Moses Zipporah his Daughter.] The Divine Writers do not relate all the Passages of a Story (as other Authors delight to do) but only the most material. Therefore we are to suppose a great many things to have preceded this; which was not accomplished presently after he was entered into Reuel's House, but after he had had such experience of Moses's other Virtues, as well as of his Valour. Tho' the Observation of Philo here is not to be slighted, that ἄειδηντοι αἱ μετὰ τὴν φουσεῖ, καὶ ἡ μήτις χεῖρ καὶ γινώσκουσιν. Men of a great Genius quickly show themselves, and are not made known by length of time. 'And therefore he thinks that Reuel being struck first with admiration of his goodly Aspect, and then of his wise Discourse, immediately gave him the most beautiful of all his Daughters to be his Wife; not staying to enquire of any body what he was, for his own most excellent Qualities sufficiently recommended him to his Affection, L. i. de Vita Moses, p. 611.

Ver. 22. And she bare him a Son, and he called his Name Gershom, &c.] This word Gershom signifies a desolate Stranger; which he made the Name of this Child, because he was born, not only in a Foreign Country remote from his own People, but in a Place where he had nothing but what he earned by his Labour. For it is not to be thought, that in an hasty Flight, he could bring any great matter with him into Midian. Either this Son was born long after his his Marriage, or he did not marry till he had been long in this Country; for when he left it, after 40 Years Stay in it, his Children were but young, as appears from iv. 20.

Ver. 23. And it came to pass in process of Time.] After many Days (as it is in the Hebrew) i. e. Years; for this King reign'd a long time. See ver. 15.

The King of Egypt died.] That King from whom Moses fled, viz. Orus; after whom Eusebius makes Aceneres to have reign'd, and after him Achrois, both which dy'd before Moses returned into Egypt.

And the Children of Israel sighed by reason of the Bondage.] Their cruel Servitude did not end with the Life of Orus, but the new King who succeeded him was so far from giving them any Ease, that he laid more heavy Burdens upon them.

And they cried.] This signifies they lay under the most grievous Oppression, which grew intolerable.

And their Cry came up unto God.] A Cry that comes up unto God, signifies in the holy Language, the loudest and forest Cry. See Gen. xix. 13.

By reason of the Bondage.] This may be referr'd both to their Cry, and its coming up to God, who resolv'd speedily to free them from such unportable Burdens.

Ver. 24. And God heard their Groaning, and God remember'd his Covenant, &c.] There are four different Words in these two last Verses (viz. heard, remember'd, look'd upon them, had respect unto them) which, every one of them, signify God's kind Intentions toward them, but seem also to me to denote, that the divine Providence determin'd to proceed gradually in the Deliverance of the Children of Israel from their cruel Servitude; for when he saith, God heard their Groaning, the Meaning is, he favourably condescended to grant their Petition, which was the first Step to their Deliverance. And then,

He remember'd his Covenant with Abraham, &c.] This gives the reason of it, because he was mindful of his ancient Promises to their Forefathers; which was a further Assurance of his Favour. And then he Look'd upon them.] i. e. Took notice of their Affliction and hard Labour (as Maimonides explains it, More Nevoch, P. i. c. 48.) which was another Motive to relieve them. And in the last place,

God had respect to them.] Which imports, that he determined to have Mercy upon them (and that includes all Blessings in it) for so this Phrase to respect another signifies, as Bochart hath shewn from many Instances, particularly Psal. xxv. 12. Isai. lxvi. 2. Hierozoic. P. i. L. ii. c. 49.

CHAP. III.

Ver. 1. NOW Moses kept the Flock.] So Moses was taken from the Sheepfold (as David was in After-times) to be the Ruler of God's People, Psal. lxxvii. 70. "For as hunting " of wild Beasts (saith Philo) is proper to Men
" of a martial Genius, and fits Men to be Cap" tains and Generals of Armies, so the feeding

" of Sheep is Μειλιθ ἢ ἀσχηματισία βασιλεία, &c.
" the best Exercise and Preparation for a King" dom, and the gentle Government of Man" kind." Clemens Alexandrinus hath the same
Notion and the same Words, L. i. Strom. p. 345.
God's Power also herein appear'd the more wonderful, that he delivered his People from the Egyptian Tyranny by one that was contemptible, or rather abominable to that Nation, viz. a Keeper of Sheep.

Of Jethro.] It is most likely that Ruel, mention'd in the foregoing Chapter, ver. 18. was now dead, to whom Jethro his Son succeeded in that Principality where he ruled; for it was now 40 Years since Moses came first into Midiam.

His Father-in-law.] This shews that the Seven Daughters spoken of, ii. 16. were the Children of Jethro, and Ruel their Grandfather; unless we will say, as a great many do, that Jethro had two Names; nay, they fancy he had three, being called Hobab they think, Judg. iv. 11. where Hobab is said to be the Father-in-law of Moses; but the Word Son is there to be supply'd (which in other Places is sometimes to be understood) he seeming to be Jethro's Son, Brother to Zipporah, and accordingly is said, Numb. x. 29. to be the Son of Raguel the Midianite, i. e. of Jethro, as many understand it. See there.

And he led the Flock to the backside of the Desert.] Or as St. Hierom understands it, ad interiora deserti, to the inner Parts of the Desert (where there was better Pasture than in the Place where he was before) to which he was conducted by the Providence of God, who intended here to reveal himself more fully to him.

And came to the Mountain of God, even to Horeb.] Sheep delight to feed on Mountains, as Bochart observes out of Theocritus and Virgil, whence such mountainous Places are often called in Homer οἶπολα, Sheep-Walks, they being wont to feed there, as Eustatius and Hesychius interpret it. See Hierozoic. P. i. L. ii. c. 46. And this is called the Mountain of God, because when Moses wrote this Book there had been a divine Appearance upon Horeb, which St. Stephen calls Sinai, Acts vii. 30. for Horeb and Sinai seem to have been two Tops of one and the same Mountain, which it is plain by this was not far from the Country of Midian; we understand also by St. Stephen's Words when this fell out, viz. after he had dwelt 40 Years in Midian, for so long it is certain he continu'd there, Exod. vii. 7. but how he employ'd all that Time, we are not told, no doubt in something else than mere feeding Sheep, for being learned in all the Egyptian Wisdom, we may well think he both taught others, and made also great Improvements himself, in studying the Records of that and all other neighbouring Countries, and besides receiv'd it is likely divine Revelations; there are those likewise who think he now wrote the Book of Job, to comfort the Israelites, by the Example of his admirable Patience, under their heavy Oppressions in Egypt; and the Book of Genesis also, that they might the better understand what Promise had been made to their noble Ancestors, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and that that the Time drew near when they would be fulfilled.

It is noted by Ludovicus Capellus in his Chronol. Sacra, that the Number Forty was much observed in the Administrations of divine Providence; Moses being 40 Years old when he fled into Midian, and staying there another 40 Years, and then leaving the World in the End of the next 40 Years of his Age; it was so many Years before the Israelites got to Canaan, after they were delivered out of Egypt; 40 Days Moses continued with God in the Mount, both the first and second time of his going up thither; so many Days the Spies were in searching out the Land; and the Israelites had just so many Mansions in the Wilderness; their first Judge governed just 40 Years, and the next twice as many; Deborah, Barak, Gideon, Eli, all judged 40 Years; and so long David reigned.

Ver. 2. And the Angel of the Lord appeared to him.] So St. Stephen also, Acts vii. 30. By which some understand the eternal Word, the Second Person in the blessed Trinity; but I think he is not called simply an Angel any where, but with some Addition, as the Angel of the Covenant; for it would be a dangerous Insinuation that he was but a mere Creature; yet I believe he is not here to be excluded, for I take this to have been the Appearance of the Schechinah, which comprehended both the LORD himself, and the Angels that attended him as his Ministers, one of which now appear'd so gloriously, that he shew'd God to be present; and accordingly we find in the following Words that he himself spake to Moses; and thus the LORD is said to have sent his Angel when they cry'd to him, and brought them out of Egypt, Numb. xx. 16. which Angel is called Michael by Menachem, and the same which they also call Goel, who redeem'd Jacob from all Evil, Gen. xlviii. 16.

In a Flame of Fire.] The Glory of the LORD (as the Schechinah is frequently called) appear'd in a flaming manner, like Fire, exceeding bright, and with an amazing Splendor; so it appear'd, tho' not so bright, when the first Promise was made of their Deliverance, Gen. xv. 17, 18.

Out of the midst of a Bush.] To shew, say the Jews in Pirke Eliefer, cap. xl. that God was present with them in their great Affliction and Tribulation, which was represented by this Bush of Thorns or Briars (for so the Hebrew Word signifies, such a Bush as pricks those that touch it) or, as the Prophet Isaiah speaks, lxiii. 9. in all their Affliction he was afflicted; and by his Providence order'd things so, that their Affliction did not consume them, but rather multiply'd and increas'd them; for, as it there follows, the Angel of his Presence saved them. And thus Eusebius tells us (in the latter End of L. v. Demonstr. Evang. c. 13.) some Christians understood it, αἰνίσθητι ὃ φάσι, ὃ μὲν βέβαιον, ὃ δὲ Ἀγγελίων ἀγγελία καὶ ἀνῆκεν μοχθελίαν, &c.

This Fire also in the Bush might be intended to shew, that God would there meet with the Israelites, and give them his Law in Fire and Lightning, and yet not consume them; for this is the Place where God, after they came out of Egypt, deliver'd the Law to them, which thence was called Sinai (saith the fore-named Author in Pirke Eliefer) from this Bush, which in Hebrew is Sene, and signifies in Arabick a Thorn-Bush; whereas before this it was called Horeb, from its Dryness and Barrenness, as that Word imports.

And behold the Bush burnt with Fire, and the Bush was not consum'd.] The Heathens had either read or heard of this Wonder, as appears by Artapanus, who mentions it (in Eusebius, L. ix. Præpar. Evang. c. 27.) but he disguises it, and misreports it, saying, it was a Fire which suddenly broke forth out of the Earth and flam'd, καίτε ὕλης μὴτε ἄλλης πύρε ξυλίας ὥσπερ ἐν πύρρι; when there was no Matter nor any kind of Wood in the Place to feed it. But in the next Chapter but one an ancient Tragedian reports it exactly, saying, just as Moses doth here, that the Bush burnt in a great Fire, and yet remain'd entire and green in the Flame, which he calls πύρεσιον μέγιστον, the greatest Miracle; the Meaning of which I have already explain'd in the foregoing Observation. There is a Story something like this in Dion Prusseus, Orat. xxxvi. where he saith, the Persians relate concerning Zoroaster, that the Love of Wisdom and Virtue leading him to a solitary Life, separate from Company, upon a Mountain, he found it one Day all in a Flame, shining with celestial Fire, out of the midst of which he came without any Harm, and instituted certain Sacrifices to God, who then he made account appear'd to him; which Joh. Henricus Ursinus a good while ago endeavour'd to prove was nothing else but a Corruption of this Apparition to Moses; and Huetius lately (in his Demonstr. Evang. Propos. iv. cap. 5.) hath made such a laborious Comparison between what is said of Moses and of Zoroaster, as is sufficient to make it probable the ancient Persians deriv'd their Religion from these Books of Moses.

Ver. 3. And Moses said, I will now turn aside.] It seems this glorious Appearance was not directly before him, but on one side of him, and some distance from him.

And see this great Sight.] This wonderful Appearance, or as Philo translates it, εκπληκτικώτατον, this most stupendous and astonishing Sight or Vision.

Why the Bush is not burnt.] A Fire which did not burn (that is, consume what it laid hold on) was very amazing; yet the Gentiles did not think such Things incredible, as appears out of Seneca in his Thyeste, where he speaks of a Forest which appear'd all on a Flame without Fire; and out of Lucan, and divers other Authors among the Pagans, produc'd by the learned Huetius in his Quæstiones Alnetanae, L. ii. cap. xii. n. 10.

Ver. 4. And when the Lord saw that he turned aside, &c.] It is plain by this that the LORD himself was here present, his Angels being but Attendants, as I said, upon his Majesty. See Gen. xii. 11, 15.

God called unto him out of the midst of the Bush.] He now calls him God, whom just before he called LORD, both which are sometimes put together, as comprehending all the divine Attributes. Maimonides, who makes Eleven Degrees of Prophecy (or divine Communications to to Men) justly thinks this the very highest of all, and it was peculiar to Moses to hear God himself speaking to him in a Vision when he was entirely awake.

And said, Moses, Moses.] He repeats his Name to excite his Attention; and some take it for a Token of Familiarity. See Gen. xvi. 2. This is call'd by Gregor. Nyssen. (de Vita Moysi, p. 172.) ἡ τοῦ φωνῆς φωνή, &c. a Voice of that Light or Splendor, i. e. of the divine Majesty which appear'd to him.

And he said, here am I.] A common Expression of readiness to hearken and to obey.

Ver. 5. And he said, draw not nigh hither.] He commands him to keep his Distance, and not to approach nearer to him; this, and what follows, plainly demonstrate what I said before, that this was an Appearance of the Schechinah, or divine Majesty, to whom he could not pay too great a Reverence.

Put off thy Shoes from off thy Feet.] Many frivolous Reasons have been given of this Precept, as may be seen in Braunius, L. i. c. 3. de Vestitu Sacerd. Hebr. But the plain Reason is immediately added in the Text, because the Place where he stood was holy, into which it was irreverend to enter with their Shoes on, because thereby it might be defil'd with the Dirt that adher'd to them; certain it is that in the Temple afterwards the Priests officiated barefoot, and all the Eastern People came into their holy Places in the same manner, which Justin Martyr thinks they learn'd from this Example of Moses; but Mr. Mede's Opinion seems truer, that Moses did not give the first beginning to this Rite, but it was deriv'd from the Patriarchs before him, and transmitted to future Times from that ancient general Tradition; for we find no Command in the Law of Moses for the Priests performing the Service of the Tabernacle without Shoes, but it is certain they did so from immemorial Custom; and so do the Mahometans and other Nations at this Day. See Mr. Mede, Book ii. p. 442, &c. and p. 516. and Huetius in his Demonstr. Evang. Propos. iv. cap. xi. §. 2.

The Place whereon thou standest is holy Ground.] It was made holy by the special Presence of God, which was now there, who is most holy, and makes every thing relating unto him to be holy also; for thus the Tabernacle, the Temple, and the Utensils thereof, with all Things destin'd to the divine Service, were called holy.

Ver. 6. Moreover he said, I am the God of thy Father.] i. e. Of Amram, who it seems was a very pious Man.

And the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob.] Who were so dear to him, that he made a Covenant with every one of them (which is the reason he is distinctly called the God of each of them) as Maimonides observes, More Nev. P. iii. c. 51. from Levit. xxvi. 42. and this Covenant was, that he would be their God after a peculiar manner; for otherwise he was the God of Noah, and of all the holy Patriarchs before him; but he is called the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, for a peculiar Reason, because of the Promise made to these three of the blessed Seed which should spring from them, in opposition to the Pretensions of other neighbouring People, who (as the learned Dr. Allix observes) were their Rivals in that Hope; these Words being as much as if he had said, the God of Abraham, and not of Lot, as the Ammonites and Moabites pretended; the God of Isaac, and not of Ismael, as his Posterity pretended; the God of Jacob, and not of Esaü, as the Edomites boasted.

And Moses hid his Face.] In token of Humility, Submission, and Reverence; so Elijah did in After-times, 1 Kings xix. 12. nay, the Angels cover their Faces in the Presence of God, Isai. vi. 2.

For he was afraid to look upon God.] The Splendor of the divine Majesty was so great that it dazzled his Eyes, and he was not able to behold it; for tho' he stirr'd not a Step further after God prohibited him to come nearer, yet we may suppose him to be now nearer to it than he was at the first (ver. 3.) and its Glory also was much increased.

Ver. 7. And the Lord said, I have surely seen the Affliction, &c.] To see signifies more than to observe and take notice, including in it such Resolutions of divine Providence as would certainly produce their Deliverance; for the doubling of the Expression (seeing I have seen, as it is in the Hebrew) denotes there was no doubt of it.

And have heard their Cry.] Both this and the next Phrase, know their Sorrows, signify more than the simple Words hear and know import, viz. such a Regard to their miserable Condition, as moved him to order speedy Relief to be given them.

Ver. 8. And I am come down to deliver them.] I now appear unto thee for that Purpose.

Out of the Hand of the Egyptians.] From their tyrannical Power.

And to bring them up out of that Land.] Where they are Strangers, and used as Slaves.

Into a good Land.] A fruitful Country of their own.

And a large.] Where they shall not be pent up so as they are in Goshen; and if it were considered according to the Extent of the original Promise, it was large and spacious indeed, even from the River of Egypt unto Euphrates, Gen. xv. 18.

Unto a Land flowing with Milk and Honey.] By which Phrase the Poets express the greatest Plenty, as Bochart shews out of Euripides, Horace, Ovid, &c. Hierozoic. P. ii. L. iv. c. 12. for abundance of Milk and Honey argue a Country to be well water'd, fruitful, full of fair Pastures and Flowers, from whence the Flocks may fill their Dugs with Milk, and the Bees their Cells with Honey. Alian. L. iii. de Hist. Animal. c. 35. faith, the Goats of Syria (which includes this Country) afford such Plenty of Milk as is in no other Country.

Unto the Place of the Canaanites, &c.] See concerning all these People here mention'd, Gen. xv. 19, &c.

Ver. 9. Now therefore behold, the Cry of the Children of Israel is come up to me, &c.] This was said before, ver. 7. but here repeated as a reason of the Commission he intended immediately to give to Moses to go and deliver them.

Ver. 10. Come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, &c.] Leave thy Flock, for I have another more weighty Business wherein I will employ thee, for thou shalt go with my Authority to Pharaoh, and command him not only to release my People out of their Servitude, but to let them go also out of Egypt; he had called them by the Name of his People, ver. 7. and now mentions it again to encourage their Hope, that he would take care of his own.

What Pharaoh this was (it being a common Name to all the Egyptian Kings) is very much disputed; the common Opinion is, that after Orus (in whose Time Moses fled into Midian, Acenceres (or Acherres) reigned 12 Years; and after him Achoris reign'd 7 Years more; and then succeeded Cenchres, the worst of them all, to whom Moses was now sent. But Clemens Alexandrinus tells us, that Appion (a great Enemy of the Jews, and who wrote against them) mentioning their going out of Egypt (in his Fourth Book of his History of Egypt) saith it was in the Reign of Amosis, for which he quotes Ptolomæus Mendesium, an Egyptian Priest, who wrote three Books about their Affairs, in which he saith, ἡ δὲ Ἀμοσίου Αἰγυπτίου Βασιλέα, Μουσίως ἡγεμόνα, μετὰ τὴν Ἰουδαίαν τὴν ἐξ Αἰγύπτου πρὸς αὐτὸν, L. i. Stromat. p. 320. But Tacitus calls him Bocchoris, or, as some read it, Occoris, L. v. Hist. c. 3.

That thou mayest bring forth my People, &c.] From this Time we are to consider God as the King of this People, not in general only, as he is Lord of the whole World, but in a proper and peculiar manner; for whatsoever Authority or Power of Jurisdiction the Kings of other Nations did exercise over their Subjects (as Power of Life and Death, of making Laws and Leagues, &c.) the same Prerogative did the Lord of Heaven and Earth reserve to himself alone over the Children of Israel; upon which ground, as Dr. Jackson well observes, Moses was delegated to be his Ambassador to the King of Egypt, and constituted (it appears by the whole Story) his Deputy or Viceroy over Israel.

Ver. 11. And Moses said unto God, Who am I, that I should go unto Pharaoh? &c.] He modestly declines the Service, considering how mean a Person he was in comparison with Pharaoh, and how unable to do any thing for the Israelites; he had felt some extraordinary Motion in himself Forty Years ago, which he took to be an Indication that God would use him as an Instrument of their Deliverance. (See Chap. ii. ver. 11, 12.) but at that Time he was a far greater Man than now, and had more Interest at Court, the Princess who adopted him for her Son being then perhaps alive, or having left him what made him very considerable; in short, he was then the Son of Pharaoh's Daughter, but now a poor Shepherd.

Ver. 12. And he said, certainly I will be with thee.] In answer to his Objection, God bids him depend on this, that he would preserve him by a special Providence from being hurt by Pharaoh. So Maimonides shews this Phrase (I will be with thee) signifies in Scripture, More Nev. P. iii. c. 18. And the Confidence which God wrought in him of this, gave him Courage and Resolution, which is also denoted by this Phrase, as he shews, P. ii. c. 38. for all the Prophets were endu'd with an extraordinary Fortitude and Magnanimity, which was in Moses above all the rest, he encountering a great King, and all his Court and People, barely with a Staff in his Hand.

And this shall be a Token to thee that I have sent thee; when thou hast brought forth the People out of Egypt, ye shall serve God upon this Mountain.] This could not be a Token to him now; but was afterward, when God by his Power brought them to this very Place to worship him, according to this Promise, upon this Mountain; in the mean time there were many other Tokens God gave him (as we find in this History) which were all confirm'd by this last.

Ver. 13. And they shall say unto me, What is his Name? What shall I say unto them?] This doth not argue that they knew not what the Name of their God was, for they and their Fathers had been long acquainted with him, and they cry'd unto him, and he heard them (ii. 23, 24.) but Moses being the first that ever spake to Men in the Name of God (none of the Patriarchs, either before the Flood or after it, having said any such Words as these, God hath sent me to you, the Lord commands me to bid you do so or so, as Maimonides observes in several Places of his More Nevoch. P. i. c. 63. P. ii. c. 39.) it was natural for the Israelites to ask him by what Name or peculiar Attribute God had made himself known unto him, so as to authorize him to speak to them as never any Man before did; he had spoken unto Noah, and unto Abraham, &c. but it was only for their own Instruction, he never bid them deliver any Message unto others; and yet it is observable, that upon particular Occasions he still made himself known to them by different Names or Titles; as he saith to Abraham, Gen. xv. 7. I am Jehovah, who brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees. But xvii. 1. he saith, I am Elshaddai. And to Isaac he saith, I am the God of thy Father Abraham xxvi. 24. To Jacob he adds, I am the Lord God of thy Father Abraham, and the God of Isaac, xxviii. 13. And after this, I am the God of Bethel, xxxi. 13. No wonder then that Moses should think the People would expect, upon so great an Occasion, when he came to them as an Ambassador from Heaven, that the God of their Fathers should speak to them in a new Style, beyond all that had been known in former Days.

Ver. 14. And God said unto Moses, I AM THAT I AM.] That is, saith Maimonides in the Place above-named, he that necessarily exists; he who so is, that he must needs be; or as some translate it, I will be what I will be; i. e. the eternal immutable Being (so Elmacinus interprets it, the Eternal, that never dies) who am faithful to my Promises, and will be to you what I told your Fathers I would be; whatsoever I said in the Days of Abraham concerning the giving the Land of Canaan, I will certainly perform, for I change not.

Thus shalt thou say to the Children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you.] The former Words were a Declaration of God's Nature to Moses, and in these he bids him in brief only say to the the Israelites, that he was sent by him, Who is; that is, (as was said before) necessarily exists, always was, and ever will be: Who alters not; but by whatsoever Name he makes himself known, is still the very same God. Which was a Name not unknown to the Gentiles, as one would think by the word EI; which was inscribed in the front of the Delpbick Temple (as Plutarch tells us) and was nothing else but the contraction of EIMI, which signifies, I AM. Or if we take EI to be an entire word (as it is commonly thought) signifying, Thou art, Ammonius rightly understood it to be, αὐτοῦ ἐστὶ τὸ οὐκ ἀποκαλύπτειν καὶ ἀποφάναι, (as Plutarch reports his words in a Treatise on this Subject) the most absolutely perfect Name and Compellation of God. For God, saith he, in the other Inscription on the Temple, speaks to us who approach him, saying to every one, KNOW THY SELF: And we are taught to answer to him again, in the words of this Inscription, THOU ART: ascribing to him, ὡς ἀληθὲς καὶ ἀψευδὲς, &c. that true, undoubted, and only Appellation, which belongs to him alone. For he only is; we are not, &c. Thus he declares this word to express most perfectly the Divine Essence; which is distinguished hereby from all false Gods. See Eusebius, L. xi. Præpar. Evang. c. 111. and in the two foregoing Chapters; where he takes a deal of pains to show that Plato borrowed this Notion of, τὸ ἐν αἰὲν, ἡμεῖς δ' ἐκ' ἔχον, a Being that is always, but had no beginning, from these words of Moses. And Numenius, a Pythagorean, speaks it more plainly, when he saith, τὸ γὰρ ἐν, αἰδὼν βεβαίως ἐστίν, αἰὲν καὶ ταυτὸν καὶ ταυτὸν, that which is, is eternal and stedfast; always the very same, without variation. And no wonder these Men, if they met with this Passage in Moses, were highly pleased with it; for St. Hilary himself tells us, that he lighting upon these words (as he was musing about God and Religion) before he was a Christian, was struck with admiration; there being nothing so proper to God as to be. And therefore he thought it worthy of God, to say of himself, I AM THAT I AM, and HE THAT IS (so he translates the last words) both sent me unto you; L. i. de Trinitate.

Ver. 15. And said moreover unto Moses, Thus shalt thou say, &c. For a further Explication of what he had now said, and a further Satisfaction of their Minds.

The LORD God of your Fathers, the God of Abraham, &c. The Name JEHOVAH (as we pronounce it) seems to be in sense the same with Ebje, before mentioned. Which, as it declares his Nature, so the word God, added to it, expresses his Favour, Care, and Providence. And consequently he bids Moses tell the Children of Israel, that He, who is the Eternal, was the God of their Fathers, of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; to whom he had made many Promises, that he would be gracious to their Posterity. This was sufficient for them to know of him.

This is my Name for ever, and this is my Memorial, &c. Some refer the first words (this is my Name) to the foregoing Verse, I AM: and the next, (this is my Memorial) to those which immediately precede, the LORD God of your Fathers; which in truth include the whole, Jehovah being the same with I am. And the meaning is, I will be for ever remembered, celebrated, praised, and invoked; by the Name of the LORD God of your Fathers, &c.

Ver. 16. Go, and gather the Elders of Israel together. The word Elders, in these Books, sometimes signifies the Men of the Great Sanhedrin, as they spake in after-times (or the Judges in the highest Court) Deut. xxi. 2, &c. Sometimes the Judges in the lower Courts, Deut. xix. 12. xxii. 15. Sometimes it only signifies the Heads of the Tribes, as here in this place: For now there were no such Courts of Judicature constituted. See Selden. Uxor. Hebr. Lib. i. cap. xv. Some indeed (particularly Corn. Bertram) think it reasonable to suppose that the Israelites had Judges among them all the time they dwelt in Egypt, tho' not mentioned in Scripture; as they had, no doubt, a Form of Religion, tho' we read nothing of it. And Moses, he thinks, is here ordered to send for these, who were their Rulers, and administered publick Affairs among them. But there is this Argument against it, that after this time, when Moses had brought them out of Egypt, there was no such Judges among them, but Moses (as we find, Exod. xviii.) judged all himself, to his exceeding great trouble. And therefore, by Elders, we are here to understand only the wisest and gravest Men of the Nation, who were in greatest esteem among them (as Mr. Selden afterwards speaks, L. i. de Synedr. cap. xv. p. 523, &c.) or, as was said before, the Heads of their Tribes. The famous H. Grotius confirms this, by a nice Observation, that both here and ver. 18. they are barely called Zikne, not Hazikne; because there was not as yet, certum Collegium, sed sola qualitas denotatur (as he speaks, L. de Imp. Sum. Potest. circa Sacra, cap. xi. n. 15.) a certain College or Society of them, but their quality only is denoted. And no doubt, the word always signified Men of Dignity, or chief Rank among others, both among the Israelites, and among the Egyptians; as I have observed on Gen. xxiv. 2. l. 6.

And say unto them, the Lord God of your Fathers, &c. See this explained, ver. 6.

Hath appeared unto me. Ver. 2, 4.

Saying, surely I have visited you. So Joseph, when he died, assured them, God would do, Gen. l. 24. where I observed, to visit them, was to bring them out of Egypt. And so it signifies here, as is evident from what God said to Moses, when he appeared to him, ver. 8. I am come down to deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians. Which was not yet actually done, but so absolutely decreed in the Mind of God, that he might say he had already done it. Or the word Pakad may be translated here, as it is elsewhere, I have remembered you, (1 Sam. xv. 2.) that is, so as to resolve to deliver them. And then the next words may depend on this.

And that which is done to you in Egypt. For the word Seen is not in the Original: But either way, it relates to what God saith to Moses, ver. 7; 9.

Ver. 17. And I have said. Determined, or resolved.

I will bring you out of the affliction of Egypt, into the Land of the Canaanites, &c.] See ver. 9.

Ver. 18. And they shall hearken to thy voice.] A great Encouragement to carry this Message to the Elders of Israel: Which God promises to incline their Hearts to receive and obey.

The LORD God of the Hebrews hath met with us.] We have received a special Command from the Eternal God, whom we, and our Forefathers worship; who hath appeared to us.

And now let us go (we beseech thee) three days journey into the Wilderness.] They intended to go quite away; but at first are directed to demand only to go as far as Mount Sinai: Which was but three Days Journey from Egypt, if they went the nearest way to it. For this they were humble Petitioners; which is implied in those words, We beseech thee.

That we may sacrifice to the LORD our God.] When they delivered this Message to Pharaoh (ver. 1.) they call it, holding a Feast to him: Which was to be made upon the Sacrifices that they offered. For, ver. 3. of that Chapter, they speak in the same Phrase which is used here.

Ver. 19. And I am sure the King of Egypt will not let you go.] God understood before-hand the Hardness of his Heart, and that he would not yield; no, not to let them depart for three Days, much less for altogether.

No, not by a strong hand.] In the Margin, But by a strong hand, i. e. by cutting off all the First-born in the Country; till which, he knew Pharaoh would be obstinate.

Ver. 20. And I will stretch out my hand.] As the Hand of God signifies his Power, so the stretching it out seems to signify the exerting of that Power in mighty Deeds.

Smite Egypt with all my Wonders.] The Hebrew word for Wonders comes from a Root which imports something singular and not common. Such were all the Plagues God sent upon Egypt, which made them the more wonderful.

After that he will let you go.] They grew so terrible at last, that he was afraid the next Stroke would be upon his own Person: Which made him content to dismiss them.

Ver. 21. And I will give this People favour in the sight of the Egyptians, &c.] Dispose their Hearts to be kind to them, so that they should readily furnish them with any thing they desired.

Ver. 22. But every Woman shall borrow.] The word Shaal is of a doubtful meaning; for it signifying in general, to ask or to pray, one may pray another, either to give or to lend. And if the Israelites asked their Neighbours to bestow such things upon them as are here mentioned, and they, out of a desire to be rid of them, or hoping speedily to recover their Goods, granted their Requests, no wrong was done to them. And if they borrowed them of the Egyptians, it was by the Authority of God, whose the World is, and the Fulness thereof; and who doth no Man any wrong, when he is pleased to transfer what he enjoys, unto another. See more, xi. 2. xii. 35.

Of her Neighbour, and of her that sojourneth in her House.] By this it appears that the Egyptians were intermixed with the Hebrews, in the Land of Goshen, and so might the more easily go along with them when they left Egypt; as many of them did, xii. 38.

Jewels of Silver, &c.] Rather, Vessels of Silver, &c. Which were of greater use to them than Jewels, unless they pretended to deck up themselves for the Feast they were to keep. See more, xi. 2. xii. 36.

And ye shall spoil the Egyptians,] Not by Rapine or Stealth, but by their own Consent:

CHAP. IV.

Ver. 1. BUT behold, they will not believe me, nor hearken to my voice, &c.] This seems directly to contradict what God had said unto him, iii. 18. They shall hearken to thy voice. Which Maimonides endeavours to reconcile, by saying, that Moses was satisfied they would believe what he told them concerning the Name of God who spake to him, but not believe, without further proof, that he was sent by him, P. i. More Nechoch. c. 63. But the plainest Answer is, that God did not mean they would hearken to Moses immediately, but that he would so convince them by undeniable Signs and Tokens, that they should give credit to him, when he said he came from God to them: Such Signs he now asks, and God grants; that they might believe the LORD appeared to him, and gave him commission to deliver them.

Ver. 2. And the LORD said unto him, What is that in thy hand? He asks this question, to make way for what follows; and to move his attention to it.

And he said, a Rod.] His Shepherd's Staff, it is most likely. For he takes occasion from what was in his Hand to confirm his Faith; and he was now feeding his Father-in-law's Sheep, when God appeared unto him. The Jews have a world of fabulous Stuff about this Rod, not worth the remembering.

Ver. 3. And he said, Cast it on the ground, &c.] As he was to do when he came before Pharaoh (vii. 10.) that it might not be thought Moses's Hand contributed any thing to the Change; but it might appear to be wrought by the Power of God.

And it became a Serpent.] Ὡς ὅτι ἐγένετο ὄφης (as Philo speaks) immediately it was enlivened, and crawled about. The word Nachash comprehends all sorts of Serpents; and R. Eliezer takes it to have been a flying Serpent: But our Doctor Lightfoot rather thinks it was a Crocodile; for which there is some reason. For that which is here called Nachash (which most think signifies a common Snake or Serpent) when he threw down his Staff before Pharaoh (vii. 10.) is called Tannin: Which signifies a Serpent of the largest Dimensions (ὡς αἰσχυρὸς ὀφίων, Philo here calls it) and as I proved upon Gen. i. 21. includes in it Crocodiles, which Isaiah calls the Crooked Serpent, xxvii. 1. unto whose devouring Jaws Pharaoh had exposed the Hebrew Infants, when he commanded them to be cast into the River Nile, (i. 22.) which abounded with Crocodiles.

And Moses fled from before it.] It being a very frightful Sight, enough to dismay the most courageous Man on Earth; as God himself describes the Crocodile in the Book of Job, xli. 14, 15. His Teeth are terrible round about: When he raises up himself, the Mighty are afraid.

Ver. 4. And the LORD said unto Moses, put forth thy hand, and take it by the tail, &c.] This shows Moses's Faith to have been great, which overcame his Fear. Most think this to have been an apt Representation of the Condition of the Israelites in Egypt, and of their Deliverance there. R. Eliezer in his Pirke, cap. xl. hath hinted the best Explication of it, if it have any such meaning, when he saith, As a Serpent bites and kills those on whom it seizes, so did Pharaoh and his People bite and kill the Israelites: Or rather, he should have said, So shall the Egyptians be afflicted and tormented by the Rod which Moses carries in his Hand.

Ver. 5. That they may believe that the LORD God of their Fathers, &c.] The meaning is, Thou shalt do thus before them, if they doubt whether I have appeared to thee (as he feared they would, ver. 1.) to convince them of it.

Ver. 6. And the LORD said furthermore unto him; Put now thy hand into thy bosom, &c.] He did not ask for a new Sign; but the LORD was graciously pleased to grant him a further Confirmation of his Faith; or rather, of the Faith of the Israelites.

And he put his hand into his bosom, and when he took it out, behold it was leprous as Snow.] It was a wonderful thing, that out of the same Place should come both the Disease and the Cure (as we read in the next Verse, that by putting his Hand into his Bosom again, it became sound) and it was the greater wonder, because the Leprosy was a Disease that was very hard to be cured: R. Eliezer, in the Place fore-named, doth not give so good a reason for this Sign, as for the former; tho' it is not a bad one. For he making a Question, Why God should give them a Sign by an unclean thing, and not by a clean? makes this Answer to it; Because as a Leper is unclean, and makes others so; in like manner Pharaoh and the impure Egyptians had defiled the Israelites: But God shewed by Moses's drawing his Hand out of his Bosom again pure and clean, that he would deliver and purge the Israelites from the filthiness of the Egyptians. I should think rather, that the Leprosy represented God smiting the Egyptians with his Plagues; and the Cure of it, God's removal of those Plagues at Moses's Prayer. But there is no end of such Conceits. Therefore I shall rather observe, that God commanding him to work all these wonders before Pharaoh (ver. 21.) it is very probable, this gave occasion to the fabulous Story which was invented in future Ages, that Moses was a Leper, and the Israelites infected with that, and other scabby Diseases. For so Josephus tells us (L. i. contra Appion) the Tale was told in Manetho's History, and thence descended unto others, that Moses was driven out of the Country, διὰ τὴν λέπρον, (See Justin. L. xxxv. c. 2. Tacitus, L. v. Histor. c. 3.) because he had the Leprosy. Which, as Manetho, perhaps, did not maliciously devise out of his own Head, so those Historians from whom he borrowed his Work, might have but an imperfect Tradition of the Truth derived from this Passage of Moses appearing with a leprous Hand before Pharaoh; which was presently noised about the Country, without the other part of his being immediately cured. And thus Helladius Bescantinus an Egyptian Writer, in his Chresto-Matbia, mentions one who said, Moses was called ἀλφα, because his Body, τοῖς ἀλφοῖς καὶ ἀσπικτῶν, was mark'd with white leprous spots. And to this Lye he calls Philo to be a Witness. The very same is affirmed by Philemæus Hephestionis, as J. Meursius observes in his Notes upon the fore-named Author.

Ver. 7. And he plucked it out of his bosom, and behold it was turned again as his other flesh.] A manifest Token (as Con. Pellicanus rightly takes it), that God could, with as much ease, restore his oppressed People to perfect Liberty.

Ver. 8. And it shall come to pass, if they will not believe thee, nor hearken to the voice of the first sign.] Here he gives the reason why he was pleased to add another Sign to the former, that he might overcome the Incredulity which he foresaw would be in many of them.

That they will believe the voice of the latter sign.] Yield their consent to that which is plainly taught them by both these Signs, viz. that God had appeared to him, and ordered him to say what he did. And he saith they would believe, because it was rational to suppose they would; tho' he likewise supposes in the next Verse, some might still remain incredulous, and therefore he adds another.

Ver. 9. Thou shalt take of the Water of the River, and pour it upon the dry Land; and the Water shall become Blood.] This Sign was not wrought now, when God talked with him, as the two former were; for he was in the Desert, far from the River here spoken of, and near no River at all. Therefore, in case the Israelites did not believe upon the sight of the two former Signs, this is ordered to be wrought, when he came into Egypt, for their Conviction; by taking the Water of Nilus, and turning it into Blood. Which might be well looked upon as an Indication that God was able to spoil that Water, which was the great Instrument of the Fertility of that Country, and make their Land barren. And also put them in mind that the Cry of the innocent Blood of their Infants, which had been drowned in that River, was come up to God.

There was a necessity that Moses should be instructed with all these Powers, because he came with an unusual Commission: Which would not have been credited, if he had not brought such extraordinary proof of it. All the Prophets after him, did not work Miracles; which were necessary only when some great Change was to be made in the World; as there was now at their bringing out of Egypt. After which they were to be put into a new form and order by a body of peculiar Laws, both Civil and Religious: Which, when they were notoriously violated, God was pleased by such wonders as Moses wrought, to turn their Hearts back again; as he did in the days of Elijah, 1 Kings xviii. 37.

Ver. 10. And Moses said unto the LORD, O my Lord.] This is a form of Speech, whereby he declines this great Employment; and desires to be excused. The Reason of which follows:

I am not eloquent.] In the Hebrew, Am not a Man of words; i. e. not a good Speaker, or not accustomed to make Speeches; or, as some take it, a Man of few words: And therefore unfit to be sent to the Israelites; and much more to the King of Egypt, to whom none but great Orators make Addresses. Clemens in his Epistle to the Corinthians, makes this an Argument of Moses's Humility, and faith, he added these words (from I know not what Author) ἐγὼ εἶμι ἀψυλὸς ἐν ῥησιν, I am a reek from a Pot.

Neither heretofore, nor since thou hast spoken unto thy Servant.] This hath been always my Imperfection, that I could not speak fluently; nor do I find that I am altered, since thou hast been pleased to appear to me, and give me this Commission.

But I am slow of speech, and of a slow tongue.] Cannot bring forth my words readily; nor pronounce them well. The Jews think he had some impediment in his Speech, so that he could not pronounce some Letters or Words exactly; at least, not without such difficulty, that it was long before he could bring them forth. But the LXX understand these words, slow of speech, as if he had but a weak, small, or slender Voice; speaking, voce gracili & exile (as it may be translated in Latin) which made him very unfit, he thought, to be an Ambassador. And this doth not disagree with what St. Stephen saith, that he was mighty in words, as well as Deeds, Acts vii. 22. for the sense of what he spake was great and weighty; tho' his Pronunciation was not answerable to it. Nor did his ill or weak Pronunciation, nor his slowness in bringing forth his words, hinder him from being an excellent Judge, and deciding Causes from Morning to Night; as we read, Exod. xviii. In the determination of which there was no need of Oratory, but of a quick Apprehension, exact Judgment, and proper Language; which he never wanted. One would think also, that by Use and Exercise he grew prompt in the delivery of his Mind; for he made several very long Speeches to the People, and especially an incomparable Discourse before his departure out of the World, in the beginning of the Book of Deuteronomy. In the latter end of which, his Song shows that he wanted no eloquent words, when he pleased to use them.

Ver. 11. And the LORD said unto him, Who hath made man's mouth, &c.] Cannot I, who formed all the Organs of Speech, and made the rest of Mens Senses, and when I please, deprive them of their Use, take away this Impediment of which thou complaineest, and make thee to speak as roundly and gracefully as any Man living? The Author of the Life of Moses (who makes Pharaoh to have condemned Moses for killing the Egyptian, &c. see ii. 15.) fancies, that God puts him in mind of his Deliverance at that time: As if he had said, Who taught thee to make thy Defence, when thou wast arraigned before Pharaoh? Who made the King dumb, that he could not urge and press thy Execution? Who made the Executioner deaf, that he could not hear the Sentence when pronounced? And who made them all blind, that they could not see when thou madest thy escape; Which is very ingeniously invented; but we have no assurance of the truth of this Explication:

Ver. 12. Now therefore go, and I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee what thou shalt say.] Excuse thy self no longer, but obey the Commission I have given thee; and I will both help thy Speech, and suggest to thy Mind what thou shalt deliver: This doth not signify, as I take it, that if he had without further disputing gone about his business, God would have given him a better Elocution; but that he would have made his words as powerful, as if they had been pronounced with the greatest advantage. Or the meaning may be, that he should never want either words or thoughts, to instruct his Brother Aaron, whom God always intended to send along with him.

Ver. 13. And he said, O my Lord.] The same form of Speech with that, ver. 10.

Send, I pray thee, by the hand of him whom thou wilt send.] The Vulgar Latin having translated the word SCHILO, Gen. xlix. 10. qui mittendus est, him that is to be sent, it hath inclined several great Men to think, that Moses here desires God to send the MESSIAH. And several of the ancient Fathers (Justin. Mart. Tertull. and St. Cyprian, &c.) were of this mind; as many later Interpreters, both of the Roman, and of the Reformed Churches, have been. Particularly Flaccius Illyricus (in his Clavis upon the word MITTO) thus explains this Passage, 'Manda id functionis, &c. commit this Office to the True Messiah, or Blessed Seed, whom thou hast resolved to send; who will discharge this Trust far better than I can do, &c.' But there have been, and are other very considerable Persons, who think Moses means no more than this: Send a more proper Person, one fitter for this Employment than I am. And the truth is, such Speeches as these in Scripture, do not denote any certain Person, or Thing, but signify something indefinite, and in general. Examples of which we have in 1 Sam. xxii. 13. 2 Sam. xv. 20. upon which Phrase [vado quo vado] I go whither I may, the same Flaccius observes, that it denotes an uncertain motion. In like manner Moses here determines his desire to no particular Person; but only wishes God would send any body rather than himself. And that he did not think of the Messiah, there is this Argument: That he had no reason to believe he was now born; and yet God's Promise was to send one immediately to relieve the Israelites. Upon which Errand also, if he had prayed God to send him, it would argue Moses to have been in the same Error with the present Jews, that the Messiah was to be a Temporal Deliverer.

Ver. 14. And the Anger of the LORD was kindled against Moses.] These words seem to import, that God was highly displeased with him; and consequently that he had very much offended him. Yet some of the Fathers, particularly St. Hierom, and St. Basil, impute his backwardness to serve in this Employment, to his great Modesty, Modesty, Humility, and a deep Sense of his own Infirmities, of which the wisest and best Men are far more sensible than other Persons; and then this Anger amounts to no more than such a Displeasure as a Father hath at his Child when he is too diffident, notwithstanding all that he hath said and done to breed in him a just Confidence; and therefore no Punishment follow'd his Anger (unless we think, as R. Solomon doth, that because of his Backwardness God preferr'd Aaron's Family above his, or that this was the Cause he would not cure his Imperfection of Speech) but only a Chiding, which we may suppose went before the following Question, Is not Aaron the Levite thy Brother? which carries something of Sharpness in it; and indeed this may be said in Moses's Excuse, that the most excellent Persons are the least forward to embrace the Offers of great Advancement; according to the Observation of Plato, L. i. de Republ. (which I find Eusebius also hath noted out of him, L. xii. Præp. Evang. c. 9.) That no Magistracy being design'd for the Profit of him that governs, but of those that are governed, I must needs conclude, saith he, μὴνα ἐθέλειν ἐκόντα ἀρχεῖν, that no Man (who is considerate he means) will voluntarily take upon him the Government of a People, but he must be hired to it, or be must be punish'd if he will not undertake it; for he that will use his Power well, ἐπεὶ οὐδ' ἐαυτῷ τὸ βλάψουν παρῆλθι, ἀλλὰ τῷ ἀρχομένῳ, never doth that which is best for himself, but for those whom he governs. Such a one was Moses, who sought not his own Profit or Glory (as those that now seek for great Places, by which they design a Benefit to themselves, and not to their Neighbours) and therefore was not easily persuaded to accept of the high Authority which was offer'd to him.

Is not Aaron the Levite thy Brother? One would think by this that Aaron was now a principal Person, and of most eminent Quality in the Tribe of Levi, as may be concluded also from his Marriage with the Sister of the Prince of the Tribe of Judah, vi. 23. for it is but a Fancy of R. Solomon's, that he is therefore called the Levite, because the Levitical Order should have proceeded from him, and the Priesthood been entail'd on Moses's Family; but because of Moses's Backwardness to serve God in this present Employment, he in Anger quite chang'd his Intention, and advanc'd Aaron to the Priesthood.

I know that he can speak well. Is eloquent, and can deliver his Mind in fluent Words. There are two things which compleat a Commander, as Pericles speaks in Thucydides, σύνεσις καὶ δυνάμις ἐγκυβερνητική, Wisdom and Eloquence, which do not often meet in one Person; but God is pleas'd to distribute these Gifts, as he did to these two Brethren. So Polydamas in Homer tells Hector, God's way is not to give all Accomplishments to one Man; but some to one, and some to others. Iliad. xiii. ver. 730.

Ἄλλ' ἔπος ἅμα πάντα δυνάσσαι αὐτὸς ἐλπίδ'.

Ἄλλω μὲν γὰρ ἔδωκε θεὸς πολέμῳ ἔργα, &c.

Ἄλλω δ' οὐ σιδήσῃ θεὸς ἐυρύδοπα ζῆς, &c.

which he expresses admirably again, Odyss. O. v. 168.

οὕτως ἐ πάντεσσι θεός, καλέντα δίδωσιν
Ἄνδράσιν, ἅτε φύλῃ, ἅτ' ἀρ' ὀρέσας, ἅτ' ἀγορήσαν.

Behold he cometh forth to meet thee, &c. By God's Direction no doubt, who suggested to him that Moses was coming by his Order towards Egypt; which was such comfortable News to him, that when he saw him (after such a long Separation) it could not but be a very joyful Meeting. The fulfilling of this Prediction was a new Sign to Moses that God would be with him.

Ver. 15. And thou shalt speak unto him, and put Words in his Mouth. Tell him from me what he is to speak.

And I will be with thy Mouth, and with his Mouth. Thou shalt have Directions from me what to say to him, and I will enable him to speak to the People, and to Pharaoh.

And will teach you what you shall do. Instruct you in all your Proceedings.

Ver. 16. And he shall be thy Spokesman to the People. Acquaint them with what thou hast to deliver to them.

And he shall be, even he to thee. He doubles the Words, to denote that he should need no other Assistance but Aaron, who being his Brother, he might the more securely rely on his Fidelity.

Instead of a Mouth. To speak what thou canst not so well deliver thy self.

And thou shalt be to him instead of God. Deliver my Mind and Will to him: The Chaldee translates the Hebrew Word Elobim in this Place a Prince, or a Judge, who hath the Power of Life and Death. (See Grotius in Acts vii. 35. and L. de Dieu in vii. 1.) for Moses, by God's Order and Appointment, executed all those Judgments upon Pharaoh which Aaron pronounc'd. See Selden, L. i. de Synedr. cap. ult. If Justin Martyr did not misapprehend Diodorus Siculus, he saith the Jews called Moses a God; for so he reports Diodorus's Words (Adhort. ad Græcos, p. 10.) παρὰ τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις Μωυσῆν ἢ καλέμενον Θεόν, which now are otherways in the Books of Diodorus (Edit. Steph. p. 59.) where mentioning several Lawgivers, that pretended to receive their Laws from God, or some good Angel, names Moses among the rest, παρὰ δ' τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις Μωυσῆν ἢ ἱεὼς ἐπικαλέμενον Θεόν, who receiv'd his from the God called Jao, so they pronounc'd that Name which we call Jehovah.

Ver. 17. And thou shalt take this Rod in thine Hand. The Rod mention'd ver. 2. which is ver. 20. called the Rod of God, because it was an Ensign of divine Authority and Power, by which all the Wonders were wrought.

Wherewith thou shalt do Signs. By stretching out so mean a thing as this Rod at God's Command great Miracles follow'd, which demonstrated the Power of God, and not of Man.

Ver. 18. And Moses went and returned. From Horeb, where he had all this Converse with God, he return'd to the Place where his Father-in-law liv'd. See ver. 1.

To Jethro. In the Hebrew his Name is written Jether, and the Tradition is in Semoth Rabbah that he was once a Gentile, and then his Name was was Jether, but being profelyted to the true Religion, there was a Letter added to his Name, as there was to Abraham's, and he was call'd Jethro; and Mr. Selden observes he is call'd a Profelyte in the Gemara of Babylon, and the first we find mention'd in Scripture, L. ii. de Jure N. & G. c. 2.

And said unto him, let me go, I pray thee.] He did not think it honest to leave his Service without his Consent, especially since he entertain'd him, and gave him his Daughter, when he was a Stranger to him.

And return unto my Brethren which are in Egypt.] To his Kindred and Countrymen (who call'd one another Brethren) whom he had not seen many Years.

And see whether they be yet alive.] He conceal'd his main Design from Jethro, not thinking it safe perhaps to trust him (who, though a good Man, was not an Hebrew) with his Commission, or fearing that he might discourage him from undertaking, what he had already too much declin'd, but now was fully resolv'd upon, and therefore loth to be again dishearten'd.

It may seem strange that Moses in so long a Course of Time as Forty Years should not have heard of the State of his Relations and Friends; but it is to be consider'd, that as he was afraid perhaps it should be known where he was, so Intercourse with Nations, tho' not very far distant, was not so easy then as it is now-a-days.

And Jethro said to Moses, Go in Peace.] He dismiss'd him kindly, and wish'd him a prosperous Journey.

Ver. 19. And the Lord said to Moses in Midian.] Some translate it, the Lord had said, &c. to shew the reason why he now desired to have Leave to visit his Friends in Egypt; however that be, it is plain this was a distinct Appearance of God to him from that in Horeb, for this was in Midian, where God (who had set him no precise Time before) enjoins him to be gone presently, and assures him that there were none left in Egypt who design'd to be reveng'd of him for the Slaughter of the Egyptians. So it follows,

For all the Men are dead which sought thy Life.] This is an Encouragement, which God reserv'd as a Reward of his Obedience, having said nothing of it during the Time of his Hesitancy and Reluctance.

Ver. 20. And Moses took his Wife and his Sons.] We read hitherto but of one Son born to him, but it is plain he had another, from xviii. 4. he carry'd his whole Family with him, to let his Brethren see he was so confident of their Deliverance, that he ventur'd not only himself, but his dearest Relations in their Society.

And set them upon an Ass.] One Ass could not carry them all, with every thing necessary for their Removal, therefore the Singular Number (as is very usual) is put for the Plural; tho' one Ass might perhaps carry her and two Children, one of which, if not the other, was very small. See Drusus, Quaestiones per Epistol. 86. and Simeon de Muis in his Varia Sacra. Asses are vile Creatures here with us, but they were not so in those Countries, for the noblest Persons anciently rode on them, as appears by a great many Places of holy Scripture, Gen. xxii. 1. Numb. xxii. 21.

2 Sam. xix. 6. and several others which are reckon'd up by Bochart, P. i. L. ii. cap. 13. Hierozoic.

And he returned to the Land of Egypt.] Set out, and began his Journey to that Country.

And Moses took the Rod of God.] So called, because God order'd him to carry it with him (ver. 17.) and had appointed it to be the Instrument wherewith he should work Wonders.

In his Hand.] As a Sign of his Authority; so Conr. Pellicanus hath not unfitly explain'd it, he return'd with the Rod of God, Signo Apostolatus & Ducatus, 'a Sign or Token of his Ambassy and Government.

Ver. 21. And the Lord said unto Moses, When thou goest to return into Egypt.] When thou art come thither.

See that thou do all those Wonders before Pharaoh.] The Signs mention'd in the beginning of this Chapter, with which he was to begin.

Which I have put in thy Hand.] Given thee Power to do.

But I will harden his Heart, &c.] The Meaning is, not that God would harden his Heart at the first, as soon as Moses began to work his Signs, no more than that he would at the first slay his First-born, as he threatens, ver. 23. But as at last he intended to slay his First-born, if he would not be humbled by other Plagues, so in Conclusion he resolv'd to harden his Heart, after Pharaoh had often harden'd it himself. There are three distinct Words used in this Story about this Matter; the first is Chazak, the next is Kashah, and the third is Cavad; which seem to signify a gradual Increase of his Obstinacy, till at last it grew very grievous; for the last Word (Cavad) intends and increases the Sense, whether it be in good or evil Qualities.

Ver. 22. And thou shalt say unto Pharaoh.] In this God begins to fulfil his Promise to Moses, that he would teach him what he should say, ver. 12, 15, 16.

Thus saith the Lord.] This shews he came to Pharaoh in the Name and by the Authority of God.

Israel is my Son, even my First-born.] Most dear to me, and belov'd above all People (as the first-born Son commonly is above the rest of the Children) God having chosen and adopted them to be his peculiar People, on whom he bestow'd singular Privileges and Blessings. Thus God speaks of David, Psal. lxxxix. 28. And Aben Ezra's Interpretation of this Phrase is not improper, That their Ancestors from the beginning had been Worshipers of him the true God.

Ver. 23. And I say unto thee.] I command and require thee (so the Word say here signifies.)

Let my Son go, that he may serve me.] Not to keep my People in thy Servitude any longer, but to dismiss them, that they may worship me, as my Servants ought to do.

And if thou refuse to let him go, behold I will slay thy Son, even thy First-born.] Not upon his first Refusal (see ver. 21.) but after a long Course of other Judgments, which would end, if if he were not reformed by them in this at last. With which he therefore terrifies him, that he might prevent it.

Ver. 24. And it came to pass by the way.] To Egypt, in the Inn where they took up their lodging at night.

That the LORD met him.] The SCHECHINAH I suppose appeared to him, from whence an Angel was dispatched to do as follows. And so both the LXX and the Chaldees interpret it, The Angel of the LORD: Because the LORD sent an Angel to execute what is here related.

And sought to kill him.] Appeared in such a manner, as if he intended to fall upon him (with a drawn Sword perhaps, as he did to Baalam and David) which threatening Posture could not but very much affright him, and put him into disorder. Others imagine he inflicted a sudden Disease upon him; or made as if he would strangle him. They that interpret this of killing his Child, as many do (see Mr. Selden, L. i. de Synedr. cap. vi. p. 88.) seem to me to have no reason on their side, there being no mention of a Child in the foregoing Story, but only of his Sons. Therefore Chaskuni hath rightly observed that this Verse is connected with the last words of the 20th, (the three following coming by a Parentesis) and can refer to none but Moses. All the difficulty is to find why the Angel of the Lord should put him in fear of present death, when he was going upon God's Message. The Resolution of which seems to be contained in the following words:

Ver. 25. Then Zipporah,] His Wife presently apprehended what was the Cause of Moses's danger, viz. because her Child (of which she is supposed to have been not long ago delivered) was not circumcised. And therefore she immediately dispatched that work, her Husband being in such a consternation, that he could not do it himself; but (as Kimchi will have it) called to her to do it; or she of herself went about it, having been the Cause that it was not done before.

Took a sharp Stone,] Or a sharp Knife made of a Flint; for such they used: Which Justin Martyr (in his Dialogue with Trypho) calls μαχαίρας. And so the LXX: And the Jews say, that such Knives were commonly used in this work.

And cut the foreskin of her Son.] But how came Moses to neglect this Duty? Most say his Wife was unwilling to it; not because she abhorred this Rite, as cruel and unnatural (for she was of a Race which came from Abraham, who first received this Command of Circumcising all his Children; and she understood, it appears, how to do it readily, without endangering the Child, which had scarce been possible if she had been a Stranger to it; but because the Midianites perhaps did not circumcise so soon as the Israelites, but imitated their Neighbours the Ishmaelites; who deferred it till their Children were thirteen Years old, at which Age Ishmael was circumcised (Gen. xvii. 25.) or rather because they were about to make a Journey, when she thought it might be omitted, till they came to be settled among the Israelites.

And truly, this seems to have been a good reason, to defer Circumcision beyond the Eighth Day, Motion being dangerous when the Child was sore. But such a Man as Moses should have trusted God to take care of his Child; and not have been afraid of the Consequence, if he had performed his Duty. And because he followed the tender Inclination of his Wife, rather than a plain Precept (Gen. xvii. 12, 13, &c.) he fell into this great Danger. Many other Accounts are given of this, (for the truth is, the whole Matter is very obscure) but I see none more probable than what I have mentioned.

And cast it at his feet.] It is uncertain at whose feet she cast it; whether at her Husband's, or the Child's, or the Angel's. The first seems most probable, if the next words be spoken to Moses, as they seem to me to be.

And said, Surely a bloody Husband thou art to me.] If the foregoing Interpretation be true, these are not the words of an angry Woman, but spoken with great affection; signifying that she had espoused him again, having saved his Life by the Blood of her Son. Our famous Mr. Mede indeed, (Discourse xiv.) carries the Sense quite another way: Because an Husband, he saith, is never called Chatan after the Marriage Solemnity was over. Which, if it be true, makes nothing against what I have said; because she look'd upon herself as a second time espoused (or married) to him by this Act; which had restored him to her when his Life was in danger. It must be granted that the word Chatan doth not only signify a Spouse, but sometimes a Son-in-law: But why Zipporah should call her own Child by this Name, I do not see. Yet so Mr. Mede understands it; and adds, that the Rabbins tell us, it was the Custom of the Hebrew Women to call their Children, when they were circumcised, by the Name of Chatan, (i. e. Spouse) as if they were now espoused unto God. And indeed, Aben-Ezra saith so: But I cannot find that this was an ancient Notion among them. If it were, his Interpretation might be the more easily embraced, which is this: That these were a solemn form of words used at Circumcision, signifying as much as, I pronounce thee to be a Member of the Church by Circumcision. Thus Val. Schindler also expounds it (in his Lexic. Pentaglot. p. 677.) a Child was called Chatan upon the Day of his Circumcision, because then he was first joined to the People of God, and as it were, espoused unto God. And he thinks the Targum countenances this Sense, when it thus expounds these words, by this Blood of Circumcision a Spouse is given to us. Which may as well be understood of Moses being given to her, as of the Child; for he was, as I said, restored to her and to his Family upon the Circumcision of the Child. So it follows in the next Verse. They that have a mind to see the Sense of an eminent Writer of our Church concerning this Passage, may consult Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity, Book v. in the latter end of the lxii. Section, where he thus far agrees with me, that these words were spoken out of the flowing of abundance of Commiseration and Love, with her hands laid under his Feet. For so he thinks these words, She cast it at his feet, import.

Ver. 26. So he let him go.] i. e. The Angel no longer threaten'd Moses with death: but his Wife, to her great Joy, saw him restored to her in safety. From which in after-times sprang the charmes, which were so famous among the Greeks and Egyptians, in the Feasts of Bacchus and Osiris; whose Stories Huetius hath lately shown were framed out of this of Moses. From whence also, as he probably conjectures, they used Remedies for Diseases, in forma fascini, which they hung as Amulets about their Childrens Necks, Demonstrat. Evang. Propos. iv. Cap. iv. n. 3.

Then she said; or when she said, a bloody Husband thou art, &c.] i. e. As soon as Zipporah had circumcised the Child, and thrown the Forekin at her Husband's Feet, and said these words, Moses was delivered from his Danger. Or (according to our Translation) as soon as her Husband was safe, she repeated the foregoing words, saying, I have-redeemed thy Life, by circumcising thy Son. They that make these words to have been spoken in a rage, because she was forced to do what she did, suppose her to have had little kindness for her Husband, and as little regard to Circumcision. I should rather translate the words, So she let him go; i. e. let Moses go to Egypt; and went back herself to her Father; only repeating these words before she went, Remember me, how I have saved thy Life, and made thee my Husband again (when Death was at hand) by the Blood of thy Son, whom I have circumcised. There is only this Exception to it, that the Hebrew word for let him go is of the Masculine Gender; which is of no great weight, because it is usual in this Language, when they speak of Females, (as I observed on i. 21.) and it is certain she returned to her Father; but whether in this manner, no body can certainly determine. For we are not told any where upon what occasion she went back to Jeihro (unless it be here insinuated) as we find she did (xviii. 2.) together with her Children. But it is very probable, that she fearing some other Danger, into which she and her Children might fall by the way, or in Egypt, might desire Moses to send her home again, till he had finished the work he went about: Unto which he consented.

Ver. 27. And the LORD said unto Aaron.] In Egypt, I suppose, he received this Order from God, but we do not know how: Whether by an Apparition of the Divine Majesty to him, or in a Dream, or otherwise.

Go into the Wilderness to meet Moses.] The Wilderness was a wide Place; therefore he directed him, no doubt, into what part he should go.

And he went and met him in the Mount of God.] He went almost to Midian; that he might have the more time to hear what Moses's Commission was, before they came to Egypt.

Ver. 28. And Moses told Aaron all the words of the LORD, &c.] Mentioned, iii. 6, 7, 8, &c. and in this Chapter, 14, 15, 16, &c.

And all the Signs, &c.] See ver. 2, 3, &c.

which he told him to confirm his Belief, that God had spoken these words to him.

Ver. 29. And Moses and Aaron went.] Came into Egypt.

And gathered together all the Elders of the Children of Israel.] The chief Persons in every Tribe, who bore a great sway among them. See iii. 16.

Ver. 30. And Aaron spake all the words which the LORD had spoken unto Moses.] According to what God had promised, ver. 15, 16.

And did the signs.] The Signs are done by Moses, as the Words were spoken by Aaron, ver. 17.

In the sight of all the People,] Who came along with the Elders.

Ver. 31. And the People believed.] All the rest of the People also, (to whom the Elders reported what they had heard and seen) believed that God had sent Moses to be their Deliverer.

And when they heard that the LORD had visited, &c.] See iii. 7, 16, 17.

Then they bowed their heads and worshipped.] Most humbly acknowledged the Goodness of God, and his Faithfulness to his Word.

CHAP. V.

Ver. 1. AND afterward Moses and Aaron went in and told Pharaoh.] When they had convinced the Elders of Israel of their Commission, they desired Audience of Pharaoh. Which having obtained, they went to Court; taking some of the Elders along with them to attend them. Which is not a mere Conjecture, from the decency of the thing, that they should not go alone on such a solemn Embassy, but so they were commanded to do, Exod. iii. 18. and it will appear from ver. 3. of this Chapter, that so they did.

I have observed before, iii. 10. that this Pharaoh is commonly thought to be him called Cenchres.

Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Let my People go, &c.] These words contain only the substance of what they said; which was delivered, we may well suppose, in a longer Oration: Wherein they declar'd they had received a Commission from their God, the LORD of Heaven and Earth, to make this Address to him.

In all Nations there were some Persons, who, pretending to greater familiarity with their Gods than other Men, were highly revered both by their own Countrymen and by Strangers. And therefore it is no wonder Pharaoh offered no violence to them when they came to make this Demand; because their Persons were held sacred, as those of Ambassadors now are who come from one Prince to another. This is a better Account than that which some of the Jews (in Schalschalab-Hakkabalab) give of it; who say, that when they came into Pharaoh's Presence, they appeared in such Majesty, as daunted him: Being like the Angels of the Ministry, and raised to a taller Stature than they had before, and having a Splendor in their Countenances like that of the Sun, &c. In which which they seem to imitate the Story of St. Stephen, whose Face shined like that of an Angel, when he appeared before their Council.

That they may bold a Feast unto me in the Wilderness.] In order to which it was necessary they should offer Sacrifice (ver. 3.) which they could not do in Egypt; and therefore desired to go into the Wilderness, where they might use their own Rites and Ceremonies of Religion without offence to the Egyptians. Every word hath its weight in it: For a Feast denotes an extraordinary Service; and to me signifies such peculiar Rites of Worship, as should be prescribed and instituted by the LORD, in whose Name they spake: For which the Wilderness was most proper; because there was no Concourse of People likely to be in that place, to disturb them in their Solemnity.

Ver. 2. And Pharaoh said, Who is the LORD? &c.] These are not Atheistical Words; for he owned such Gods as the Egyptians worshipped, but slighted that God whom Moses called JEHOVAH; to whom he saith, he owed no Obedience, because he did not know who they meant by him. He speaks also with too much Scorn; his Pride and Passion not suffering him to ask seriously who Jehovah was.

I know not the LORD, &c.] Nor did he desire to know; being so transported with Anger, that he would not examine their Commision, but only resolved he would not obey it.

Ver. 3. And they said, the God of the Hebrews.] They gave him no other account (since he was so haughty and huffing) but that they came in the Name of him, whom they and their Ancestors had for many Generations worshipped. Whom they had at first called (ver. 1.) the LORD God of Israel. Τὸν τῆς οὐρανίου Δεσπότην, as Artapanus in Eusebius expounds it, the Lord and Governor of the Universe, Hath met with us.] Appeared to us, and given us this Commision, when we thought of no such thing. For they would not have him think that they sought this Embassy, but were put upon it by the Divine Authority, which they durst not disobey.

Let us go, we pray thee, three days Journey into the Desert.] These are the very words in which God commanded Moses to deliver his Message, iii. 18. And as their Desire was moderate (to go but three days Journey) so it was very modestly delivered, by humble Intreaty, and with such a Reason as they thought might move him to grant their Request.

And sacrifice unto the LORD our God,] That he may be propitious to us.

Let he fall upon us with the Pestilence, or with the Sword.] Send a Plague among us (for our neglect of him) or some foreign Enemy to infect us, and cut us off. Whereby Pharaoh (they secretly suggest) would lose the benefit of their Labours more than by their going for a little time into the Wilderness. See viii. 27.

It is observable, that they neither wrought any Miracle, nor threatened any Punishment to Pharaoh, at their first Application to him; but only told him the Danger they themselves were in, if they did not obey their God: Which was a very submissive way of treating with him.

Artapanus indeed (in Euseb. Præp. Evang. L. ix. c. 27. and in Clem. Alex. L. i. Strom.) tells us of several miraculous things which Moses did at this Audience; whereby Pharaoh and his Servants were astonished and frightened from doing them any hurt; nay, he ask'd Moses the Name of his God, which he whispered in Pharaoh's Ear. But he had all this out of some such fabulous Author, as him I mentioned above, (ver. 1.) and I mention him, only to show that the Heathen had the knowledge of this History, and report it as a Truth; tho' with some mixture of Human Invention.

Ver. 4. Wherefore do ye, Moses and Aaron, lett the People from their Works?] Instead of answering their Reasons, he tells them, That he look'd upon them two as Disturbers of the Peace of the Kingdom, and Hinderers of his Business.

Get you unto your Burdens.] This seems to be spoken unto the Elders, which they had brought along with them.

Ver. 5. Behold, the People of the Land now are many.] They are very numerous, notwithstanding all their Labours: To what will they grow, if they have nothing to do? Or, as some expound it, they will think of nothing but Sedition; now they are so numerous, if they be suffered to cease from their Burdens. Cajetan hence gathers, that the Law for throwing their Infants into the River was abolish'd, as infamous; or he could not get it put into Execution.

And you make them rest from their Burdens.] Which was the Course he took to make them less numerous. Perhaps this was the Sabbath-day; on which they had been wont to rest, when they had their Liberty.

Ver. 6. And Pharaoh commanded the same day, the Task-masters of the People, and their Officers.] The Task-masters were the chief Exactors of their Labours, being Egyptians, who had Officers under them to execute their Orders, and to give an account how they were obeyed: And it appears from ver. 14, 15, &c. that they were Israelites.

Ver. 7. Ye shall no more give the People straw to make brick, as heretofore, &c.] Instead of easing them, he increased their Burdens, and made them intolerable. What the use of Straw was in making Bricks, is variously conjectured: Some think it was mixed with the Clay, to make the Bricks more solid. Others, that they only heated their Kilns with it, to burn the Bricks. Others, (who think they were not baked in a Kiln) imagine it served only to cover them, that they might not be crack'd by the violent Heat of the Sun, wherein they were baked. For so Vitruvius tells us, that the best Bricks were made in the Spring, and in the Autumn, ut uno tenore siccant, that they might dry by an equal Heat; they that were made at the Solstice being suddenly crufted over by the Sun, and left too moist within, L. ii. de Architect. c. 3.

Ver. 8. And the tale of the Bricks, which they did make heretofore, you shall lay upon them, &c.] It appears from ver. 13, 14. that there was a certain Quantity exacted from them every day.

For they be idle, and therefore they cry, saying, Let us go and sacrifice to our God.] They have not work enough to employ their Thoughts; which makes their Minds wander after other things.

Ver. 9. Let there more work be laid upon the Men.] Or, make it heavy upon them (as it is in the Margin.)

That they may labour therein.] Have no time to think of any thing else.

And let them not regard vain words.] So he calls the Message of Moses and Aaron; who, he pretends, were mere Deceivers, and fed their Hopes with Lyes, (for so it is in the Hebrew, words of falsehood, or lying words) or, at least, he resolved their words should not prove true; for he would not let the People go.

Ver. 10. Thus saith Pharaoh, I will not give you Straw.] The Task-masters with their Officers proclaimed the King's Order, that every body might take notice of it.

Ver. 10. Go, get you Straw where you can find it, &c.] A heavy Sentence; importing that whether they could find any or no, no abatement would be made of the number of Bricks that was expected from them. This was to drive them to desperation, by demanding things impossible. And added (as Conradus Pellicanus observes) to the Burdens on their Bodies, very sore Anguish of Mind. For it tempted them to doubt of the Goodness of their God, who they thought had sent a Deliverer to them (iv. 21.) by whom they were now reduced into a more miserable Condition.

Ver. 12. So the People were scattered abroad, throughout all the Land of Egypt, &c.] Some part of them were forced to go and pick up Straw, or for want of it, Stubble (and sometimes travel a great way for it) while the rest were working in the Brick-kilns without their help, which they were wont to have; whereby they were disabled from making so many Bricks as formerly they had done.

Ver. 13. And the Task-masters basted them, &c.] Quickened them in their work, when they saw they were likely to fall short of their wonted Task.

Ver. 14. And the Officers of the Children of Israel, &c.] By this it appears (as I said, ver. 6.) that these Officers were Israelites. And from this place Bonavent. Bertram concludes (Lib. de Rep. Hebr. Cap. iv.) that there was a Civil Government among the Israelites all the time they were in Egypt; and that these Schoterim (as they are called in Hebrew) were Men of the greatest Note among the Elders, who executed all their Decrees; and consequently of high Authority among the People. For which reason Pharaoh's Task-masters chose them, to oversee and direct the Labours of their Brethren. But Mr. Selden L. i. de Synedr. Cap. 15. hath made it appear, that there was no such Judicature among them at this time; and when there was, this was the Name of those who executed the Sentence of the Judges; being like to our Apparitors, and such-like Under-Officers. See p. 621, &c.

Were beaten,] With Sticks; or scourged with Rods.

Wherefore have ye not fulfilled your Task, both yesterday, &c.] They punished the Officers, as if they had been negligent in not pressing the People to their Duty. Yet it seems they forbore them one day, to see if they would mend their Fault the next.

Ver. 15. Then the Officers of the Children of Israel came and cried unto Pharaoh, saying, &c.] They had some hope this Oppression might proceed from their Task-masters, and not from the King himself; and therefore they represented their Case to him, and petitioned for Relief. It is said indeed, ver. 6. that Pharaoh laid this Command, both upon the Task-masters and their Officers; but it is not unlikely that he gave it immediately only to the Task-masters, who were his own Ministers, and by them to the Officers.

Ver. 16. Thy Servants are beaten, but the fault is in thine own People.] This shows that they thought such inhuman Usage was the effect of the Task-masters Cruelty.

Ver. 17. But he said, Ye are idle, Ye are idle, &c.] He soon made them understand it was by his Decree, and not his Servants Pleasure, that they were thus used. And, which was worse, they saw he was fixed in his Resolution; being void of all Pity, and mocking at their Complaints. For nothing could be more sarcastical, than to tell them they were idle when they sunk under their Burdens.

Ver. 18. Go therefore now, and work, &c.] Do not spend your time in making Complaints to me, but return immediately to your Labours, and continue at them, till my Commands be executed; and expect no mitigation.

Ver. 19. And the Officers did see that they were in evil case, &c.] By this Answer they found themselves reduced to such Straits, that now they despaired of all Relief; the King himself being set against them.

Ver. 20. And they met Moses and Aaron, who stood in the way as they came forth from Pharaoh.] They had placed themselves there on purpose, to hear what Success the Officers had in their Petition.

Ver. 21. And they said, the LORD look upon you, and judge.] This seems to be an Imprecation: Or, at least, the Officers bid Moses and Aaron expect that God would take them to task (as we speak) for bringing his People into so bad a case.

Ye have made our Savour to be abhorred in the Eyes, &c.] Made us odious, as this Phrase signifies, Gen. xxxiv. 30.

To put a Sword into their hand to slay us.] Who may take an occasion from hence, and make this a Pretence for the destroying our whole Nation.

Ver. 22. And Moses returned unto the LORD.] This plainly intimates, that the LORD had appeared to Moses since he came to Egypt; as he did at Mount Horeb; and that he appeared in some settled Place, where he might upon all occasions resort to him.

And said, LORD, Wherefore hast thou so evil intreated this People? &c.] It was to no purpose to answer the Officers who expostulated with him, him, for they were too much exasperated, and thereby prejudiced against any thing he could say: And therefore he chose rather to represent to God the Complaints they had made to him, that he might be directed what Satisfaction to give them. For he was not able of himself to give an account why the LORD should suffer their Condition to grow worse rather than better since he delivered his Message to Pharaoh: No, nor why he should send him on an Embassy which was not at all regarded.

Ver. 23. For since I came to Pharaoh to speak in thy Name, he hath done Evil to this People; neither hast thou delivered thy People at all.] He might have remembered that God told him more than once, that Pharaoh would not obey him at the first, iii. 19. iv. 21. But the bitter Reflections which the Officers of the Children of Israel made upon his Conduct had so disturbed his Mind, that he forgot himself so far, as to ask the undecent Questions mentioned in the foregoing Verse; and complains here that God had done nothing to fulfil his Promise of Deliverance to his People.

CHAP. VI.

Ver. 1. AND the LORD said unto Moses.] The SCHECHINAH, I suppose, appeared to him (see ver. 12.) as it had done often before, since he was first sent upon this Business, (iv. 22.) and graciously condescended to satisfy his two Complaints in the latter end of the foregoing Chapter. Where he complains, First of all, that he had sent him about a fruitless Message: For, Secondly, he had not at all delivered his People. To the last of these he answers in the first place, here in this Verse; where he tells him,

Now thou shalt see what I will do to Pharaoh.] That is, be patient and wait a while, and thou shalt see Pharaoh compelled to dismiss my People.

For with a strong hand shall he let them go, &c.] I will so terribly scourge him, that he shall not only let them go, but thrust them out of Egypt, and be glad to be rid of them.

Ver. 2. And God spake unto Moses, and said unto him, I am the LORD.] He also answers here to this first Question [Why hast thou sent me?] by telling him, I am JEHOVAH, and have sent thee to make known this great Name, that is, Myself; who am constant to my Word, and will faithfully perform all my Promises.

Ver. 3. And I appeared unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, by the Name of God Almighty,] Or God All-sufficient, as the word El-shaddai may be interpreted (see Gen. xvii. 1.) God infinite in Power and Goodness: Of which he gave their Fathers abundant proofs by delivering them in many and great Straits.

But by my Name JEHOVAH was I not known to them.] This Name of four Letters, as the Jews speak, is by the Ancients called the ineffable Name: For they would never pronounce it. Not because they could not, as Drusus well observes (L. i. Observat. Cap. i.) Sed quod religione & iuramentis quadam ab eo efferendo abstinerent, but because out of a religious Reverence they abstained from it. And this Respect to it all the ancient Interpreters observe, even St. Hierom himself: Tho' in several of the ancient Fathers (as Irenæus, Clem. Alexandrinus, Epiphanius, and Theodoret) and in some of the ancient Heathens (as Macrobius, and Diodorus Siculus) it is expressed by Jabo, and Iao, as the Greek writes it. Which Name (however it be pronounced) some of the Jews imagine was concealed till Moses's time; who was the first to whom it was revealed. But this is evidently false, as appears from the whole Book of Genesis; and particularly from xv. 7. where (before he calls himself El-shaddai) he saith to Abraham, I am Jehovah which brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees. In short, the Opinion of Reuchlinus (in his Verb. Mirificum) is far more justifiable; which is, that it was revealed to our First Parents at the same time that God breathed into them the Breath of Life. For as soon as Eve brought forth her First-born, she saith, I have got a Man from the LORD, Gen. iv. 1. which Name descended in a perpetual Succession from Seth to Abraham: Who, when he went by God's Direction out of his own Country into Canaan, the LORD appeared to him there, and there he built an Altar to the LORD, Gen. xii. 7, 8. And it is to be noted, that he doth not say to Moses in this place, My Name Jehovah was not known to them, but I was not known to them by this Name. That is, by that which it imports; viz. the giving being (as we may say) to his Promises by the actual performance of them; i. e. by bringing them into the Land of Canaan; and in order to it, delivering them out of Egypt. Both which he had promised in the fore-named Chapter (Gen. xv. 14, 18.) and now intended to make good. And thus R. Solomon interprets this place, as P. Fagius notes; I have promised, but have not yet performed.

The like Expression we find in the Prophet Isaiah, as Theodorick Hackspan hath observed (Disput. de Nominibus Divinis, N. 15.) Isa. lii. 5, 6. where the Lord saith, My Name is blasphemed every day continually: therefore my People shall know my Name; therefore they shall know in that day, that I am he that do speak; behold, it is I.

Which cannot signify that the Jews did not then know that this was one of the Names of God: But that all who blasphemed him should be confuted by sensible Proofs which he would give of his own unchangeable Resolution to fulfil his Promises, in bringing them out of Babylon: Which fully demonstrated that he was JEHOVAH.

Which word some think, includes in it, not only his Eternal Existence, and Immutable Truth, but his Omnipotent Power which gave being to all things. The last of which was now made known so, as it had never been to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; for Moses was the first that wrought Miracles and Prodiges: God was known to the Fathers by Visions and Dreams, but not by Signs and Wonders. Moses made him known by these unto the World. And therefore upon the whole, Maimonides well concludes from this place, that the Prophetical Spirit on

Moses,

Moses, was more excellent than that which had been upon any before him, More Nev. P. ii. c. 35.

Ver. 3. And I also, &c.] The Hebrew word vegam may be better translated alibo. Which makes a clear Connection of this Verse with the former, and explains the meaning of the Name Jehovab. By which he was not known in former times, alibo he had made a Covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to give them the Land of Canaan; and often ratified, confirmed (and establiſh'd, as he here speaks) this Covenant, Gen. xvii. 7, 8. xxvi. 3, 4, &c. But now he not only declares himself mindful of that Covenant, (ver. 5.) but, because he was the LORD, (ver. 6.) would deliver them from the Egyptian Bondage, and that with a miraculous Power. Which should make them know more of him than their Fathers did, (ver. 7.) both by his delivering them out of Egypt, and by bringing them into the Land which he swore he would give to their Fathers, ver. 8.

This is the sense of these five Verses.

The Land of their Pilgrimage, &c.] So it is often called when he speaks to Abraham, Gen. xvii. 8. and so Isaac calls it, xxviii. 4. and Jacob also, xxxvii. 1. And so it might be called, not only with respect to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, but also to their Posterity; because of the near Union that is between Fathers and Children. Thus God is said to have given to these three Patriarchs (as the famous Primate Usher observes) the Land of Canaan for an Inheritance, Psal. cv. 11. which was not fulfilled to them, but to their Posterity. And as the Possession of Posterity is attributed to the Fathers, so upon the same ground, he thinks the Peregrination of the Fathers is attributed here to the Children, Chronol. Sacra, cap. viii.

Ver. 5. And I have also.] This Verse also begins with the same Particle vegam; and must be translated alibo, if the former Interpretation be right. Or else those words [by my Name Jehovab was I not known to them] must come in by a Parenthesis; and both these Verses be connected with what goes before, [appeared unto Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, by the Name of God Almighty] to whom he so appeared, as to make a Covenant with them, which he perfectly remembred, and having taken notice to what condition they were reduced, was now come to deliver them.

Ver. 6. Say unto the Children of Israel, I am the LORD.] Tell them, I will now show that I am what this Name imports, ver. 2.

And I will bring them from under the burdens of the Egyptians.] The heavy Oppressions under which you groan, ver. 5.

And I will rid you of their bondage.] They were mere Slaves, and lay also under such insupportable Loads, as made it impossible for them to deliver themselves; but it was to be the sole Work of God.

And I will redeem you with a stretched out Arm.] This word redeem implies their Servitude, from which he rescued them by a Power superior to Pharaoh's, or any Power on Earth; as appears by the following Story:

And with great Judgments.] When God first promised this Deliverance which Moses was about to effect, he told Abraham, I will judge that Nation, which oppressed them, Gen. xv. 14. That is, punish them (which is one Office of a judge) according to their Deservings. This now he intended to perform (and thereby show himself to be Jehovab) and that, in a most terrible manner; by inflicting, not only very grievous, but many Plagues upon them. For Greg. Nyssen observes, that all the Elements, the Earth, the Water, the Fire, and the Air, were all moved against the Egyptians, ὅλον πῦρ ἐστὶν ὑποχέειν, as an obedient Army, L. de Vita Moſis, p. 173. Thus Judgments, and to judge, are used in many places for Punishing; Pſal. ix. 17. Prov. xix. 29. 2 Chron. xx. 12.

Ver. 7. And I will take you to me for a People.] By the right of Redemption before mentioned.

And I will be to you a God.] He was so before, but now after a peculiar manner.

And ye shall know that I am the LORD your God, &c.] By seeing my Promises to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, fulfilled.

Ver. 8. And I will bring you unto the Land, concerning which, I did swear to give it, &c.] Two things were promised to Abraham in that Vision mentioned Gen. xv. First, That he would deliver his Seed from this Nation which oppressed them, ver. 14. And, Secondly, That he would bring them into the Land of Canaan, ver. 16. Both these he now declares should be fulfilled, (the former in the foregoing Verse, and the latter in this) and thereby they should be convinced, that he was indeed Jehovab, true and constant to his Word.

I am the LORD.] He concludes as he began; having said this twice before, ver. 2, 6.

Ver. 9. And Moses spake so unto the Children of Israel.] He delivered this Message as he was commanded, which one would have expected should have raised their drooping Spirits: But quite contrary,

They hearkened not unto Moses.] They did not believe, or receive what he said, (so Maimonides, More Nev. P. i. cap. 45.) or it made no Impression upon them. The Reason follows:

For anguish of Spirit.] In the Hebrew, because of shortness of Breath. They were so extremely oppressed, that they could scarce fetch their breath, (as we speak) or had no heart so much as to think of Deliverance, much less hope for it, but sunk under their Burdens.

And for cruel Bondage.] Common Slaves, tho' they cannot deliver themselves, rejoyce to hear the good News that they are likely to be delivered by those who have power and will to do it. But in this Slavery they were used so cruelly, that they were quite dejected and incapable of any Comfort. So the LXX translate the foregoing words (for anguish of Spirit) ἐξ ἀνυποψίας, out of Faint-heartedness; they being quite dispirited.

Ver. 10. And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying.] It is likely that Moses finding the Israelites so regardless of what he said, went to the usual Place where he was wont to have recourse to the Divine Majesty, (see ver. 22.) to receive new Directions what to do.

Ver. 11. Go in, speak unto Pharaoh King of Egypt, &c.] The LORD bids him go again to to Pharaoh, and renew the Demand he made before, ver. 1.

Ver. 12. And Moses spake before the LORD.] This Phrase lipne J'ehovah, before the LORD, plainly denotes that God appeared to him in a visible Majesty, as I observed above, ver. 1. and see xi. 4.

Behold, the Children of Israel have not hearkened to me, how then shall Pharaoh hear me?] Their Faint-heartedness disheartened Moses also, and made him unwilling to renew his Address to Pharaoh. And there seems to be good reason in what he says; if the Children of Israel, whose interest it was to give ear to him, did not believe him, what hope was there that Pharaoh should comply against his Interest?

Who am of uncircumcised Lips.] This Reason he had alledged before, and was fully answered (iv. 10, 11, &c.) and therefore ought not to have been repeated now. For his being of uncircumcised Lips signifies no more than that he was an ill Speaker, and wanted Eloquence: It being the manner of the Hebrews to call those Parts uncircumcised, which were inept to the Use for which they were designed, and cannot do their Office. Thus Jeremy saith of the Jews, that their Ear was uncircumcised; and adds the Explication, they cannot hearken, Jer. vi. 10. In like manner, uncircumcised Lips are Lips that cannot utter words; as uncircumcised in heart, Jer. ix. 26. are such as cannot understand. St. Stephen puts both together, uncircumcised in Heart and Ears, Acts vii. 51. Perhaps Moses thought it some disparagement to him, that he was not able himself to deliver his Mind in a handsome manner to Pharaoh; and therefore mentions this again, to move the Divine Majesty to circumcise his Lips (as they speak) that is, remove this Impediment.

Ver. 13. And the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron.] Here is no express Answer made to this Objection; but it seems to be included in God's speaking to Moses and to Aaron; whereas before, he had spoken only to Moses, ver. 1, 10. And it is likely, Moses was admonished that the LORD having given him Aaron to supply his defect, he ought to be satisfied therewith, and go with him and renew his Address, both to the Children of Israel, and also to Pharaoh. So these words have respect to both parts of the foregoing Objection.

And gave them a Charge unto the Children of Israel.] He laid his Commands upon them, strictly requiring them to obey him. Which is a higher Expression than we meet with before in the foregoing Injunctions (either in ver. 6, or 11.) and makes me think this Verse is not a mere Recapitulation of what had been said, as some take it, but an Enforcement of what he had before commanded.

And unto Pharaoh King of Egypt, to bring the Children of Israel out of the Land of Egypt.] I suppose he now gave them authority to threaten him if he did not obey.

Ver. 14. These are the Heads of their Fathers Houses.] The principal Persons of the several Families of Israel.

The Sons of Reuben the first-born, &c.] See Gen. xvi. 9. where the Sons of Reuben are reckoned up in this very Order; in which they are here mentioned again, to introduce the Genealogy of Moses and Aaron. Who being chosen by God to be the Deliverers of his People, it was fit to shew that they were of the same Stock, tho' not of the eldest Family, of the Children of Israel. To whom God promised, when he went down into Egypt, that he would surely bring him up again, Gen. xvi. 4. that is, in his Posterity: Which would not have been so manifestly the Work of God, if they that were the Instruments of it had not been of his Posterity.

Ver. 15. The Sons of Simeon, &c.] They are mentioned for the same reason, and in the same order that they were in Gen. xvi. 10.

Ver. 16. These are the Names of the Sons of Levi, &c.] Having briefly set down the Heads of the two eldest Families of Israel, he enlarges now upon the third, from which he himself was descended.

Gershon, Kohath, and Merari.] These three are mentioned also in Gen. xvi. 11. as coming with Jacob into Egypt.

And the Years of the Life of Levi were an hundred thirty and seven Years.] He is thought to have lived the longest of all the Sons of Jacob: None of whose Ages are recorded in Scripture but only his and Joseph's; whom Levi survived twenty seven Years, tho' he was much the elder Brother. Kohath also, the second Son of Levi, attained near to the same Age with himself, ver. 18. And his Grandson, Moses's Father, lived just so long as Levi did, ver. 20. Next to Levi, the longest Liver of all Jacob's Sons was Naphthali, if we may believe the Tradition in R. Bechai, who saith he lived to the Age of an hundred thirty and three Years; which was the Age of Kohath.

Ver. 17. The Sons of Gershon, Libni, and Shimi, &c.] These were born in Egypt, from whom descended two Families mentioned afterwards, Numb. iii. 18, 21.

Ver. 18. The Sons of Kohath, Amram, &c.] He had the most numerous Offspring of all Levi's Sons, Numb. iii. 28. from the eldest of which Moses came.

And the Years of the Life of Kohath were an hundred thirty and three Years, &c.] He sets down the Age of none but only of Levi his great Grandfather, and Kohath his Grandfather, and of Amram his Father. And Primate Usher makes account that Kohath was thirty Years old when Jacob came into Egypt, and lived there an hundred and three Years; and died thirty two Years before Moses was born. See Chronolog. Sacra, cap. xi.

Ver. 19. The Sons of Merari, Mebali.] From this Mebali it is thought sprung the famous Singer Heman who composed the 88th Psalm, 1 Chron. vi. 33.

And Musbi.] From whom descended Ethan, who composed the 89th Psalm, 1 Chron. vi. 44.

Ver. 20. And Amram took him Jochabed his Father's Sister to wife.] It must be acknowledged that the Hebrew word Dod signifies an Uncle: And therefore some would have the word Dodab in this place, to signify only his Uncle's Daughter. So the Vulgar and the LXX translate it. But Moses tells us to expressly that she was born to Levi

Levi in Egypt, (Numb. xxvi. 59.) that it unavoidably follows she was Sister to Amram's Father. Which the forenamed great Primate maintains (Cap. viii. of the same Book) against Scaliger and Peirerius, who would have Jochabed called Levi's Daughter, only as Epbraim and Manasseh are called Jacob's Sons. Which would make a very easy Sense (as I observed, ii. 1.) if it would consist with those words in Numb. xxvi. 59. whom her Mother (for that must be understood) bare to Levi; which show she was his Daughter. And thus R. Solomon understood it; and so did Tostatus and Cajetan, and divers others whom our Usher there mentions. And see our most Learned Selden, L. v. de Jure N. & G. Cap. ix. p. 584. Which shows how sincere a Writer Moses was, who doth not stick to relate what might be thought in After-ages (when the Law against such Marriages was enacted) a blot to his Family. And it is observable, that he doth not say one Syllable in commendation of his Parents; tho' their Faith deserved the greatest Praise, as the Apostle to the Hebrews shows, xi. 23. But Moses (as Jac. Capellus truly observes, ad A. M. 2481.) did not write for his own Glory, but for the Service of God and of his Church.

And she bare him Aaron and Moses.] This shows that God exactly fulfilled his Promise of delivering the Israelites out of Servitude in the fourth Generation, Gen. xv. 16. (i. e. the fourth from their Descent into Egypt) for Moses was the fourth from Levi; being his great Grandson.

And the Years of the Life of Amram were an hundred and thirty and seven Years.] The very same Age with his Grandfather Levi, ver. 16.

Ver. 21. And the Sons of Izhar, Korah, &c.] He gives an account of his Uncle's Sons, but saith not one word here of his own: Who were not to succeed him in his Place and Dignity, nor to be advanced to any other Office. Such was his Humility, and generous Love to his Country, that he only fought the Good of that, but nothing for his own Family.

Ver. 22. And the Sons of Uzziel, &c.] This was another of his Uncles; whose Posterity he mentions, that it might be seen how God blessed the Tribe of Levi; notwithstanding the Sin he had committed at Shechem, and the Punishment his Father denounced against him for it, Gen. xlix. He saith nothing of Hebron, another of his Father's Brothers, because perhaps he died childless, or his Children had no Issue.

Ver. 23. And Aaron took him Eliseba, Daughter of Aminadab, Sister of Naashon, to wife.] Tho' he says nothing here of himself, yet he relates particularly what concerned Aaron; who, he shows, was match'd into an honourable Family, with a Sister of a Prince of the Tribe of Judah, chief Commander of their Host when they were come out of Egypt, Numb. i. 7. ii. 3. The knowledge of this he thought might breed in Posterity a greater Reverence to the Priesthood, which was settled in the Family of Aaron.

And she bore him Nadab and Abihu.] These two perished in the very first Sacrifice which their Father offered; because they did not take Fire from the Altar, but offered with strange Fire, Lev. x. 1, 2.

Eleazar.] Who succeeded his Father in the Priesthood (Numb. xx. 25, &c.) and assisted Joshua in the Division of the Land of Canaan, Josb. xiv. 1. xix. 51. xxi. 1. From him sprung Zadok, and the following High-Priests, till the Destruction of Jerusalem, 1 Chron. vi. 4, &c.

And Ithamar,] From whom came Eli, and Abimelech, and Abiathar, (in the time of David) in whom this Family was extinct.

Ver. 24. And the Sons of Korah, &c.] Tho' he himself perished in his Rebellion against Moses, who was his Cousin-German, yet his Family remained (Numb. xxvi. 58.) and were famous in the days of David; being often mentioned in the Book of Psalms.

Ver. 25. And Eleazar took one of the Daughters of Putiel to wife.] Who this Putiel was, is not certain. Dr. Lightfoot thinks he was an Egyptian Convert, whose Daughter Eleazar married. But I see no good ground for this Opinion, but rather think it more likely, Eleazar would marry one of the Race of Abraham, being Son to the High-Priest. He was married indeed before his Father was promoted to that Dignity; yet Aaron was so great a Man in his own Tribe, (see iv. 14.) and married into so honourable a Family in Israel, ver. 23. that it is not probable he would suffer his Son to match with an Egyptian Profelyte.

These are the Heads of the Fathers of the Levites, &c.] The great Persons, from whom sprung the principal Families among the Levites. He saith nothing of the other Tribes; because his Intention was only to derive his own Pedigree and his Brother Aaron's from Israel.

Ver. 26. These are that Moses and Aaron, to whom the Lord said, Bring out the Children of Israel, &c.] These are the two Persons, to whom God gave Commission to be the Deliverers of their Nation out of the Egyptian Bondage. He had mentioned, just before their Genealogy, the Charge God gave them, both to the Children of Israel, and to Pharaoh, ver. 13. And now he goes on to show that they were the Men who were peculiarly chosen by God to discharge that Office; first by going to the Children of Israel, which he mentions here, and then to Pharaoh, which he mentions in the next Verse.

Bring out the Children of Israel from the Land of Egypt.] Assure them of their Deliverance, notwithstanding the Pressures under which they groan.

According to their Armies.] Not by a disorderly Flight, but every Family in such good order as an Army keeps, Exod. xii. 41, 51. xiii. 18.

Ver. 27. These are they that spake to Pharaoh, &c.] Who carried the Message from God to Pharaoh, requiring him to let Israel go out of Egypt, ver. 1, 2, &c. vi. 13.

These are that Moses and Aaron.] He repeats it again, that all Generations might mark who were the Men that God employed in this great and hazardous Work of demanding the Liberty of the Children of Israel from Pharaoh's Servitude; and effecting it in such manner, as is afterward related in this Book.

There have been Critical Wits, who made this an Argument, that Moses was not the Author of these Books; because it is not likely, they they imagine he would write thus of himself; but no Body but these Criticks can see an Absurdity in it, that he and his Brother being the Instruments in God's Hand of effecting such wonderful Things, should not let Posterity be ignorant of it, but take care not only to record it, but to set a special Note upon it, that none might rob them of the Honour God bestow'd on them; and he (by whose Direction this was written) might have the Glory of working such mighty Things by such inept Instruments, as Moses often acknowledges himself to have been; nor is this more than Ezra, Nebemiah and Daniel say concerning themselves; and St. John may as well be deny'd to be the Author of the Gospel which bears his Name, because he saith, This is the Disciple that testifieth these things, &c. xxi. 24. And besides this, the History of succeeding Ages shews us the Necessity of this which Moses hath said of himself; for if he had not told us what his Progeny was, we see by what we read in Justin and Corn. Tacitus, and such like Authors, what false Accounts we should have of him; for Justin, from Trogus Pompeius, makes him (as I observ'd before) the Son of Joseph; nay, the Jewish Writers have been so fabulous, that we should have learn'd as little Truth from them, if Moses had not told it us himself.

Ver. 28. And it came to pass on the Day when the Lord spake unto Moses, &c.] Having finish'd the Account he thought fit to give of himself and of his Brother, whom God was pleas'd to employ in this great Embassy, he resumes the Relation of it, which he broke off at the end of ver. 13.

Ver. 29. That the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, I am the Lord, &c.] This and the next Verse seem to be a Recapitulation of what God said in his last Appearances to him, ver. 2, 10, &c. and of his desire to be excus'd from the Employment on which he was sent, urg'd by two Arguments, ver. 12, 13. where they are related something more largely than they are here in the last Verse of this Chapter; in which he mentions them again, that there might be a clearer Connexion with what God further added for his Encouragement, when he gave him the fore-named Charge, ver. 13. to deliver a new Message to Pharaoh.

Ver. 30. And Moses said before the Lord.] We read the very same ver. 12. which makes me think this is not a new Objection, but merely a Recital of what he had objected there. See what I have said on the foregoing Verse.

Behold, I am of uncircumcised Lips, &c.] See ver. 12.

CHAP. VII.

Ver. 1. AND the Lord said unto Moses.] He receiv'd new Orders from the Schochinah, or divine Majesty, before whom he stood, vi. 12, 30.

See.] Mark what I say in answer to all thy Objections.

I have made thee a God to Pharaoh.] Therefore why shouldst thou fear to appear before him, who is but a Man? Moses is not called absolutely a God, but only a God unto Pharaoh; which denotes that he had only the Authority and Power of God over him; or rather, he was God's Ambassador, to speak to him in his Name, with a Power ready to execute all that he desired, for the humbling of Pharaoh, and punishing his Disobedience to his Message.

And Aaron thy Brother shall be thy Prophet.] Let therefore the Uncircumcision of thy Lips be no longer an Objection, for he shall interpret thy Mind, as Prophets declare the Mind of God.

Some slight Wits have from this Place also drawn an Argument, that this Book was not written by Moses, but by some other Author long after his Time; because the Word Nabi, they fancy, was not now in use to signify a Prophet, as appears, say they, from 1 Sam. ix. 9. where it is said, He that is now called (Nabi) a Prophet, was before-time called (Roeh) a Seer; which seems to signify that the Word Nabi (which Moses here uses for a Prophet) was but newly come into Use in Samuel's Days; but this is very far from Samuel's Meaning, whose plain Sense is this, that he who foretold Things to come, or discover'd Secrets, was anciently called a Seer, not a Prophet; which signify'd heretofore only an Interpreter of the divine Will; but now they began in Samuel's Days to apply the Word Nabi (or Prophet) to those who could reveal any Secret, or foresee Things future; which had not been the Use of the Word formerly, but it signify'd, as I said, one that was familiar with God, and knew his Mind, and deliver'd it to others, as I observ'd upon Gen. xx. 7. where God himself calls Abraham a Prophet, as he here calls Aaron; and what holy Writer would dare to alter the Word which God himself us'd? which is far more proper also to this Purpose than either Roeh or Chefeh (which these Men fancy were the Words in use in Moses's Time, not Nabi) for they do not answer the Intention of God in this Speech concerning Aaron; who was not to see, and divine, or to receive Revelations from God, but to be a Mouth to Moses, to utter what God reveal'd to him, not to Aaron; which is the original Signification of the Word Nabi, there being no Derivation of it so natural, that I can find, as that of R. Solomon's from the Word Nub, which signifies to utter, or to bring forth, Prov. x. 31.

Ver. 2. Thou shalt speak all that I command thee, &c.] This explains the latter end of the former Verse, that Moses should deliver God's Mind to Aaron, and Aaron should deliver it to Pharaoh, requiring him from God to dismiss the Children of Israel out of his Country.

Ver. 3. And I will harden Pharaoh's Heart.] Or, but I will harden, &c. which Avenarius translates, I will permit his Heart to be harden'd; tho' there is no need of it, for God here only foretels what Pharaoh would force him to do (see iv. 21.) after several Signs and Wonders had been wrought to move him to Obedience; for he was so stupid, and harden'd his Heart so often (viii. 15, 32.) that in conclusion God harden'd him, by withdrawing all good Motions from him; and therefore the first time that Jehovah is said to harden his Heart, there is a special Remem-branch of this, that the Lord had foretold it, ix. 12.

And multiply my Signs and my Wonders, &c.] The first Plagues that were inflicted on him proving ineffectual, it was necessary to send more, and greater, that, if it had been possible, his Heart might have been mollified.

Ver. 4. But Pharaoh will not hearken unto you.] Or rather, And Pharaoh shall not hearken to your Demands; for this was the Effect of his hardening.

That I may lay my Hand upon Egypt.] Smite all their First-born, upon which immediately followed their March out of Egypt.

And bring forth mine Armies, &c.] All the Tribes of the Children of Israel, which were so multiply'd, that every one of them singly made an Army. See vi. 26.

By great Judgments.] That is, grievous Plagues, which he inflicted on them one after another, and thereby made good his Word, that Moses should be a God to Pharaoh, ver. 1. that is, a Judge, as the Word Elohim sometimes signifies. See vi. 6.

Ver. 5. And the Egyptians shall know that I am the Lord.] Be convinc'd or made sensible that none can withstand me.

When I stretch forth my Hand against Egypt, &c.] This was most especially fulfill'd when he smote their First-born, which made them look upon themselves as lost Men if they continu'd disobedient, xii. 33.

Ver. 6. And Moses and Aaron did as the Lord commanded them, so did they.] He repeats what he saith of their Obedience to God's Commands, because from this Time forward they no longer disputed, nor made any Objection, but roundly went about their Business.

Ver. 7. And Moses was Fourscore Years old, &c.] The Israelites were under an heavy Persecution when Moses was born, and God exercised their Patience (it appears by this) a very long Time, that their Deliverance might be for ever remember'd with the greater Thankfulness and Obedience. Such grave Persons as these were fittest to be employ'd as God's Commissioners in this Affair, for they could not well be thought to be hot-headed Men, who thrust themselves forward into this Embassy without a Warrant. So some of the Jews very judiciously have observ'd, that God made choice of aged Men to work all his Miracles before Pharaoh, and to receive his Revelations, because they were not apt to invent, nor to be under the Power of Fancy at those Years. See Sepher Cosri, L. i. §. 83. where Buxtorf notes, that Aben Ezra observes upon this Place, That none besides Moses and Aaron ever prophesied in their Old Age, because they were more excellent than all the Prophets.

Ver. 8. And the Lord spake unto Moses and Aaron, saying.] When they were about to renew their Address to Pharaoh, God was pleas'd again to appear, and give them his Directions in their Proceedings.

Ver. 9. When Pharaoh shall speak unto you, saying, Shew a Miracle for you.] It was likely that Pharaoh would, when he was not in a Passion, ask, How shall I know that you come from God with this Message to me? Give me some Proof of your Authority, and such a Proof as can be done by none but by the Power of God; and therefore God directs Moses what to do in this Case.

Say unto Aaron, Take thy Rod.] The same Rod is sometimes call'd the Rod of God (iv. 20.) sometimes Moses's Rod, and sometimes Aaron's, as we find it in many Places, ver. 10, 19, of this Chapter, and viii. 5, 19, &c. because God wrought all the following Miracles by this Rod, which sometimes Moses and sometimes Aaron held in their Hand; but commonly Moses delivered it unto Aaron, as an Agent under him, to stretch it out for the effecting of Wonders; for he tells Pharaoh in this very Chapter, that with the Rod which was in his Hand he would smite the Waters, &c. ver. 17. and immediately the Lord bad him say unto Aaron, Take thy Rod, and stretch out thy Hand upon the Waters of Egypt, ver. 19. by which it appears he had deliver'd the Rod unto Aaron; for a Rod being the Ensign of Authority, Prophets were wont to carry one in their Hand, in token of their Office; and so did the Egyptian Magicians also, who had every one their Rod ready to throw down, ver. 12. And Mercury, whom the Egyptians counted a Prophet (and thence called him Anubis) was represented with a Wand in his Hand.

And cast it before Pharaoh.] As God had before directed Moses, iv. 3, 21.

Ver. 10. And Moses and Aaron went in unto Pharaoh, and did so as the Lord commanded them.] At their first Address to Pharaoh they only deliver'd their Message, but did nothing to confirm it, v. 1, &c. nor were they commanded now to work any Miracle, unless Pharaoh demanded one; which it is likely he did, this second Address to him moving him to ask, How shall I know that you come from God?

And Aaron cast down his Rod before Pharaoh, and before his Servants.] The great Men of the Court, who are always suppos'd to be present where the King was, tho' not mention'd in the foregoing Verse.

And it became a Serpent.] See iv. 3. where we read, that Moses himself, when this Change was first made, fled from before it, the Sight of it was so terrible; and therefore it is highly probable that Pharaoh and his Servants were no less startled at the first Appearance of it. Artapanus relates several other Miracles besides this, in Eusebius's Præpar. Evang. p. 434, 435, and 441. which I mention, to shew that the Fame of Moses's Miracles was spread among the Heathen; who were so far from disbelieving them, that they gave Credit to other false Reports which some ill People had mingled with them.

Ver. 11. Then Pharaoh also called the Wise Men.] When he had recover'd the Fright, in which we may well suppose him to have been, he sent some of his Servants to call in those who he thought could cope with Moses and Aaron in wonderful Works.

Wise Men.] This Word is sometimes used in a good Sense; and therefore to shew they were such such as we now call Cunning-men, he joins another word to it, which is never taken in a good sense.

Sorcerers.] Which most take to be such as we call Jugglers; who cast mists, as we speak, before Mens Eyes, and make things appear otherwise than they really are. For the Hebrew word Cisebeph (from whence comes Macasebephim, which we translate Sorcerers) signifies to delude the Sight with false Appearances. Sir John Marsbam puts these two words together, and (by the Figure of ה' ד' D' d 2

Now the Magicians of Egypt.] This is a third word, which seems to be of worse import than the two former. Some translate it Necromancers: But it being a foreign word, we cannot determine its particular meaning; tho' in general, no doubt, it signifies Men that by evil Arts performed amazing things; such as Simon Magus and Elymas in after-times. See Gen. xli. 8. and Bochart in his Hieroicoicon (P. ii. L. iv. Cap. 18.) where he hath a large Discourse about the meaning of this word Chartumim; which, after all that others have said about it, he thinks comes from the word Retan, which in Arabick and Chaldeæ signifies to murmur, as Magicians were wont to do in their Incantations. So Hartun is properly ἑμάρτης, an Inchanter. And the Name of Ἑκτα (the same with Hecate) he thinks alludes to it; whom Magicians were wont frequently to invoke.

The Names of the principal Magicians at this time among the Egyptians, were Jannes and Jambres, as not only St. Paul, 2 Tim. iii. 8. but several, both Jewish, Greek, and Roman Writers, tell us. I will mention but one, the Author of Sebalzeb Hakkabalab, who calls them by these Names; and saith, that in our Language we would call them Johannes and Ambrosius. The Reader may find a great many more if he please, in Primare Usber's Annals ad A. M. 2513. and in Bochart's Hierozoic. P. i. L. ii. c. 53. p. 645. Artapanus in Eusebius calls them, ἱερεῖς ὑπὲρ Μίμνρον, Priests at Memphis, whom Pharaon sent to oppose Moses.

The Original of which sort of Men seems to have been this: That God being pleased to admit the Holy Patriarchs to familiar Colloquies with him, the Devil endeavoured to imitate him, that he might keep Men in his obedience by pretending Discoveries of secret things to them. And when God was pleased to work Miracles for the confirmation of the Truth, the Devil directed these Men, who were familiar with him, how to invoke his help for the performance of strange things, which confirmed them in their Errors.

They also did in like manner with their Incantations.] If the Hebrew word come from labat, which signifies a flame, (See Gen. iii. 24.) it seems to denote such Sorcerers as dazled Mens Eyes, and then imposed on them by shows and appearances of things which had no real being. But it may be derived from labat, which signifies bidden and secret; and then denotes those that used secret Whispers or Murmurs, as Inchanters did (as Bochartus in this place now mentioned interprets it) or such as had secret Familiarity with Dæmons, as it is expounded in the Gemara Sanbedrin, cap. vii. n. 10. where there are many Examples of the former sort of Incantments, by the deception of the Sight. For instance, R. Asche relates that he saw a Magician blow his Nose, and bring pieces of Cloth out of it. And R. Chajab saw one cut a Camel in pieces with his Sword, and then set it together again: Which was nothing, saith he, but the delusion of the Eye. Several other Stories are told of the same nature.

Ver. 12. For they cast down every Man his Rod.] They were sent for to confront Moses, and therefore attempted to do the very same thing that he had done. For they took him for a mere Magician, like themselves; and it was a common thing in ancient times for such kind of Men to contend one with another. And their great study was (as Gaulmyn hath observed in his Notes upon The Life and Death of Moses, written by a Jew, p. 241, &c.) to find out the Genius that attended their Opposer; whom they strove to gain to their side, or to terrify him by a greater and more powerful Angel. And they only were insuperable who had a Deity to their Genius; as Porphyry saith Plotinus had. Who contending with Olympius an Egyptian, when his Genius was called, ὁς αὐτοῦ ἐστίν, to appear visibly; there came a God, and not a Dæmon: Which made the Egyptian cry out, Μακάριος ὁς αὐτοῦ ἐστίν ὁ θεός, he is happy who hath a God for his Genius, as I suppose it should be interpreted. And thus the Jewish Author of The Life and Death of Moses fancies that these Magicians, who resisted Moses, turned over all their Books to find out the Name of that Deity, by which he did Wonders so much superior to theirs, &c.

And they became Serpents.] Not real Serpents, but seeming, as Josephus understood it, and several Christian Writers; particularly Sedulius, L. iv. Carm.

— — — — — imagine feta,
Vifibus humanis Magicas tribuere figuras.

I omit other ancient Authors, who suppose that as Spirits can assume Bodies like Men, so they can as easily, out of the same Air, make the appearance of a Serpent; just as Circe is said in Homer to have changed Ulysses's Companions into Hogs. But there are those who take these to have been real Serpents, brought hither by the Power of the Devil: Who withdrew their Rods, and put these (which he suddenly transported from some other place) in their room. Which, if it be true, it makes the Power that was wrought by Moses the more wonderful; whose Serpent devoured them all.

But Aaron's Rod swallowed up their Rods.] The Serpent, into which Aaron's Rod was turned, moved towards them, and eat them up. Which was, as I said, the more astonishing, if they were real Serpents of the same bigness (as we may well suppose they would endeavour to bring) with that of Moses. However their Serpents (whatsoever they were) could not stand before his; but were swallowed up, while his still remained. This might have convinced Pharaoh, if his Magicians had not made him believe, that they would in time find a Power superior to Moses. The Jews also imagine Pharaoh himself was a Magician; and help'd to get out of Moses the Secret whereby he wrought these Wonders. Which were the greater, because Moses, no doubt, in conclusion, took this Serpent by the Tail (as God had commanded him, iv. 4.) and it became a Rod in his Hand again. Whereas the Egyptian Sorcerers had no Rods remaining to take up, they being vanished with their Serpents. Greg. Nyssen, L. de Vita Moysi, p. 173. takes the devouring of their Rods to have been a plain Argument, ἐπὶ ἰσχυρίαν ἀμυντικῶς ἔπε ζῶπκὴν πνα δύναμιν ἔχον οἱ τὴ γούτων ῥάβδοι, πλὴν τῶ ῥήματι, &c. that the Rods, i. e. Serpents of the Magicians, had no vital Power in them able to defend themselves, but were mere Delusions without any real virtue. And here I cannot but take notice of a remarkable Passage in Numenius a Pythagorean Philosopher, recorded by Eusebius, L. ix. Præpar. Evang. Cap. 8. where he tells us, that Numenius (in his third Book περὶ ἀγαθῶ) expressly saith, 'That Jannes and Jambres were, ἀγύπτιοι ἰσχυροματῆς, inferior to none in Magical Skill; and therefore chosen by the common consent of the Egyptians, to oppose Museus (as the Heathens call Moses) the Leader of the Jews: Of whom he gives this noble Character, That he was a Man most powerful with God in Prayer, ἀνδρὲς γενόμενοι Θεῷ εὐχάσθαι δυνατοτάτω.' Which is a plain Confession, that he took Moses to be, as he is called in these Books, a Man of God; and may serve to shame those, who either believe not this History, or think Moses to have been only a great Magician.

Ver. 13. And he hardened Pharaoh's heart: Or rather Pharaoh's heart was hardened.] For so we translate this very Hebrew Phrase, ver. 22. and I can give no account why we translate it otherwise here. Especially since the Vulgar and the Chaldee so render it, and the LXX also in this Verse, καρῆνεν ἡ καρδία Φαραώ, Pharaoh's heart grew stiff; or, waxed strong and stubborn. And ver. 22. ἐσκληρύνθη ἡ καρδία Φαραώ, his heart was hardened. And it is plainly the like form of Speech with that in the next Verse 14. where God himself interprets his own meaning, Pharaoh's heart βεβήνται is heavy, and will not stir. Nor is there in any of these three Verses, the least mention of any Person by whom his Heart was hardened.

That he hearkened not unto them, as the Lord had said.] It is likely upon the first sight of the Serpent, his Heart was inclined to hearken; but seeing the Magicians do the same, it returned to its first bent, and there fixed, notwithstanding Moses's Rod devoured theirs. This God had predicted, iii. 19. knowing his wicked Disposition would not yield to any means he should think fit to use for his Reformation.

Ver. 14. And the LORD said unto Moses, &c.] It is likely Moses, after he had been with Pharaoh, and wrought this Miracle, returned to the Place where the Divine Majesty was wont to appear unto him, (vi. 12, 30.) and gave him an account of what had passed. Whereupon the LORD told him, he saw Pharaoh was resolved in his way; and therefore it would be to no purpose to wait to see what would be the effect of the late Miracle: But bid him go the next Morning, and carry a threatening Message to him.

Pharaoh's heart is hardened, he refuseth to let the People go.] It is observable that he doth not say, I have hardened Pharaoh's heart (and therefore there should have been no such intimation in our Translation of ver. 13.) but Pharaoh's heart is hardened. Which can imply no other hardening, than what proceeded from his own settled Resolution not to lose the Service of the Israelites.

Ver. 15: Get thee unto Pharaoh in the Morning.] Of the very next Day, after he had wrought the foregoing Miracle: And now begins the first of the Ten Plagues which God sent upon the Egyptians, for disobeying his Ambassadors. Whose Treaty with Pharaoh as Jacobus Capellus (ad A. M. 2502.) thinks, continued about Eleven Months; from the end of Harvest (which he makes account was in our May) to the beginning of the next Year: Which is the Opinion of the Hebrew Doctors. But our excellent Primate Usher thinks that all the following Plagues were inflicted within the space of One Month, in such order of time, as I shall observe in the beginning of each of them. And Bochartus gives good reason for it, in his Hierozyic. P. ii. L. iv. Cap. 8. For we are told here, ver. 7. that Moses was four-score years old when he began to treat with Pharaoh; and Josh. v. 6. that they walked forty years in the Wilderness. Now if he had spent a Year in inflicting these Plagues, Moses, who died just as they were entering into Canaan, must have been an hundred and one and twenty years old: Whereas he was but an hundred and twenty, as we read, Deut. xxxiv. 5. Nor was it suitable to the Divine Goodness to be so long in delivering his People, who were reduced to extreme Misery. It was but just also, that God should follow Pharaoh, whose heart was so obstinately hard, with one Plague upon the neck of another; and give him no time to breathe, after one was removed, before another came upon him.

Lo he goeth out unto the water.] God, who knows all things, foresaw his motion beforehand; and speaks as if he then saw him actually going out of his Palace to the River: Either to walk there for Recreation; or to worship the River Nile. For as Bochart (whose words these are) observes out of Plutarch, ἵδεν ἔτι πρὶν Αἰγυπτίους ὡς ὁ Νεῖλος, Nothing was had in such honour among the Egyptians as the River Nile. If it was so in Moses's days, it is not unlikely that he went to pay his Morning Devotions to it. Or, if he were a Magician, as the Hebrews fancy, he might be skilled in that which they call ὁστρομαντεία. For so, he observes, they say in the Talmud: and make this the reason of Pharaoh's going to the River. Which Jonathan follows in his Paraphrase, Behold, he goeth out to observe Divinations upon the Water; as a Magician, Hierozyic. P. ii. L. iv. Cap. 15.

And thou shalt stand by the River's brink against he come.] Perhaps Pharaoh (as the same Bochart observes) had forbid him to come any more to the Court, and so God directs him to take this occasion to meet with him.

*And the Rod which was turned into a Serpent shalt thou take in thine hand.] To give him the greater Authority, and to put Pharaoh in fear at the sight of that Rod, which had lately swallowed up all the γυναικὲς ἑούλα (as Greg. Nyssen calls them) Magical Staves which encountered him.*

Ver. 16. And thou shalt say, the LORD God of the Hebrews hath sent me unto thee, saying.] See v. 3. To which add, That it is plain by this whole Story, that all the Messages delivered by Moses, and all the Answers which Pharaoh returned, were true and formal Treaties of a solemn Embassy (as Dr. Jackson speaks) upon which Moses was sent to the King of Egypt, from the LORD God of the Hebrews; that is, their King (as he was become in a peculiar manner) under whom Moses acted as his Deputy or Viceroy.

Let my People go, that they may serve me, &c.] The merciful Kindness of God to an hardened Sinner is here very remarkable, in renewing his Message, and giving him warning of what would come upon him if he did not yield: Whereas he might in justice have inflicted it, without any notice of his Intentions. He sets before him also his Sin, and his Danger in being hitherto disobedient; and behold, hitherto thou wouldst not hear; i. e. thou hast provoked the Divine Majesty, by disregarding several Messages I have brought to thee from him.

Ver. 17. Thus saith the LORD,] Attend to this new Message I bring to thee in his Name.

In this thou shalt know that I am the LORD.] He had ask'd in a contemptuous way, Who is the LORD? and said after a supercilious manner, I know him not, (ver. 2.) nor indeed cared to know him, but slighted him and his Messengers; as the word know not sometimes signifies, being as much as not to regard. Therefore now he bids Moses tell him, He would make him know that he was the Omnipotent LORD of the World, by the change of the Waters of the River (which Pharaoh perhaps adored) into Blood.

Behold, I will smite with the Rod that is in mine hand.] God and Moses are represented in this History as one Person (according to what he had said, ver. 1. of this Chapter) and therefore it was the same thing to say, the LORD (whose words Moses had begun to recite) will smite, or to say, I will smite. See ver. 16. It is to be observed also, that Aaron smote the River, ver. 19. but it being by Moses's Direction and Order, it was counted his Act; so that he might say, I will smite, &c.

The Waters of the River, and they shall be turned into Blood.] This Plague was the more remarkable, because, as Theodoret here observes, they having drowned the Hebrew Children in this River, God now punishes them for it, by giving them bloody Water to drink, Wisd. xii. 7, 8. And if they had the same Notions then, that the Egyptians had in future times, the Plague was the more terrible, because it fell on that which they thought had some Divinity in it, and (as the same Theodoret observes) was honoured as a God; because it made Plenty, when it overflow'd its Banks.

The Hebrew Doctors add another reason for this Punishment; because the Egyptians had hindered them from their wonted Baptisms, (as the Author of The Life and Death of Moses speaks) that is, saith Gaulmyn, from purifying themselves in the River by Bathing, after they had lain in of their Children: Which, in the scarcity of Water in that Country, could no where be done but in the River.

Ver. 18. And the Fish that is in the River shall die, &c.] Here are three grievous Effects of this Plague: It deprived them of their most delicious Food, for so their Fish were, Numb. xi. 5. And took away the Pleasure they had of washing by the River's side, because it stank (both by the death of the Fish, and the corruption of the Blood thro' the heat of the Sun) by which means the Water was made unfit for their Drink.

Ver. 19. And the LORD spake unto Moses.] After he had been with Pharaoh, and delivered this Message to him.

Say unto Aaron, Take thy Rod and stretch out thy hand.] This Warning being despised by Pharaoh, who would not relent, God requires them actually to do as he had threatened. And now Moses had delivered his Rod to Aaron, that he might by his Authority execute this Judgment.

Upon the Waters of Egypt.] These are general Words, comprehending all the Particulars following.

Upon their Streams.] There were seven Branches into which the River Nile was divided, before it fell into the Sea; which seem to be here understood, being called, Isa. xi. 15. the seven Streams, or Rivers, of Egypt.

Upon their Rivers.] There were several Cuts made by Art, out of every Stream, to draw the Water into their Grounds: Which seem to be here meant by Rivers.

And upon their Ponds.] These were digged to hold Rain-water when it fell, as it did sometimes: And near the River also, they digged Wells, it is likely, which may be here intended.

And upon all Pools of Water.] There were, here and there, other Collections of Water; particularly in their Gardens, derived by Pipes from the River, into Cisterns.

In Vessels of Wood, or of Stone,] Wherein Water was kept in private Houses for their present Use.

Ver. 20. And Moses and Aaron did so, as the LORD commanded, &c.] This first Plague our Primate Usher makes account was inflicted about the 18th Day of the sixth Month; which, in the next Year, and ever after, became the twelfth Month. Artapanus tells this Story otherwise; but it is evident he had heard of it among the Geniiles: And Ezekiel the Tragedian relates it all right, together with the following Miracle: See Euseb. Præpar. Evngg. L. ix. cap. xxix. p. 442. Nor is there any thing more frequent in the Roman Story (as Huetius observes, L. ii.

L. iii. Alnet. Quæst. cap. xii. n. 12.) than Relations of Rivers of Blood flowing out of the Earth; Pits full of Blood, Showers of Blood, and Waters of Rivers changed into Blood, &c.

And he lift up the Rod, and smote the Waters that were in the River, &c.] Here is mention only of smiting the Water in the River. And it is likely, that only the Waters of the River were turned into Blood (as it here follows) at the first lifting up of his Rod; and then all the rest of the Waters mentioned in the precedent Verse.

Ver. 21. And the Fish that was in the River died, &c.] All the Effects of this Plague which were threatned, ver. 18. (see there) immediately following. The first of which was the death of the Fish; which perished in such great numbers, that the River stank, &c.

And there was Blood throughout all the Land of Egypt.] The Waters were in all places turned into Blood, except perhaps the Land of Goshen: which is not comprehended under the Land of Egypt.

Ver. 22. And the Magicians of Egypt did so with their Incantments.] See ver. 11. In some of the Pools or Lakes of Water they made an appearance of the like Change: Which made Pharaoh think his God was as powerful as the God of the Hebrews. The Land of Goshen, as I said, might possibly be free from this Plague; as it was certainly from several of the rest; (viii. 23. ix. 4, &c.) and some fancy the Magicians had Water from thence, to shew their Power upon. But I cannot think it probable that they made Pharaoh stay so long: And one may as well say they had it out of the Sea, or out of the Pits that the People digged, ver. 24. as Aben Ezra conjectures, and Justin Martyr, Quæst. & Resp. xxvi. ad Oribodox. But there is no need of any of these Conjectures, if it be granted (as the History leads us to conclude) that Moses did not in a moment change all the Waters of the Country, but only those of the River (as I said on ver. 20.) and afterwards by degrees all the rest; when the Magicians had tried their Art upon some of them. Which Moses also turned into real Blood; so that neither they, nor any body else, was able to drink of them.

And Pharaoh's heart was hardened.] The very same words in the Hebrew, which we had before, ver. 13. where they should have been translated (I there observed) as they are here; and also in viii. 19.

Neither did he hearken unto them, as the LORD had said.] iii. 19. This was more apt to move his Heart than the former Miracle, because it continued longer, ver. 25. and the Magicians could not by all their Spells, or Skill in Sorcery, remove this Plague in all that time. See next Verse.

Ver. 23. And Pharaoh turned and went unto his House.] It seems that upon this refusal to hearken unto Moses's Monition (ver. 15, 16, &c.) God sent this Plague that very Morning before he got home to dinner. So that there was not time to fetch Water from distant Places; but the Magicians exercise their Inchantments upon some Ponds, which were not as yet turned by Moses into Blood.

Neither set he his heart to this also.] Here is the reason why his Heart was not moved by this Miracle. He did not seriously consider what Moses had done, and examine the Difference between the Effect of his Power, and that of the Magicians. Which was the cause that his heart was hardened (as we read before) as all Mens are, who will think of nothing but only to have their own Humour satisfied.

Ver. 24. And all the Egyptians digged round about the River for Water to drink, &c.] The whole Country was forced to try to get Water to quench their thirst by this great Labour. How it succeeded we are not told; but it is likely they found clear Water, by Percolation thro' the Earth. For Moses smote only the Pits that were then in being when Aaron stretched out his Rod; which had no effect upon those which were digged afterwards. Why they did not fetch it from Goshen, if there was any clear Water there (as we cannot but think there was, for the use of the Israelites) is not easy to determine. Their Pride perhaps would not suffer them, till they had tried other ways to supply their wants.

Ver. 25. And seven days were fulfilled, after that the LORD had smitten the River.] The Rod of Moses could effect nothing without the LORD, by whose Power this Change was made in the Waters: Which lasted seven Days before this Plague was removed. By which means they were convinced that all the Waters were really corrupted: And they felt the heavy Effects of it, in a grievous Stench, and perpetual Labour in digging Pits all about the River. Whether Pharaoh at last begged to have this Plague removed, or no, we are not told. It is likely he was so obstinate, that he would not stoop to ask this Favour of them; which might be the reason it lasted so long, to see whether he would be moved to humble himself so far. To which, when he would not yield, God took it away to make room for another Stroke; or, as some think, it continued together with the Plague of Frogs, and were both removed upon his Petition.

It is a weak Conjecture of the Hebrew Doctors, from these Words, that all the ten Plagues lasted seven days apiece; which is plainly contrary to the Story.

CHAP. VIII.

Ver. 1. AND the LORD spake unto Moses.] Who attended upon the Divine Majesty, we may reasonably suppose, every day, to know his Pleasure. And after the seven days (mentioned ver. 25. of the foregoing Chapter) were fulfilled, the LORD commanded him to address himself again to Pharaoh, and to threaten him with a new Punishment: Which was inflicted upon the 25th Day of the sixth Month, and taken away the Day after, ver. 10.

Go unto Pharaoh, and say unto him, Thus saith the LORD, &c.] The very same Message, in effect, effect which he had deliver'd to him before, v. i. vii. 16, 17.

Ver. 2. And if thou refuse to let them go, be-hold, &c.] He again threatens the Plague before he inflicts it, both that Pharaoh might know it came not by Chance, but by the determinate Counsel of God, and that he might prevent it, by Repentance and Submission to God's Command.

I will smite.] This Word commonly signifies, in the Scripture Language, to kill; but here, only to afflict grievously. See Psalm lxxviii. 45. where to destroy them, signifies to annoy them.

All thy Borders.] Every Part of his Country, to the utmost Extent of it, i. e. in all Places where the Egyptians dwelt; for it is not likely the Israelites were infested with them. See ver. 4.

With Frogs.] The Hebrew Word Tsapbadéa signifies, as Aben Ezra thinks, an Egyptian Fish, which some will have to be a Crocodile, as Gaul-myn observes in his Annotations on the Life and Death of Moses, p. 256. but this is undoubtedly false, for they could not infest them in that manner as is describ'd in the next Verse.

Ver. 3. And the River shall bring forth.] Under the Name of the River is comprehended all the Streams, Ponds, Lakes, and other Waters in Egypt (as appears from ver. 5.) for most of them came, one way or other, out of the River, they having little Rain in Egypt.

Frogs abundantly.] The Nile naturally produc'd Frogs, but such great Abundance of them as filled the Country was miraculous, especially being produc'd on a sudden; and their going out of the River and Fields into the Cities and Houses, &c. was still more miraculous.

Which shall go up.] Out of the River, which lay lower than the Land.

And come into thine House, &c.] This explains what he meant by smiting in the foregoing Verse, viz. inflicting a fore Plague, more grievous than the former, for that spoiled only their Water, but not their other Liquors; whereas this made them uneasy Day and Night in every Place, whether they sat, or walk'd, or lay down, or did eat and drink; for their very Dough (as we translate the Word of this Verse in the Margin) was infested with them as soon as they had kneaded it; and so was their Drink in all likelihood as soon as it was pour'd into their Cups; nay, they got into their Ovens; so that for the present, I suppose, they could not bake their Bread.

Ver. 4. And the Frogs shall come up both upon thee and upon thy People, &c.] They came not merely into their Houses, but crawl'd upon their Persons. And here it is observable, that this Plague is limited to the Egyptians (Pharaoh, his People, and Servants) the Israelites, one would think by these Words, being excepted from it.

Ver. 5. And the Lord spake unto Moses, say unto Aaron, &c.] No doubt Moses deliver'd the foregoing Message unto Pharaoh, but he it seems turn'd away, and would give no Answer; for here immediately follows a new Order (which God perhaps gave Moses upon the Spot, as we speak, before he return'd Home) to inflict the Plague he had bid him threaten.

Ver. 6. And Aaron stretched forth his Hand.] He, as the Minister of Moses (who was to him as God, iv. 16.) inflicted this Plague upon Egypt.

Over the Waters.] He did not go to every Place where there was Water, but stood by the River and stretch'd his Rod over it, towards every Part of the Country (as Aben Ezra rightly explains it) and immediately God effected what Moses had denounc'd.

And the Frogs came up and cover'd the Land of Egypt.] That is, there were vast Numbers of them came up, for they did not so cover the Land but there was room for more, which the Magicians counterfeited; the Jews think here was mensura pro mensura, like for like, as we speak; for they say it was a Piece of their Bondage, that the Egyptians, when they pleased, sent them a fishing, and now God made the River spawn nothing but Frogs, whose very croaking, others of them think, put the Egyptians in mind of the Cries of the poor Children, whom they barbarously murder'd.

Ver. 7. And the Magicians did so with their Enchantments, &c.] They should rather have shewn their Skill in removing the Frogs, or destroying those which Moses had brought, which one would think Pharaoh expected from them; for they being unable to do this, he betook himself to Moses, whom he intreats to take them away; which he would never have done, if their Power had not quite fail'd, and been unable to give him any Relief. So Aben Ezra observes, He called for Moses, because he saw the Magicians had only added to the Plague, but could not diminish it.

Ver. 8. Then Pharaoh called for Moses and Aaron, and said, Intreat the Lord, that he may take away the Frogs, &c.] He that had proudly said not long ago, Who is the Lord? &c. ver. 2. now says, Intreat the Lord, &c. This was an Acknowledgment that the Lord sent them, and that he only had Power to remove them. In the former Plague he did enough to make Pharaoh know he was the LORD, vii. 17. but this had that Effect upon him for the present, which made him earnestly intreat those whom he had scorn'd, to become Intercessors to God for him and his People.

And I will let the People go, that they may do Sacrifice unto the Lord.] This was not his settled Resolution, but the present Danger made him consent to it; for if the Frogs had continu'd long there had been no living in the Country, as appears from what we read in Athenæus, out of Heraclides Lembus (Lib. viii. Deipnos. Cap. 2.) who says, the whole Country of Pæonia and Dardania were cover'd with Frogs, which God rain'd down from Heaven in such abundance, that the Houses and High-ways were full of them; they spent some Time in killing of them, and by keeping their Doors shut they made a shift for a while to bear this Calamity; but when it did no good, but γὰρ οὐκ ἔστιν, &c. all their Vessels were full of them, them, and they mingled themselves with their Meat, whether boil'd or roast, and they could tread no where but upon Frogs, they left their Country, being forc'd to it also by the Stench of the Frogs when they dy'd.

They that would see more of this out of several other Authors, may consult Bonfrerius upon this very Place, and Bochartus in his Hierozoic. P. ii. L. v. Cap. 2. p. 661, &c.

Ver. 9. And Moses said unto Pharaoh, Glory over me, when shall I intreat for thee?] Do thou appoint the Time when I shall pray for thee, as St. Hierom translates it, and so doth the Syriack, and Onkelos, and the LXX, who differ from the Hebrew Text in Words only, not in Sense; for by adding the Word saying (as we do in Judges vii. 2. where there is the same Expression) this Paraphrase of Bochart is very proper (Hierozoic. P. ii. L. v. Cap. 2.) "Tho' it belongs not to thee to determine the Time of thy Deliverance, which depends wholly upon the Will and Pleasure of God, yet I, who am his Minister, give thee Leave to take so much upon thee, as to prescribe what Time thou pleasest for the Removal of this Plague." For thus he thinks Moses's Words are to be translated, Glory over me, by telling me when I shall intercede for thee, &c. Moses saw perhaps that Pharaoh was much addicted to Astrologers, who fancy'd all Things here below to be govern'd by the Motion and Influence of the Stars, and therefore would have him name his Time, that he might be satisfied there was no Day nor Hour under such an ill Aspect, but he could prevail with God, at any Moment he thought good to pitch upon, to deliver him.

Bonfrerius I think hath express'd in short the literal Sense of the Hebrew Words, Tibi hunc honorem deferò, ut eligas quando, &c. I will do thee the Honour, that thou may'st assign the Time. And our Dr. Jackson still shorter, Glory over me, that is, faith he, you shall command me.

Ver. 10. And he said, to-morrow.] But why not on that very Day? All Men naturally desiring to be instantly reliev'd from their Sufferings. Perhaps he thought (as we said before) to try Moses's Power, believing the next Day not to be so lucky as the present, on which Moses had condescended to his Request; or it might now be towards Night when he called for Moses, who he thought would expect some Time to pray to God for what he desired.

Be it according to thy Word.] Thou shalt have thy Desire.

That thou may'st know there is none like unto the Lord our God.] May'st no longer depend upon thy Magicians and their Gods, being convinc'd that our God alone, whom we call Jehovah, can wound and heal.

Ver. 11. And the Frogs shall depart from thee, &c.] This demonstrated the Power of Moses with God, that he could as certainly foretel the Removal of the Frogs, as he had done the bringing them upon the Land.

Ver. 12. And Moses and Aaron went out from Pharaoh.] To the Place it is likely where Moses was wont to attend upon the divine Majesty.

And Moses cried unto the Lord because of the Frogs.] In the Hebrew the Words are, cry'd to him about the Business (or the Matter) of the Frogs which God had sent upon Pharaoh; or as Aben Ezra understands it, concerning the Frogs, which he had promised Pharaoh should be removed; as if the Words should be translated thus: He cry'd unto the Lord concerning what he said about the Frogs, and appointed unto Pharaoh; for so the Word Sham in xv. 25. signifies to appoint or propose; and so the LXX here translate the Words (which we render, had brought against Pharaoh) ὡς ἐλάλει καὶ ἐπέταξε, as he had appointed to Pharaoh.

Ver. 13. And the Lord did according to the Word of Moses.] So powerful was he with God in Prayer, as the Heathens themselves observ'd from this Story. See what I observ'd out of Numerius, vii. 12.

And the Frogs died, &c.] The Egyptians could not kill them, but God took away their Breath, yet not removing them from the Places where they were, but leaving them dead there; as appears by what follows.

Ver. 14. And they gathered them together on Heaps.] That they might carry them it is likely into the River, and so they might go down into the Sea; God could have dissolv'd them into Dust (if he had pleas'd) or swept them into the River from whence they came, or made them quite vanish in an Instant; but he would have them lie dead before their Eyes, as a Token they were real Frogs, and no Illusion of their Sight.

And the Land stank.] This was a farther sensible Evidence that they were real Frogs.

Ver. 15. But when Pharaoh saw that there was Respite.] That he was freed from the great Strait in which he was, for the Hebrew Word for Respite signifies breathing or Enlargement, and makes the Sense to be this, that when the Burden that press'd him was taken off, so that he could take his Breath, he was of another Mind, &c.

He harden'd his Heart, and hearken'd not unto them, &c.] Was not so good as his Word (ver. 8.) but return'd to his former Resolution, not to let Israel go; which Resolution grew so much more stubborn and obstinate than it had been before, by how much the Plague of the Frogs had soften'd his Heart, and inclin'd it to yield to God, more than the two former Miracles had done.

Ver. 16. And the Lord said unto Moses, say unto Aaron.] The Lord seems to have given Pharaoh no Warning of this Plague, but to have inflicted it immediately upon the Removal of the Frogs, viz. on the Twenty-seventh Day of the Sixth Month; for his Breach of Faith was such an high Provocation, that he deserved no other Treatment, but a more notable Judgment.

Smite the Dust of the Land, that it may become Lice.] Some would have the Hebrew Word Cinnim to signify Gnats, or some such Kind of Creature; thus many of the Ancients understand it; and Ariapanus calls it ζόνιον ἄλγυνον, a flying Sort of living Creature, which made such Ulcers by its biting as no Medicine could cure. See Eusebius, L. ix. Præpar. Evang. p. 425. But Bochartus Bochartus hath sufficiently proved that our Translation is right; and that out of the very Text. For Gnats, and such like Insects, are bred in Fenny places; but these were brought out of the Dust of the Earth.

Ver. 17. Aaron stretched out his hand with his Rod.] He still is the Instrument to execute all the Judgments which Moses denounced; as he was his Mouth to deliver all the Messages he carried to Pharaoh.

And smote the Dust of the Earth, and it became Lice.] This showed the Lice were not a natural Production; for they come out of the Sweat and Filth of Mens Bodies, and of other Living Creatures.

In Man and Beast.] This proves they were Lice; which stick fast both to Men and Beasts. Whereas Gnats, though they sting sorely, cannot be said to be in Man and Beast: for they are a most restless Creature, continually buzzing about, and never settling constantly in one Place. And there were various Sorts of these Lice: for Beasts do not breed the same that Men do: nor have all Beasts alike; but some are peculiar to Horses, others to Oxen, others to Sheep, and others to Swine and Dogs.

All the Dust of the Land became Lice.] That is, nothing could be seen but Lice, where Dust was before. Or, Lice were mingled every where with the Dust.

Througout all the Land of Egypt.] Not of Goshen (it is very probable) which was inhabited mostly by Israelites.

Ver. 18. And the Magicians did so, &c.] Attempted and endeavoured to do so; by using their wonted Invocations and Rites of Incantation. For the common Saying among the Jews is very frivolous, That Demons have no power over Creatures so small as Lice. The meaning of which, Gaulmyn thinks, they themselves did not understand; which, according to the Principles of the ancient Magick, was this; That all Animals had a particular Genius presiding over them, by whose Assistance their Worshipers could do any Thing among that Sort of Creatures. But this is meant only of perfect Animals, not of Insects (among whom they reckon'd Lice) which had no such heavenly Power waiting on them. But if there had been any such Notions then, these Magicians sure would have understood it; and not fruitlessly have attempted that, which they had no hope to produce.

But they could not.] Though they had counterfeited the former Wonders; yet here a stop is put to their Power, so that they themselves confess their Weakness.

So there were Lice upon Man, and upon Beast.] This seems to suggest, that since they could not produce any new Lice, they attempted to remove those, which Moses had brought upon the Country. But they failed in that also: for notwithstanding all that they could do, both Men and Beasts were pestered with Lice. The Hebrews say (in The Life and Death of Moses) that this Plague was inflicted upon the Egyptians, for another Piece of Oppression which they exercised on the Israelites: to whom they said, Go sweep our Houses, and sweep our Streets, &c. therefore God made Lice to cover the Earth a Cubit deep. But this favours too much of their fabulous Invention. It is more pertinent to observe, that though we read of particular Persons, who, for great Crimes, were punished with the Plague of Lice, (See Huetius, L. ii. Quest. Alnetanae, cap. xii. n. 12.) yet we do not find in any Story a whole Nation infested with them; and that both Men and Beasts, without Exception: the Magicians themselves, in all likelihood, being sorely afflicted with them: which made them cry out as here follows.

Ver. 19. Then the Magicians said unto Pharaoh, This is the Finger of God.] The same with what is called in other Places of Scripture, the Hand of God, Psal. cix. 27. that is, his Power. There are those (particularly Bochartus) who think these Magicians did not by these Words, give Glory to God: but thought to save their own Credit with Pharaoh, by telling him, that it was not Moses or Aaron, who were too hard for them, but a Divine Power superior to them all. To this Purpose Jonathan. But they ought then to have been sensible that the Power which they dealt withal, was far from being Supreme: being unable to assist them upon all Occasions. And, no doubt, God intended to confound them, by taking that Time to disable them, when they least expected it. For why should not their Power have extended to such a small Thing as this, when they had done greater? But God would not let them always abuse Pharaoh with their Illusions; and gave them a Check, when they thought themselves most sure of Success.

And Pharaoh's Heart was hardened.] One would have rather expected to have heard, that his Heart began to relent, when he saw his Magicians not only puzzled, but quite baffled; so that they owned Moses acted by a Power above theirs. But this it was, not to stick to the good Resolutions which had lately been wrought in him, ver. 8. from which he not only revolted, but grew more resolute not to yield to God. The Effect of which was this further Induration: it being natural for evil Men, who resist the Means of their Cure, to grow worse and worse affected.

This Miracle also of the Lice, being more loathsome to Pharaoh, than terrible, might haply be the Reason (as Dr. Jackson conjectures) that he did not intreat Moses and Aaron to pray for him, as he had done upon the Sight of the Frogs; and as he straightway did after he felt the next Plague of the Flies.

I cannot but add also this further Reflection of his (Book x. on the Creed, Chap. xl.) that though the Finger of God was very remarkable in producing the Lice, which the Magicians could not, yet it was no way remarkable in hardening Pharaoh's Heart. For it is neither said, nor intimated, that the Finger of God hardened it; but Pharaoh's Heart was hardened, that is, remained obstinate. The Cause of which was his not hearkening to them, as it had been before, ver. 15.

Ver. 20. And the LORD said unto Moses; rise up early in the Morning, and stand before Pharaoh.] As he had ordered him to do, before he sent the second Plague, ch. vii. 15.

Lo, he cometh forth to the Water.] This confirms what was said there, that in the Morning it was usual with him to walk out by the River, either for his Refreshment, or for his Devotion. Perhaps, that after washing, he might worship the Rising Sun. For Moses is commanded to rise up early in the Morning, and present himself before him.

And say unto him, Thus saith the LORD, let my People go, &c.] The same Message he had often sent him, (ch. vii. 16, 17. viii. 1.) together with an Admonition and Warning of his Danger; which God had not given him before the last Plague, ver. 16.

Ver. 21. Behold, I will send swarms of Flies upon thee, &c.] The Hebrew Word Arob being generally thought to come from a Word which signifies to mingle, Interpreters commonly think it denotes a Mixture of several Sorts of Creatures. And some take it, as we seem here to do, for all Manner of Flies; which Aquila calls γάρμιναι, all Sorts of Insects. Others take it, as it is in our Margin, for a Mixture of noisome Beasts: and so the Author of The Life and Death of Moses; God sent Lions, Wolves, Bears, and Leopards, and such like wild Beasts, which killed not only their Cattle in the Field, but their Children in their Houses. And so Josephus expounds it, ἄνελια παντοῖα καὶ πολυτέρα. But Bochartus hath confuted this Notion, by very good Arguments, in his Hierozyicon, P. ii. L. iv. Cap. 15. where he shows no Words have more Significations than the Hebrew Word Arab; which signifies not only to mingle, but among many other Things, to obscure and darken. From whence the Even-time is called Ereb. And therefore, with great reason, he approves of the LXX. Version, who translate it κυνόμυια, a Flesh-fly, very bold and troublesome; being not easily drove away: which infests Dogs very much, especially about the Flaps of their Ears. Some take it for that large black Fly, which fastens upon Beasts, and sucks their Blood, called Arob from its black Colour: as Oreb from thence signifies a Crow. And so Philo describes this Fly, called Cynomyia, that it is as impudent as a Dog; and makes its Assaults with great Violence, like a Dart; fastening its Teeth so deep in the Flesh, and sticking so close, that it makes Cattle run mad.

This Plague the Jews say (in the forenamed Book of The Life of Moses) was sent upon the Egyptians, because of the hard Service they made the Israelites undergo, in feeding their Cattle.

Ver. 22. And I will sever in that Day the Land of Goshen, in which my People dwell, &c.] Here now the distinguishing Mercy of God to the Israelites is plainly expressed; which is to be understood in the foregoing Plagues. And the Hebrew Word, as well as the Chaldee, signifies, I will make a wondrous Difference. So Jonathan, in that Day I will work a Miracle in the Land of Goshen: For indeed it was a marvellous Thing, that Countries so near one another, should be in such a different Condition at the same Time.

And it was the more wonderful, because there was such Store of Cattle in Goshen, whose Dung is apt to breed Flies.

That thou mayest know, that I am the LORD in the midst of the Earth.] Who governs all Things here below; or that have a special Care of my People. For so Bochart understood by Earth, the Land of Goshen. In the midst of which God is said to be, because he defended and delivered them from this sore Calamity, which their Neighbours suffered. For thus this Phrase is used in many Places, Deut. vii. 22. xxiii. 14. Psal. xli. 6, &c. And thus Conr. Pellicanus seems to have understood this Passage, which he interprets, you shall know that I am the LORD, and Prince of this Country.

Ver. 23. I will put a Division between thy People and my People, &c.] It is repeated again, because it was a remarkable Thing, and denoted the Israelites to be God's peculiar People; for whom he had a singular Favour. Which is the Reason that this Mercy is called here a Redemption (as the Word in the Hebrew signifies, which we translate Division) because God exempted and delivered the Israelites from those Flies, which formerly infested all the rest of Pharaoh's Dominions.

To-morrow shall this Sign be.] The Finger of God was so remarkable in the last Plague, (ver. 19.) that his contemptuous Disregard of it was very provoking: So that God would forbear no longer than till the next Morning, before he scourged him with his new Judgment. Which was very grievous and noisome, as appears by the following Words; especially by his Willingness to grant more than he had done before, that he might be rid of it.

Ver. 24. And the LORD did so.] Here is no mention of Aaron's stretching out his Rod, (as at other Times) but this was done immediately by God himself: That the Egyptians might not imagine there was any secret Virtue in the Rod; but ascribe all to the Divine Power.

This Plague was threaten'd about the 28th Day of the sixth Month; and inflicted on the 29th; and removed on the 30th.

And there came a grievous Swarm of Flies, &c.] Or, a vast Number of Flies: For so the Word Caved (which we here translate grievous or heavy) is used in Gen. i. 9. See there.

And the Land was corrupted by reason of the Swarm of Flies.] We are to understand here, by the Land, the Inhabitants of the Land; whose Blood these Flies suck'd, and left such a Poison in it, that their Bodies swell'd, and many of them died. So the Psalmist understood it, lxxviii. 45. There is something like this recorded in Heathen Stories; particularly they say, that when Trajan made War upon the Agarans, he was so assaulted with Flies, when he sat down to eat, that he look'd upon them as sent by God, and desisted from his Enterprize. And that whole Countries have been infested with them, appears from a Number of Gods that were worshipped, because they were supposed to have drove them away, at Acaron and several other Places mentioned by the Learned Huetius (in the Place above quoted) from whence came the Names of Jupiter, Ἰαπετιών and Μολών, and of Hercules, Μάγρεγ, &c.

Ver. 25. And Pharaoh called for Moses and Aaron, &c.] Sent a Messenger to call them to him.

Go ye, sacrifice to your God in the Land.] He had consented to let them sacrifice, when he last sent for them, ver. 8. but he named no Place: and also quickly repented of the Concession. But now he determines it in the Land of Goshen; where he grants them Licence to offer public Sacrifice. But this Moses tells him (in the next Verse) was not fit for them to accept; nor was it what God demanded.

Ver. 26. And Moses said, It is not meet so to do.] Besides that this is not the Thing that God requires, it is not prudent, because it is not safe for us to do it.

For we shall sacrifice the Abomination of the Egyptians to the LORD our God.] There is no Indication, that I can find, of any such sottish Idolatry now among the Egyptians, as was, it is certain, in after Ages, but what seems to be suggested in this Place; which learned Men have generally interpreted, as if the Sense was this: We must sacrifice to our God, Oxen, Sheep, and Goats, which the Egyptians worship and adore: and that would be such an abominable Thing in their Account (to kill their Gods) that it would give them the highest Provocation. Thus both the Chaldee Interpreters, the Syriack, St. Hierom, and others: which Bochartus himself approves of in his Hierozaic. P. i. L. ii. cap. 34, and 53. and more largely, P. ii. L. iv. cap. 17. But there is an Objection lies against this Interpretation, that long after Moses's Time, the Egyptians themselves did offer all the fore-mentioned Creatures to their Gods: For Herodotus relates (in his Euterpe, cap. xli.) after what Manner they sacrificed an Ox in his Time: and though some Parts of the Country abstained from Sheep, yet they sacrificed Goats; as, on the contrary, others abstained from Goats and sacrificed Sheep. See upon Gen. xliii. 12. Therefore it may be a Question, Whether these Words do not refer only to the Rites and Ceremonies of sacrificing; and to the Qualities and Condition of the Beasts which are offered: about which the Egyptians in after Ages were very curious. For the same Herodotus tells us (in the same Book, cap. xxxviii.) how the Sacrifices were examined by the Priest, and none allowed to be offered, but those which had his Mark upon them. And so Plutarch (in his Book de Isid. & Osir.) that the Egyptians thinking Typho to have been red, sacrificed only such Oxen as were of a red Colour: making such an accurate Scrutiny, ὥτε καὶ μίαν ἐχὴν τεῖχα μέλαιναν ἢ λευκὴν ἀδύλον ἠγνοῦσαι, that if a Beast were found to have one Hair black or white, it was judged unfit for Sacrifice. The forenamed Herodotus indeed saith, they would not sacrifice Cows, because they were sacred to Isis: which shows that in his Time, there was great Superstition about such Creatures; so that none durst offer the least Violence to them. But, as we have no Evidence, that in the Days of Moses they were infested with such Opinions, so their sacrificing such Creatures, as the Jews did long after his Days, and all Mankind had done from the Beginning, seems to be a Prejudice against that Sense of the Words, which is generally put upon them. But there were so many various Ways of sacrificing in the World, that it is very probable the Egyptians differed very much from the Israelites; who might offer also (it's likely) such Creatures as the Egyptians thought unclean; whereby they might be enraged at their Profaneness.

Maimonides fancies the Egyptians worshipped the Sign or Constellation called Aries; and that this was the Occasion of this Speech: for which I can see no Reason, More Necessim, P. iii. cap. xlv.

And will they not stone us?] We cannot gather from hence, that there was such a Punishment among the Egyptians, as stoning Men to Death. For he doth not speak here of Punishment by their Laws; but of what might happen from a popular Fury.

Ver. 27. We will go three Days journey into the Wilderness, &c.] So God had directed them; and it was not lawful for them to sacrifice in any Place, but where he appointed. Pbilo gives this Reason why they were to go into a solitary Place, there to receive Commands from God about Sacrifice, and all other Parts of his Worship; because God intended to give them a Law different from those of other Nations, or rather quite opposite unto them. In which there were so many singular Rites, that they would have offended other People, and seemed to them profane, if they had exercised them among them, De Vita Moses, p. 615. And thus Corn. Tacitus understood the Design of Moses, not to bring the Israelites to as near a Conformity as he could with the Gentiles (which some now in these Days fancy) but to keep them at the greatest Distance from other Nations, by opposite Rites of Worship. His Words are remarkable, Lib. v. Histor. Cap. iv. Moses, quo cibi in posterum Gentem firmaret, novos ritus, contrariosque ceteris mortalibus induit. Profana illis omnia, quæ apud nos sacra: rursum concessa apud illos, quæ nobis incesta.

Ver. 28. And Pharaoh said I will let you go, that you may sacrifice to the LORD your God in the Wilderness.] He doth not say expressly they should go three Days Journey, as was demanded; which hath made some think this was but a niggardly Concession of Pharaoh's, who intended to deceive them with general Words. But Moses understood it otherwise, as appears by his Acceptance of the Grant.

Only you shall not go very far away.] No further than three Days Journey.

Intreat for me.] This indeed is added so quickly, and as it were with the same Breath, that he granted their three Days Journey; that it may make one think it was the least Part of his Intention to permit that, but only to get rid of this Plague. Which if it had continued long, the Egyptians must have left their Country, to preserve themselves. Several People having been forced by Flies to quit their Habitations, as many ancient Authors inform us, mentioned by Bonfrerius and Bochartus.

Ver. 29. And Moses said, Behold, I go out from thee, and I will intreat the LORD that the Swarm of Flies may depart, &c.] He was not more ready to desire, than the LORD and his Servant Moses were to grant, the total Removal of this Plague; which was sent for his Reformation, not his Destruction; if he would have duly considered it.

To morrow.] Yet he would not pray that he might be released from it presently; but let him lie a while under the smart of his Rod; that he might be truly humbled, and deal no more deceitfully with him, as he feared he would.

But let not Pharaoh deal deceitfully any more, &c.] He had promised fair before, ver. 8. but broken his word; which made this solemn Caution the more necessary, lest he should be guilty of such false dealing again.

Ver. 30. And Moses went out from Pharaoh, and intreated the LORD.] He gave Pharaoh a good Example of Steadfastness, by making good his Promise immediately, which he gave him in the beginning of the foregoing Verse.

Ver. 31. And the LORD did according to the word of Moses.] Here was punctual performance on God's part, of what was agreed between him and Pharaoh, in the foregoing Treaty.

There remained not one.] This was a greater Miracle than that of removing the Frogs; for they remained in heaps and stank, ver. 14. But these were all swept away (by a mighty Wind, perhaps) either into the Sea, or into the Desarts of Lybia.

Ver. 32. And Pharaoh hardened his heart at this time also, &c.] This is here made an act of his own; as it was no doubt in all the former Refusals to let them go, ver. 15, 19. And he hardened his Heart, by not hearkning, or not regarding what they had done, as the Word is used and translated, ch. ix. 21. That which made him not to hearken or regard, was his excessive Pride and Covetousness; for he thought it a dishonour to submit to Moses: and he was very loth to lose the Service of so many Slaves, which was really more worth to him, than all the Land they possessed in Egypt.

CHAP. IX.

Ver. 1. THEN the LORD said unto Moses.] See ch. vii. 1.

Go in unto Pharaoh.] It seems now he went to the Palace.

And say unto him, Thus saith the LORD, &c.] He sends the same Message to him he ordered at the first (v. 3.) and had continued ever since, ch. vii. 16, &c.

Ver. 2. For if thou refuse to let them go, and wilt hold them still.] If thy covetous, griping Humour, make thee still resolve to detain them in their Slavery.

Ver. 3. Behold.] This Word, as in most other Places (as Dr. Jackson notes) is here a special Character of the speedy Execution of the Plague threatened, and of the remarkable manner of its Execution.

The hand of the LORD is upon thy Cattle, &c.] That is, he will smite them, (which is done by the Hand) and is just ready to do the Execution. Here is no mention of Aaron's Rod, no more than in the foregoing Plague, and for the same reason. See ch. viii. 21.

A very grievous Murrain.] That is, a great Plague or Pestilence (as we call it, in Mankind) of which abundance of Cattle shall die. For so the Word Caved (which we translate grievous) is used for numerous: See ch. viii. 24. But the greater the Number was that died, the more grievous, no doubt, was the Calamity: God intended to deal more severely than formerly with him, because he had been guilty of a fraudulent Contempt of his former solemn Monition, ch. viii. 29.

Ver. 4. And the LORD shall sever between the Cattle of Israel and the Cattle of Egypt, &c.] See ch. viii. 22. This was the greater wonder (as the Word imports) because the Israelites and Egyptians were mingled together in the Land of Goshen; and their Cattle breathed in the same Air, and drank of the same Water, &c. By which it appeared this Pestilence was not natural; but proceeded, as was said before, from the Hand of God.

Ver. 5. And the LORD appointed a set time.] That they might know this Stroke came from him.

Saying, to morrow the LORD shall do this thing in the Land.] This Plague was threatened upon the first day of the seventh Month (which afterwards was changed into the first Month of the Year) and inflicted on the second Day.

Ver. 6. And all the Cattle of Egypt died.] Some survived, it is plain from ver. 19. Therefore the meaning is, either all that were in the Field, (ver. 3.) not those in the Cities or Houses: or rather, a great many of all sorts of Cattle, as Drusus expounds it, Omne genus, all kinds; as the Word all must be expounded, ver. 26. Vide Lib. ii. Animadvers. cap. xviii.

But of the Cattle of the Children of Israel died not one.] Of any sort whatsoever.

Ver. 7. And Pharaoh sent, and behold there was not one of the Cattle of the Israelites dead.] We do not find that he sent to make any such Enquiry in the former Plagues. It is likely he slighted what they said, and would not do them the Honour to seem to believe them. Moses also had said nothing of this Difference God would make between the Israelites and them, till the last Plague; when the Flies were so busy and vexatious, that it made Travel uneasy: as it was likewise in the two other before that, when they could tread upon nothing but Frogs, or Lice.

And the Heart of Pharaoh was hardened.] One would rather have expected to hear that it relented, because he took the pains to satisfy himself that every thing foretold by Moses was come to pass: which looks as if he meant, upon the Truth of that Information, to alter this Course. This Plague likewise was much heavier than all, or most of the preceding; which were rather more noisom and terrible (as Dr. Jackson speaks) than detrimental to Pharaoh and his People. For we do not read before this time of the Death of any useful Creatures, except Fishes, when the Waters were turned into Blood: And that Calamity was not so universal neither, being only in the River (and some think only near the Court) as this Murrain, which was all over the Country, and did them a far greater Mischief. But having accustomed himself to do Evil, he grew still more obstinate and hardened in Pride and Covetousness. For he doth not so much as pray to be delivered from this Plague; which had done all the Execution, he thought, that was design'd; and he intended perhaps to repair his Loss out of the Flocks and Herds of the Israelites, which haply might make him less affected with this Wonder than he had been with some of the former.

Ver. 8. And the LORD said unto Moses and Aaron.] The former Plague having for little moved his proud and stubborn Heart, the Lord instantly, without any further Message to him (as being now in Process of Sentence, says Dr. Jackson) commands them to bring another Judgment upon the Egyptians, more dreadful and noisom than any of the rest had been.

Take to you handfuls of Ashes of the Furnace.] In which Pharaoh had made them labour (Deut. iv. 20.) which moved God to punish him and his People with this Plague, for their cruel Usage of his People there.

And let Moses sprinkle it.] The Jews think God employed him only in executing this Judgment, being much heavier than all the foregoing. But both he and Aaron being commanded to take Ashes (in the Words foregoing) as we read they did, ver. 10. it is more probable they both sprinkled: And so the Meaning is, let Moses (as well as Aaron) sprinkle it.

Towards Heaven.] To show that the Plague came from thence.

In the sight of Pharaoh.] That he might be convinced of it.

Ver. 9. And it shall become small Dust, in all the Land of Egypt, &c.] Instead of these Ashes which they threw up into the Air, there came down a small Sleet (as we call it) like that of Snow, or the Hoar-frost, which scalded the Flesh of Man and Beast, and raised a Blister in every Part upon which it fell. The Poison of which penetrating into the Flesh, made sore Swellings, like those we now call Buboes. Inasmuch that, as Philo understood it (L. i. de Vita Mosi) they were full of Blotches from Head to Foot. Certain it is, that the Hebrew Word Schechin signifies an Inflammation, that made a Tumour or Boil (as we translate the Word, Levit. xiii. 18, 19.) which turned into such a grievous Ulcer, that Moses speaks of it afterwards as an unusual Plague, which he calls the Botch of Egypt, Deut. xxviii. 27. Dr. Lightfoot indeed observes, that in the Book of Job (ii. 7, 8.) it signifies only a burning Itch, or an inflam'd Scab: an intolerable dry Itch, which his Nails could not scratch off, but he was glad to make use of a Potsherd to scrub himself. But then he confesses, that this Schechin here spoken of, was higher than that, having Blains and Boils that broke out with it; which Job's had not. So that the Egyptians, he thinks, were vexed with a double Punishment at once; aching Boils, and a fiery Itch. But our Interpreters take it otherwise, and say that Job also was smote with Boils; which in conclusion, perhaps, had a Scab that itched very much.

Ver. 10. And they took Ashes of the Furnace, &c.] This Plague was inflicted about the third Day of the seventh Month, according to Archbishop Usher's Computation; who thinks it probable (as many others do) that from hence the Tale was spread among the Heathens, that the Egyptians drove the Israelites out of Egypt because they were scabby, lest the Infection should spread all over the Country. For they endeavoured, in future Ages, to make it be believed, that what befel themselves; was a Plague upon the Israelites.

Ver. 11. And the Magicians could not stand before Moses, because of the Boils, &c.] This Plague seized on them, as well as the rest of the Egyptians, and that in the Presence of Pharaoh (as these Words seem to import) which perfectly confounded them. For though, since the Plague of Lice, which they could not counterfeit, we read of no Attempt they ventured to make, to vie Miracles with Moses and Aaron, yet they still continued about Pharaoh (it appears from this Place) and endeavoured to settle him in his Resolution, not to let Israel go; persuading him, perhaps, that though Moses for the present had found out some Secret beyond their Skill, they should at last be too hard for him. But now, being on a sudden smote with these Ulcers, they were so amazed, that we do not find they appeared again to look Moses in the Face. For now, as the Apostle speaks, their Folly was manifested to all Men, 1 Tim. iii. 8, 9. in that they could not defend themselves from this terrible Stroke; which publicly seizing on them before Moses, in the Sight of Pharaoh and all his Servants; rendered them so contemptible, that we never hear more of them.

Ver. 12. And the LORD hardened the Heart of Pharaoh, &c.] If we suppose that the Magicians, who had hitherto confirmed Pharaoh in his Obstinacy, were forced to withdraw in great Confusion, when they were smitten with the Boils; one would have thought the next thing we should have heard, would have been that Pharaoh relented. But here is not the least token of that mentioned in this History, but rather the express contrary; that God was so angry with him, that he himself hardened his Heart, which he had never done before. This hardening therefore, which is said to be God's doing, was something sure very extraordinary. Yet it was not an Infusion of any bad Qualities or ungodly Resolutions into Pharaoh's Heart, but only that God did not vouchsafe him those Convictions that might have softened him, and gave him up to his own Heart's Lusts; and likewise ordered Things so to fall out, that he should hereafter be made by them more and more obdurate. For he had hardened himself against five Plagues; therefore God leaves him to himself, and resolves he shall continue in his Hardness. Accordingly he doth not so much as desire to be freed from this Plague, no more than he had done in the former, which was nothing so grievous. The Effect of such Induration is well expressed by David, Chy raus, in these Words: Cor induratum est, quod nec compunctione scinditur, &c. 'An hardened Heart is neither cut by Compunction, nor softened by any sense of Piety.'

It is neither moved by Prayers and Intreaties, nor yields to Threatnings, nor feels the Smart of Scourges. It is ungrateful for Benefits; treacherous to Counsels; fullen to Judgments; shameless to Things most base; fearless of Dangers; forgetful of Things past; negligent of Things present; improvident for the future. In short, it neither fears God, nor reverences Man.

As the LORD had spoken unto Moses.] The Margin of our Bible directs the Reader to ch. iv. 21. where God saith, I will harden, &c. See there; (and iii. 19.) And observe, that all along from thence to this Place, it is very often said, in the close of the former Plagues, that Pharaoh's Heart was hardened as the LORD had said, (ch. vii. 13, 22. viii. 15, 19, 32.) But this is the first time that it is said, the LORD hardened the Heart of Pharaoh, as he had spoken unto Moses. Which different Close gives us to understand, that now, after the Plague of Blains, the Sentence of Destruction was irreversibly denounced against him; and God resolved to dispose Things so, that he should not repent, but run headlong to his Ruin.

Ver. 13. And the LORD said unto Moses, Rise up early in the Morning.] That he might speak with Pharaoh before he went abroad; or at his going out of his Palace.

And stand before Pharaoh, &c.] Present thyself unto him, with the same Message that I have often sent to him. See ch. v. 3. vii. 16, &c.

Let my People go, that they may serve me.] But why doth he send any more Messages to him, may some say, after he had hardened him, and knew he would not submit? To which Dr. Jackson's Answer is very apposite; That God dealt with Pharaoh just as he had done with the poor oppressed Israelites, after Moses had delivered his first Message to him. Pharaoh immediately forbids his Task-masters to give them any Straw, and yet required the same Tale of Bricks, which they made when they had Straw enough. The Lord in like manner demands the same Obedience of Pharaoh, after he had deprived him of Understanding, and of all good Motions, which he had demanded of him before, or at the first Exhibition of his Signs and Wonders. And this is that which gave occasion to the Question we find, Rom. ix. 19. Why doth he yet find fault? To which there needs no further Satisfaction in this Place.

Ver. 14. For I will at this Time.] For now I will begin to send more terrible Plagues upon thee, one after another, till I have destroyed thee.

Send all my Plagues.] All that I have resolved to inflict, as Menochius truly expounds it: Not all that I am able, but all that I design to send for thy Destruction.

Upon thine Heart.] Such as shall make thy Heart ake (as we now speak) not only afflict thy Body and Goods, but fill thy Soul with Terror, or Grief, or Rage.

That thou mayest know there is none like me in all the Earth.] To teach thee, by sad Experience, that my Power is superior to all other. To which another Reason is added in the next Verse, that all the World might see the same.

And a third, ch. x. 2: that Israel might learn to worship him alone, and teach their Children to do so likewise.

Ver. 15, 16. For now I will stretch out my Hand, that I may smite thee, and thy People with Pestilence, &c.] I do not see how this Translation can be maintained; for we do not read that God, after this, sent a new Pestilence upon Pharaoh; and the Hebrew Word Deber signifies nothing else. This therefore must needs refer to the Time past: and the Sense of these three Verses (14, 15, 16.) must be this; I will send more Plagues on thee, and on thy Servants (as was threatned, ver. 14.) for the Truth is, I had now stretched out my Hand to destroy both thee and thy People by my late Pestilence, wherewith you had all been cut off, had it not been that I reserve you for further Punishments: for which very cause I made thee to stand, when thou wast falling (i. e. kept thee from dying) that I might send more Plagues upon thee, and make thy Destruction more notorious to all the World. See Paulus Fagius, and Theod. Hackspan, and Fr. Junius also, who translate these Words, I had smitten thee and thy People with Pestilence (i. e. when he destroyed their Cattle with a Murrain) and then hadst thou been cut off from the Earth, as it follows in the end of this Verse; that is, when the Boils broke out upon the Magicians.

Ver. 16. And in very deed for this cause have I raised thee up.] In the Hebrew the Words are, I have made thee stand; that is, preserved thee alive, when the Pestilence would have cut thee off, as the Murrain did thy Cattle; if I had not kept thee from perishing then, that I might destroy thee in a more remarkable manner. And thus the LXX understood it, when they translated it διὰ τὴν χάριν, thou hast been preserved, that is, from Destruction. With which the Apostle agrees, though he doth not here follow their Translation, ἐξαιέσας, I have raised thee, i. e. from the foregoing Sickness, (Rom. ix. 17.) spared thee in the midst of malignant Ulcers.

For to show in thee my Power.] By sending more dreadful Plagues upon him, and at last overwhelming him in the Sea.

And that my Name may be declared throughout all the World.] If Pharaoh and his People had all perished by the Pestilence, when the Cattle did, or died when smitten with Blains; the Terror of God's powerful Displeasure had not been so visible to all the World, as it was in overthrowing the whole Strength of Egypt in the Red Sea.

Ver. 17. As yet exaltest thou thyself against my people, &c.] In these Words he returns to finish his Message begun ver. 13. which he concludes with this Expostulation, which upbraids him with his senseless Obstinacy. Which, in other Words, may be thus paraphrased: Dost thou still (notwithstanding all that I have done to humble thee) proudly insult over my people, and resolve to keep them in Bondage?

This Expostulation, which is very sharp and cutting, may seem to some unseasonable, now that God himself had hardened him, and taken his Understanding from him; though before nothing could have been more proper, while there was a possibility of penetrating his Heart. But

God cannot lose his Right to demand that Obedience, which Men have made themselves unable to pay: and it was but just he should be upbraided with his Obstinacy, even when he could not comply, because he had brought upon himself this Punishment, of stupid Insensibility. See ver. 13.

Ver. 18. Behold, to morrow about this Time.] As his Destruction was determined, so it was to come speedily upon him; and therefore there was but one Day between this Plague and the former.

I will send a very grievous Hail.] Great Hail-stones, falling very thick, as we speak.

Such as hath not been in Egypt since the Foundation thereof.] Since it hath been inhabited. This shows that though Rain was not frequent in Egypt, yet sometimes they had both Rain and Hail also. Otherwise there could not have been a Comparison made between this and former Hail, if there never had been any at all.

Ver. 19. Send therefore now, and gather thy Cattle, &c.] It appears by the next Verse, that though Pharaoh and his Grandees could not be moved by all these Judgments, yet there were some Persons in the Court, who were better disposed, for whose sake God gives this Warning of their Danger, that they might avoid it.

Ver. 20. He that feared the Word of the LORD among the Servants of Pharaoh, &c.] That which is opposed to this in the next Verse is, He that set not his Heart unto the Word of the LORD; or, as we translate it, regarded it not: i. e. did not attend to what was said and done by Moses, and seriously consider it. Unto which the Fear of God moves all those who are possessed with it; and serious Consideration will not fail to work in Men the Fear of God and of his Judgments.

Ver. 21. And he that regarded not the Word of the LORD, &c.] This was the Cause of the Ruin of all that perished; they did not set themselves to consider the irresistible Power of him, who inflicted such terrible Judgments upon them, as Moses threaten'd. For at last they grew so stupid, that they could not consider; but were perfectly infatuated.

Ver. 22. And the LORD said unto Moses, Stretch forth thy Hand.] With his Rod in it, as it is explained in the next Verse; and as he had directed on other Occasions, ch. viii. 16, 17. where it is said, Aaron stretched out his Hand with his Rod.

Towards Heaven.] To show the Plague was sent from God.

That there may be Hail on all the Land of Egypt, &c.] Here he more fully expresses the Damage it would do, both to Men and Beasts, and to the Herb of the Field, which comprehends all the Trees, ver. 25.

Ver. 23. And Moses stretched forth his Rod.] Sometimes Aaron did it; but it was at the Command of Moses, and as his Minister; who sometimes did it himself, and was commanded by God so to do, ver. 22. He gave warning of this Plague about the fourth Day of the seventh Month, and inflicted it upon the fifth, and removed it the sixth. The Author of The Life and Death of Moses, fancies that God sent this Plague to punish the Egyptians for the Drudgery they imposed upon the Israelites, in making them till their Fields for them.

And the LORD sent Thunder and Hail, &c.]

It was no wonder there should be Thunder; but the Claps of this were far more terrible, than any that had been heard before in that Country. As the Hail also was more ponderous, and came down with a greater Force, and was mixed with Fire. Which the Author of the Book of Wisdom observes (Chap. xvi.) as a Thing unusual. And herein consisted the Miraculousness of this Plague; That whereas other Storms of Hail generally reach but a little Way (sometimes not a Mile) this spread it self over the whole Country, ver. 25. And Flashes of Lightning were not only mingled with it, but Fire ran upon the Ground, and killed their Cattle, (Psal. lxxviii. 48.) when at the same Time, all the Land of Goshen, though a Part of that Country, felt nothing of this Storm, ver. 26.

And the LORD rained Hail upon the Land of Egypt.] This is repeated to show that it fell as thick as Rain, and was not a mere Shower, but a continual Hail: and that this was the principal Part of this Plague, being alone mentioned ver. 22. and 26. (whereas nothing is said of Thunder or Fire) and put in the first Place by the Psalmist, both in lxxviii. 48. and cv. 32.

Ver. 25. And the Hail smote, &c.] That is, killed every Man and Beast that was in the Field, ver. 19.

And smote every Herb, and broke every Tree of the Field.] Especially their Vines and Fig-trees, as the Psalmist tells us, lxxviii. 47. cv. 33. Very great Hail-stones have fallen in several Countries; some of a prodigious Bigness (as credible Historians relate) whereby some living Creatures have here and there been killed: but none ever made such a general Destruction as this Storm did. Yet we are not to understand it as if no green Thing escaped, nor a Bough of any Tree was left: but the Meaning is, that a great many of every Kind were destroyed: though some, as appears by the following Chapter, still remained.

Ver. 26. Only in the Land of Goshen, &c.] So that the Egyptians that lived among them, fared the better, (it is thought) at this Time for their sake.

Ver. 27. And Pharaoh sent and called for Moses and Aaron.] This is no more than he had done several Times before, (ch. viii. 8, 25.) but it may seem strange he should do it now, after the LORD had hardened his Heart. The clearest Account of it is, that he acted now as a Man distracted and frightened out of his Wits; which made him rave and cry out for Help, in very passionate Words, without any serious Meaning.

I have sinned this Time, &c.] The Meaning is not, that he had not sinned before; but, I now acknowledge my Offence, and the Justice of God in punishing the Wickedness of me and of my People. Which Confession doth not argue any Tenderness of Heart; but was extorted by the horrible Fright he was in of being undone, if he did not make some Submission.

Ver. 27. Intreat the LORD (for it is enough).] Or, beseech him that what I have already suffered may suffice.

That there be no more mighty Thundrings and Hail.] The Words import frightful Claps of Thunder, which founded as if God was angry with them; especially since the Hail fell like Thunder-bolts upon their Heads, and struck those down that walk'd abroad. This was the Reason that he beg'd their Prayers: For he and his Servants could not always continue within Doors; and while the Hail lasted, there was no Safety abroad.

And I will let you go.] Not quite away; but three Days Journey into the Wilderneys, as they desired.

And ye shall stay no longer.] He promises to dismiss them immediately.

Ver. 29. And Moses said unto him, as soon as I am gone out of the City.] By this he demonstrated the great Power of God, who he knew would protect him, from receiving any Harm by the Thunder, Lightning and Hail, which killed all others that went abroad into the Fields.

I will spread forth my Hands unto the LORD.] This was an ancient Posture of Supplication, in all Nations (as many learned Men have shown) whereby Men declared, that God is the Giver of all good Things; and that they hoped to receive Help from him. For our Hands are the Instruments, whereby we receive any Gift that is bestowed upon us.

That thou mayest know, how that the Earth is the LORD's.] Have a Demonstration (which was sufficient to make him know) that the LORD governs all Things: as appeared by the ceasing of this dreadful Storm, upon Moses's Prayers to God, as well as by the pouring of it in such Violence upon them.

Ver. 30. But as for thee and thy Servants, I know that ye will not yet fear the LORD God.] The generality of the Court he knew would continue as obstinate as their Prince; though some of them had some Sense of God, and of his Judgments, as we read ver. 20.

Ver. 31. And the Flax and the Barley were smitten, &c.] From hence our learned N. Fuller gathers, that this fell out in the Month of Abib, as Archbishop Usher observes in his Annals. For it appears by Pliny and others, that Barley began to ripen in those Countries in March; but Wheat not till April. Herm. Conringius differs from this Account a little; for he thinks (in his Treatise De initio anni Sabbatici) that this Hail fell in the Month of February; Flax being sown here, and among the Romans, from the Calends of October to the 7th of the Ides of December, as he observes out of Columella.

Ver. 32. But the Wheat and the Rye were not smitten: for they were not grown up.] In the Hebrew, they were hidden; i. e. were as yet under Ground, as Kimchi, and from him Junius and Tremellius expound it. But that cannot be the Meaning; for there was but a Month's difference between the Growth of Wheat and of Barley to maturity. And therefore Bochartus hath more truly expounded the Meaning (Hierozoic. P. ii. L. iv. c. 3.) that they were not yet reared: and so being tender and flexible, yielded to the Stroke of the Hail, and received less Harm than the Barley which was in the Ear, and the Flax which was balled.

Ver. 33. And Moses went out of the City, &c.] As he had promised, ver. 29.

And the Rain was not poured out.] It seems there was Rain together with the Hail and Fire: which made this Plague still the more wonderful. Or, by Rain must be understood, the Shower of Hail which the Lord rained from Heaven, ver. 18. which Sense is confuted by the next Verse.

Ver. 34. And when Pharaoh saw that the Rain, and the Hail, and the Thunder were ceased.] As soon as the Storm was over, and the Heavens clear again.

He sinned yet more, and hardened his Heart, &c.] That which should have made him acknowledge the Power of God (which was as apparent in stopping the Hail, as in pouring it on his Country) made him the more contumacious. For seeing this Danger over, he fancied there would be no more.

Ver. 35. And the Heart of Pharaoh was hardened, &c.] Continued in Hardness; for God would not soften it, having resolved still to harden him, as he had began to do, ver. 12. and did now, ch. x. 1. For he neither moved his Heart to remember his Confession, and his Promise, ver. 27, 28. nor continued the Means which extorted that seeming Repentance from him. But by granting his Desire, to have this Stroke removed, suffered him to return to his wonted Obstinacy.

CHAP. X.

Ver. 1. AND the LORD said unto Moses, Go in unto Pharaoh.] Perhaps Moses might think, that after seven Messages delivered to him, and as many Plagues for his Refusal, and God's Declaration that he had hardened his Heart, it was to no Purpose to make any new Address unto him. Which it is likely he would have forborne, if he had not received this express Command from God to go to him again.

For I have harden'd his Heart, &c.] This is rather a Reason why he should not go; and therefore the Particle ki is not to be translated for, but although, as it many times is used in these Books, and then the Sense is clear; Although I have harden'd his Heart, yet let not that hinder thy going to him, but still importune him; because I intend to take Occasion from his refusing to obey me, to work greater Signs and Wonders, for your Benefit (as it follows in the next Verse) and for his Ruin.

That I might shew these my Signs before him.] The Signs he speaks of, were those already done since he harden'd him, and those which were to follow. For he had threaten'd, when he said he would harden Pharaoh's Heart (ch. vii. 3.) to multiply his Signs and Wonders in the Land of Egypt.

Ver. 2. And that thou mayest tell.] The LXX. translate it, that ye may tell: for he speaks to Moses, Moses, as sustaining the Person of the whole People of Israel.

In the Ears of thy Son, and thy Son's Son.] All future Posterity.

What Things I have wrought in Egypt.] This may refer to the Ten Plagues, which he inflicted on the Egyptians.

And my Signs which I have done among them.] The turning of his Rod into a Serpent, and two other Miracles, mentioned at his first Mission, are called Signs, ch. iv. 8, 9. and see vii. 9, 10.

That ye may know how that I am the LORD.] That there is no other God but me.

Ver. 3. And Moses and Aaron came in unto Pharaoh.] As God had commanded Moses, ver. 1.

Thus saith the LORD GOD of the Hebrews.] This is the Style wherein they began to deliver their Message to him; and which they continued all along, ch. v. 1, 3. & vii. 16, &c.

How long wilt thou refuse to humble thy self before me?] We meet not with this chiding Question in any of the former Messages; which was most proper now that he had so often refused to yield, or instantly revolted from his seeming Submissions.

Ver. 4. Behold, to morrow.] This Word behold denotes the speedy Execution of a remarkable Judgment, see ch. ix. 3. and, according to the Computation before mentioned, it was threatened on the seventh Day of the Month Abib, to be executed the next Day.

I will bring the Locusts into thy Coasts.] The Hebrew Word Arbeh comes from rabah, which signifies to be multiplied: For there is no living Creature multiplies more than this. Whence they are said (in the next Verse) to cover the Face of the Earth: And the Psalmist, speaking of them, saith, they came without number, Psal. cv. 34.

Ver. 5. And they shall cover the Face of the Earth, &c.] So that nothing could be seen but Locusts: See ver. 15.

And they shall eat.] How devouring they are, and destructive to the Fruits of the Earth, Vossius shows at large, L. iv. de Orig. & Pr. Idol. c. 19. and Bochartus, P. i. L. iv. Hieroz. c. 3. whole Countries having been laid so bare by them, in a few Hours, that it hath brought a Famine upon the Inhabitants. See Pliny, L. xi. Hist. Nat. c. 29.

The residue of that which is escaped, &c.] By this it appears, that as the Wheat and the Rye escaped the Stroke of the Hail, ch. ix. 31. so the Trees were not broken, but some Boughs remained.

And shall eat every Tree, &c.] These Creatures spare not the very Bark of the Trees, eating all Things that come in their way; as Pliny testifies in the forecited Place, Omnia morsu erodentes, & fores quoque testorum.

Ver. 6. And they shall fill thy Houses, &c.] The Author of the Book of Wisdom, ch. xvi. 9. seems to think that they killed Men and Women. But that Mistake, it is likely, arose from ver. 17. which may have another Interpretation: See there. Tho' if the Locusts died in their Houses, the Stench of their dead Bodies was so offensive that it often bred the Pestilence, as Bochartus observes, P. i. Hieroz. L. iv. c. 3, 5.

Which neither thy Fathers, &c.] They exceeded all that had been seen (and they were a frequent Plague in those Countries) either in Bigness, or in Number, or in both. That is, all that had been seen in Egypt: For in other Countries perhaps there might have been as large; if Pliny may be believed, that in India there had been some seen three Foot long. The Jews, in the Book called the Life and Death of Moses, say these to have been of such a vast Bulk, that their Jaw-teeth were like those of Lions. But it's likely Moses speaks here only of their Multitude. For the Prophet Joel hath such an Expression, when he speaks also of their being without Number, Joel i. 6. Whose Teeth are the Teeth of a Lion: i. e. they devoured all Things greedily and speedily.

And he turned himself, and went out from Pharaoh.] Either Moses did not stay for an Answer, knowing he would give him none better than formerly; or Pharaoh answered so churlishly, that Moses hastily turned about (as the Words seem to import) and went away in some Indignation.

Ver. 7. And Pharaoh's Servants said.] Some of his Counsellors, or Courtiers, who feared the Word of the LORD, ch. ix. 20. Or, perhaps, the whole Court began now to be sensible of their Danger.

How long shall this Man.] They seem to speak contemptibly of Moses to please Pharaoh, who they were afraid would not like their Counsel, unless they flattered him.

Be a Snare to us?] The LXX and the Vulgar translate it, be a Stumbling-block: i. e. lay before us the Occasion of our falling into one Calamity after another; or, involve and intangle us in so many Mischiefs.

Knowest thou not yet, that Egypt is destroyed?] Dost thou not consider, that so many Plagues have ruined our Country?

Ver. 8. And Moses and Aaron were brought again unto Pharaoh, &c.] Upon this Advice he commanded them to be called back again; and consented to let them go, with some Limitations, to which Moses could not agree.

But who are they that shall go?] In the Hebrew the Words are, but who and who? that is, name the Particulars. For his Covetousness would not suffer the whole Nation to go; but he would keep some fast in his Hands, as a Pledge for the Return of the rest.

Ver. 9. And Moses said, We will go with our young and our old, &c. with our Flocks, and with our Herds, &c.] The Reason of this large Demand is given in the end of this Verse. They did not know what, and how often they must sacrifice to the LORD; and therefore it was necessary their Flocks and Herds should go with them. And they being to hold a Feast unto the LORD, none of them were to be absent from the Solemnity.

Hold a Feast unto the LORD.] It appears from ch. v. 1, 3. that it was to be a Feast upon a Sacrifice, of which every one was to be a Partaker.

Ver. 10. And he said unto them, Let the LORD be so with you, as I will let you go, &c.] Most take this for a Form of Imprecation; as if he had said, I wish you may prosper no better, than I will accord to your Desire. But some look upon it as an Irrision or Jeer; as if he had said, you trust in the LORD, let him do all he can to deliver you, as I am resolved to keep you here. This justifies the Truth of their Observation, who say that Pharaoh, at the first, behaved himself like a proud fantastick Humourist, who slighted all that Moses said or did; but since the Plague of Murrain on the Cattle, and Blains upon the Egyptians, like a fantastick distracted Bedlam, who raved, as if his Brains had been blasted (to use Dr. Jackson's Phrase) with the Fumes of his feared Conscience.

Look you to it, for evil is before you.] It is uncertain whether he meant evil that they designed against him, or which he designed against them: The former best agrees with what follows; as if he had said, You intend a Rebellion; therefore I will let none but the Men go. Or, more plainly, it is visible you design some evil; i. e. you have conspired to be gone, and make a Revolt. Or, it is plain and manifest by your very Countenances, that you intend some evil. If we take it the other way, for evil which he threatened to them, the Meaning must be, Mark what I say, I will take a Course with you, unless you be content to go and sacrifice upon my Terms; i. e. the Men only.

Ver. 11. Not so.] You shall not have your Will.

Go now ye that are Men and serve the LORD, for that you did desire.] So he interprets their Demand, ch. v. i. pretending that Women and Children needed not to attend upon Sacrifices.

And they were driven out from Pharaoh's Presence.] It is likely he said, I have no more to say to you; or, you know my Mind, and therefore get you gone; and then commanded his Officers to thrust them out of Doors; which they did with some Violence. This shows he was in a Fury; which made him neither regard God nor Man; but reject the good Counsel his own Servants had given him (ver. 7.) as well as the Commands which Moses from God had delivered to him.

Ver. 12. And the LORD said unto Moses, stretch out thine Hand, &c.] Upon this, the LORD immediately ordered Moses to execute the Judgment he had denounced; which, as I said before, was threatened about the seventh Day, and inflicted upon the next, and removed on the ninth Day of Abib. Compare ver. 4, 13, 19.

Ver. 13. And Moses stretched forth his Rod over the Land of Egypt.] See ch. viii. 6.

And the LORD brought an East Wind, &c.] Though the Hebrew Word kadim doth properly signify the East, yet it is sometimes used for the South, as Bochart hath demonstrated, P. ii. Hieroz. L. i. c. 15. and so the LXX. here understood it. For though in Arabia, which lay East of Egypt, there were great Store of Locusts, yet not such Numbers as were in Ethiopia, which lay South of it, and abounded with them more than any Country in the World. Some People there lived upon nothing else but Locusts; which were brought thither in the Spring, about the Vernal Equinox, in vast Quantities, partly by the western, and partly by the southern Winds, as the same Bochart shows out of good Authors, L. iv. c. 3. And now it was about that Time of the Year when, by a Wind blowing from those Parts, they were brought into Egypt. See Psal. lxxviii. 26.

Ver. 14. And the Locusts went up over all the Land of Egypt.] Being lifted up by the Wind (as Pliny speaks) they fly in the Air in a great Cloud, which now it seems spread it self over all the Land of Egypt, solicite spectantibus populis, &c. (as the same Author speaks) People looking on them in great Fear, lest they fall down and cover their Country; as the Words following tell us they did here in Egypt.

And rested in all the Coasts of Egypt.] After they had hovered a-while in the Air over the whole Country, they came down and settled upon the Ground in every Part of it.

Very grievous were they.] By their vast Numbers: For so the Word caved, I have often observed, signifies; and so the Vulgar Latin here translates innumerable.

Before them there were no such Locusts, &c.] See ver. 6.

Neither after them shall be such.] i. e. Not in the Land of Egypt, though in other Countries there might; particularly in Judea, when God brought this Plague upon it, Joel i. 2.

Ver. 15. For they covered the Face of the whole Earth, &c.] The Word in the Hebrew, which we translate Face, signifying properly the Eye, it induced Onkelos to translate this Passage, they covered the Sun, which is the Eye of the Earth; that is, there was such a thick Cloud of them before they fell, that they darkened the Sun; as when they were fallen, they darkened the Land, as it here follows: Or, the Meaning is, there were such Numbers, that they not only covered the Earth, but the Sun also. For many Authors mention such prodigious Clouds of them, as have so thickened the Sky, that the Day hath been turned into Night. See Bochart, P. ii. Hieroz. L. iv. c. 5.

And they did eat every Herb of the Land, &c.] See ver. 5.

Ver. 16. Then Pharaoh called for Moses and Aaron in haste.] This Dr. Jackson not improperly calls, another raving Fit, or phrenetical Symptom, into which this new Calamity threw him.

I have sinned against the LORD your God, and against you.] Whom he had lately caused to be driven out of his Presence (ver. 11.) but now humbles himself before them, more than he had done at any Time before: For this was such a Plague as all Men accounted a manifest Token of the Divine Displeasure. According to that of Pliny, Lib. xi. c. 29. Deorum iræ pestis ea intelligitur. This is taken for a Plague of the Anger of the Gods; or, as some Copies have it, Mira pestis, a wonderful Plague sent from above.

Ver. 17. Now therefore, forgive, I pray you, my Sin only this once, &c.] Nothing could be spoken more humbly, and seemingly penitent, than than this Supplication; which includes in it also a Promise never to offend again. But there was no Sincerity in it, being the effect only of a great Fright, which extorted this Confession and Submission from him, without any serious meaning to continue in this Resolution. ' Thus we ' all naturally think of repenting (as Pellicanus ' here piously reflects) when we are in great ' straits; nay, and promise it too, till we are ' out of danger; when we perform little of ' what we promised, as our whole Life testifies.'

That he may take away from me this Death only.] We cannot gather from hence, that the Locusts killed Men and Women, as the Hail did: For the Fields, and the Trees, &c. are said to die, as well as Men, Gen. xlvii. 19. Job xiv. 8, &c. But the Locusts, destroying the Supports of Life (by eating up the Corn, and the Grass, &c.) might, by consequence, be said to kill the People. In both which regards Pharaoh might call them deadly Locusts.

Ver. 18. And he went out from Pharaoh, and intreated the LORD.] Both Moses and Aaron were called to Pharaoh, and therefore now went both out: But one only is mentioned, viz. Moses; because by his Prayers this Plague was removed.

Ver. 19. And the LORD turned.] This is supposed to be done the next Day, as I observed ver. 12. according to what is said, ch. viii. 29.

A mighty strong West-wind.] Strong Winds are the only Remedy to free a Country from this Plague, as Pliny hath observed; for if they die in those Fields on which they settle, the Air is so corrupted by the Stench that it breeds pestilential Diseases.

Which took away the Locusts, and cast them into the Red Sea.] That which we call the Red Sea, the Hebrews call the Sea of Suph, i. e. of Flags; as we translate the Word Suph in the second Chapter of this Book, ver. 3. because it was full of a certain Weed (which the Latins call alga, and the Greeks φυκία) which some Travellers have affirmed to be of a red Colour, and to make the Water appear as if it were red also: From whence some fancy it was called the Red Sea. Certain it is, it had the Hebrew Name of Suph from hence; there being such abundance of this Weed in that Sea, that the Inhabitants of the Coast, plucking it up out of the Water, and laying it in heaps to be dried by the Sun, it becomes so compact, that they build Houses of it, as Bochartus hath observed in his Phaleg. L. iv. c. 29. But it is most likely to have had the Name of the Red Sea from this; that what the Hebrews called the Sea of Suph, the nearer Neighbours called the Sea of Edom, from the Country which it washed, viz. Idumea, 1 Kings ix. 26. Numb. xxi. 4. From whence the Greeks, who knew not the Reason of the Name, called it ἐρυθρὴν θάλασσαν, the Red Sea; because Edom, in Hebrew, signifies Red, as we find Gen. xxv. 29. Now this Sea (which late Writers call Sinus Arabicus) lies East of Egypt, and therefore a West Wind was most proper to drive the Locusts thither.

There remained not one Locust in all the Land of Egypt.] The Power of God appeared no less in-sweeping them all away, than in bringing them upon the Country; for both were done at the instance of Moses.

Ver. 20. But the LORD hardened Pharaoh's heart, &c.] See ch. ix. 12. He left him to himself; and did not move him to persist in his late good Resolution.

Ver. 21. And the LORD said unto Moses.] He left off now to treat with Pharaoh; and only proceeds in the Execution of the Sentence of utter Destruction, which he had decreed against him.

Stretch out thine Hand towards Heaven.] See ch. ix. 22.

That there may be Darknes over the Land of Egypt.] So that they should not see any Thing at Noon-Day.

Even Darknes that may be felt.] In the next Verse he calls it thick Darknes; which was made, I suppose, by such clammy Fogs that they sensibly affected the Egyptians.

Ver. 22. And there was thick Darknes in all the Land of Egypt three Days.] Some think, that during this three Days Darknes the Israelites were circumcised; when the Egyptians, by reason of the great Horror they were in all that Time, could take no advantage of them. And so Dr. Lightfoot expounds Psal. cv. 28. They rebelled not against his word, but submitted to be circumcised. For the words seem to signify some special Piece of Obedience, which they then performed. The Author of The Life and Death of Moses, will have it, that they punished and cut off several wicked People among the Israelites themselves; which they did at this Time; that the Egyptians might not know it, and rejoice at it. But that which is more certain, is, that if the former Plague ended on the ninth Day, this Judgment was ordered upon the tenth of the Month Abib. On which Day they begun to prepare for the Passover, by taking up the Lamb which was to be then slain four Days after. And God appointed this to be the first Month of the Year, which hitherto had been the seventh, ch. xii. 2, 3, 4.

Ver. 23. They saw not one another.] We may well look upon this as an Emblem of the Blindness of their Minds, which was so great, that they had not the least discerning of their approaching Destruction. Some of the Romans mention such Darknes for a short Time; as was counted prodigious by Livy and Julius Obsequens: Particularly at the Death of the Emperor Carus, there was such a Mist, that one Man could not know another: (See more Examples in Huetius, L. ii. Alnet. Quest. c. 12. p. 203, &c.) But of such a Darknes as this, which continued to obscure all Things three Days together, there is no Record, but in this sacred Story; which no Man hath the least Reason to disbelieve, it being as easy for God to continue it for three Days, as for one Hour; there being also a very great Reason for it, both to punish the Egyptians, and relieve the Israelites.

Neither rose any from his Place.] None stir'd out of their Houses; for they could not see one another within Doors; no, not by the Help of a Candle, or a Fire, as the Author of the Book of Wisdom understood it, ch. xvii. 5. where he also supposes, that they were affrighted with Apparitions; and their own evil Consciences were also a great Terror to them, while they remained Prisoners so long in dismal Darknes. And the Psalmist justifies him, in part, when instead of mentioning this Plague of Darknes (as he doth the rest which were inflicted on the Egyptians) he saith God sent evil Angels among them, Psalms lxxviii. 49.

But all the Children of Israel had Light in their Dwellings.] Whereby they were enabled to go about their Business, and get all Things ready for their Departure, without any notice of the Egyptians, much less any hindrance from them; who were in a Mist, and could not see what they were doing.

Ver. 24. And Pharaoh called unto Moses.] He was so terrified by the horrible Apparitions he had seen, that at the End of the three Days of Darknes, he sent a Messenger to call Moses: For before that Time none could find their way to him. Or perhaps, the Meaning may be, that in his raving fit he called for Moses, as if he had been near him.

And said,] When Moses came he made his former Confession a little larger, but had not the Heart to comply intirely.

Go ye, serve the LORD; only let the Flocks and the Herds be stayed, &c.] It was a perfect Infatuation to higgler (as we speak) with Moses, and still drive his Bargain as low as he could, when he was reduced to such Distress, that he was upon the Brink of Destruction. But this was the Effect of his Covetousness, which was incurable; and would not suffer him to part with them, but still to keep a Pawn for their Return to his Servitude.

Let your little ones go with you.] His Blindness made him think this a great Condescension, because he had denied it before, ver. 10.

Ver. 25. And Moses said, Thou must give us also Sacrifices and Burnt-offerings, that we may sacrifice, &c.] The Difference between Sacrifices and Burnt-offerings, see ch. xviii. 12. As they were to sacrifice to the LORD their God, which was the Service he required, so they were to hold a Feast unto him; at which both Sacrifices and Burnt-offerings were necessary.

Ver. 26. Our Cattle also shall go with us.] i.e. Therefore we cannot leave our Cattle here, because we must use them in Sacrifice, &c.

There shall not an Hoof be left behind.] i.e. The smallest Thing. For this was a proverbial Speech in the Eastern Countries, as appears by the like Saying among the Arabians; which was first used about Horses, and afterwards translated to other Things; Present Money even to an Hoof: That is, they would not part with an Horse (or any other Commodity) till the Buyer had laid down the price of it, to a Farthing, as we now speak. Or, according to the present German Language, the Hoof may be put for the whole Beast; and the Meaning be, we will not leave so much as one behind us. So Conr. Pellicanus.

For thereof must we take to serve the LORD our God.] To offer Sacrifice to him.

And we know not with what we must serve the LORD, &c.] Who was to appoint his own Sacrifices: As he afterwards did, when they came into the Wilderness.

Ver. 27. But the LORD hardened Pharaoh's Heart, &c.] He did not incline Pharaoh to comply with this motion, but suffered him to persist in his obstinate Resolution, not quite to part with them: See ver. 20.

Ver. 28. And Pharaoh said unto him, Get thee from me.] This sounds, as if he intended again to have him driven from his Presence (as ver. 11.) so soon did he forget his own humble Confessions and Supplications to him, ver. 16, 17. and returned to his frantic Rage and Fury against him.

Take heed to thy self, see my Face no more: For in that Day thou seest my Face, thou shalt die.] A Speech more foolish than proud (as Dr. Jackson observes). to come from a Man whom the LORD had so much impoverished, and so often humbled; and given sufficient Proofs of his Power, not only to bring greater Plagues immediately upon him, but to cut him off.

Ver. 29. And Moses said, Thou hast spoken well, I will see thy Face again no more.] That is, unless I be called for; as one would think he was: Because Moses did deliver one Message more to him, ch. xi. 4, 8. Though we may suppose he delivered it now; or, that he did not deliver it himself, but by some other Person. But that doth not agree with the last Words of ver. 8. of the next Chapter. And we read also, ch. xii. 31. that Pharaoh called for Moses and Aaron by Night: Who perhaps did not go, but only receive his Message.

CHAP. XI.

Ver. 1. AND the LORD said unto Moses.] It is uncertain when the LORD spake this. I suppose it was as soon he came out from Pharaoh, at the End of the three Days of Darknes; which continued the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth of the Month Abib.; and on the fourteenth, in the Morning, Moses received this new Revelation.

Yet I will bring one Plague more upon Pharaoh and upon Egypt.] The killing of their First-born; which was the last Plague inflicted on them in Egypt.

Afterwards he will let you go hence, &c.] Not only consent to dismiss you intirely; but be earnest with you, and urge you to depart. So we find it came to pass, ch. xii. 31, 33.

Thrust you out altogether.] Perfectly and completely, with some kind of compulsion.

Ver. 2. Speak now in the Ears of the Children of Israel.] Give order, therefore to the Israelites, as I formerly promised to direct, ch. iii. 21, 22.

And let every Man borrow of his Neighbour.] See ch. iii. 21, 22. Unto which this may be added, that some of the antient Fathers look'd upon this as a piece of Justice, that they should be paid their Wages for the Labour they had undergone, in the Service of the Egyptians, which God orders in this manner. So Epiphanius, in his Anchoratus, Num. cxii, cxiii. where he gives this account of the Israelites spoiling the Egyptians, that they had served served them a long Time for nothing (he makes Account 215 Years) and therefore ἐν τῷ Πιναιον κ, ἔργ. Ο. 2. ὅς ἐστιν ἀνθρώποις, &c. was it not just, both before God and Man, that their Wages should be paid them before they left the Country? See Petavius on that Place. And Heref. lxxi, lxxi, lxxxiii. and Ireneus, L. iv. c. 49. Tertull. adv. Marcion, L. ii. c. 20. And so the Author of the Book of Wisdom took it, ch. x. 17. where he saith, the Lord gave the Israelites the Goods of the Egyptians, μισθὸν κτῶνων αὐτῶν, the Reward of their Labours. See more, ch. xii. 35.

Ver. 3. And the LORD gave the People Favour in the Sight of the Egyptians.] According to his Promise, ch. iii. 21.

Moreover the Man Moses was very great, &c.] This seems to be given as a Reason, both why the Court durst not meddle with Moses, tho' he had brought so many Plagues upon them; and why the People were forward to grant the Israelites what they desired, because they all highly esteemed him, and had him in great reverence, as a Person that had extraordinary Power with God: From whence some think it credible, that their Posterity might give him Divine Honours, as is reported by some antient Writers.

Ver. 4. And Moses said, Thus saith the LORD.] It is manifest (from ver. 8.) that these Words were spoken from the LORD to Pharaoh, but it is a great Question when they were spoken. It is commonly thought that Moses said this when he last parted with Pharaoh, and told him, he would see his Face no more, ch. x. 29. And then the first Words of this Chapter must be translated in the Time past, the LORD had said unto Moses, that he would bring one Plague more upon the Egyptians; which he now denounced to Pharaoh, because he said he should not have the Liberty of being admitted to him again. Or else Pharaoh, contrary to his peremptory Resolution, sent once more to speak with Moses; as it is plain he did after the First-born were slain, ch. xii. 31.

About Midnight.] About the Midst of the following Night. For they having kept the Passover, in the Evening of this fourteenth Day of Abib, the First-born were slain in the Middle of that Night. Not precisely (the Hebrew indicates) but it might be a little before or after Midnight. See Theodorick Haspan, of such kind of Speeches. Disput. de Locut. Sacris, N. iv.

Will I go out.] By an Angel, who was sent from the SCHECHINAH (which resided in some part of the Land of Goshen) and ordered to go and do this Execution.

Into the midst of Egypt.] Perhaps he means the Royal City, where he began this Execution; and then smote the whole Country round about.

Ver. 5. And all the First-born in the Land of Egypt shall die.] This was the worst Plague that had been hitherto inflicted; nothing being so dear to Parents as their Children, especially their First-born.

From the First-born of Pharaoh, &c.] i. e. From the highest to the meanest Person in the Kingdom.

That sitteth upon his Throne.] It is uncertain whether this relates to Pharaoh, or to his First-born. The LXX seem to incline to the former, having left out the Pronoun his, and simply translated it, That sitteth upon the Throne. But the Chaldee determines it to the latter, by translating it, Who is to sit upon the Throne of his Kingdom; i. e. to be Pharaoh's Successor, the Heir of the Kingdom of Egypt.

The Maid-servant that is behind the Mill.] None were more miserable than those Slaves, whose Work it was to turn a Mill with their Hands, and grind Corn perpetually; especially when they were condemned to this in a Prison, nay, in a Dungeon; that so we are to understand this, appears from ch. xii. 29. The antient Comedians often mention this; and we find an Instance of such Drudgery in the Story of Samson, Judges xvi. 21.

Ver. 6. And there shall be a great Cry throughout the Land of Egypt, &c.] The Calamity being general in every House, it made a general and very loud Lamentation; Men, Women, Children, and Servants, bewailing the Loss of the prime Person in the Family.

Ver. 7. But against any of the Children of Israel, shall not a Dog move his Tongue, &c.] A great Wonder! that when so many thousand People were upon their March, with abundance of Cattle, &c. not a Dog should stir; who, though never so gentle, yet commonly bark when they hear the least Noise, especially in the Night. All Travellers know this.

That ye may know how that the LORD doth put a Difference between the Egyptians and Israel.] This was indeed a plain Testimony of God's special Care and Providence over the Israelites; that when there was such a great Cry throughout all the Land of Egypt (ver. 6.) all was quiet, still and silent among them.

Ver. 8. And all these thy Servants shall come down to me, &c.] You that now forbid me to come to you (for Pharaoh himself is included, it appears from ch. xii. 31, &c.) shall be forced to come to me, and submissively intreat, nay, press me to be gone, &c.

Come down.] It was a descent from that part of Egypt where the Court was, unto Goshen; though it may simply signify, Come to me.

Get thee out; and all the People that follow thee.] In the Hebrew the Words are, that is at thy Feet; that is, to the very last Man. For they that bring up the Rear, as we speak, or march last after their Commander, are said in Scripture to be at their Feet; as Wagenfeil hath observed in his Confutation of R. Lipman's Carmen Memoriale. See Gen. xlix. 10.

And after that I will go out.] When you shall think I oblige you to leave your Country.

And he went out from Pharaoh in a great Anger.] It moved the meekest Man on Earth to a just Indignation (which, 'tis likely, he expressed in his Countenance and Behaviour) to see Pharaoh remain so stupidly insensible, as not to regard this Threatning, which he might well think would be as certainly executed, as all the rest had been.

Ver. 9. And the LORD said unto Moses, Pharaoh shall not hearken unto you.] That is, I told thee at the first how it would be, and the Reason of it, ch. iii. 19, 20. Of which it was very proper proper to put Moses in mind at this Time, when he was going to fulfil the last part of those Words; after that (after this last Plague) he will let you go.

That my Wonders may be multiplied in the Land of Egypt.] That he might do one Wonder after another, 'till he had finished Pharaoh's Destruction. See ch. vii. 3.

Ver. 10. And Moses and Aaron did all these Wonders before Pharaoh.] This seems to be a Summary of what hath been said hitherto, concerning the wonderful Plagues of Egypt; which as God designed to inflict upon that Country, so he did, by Moses and Aaron as his Instruments.

And the LORD hardened Pharaoh's Heart, so that he would not let the Children of Israel go, &c.] The Obstinacy of Pharaoh, under several severe Judgments, is so notorious, that it need be no wonder that the LORD himself hardened his Heart, so that he would not suffer the People to depart, 'till what is here threaten'd was executed upon him. There is nothing more agreeable to the Rules of Justice, than to inflict heavy Judgments upon contumacious Offenders; and no Punishment heavier than to let them undo themselves by their own Wickedness, and blindly run on, without any stop, in their evil Courses unto utter Ruin. This was the Case of Pharaoh; of which the Heathen had a broken Notion, when they said, Quos Jupiter vult perdere, prius dementat: Those whom God intends to destroy, he first insatuates.

C H A P. XII.

Ver. 1. AND the LORD spake unto Moses and Aaron, &c.] We are not told here when the LORD spake this to them; but it is very likely it was on the tenth Day of this Month, before he brought the Plague of Darkness on the Land; wherein he gave the Israelites opportunity to prepare for their Departure; and then he changed this Month from the Seventh (as it was before) to the First, as it here follows.

Ver. 2. This Month.] Which in process of Time was called Abib, ch. xiii. 4. ch. xxiii. 15. because then the Corn was eared, and grew towards Ripeness (for Abib signifies an Ear of Corn) and was in after Ages called Nisan, Nehem. ii. 1. Esth. iii. 7. which is a Chaldee Word, denoting this to be the Month wherein they went out to War; from Nissin, which signifies Ensigns or Banners (as Bochart probably conjectures) which at that Season were usually advanced, viz. in the Spring Time. So the Hebrews understand that Place, 2 Sam. xi. 1.

Shall be unto you the Beginning of Months.] i. e. The principal Month of the Year.

It shall be the first Month of the Year to you.] And therefore was hereafter to begin the Year. Which is a plain Intimation that the Year had another Beginning before this Time, which was in the Month they called Tisri, about Autumn; but was now translated unto the Spring. And so we find that all the antient Nations began their Year, after their Harvest and Vintage, which were the Conclusion of their Year. But from henceforward the Jewish Computation was from this Month of Abib; at least, as to their Feasts and Things sacred; tho' their Civil Year still began where it did before; for after this, we find the old Account continued, as appears from ch. xxiii. 16. where the Harvest is said to be in the End of the Year. And yet the Author of Meor E Najim (as Guliel. Vorstius shows in his Observation upon R. D. Gans) affirms, that the antient Hebrews followed this new Account from the Time of their going out of Egypt, till the Building of the Temple (in all their Contracts and Affairs using this Era of Exodus, in Memory of that illustrious Deliverance) as after that Time till the Captivity of Babylon, they dated all their Writings from the Building of the Temple.

Ver. 3. In the tenth Day of this Month.] This is a Law which hath respect to all future Ages, as well as to this present Time, that they should begin to prepare for the Passover four Days before; for which the Jews give such Reasons as these, viz. It was necessary when they went out of Egypt to make this Preparation, lest a Multitude of Business, when they were pressed to be gone in haste, should have made them neglect it. And it was necessary afterwards, that they might more narrowly observe if there were any Blemish in the Lamb; and that they might be put in mind to dispose themselves for so great a Solemnity.

And it is observable, that our blessed Saviour (the true Paschal Lamb) came to Jerusalem on this very Day (viz. the Tenth of Nisan) four Days before he was offered, John xii. 1, 12. Yet there are those who think, that this Precept was peculiar to this Time of their Departure out of Egypt; for they that came, in after Ages, out of all Parts of the Country to worship God at this Feast, could not so well observe it, unless we suppose them to have come some Days before to Jerusalem (as 'tis certain some did, John xi. 55.) or to have sent before-hand thither, to have a Lamb prepared for them, which is not unlikely.

They also, who think the Egyptians now worshipped such kind of Creatures, imagine withal, that this Day was chosen in opposition to them; who, because the Sun enter'd then into Aries, began on this Day the solemn Worship of this Creature, and of that celestial Sign. Thus the Author of the Chronicon Orientale, in express Words: This was the Day in which the Sun entered the first Sign of Aries, and was most solemn among the Egyptians. And therefore God commanded the Israelites to sacrifice that Creature which they worshipped. But there is no Certainty of this, nor of what the Author of Tzeror Hamor observes, that the Feast of the Egyptians being at its height on the fourteenth Day, God ordered the killing of this Lamb at that Time, which was the greatest Contempt of their Coniger Ammon (whom they worshipped then with the greatest Honours) showing he could be no God, whom the Israelites eat.

They shall take to them every Man a Lamb.] The Word Seh signifies a Kid as well as a Lamb, Numb. xv. 11. Deut. xiv. 4. and it is evident, from from the fifth Verse of this Chapter; that they might take either of them for this Sacrifice. But commonly they made choice of a Lamb, as the fittest of the two, being of a more mild and innocent Nature. They that are of opinion the Egyptians now worshipped such Creatures, imagine also this was ordained to preserve the Israelites from their Idolatry, by commanding them to kill such Beasts as they adored. So R. Levi ben Gerson, God intended by this to expel out of the Minds of the Israelites the evil Opinion of the Egyptians, &c.

A Lamb for an House.] Some translate it for a Family. But that is not true: For as Tribes were divided into Families, so were Families into Houses; and when many Lambs were few enough for a whole Family, some Houses were so small that they could not eat one, and therefore were to call in the Assistance of their Neighbours, as it follows in the next Verse.

Ver. 4. And if the Household be too little for the Lamb, let him and his Neighbour, &c.] They were not to be fewer than ten Persons, nor more than twenty, to the eating of one Lamb: At which Meal, Men, Women and Children, Masters and Servants (if circumcised) were entertained, and every one did eat a Piece, at least as big as an Olive, if we may believe the Hebrew Doctors.

Every Man, according to his eating, shall make your count for the Lamb.] That is, every Master of a House shall take such a number of Persons to him, as will be sufficient for the eating of the Lamb.

Ver. 5. The Lamb shall be without Blemish.] In the Hebrew, perfect, or without Defect. There are ten Blemishes mentioned in Lev. xxii. 22, 23, 24. which made a Sacrifice unfit for the Altar. About which the Heathen themselves were very curious, as I noted above out of Herodotus; who relates how exact and scrupulous the Egyptian Priests were in their Scrutiny, whether a Beast were fit to be offered. See cb. viii. 26.

A Male.] Because the Male was counted more excellent than the Female, Mal. i. 14. and therefore all whole Burnt-offerings (which were the most perfect sort of Sacrifices) were to be Males only, Lev. i. 3, 6. From hence this Custom (as Bochart thinks) was derived to the Egyptians, who offered only Males, as he proves out of Herodotus, P. i. Hieroz. L. iii. c. 33, 50. But whatsoever the Egyptians did, the Romans did otherwise: For Servius saith (in Aeneid. viii.) In omnibus sacris feminini generis plus valent vitime; that Sacrifices of the Female-kind were of greatest Value in all their holy Offices. Such different Fancies there were in the World in After-Ages: But what Opinions they had in Moses's Time, none can certainly resolve.

Of the first Year.] It doth not signify that the Lamb was to be a Year old (for then it was incapable to be offered) but under a Year old. It was fit for Sacrifice at eight Days old, though not before, cb. xxii. 30. Lev. xxii. 27. (which Laws, Maimonides saith, were observed in the paschal Lamb, as they were in the daily Sacrifice, Exod. xxix. 38. Numb. xxxviii. 3. and in others, Lev. xxiii. 18, 19.) and so it continued fit from that Time till it was a Year old; after which it was not accepted. For which Bochart gives a very likely Reason in the forenamed Book; P. i. L. ii. c. 50. p. 585.

Ver. 6. And ye shall keep it unto the fourteenth Day of the same Month.] When it was to be offered to God by all the People; as our Saviour was upon the very same Day. Which the Jews expected, as appears by a memorable Passage which Andr. Masius (in Josh. v. 10.) quotes out of that Tract in the Talmud called Rosch Hashanah, where they say it was a famous and old Opinion among the antient Jews; that the Day of the New Year, which was the beginning of the Israelites Deliverance out of Egypt, should in future Time be the beginning of the Redemption by the Messiah. Which was wonderfully fulfilled in our Lord and Saviour; who keeping the Passover the Day before the Rulers of the Jews observed it, it fell out that he, the true Lamb of God, was offered on that very Day, which Moses here appointed for the offering this typical Sacrifice.

And the whole Assembly of the Congregation of Israel shall kill it.] God here grants a Liberty to any Man among the Israelites to kill the Passover. Which Act did not make him a Priest (whose Work it was to offer the Blood) for in other Sacrifices any Man that brought them might do the same, Lev. i. 3, 4, 5. And this is given as a Reason why the People did not kill the Passover in Hezekiah's Time, because they were unclean; and therefore the Levites had the Charge of it, 2 Chron. xxx. 17.

But besides this, Moses seems to mean that all the Company who were to eat, were to be present at the Sacrifice; by which means the whole Assembly of the Congregation of Israel were engaged in this Service. And this was exactly also fulfilled in our blessed Saviour (whom the Apostle calls our Passover) against whom the Priests, and Scribes, and Pharisees, and all the People, conspired to take away his Life.

In the Evening.] In the Hebrew the Words are (as is noted in the Margin of our Bibles) between the two Evenings.] The first of which began when the Sun began to decline from its Noontide-Point, and lasted till Sun-set. Then began the second Evening, and lasted till Night. Between these two Evenings, about the middle of them, was the Passover offered. For after the offering of Incense, they began on this Day to kill the daily Evening Sacrifice, between two and three in the Afternoon (a little sooner than on other Days) and having finished that, and trimmed the Lamps (as Maimonides in his Treatise on this Subject, Cap. i. Sect. 4. describes the Order of it) they went about the Paschal Sacrifice, which continued till Sun-setting. That is, there were about two Hours and a Half for the Dispatch of all the Lambs. For the daily Evening Sacrifice, and all belonging to it, being over in an Hour's time (by half an Hour after three) all the rest of the Day till Sun-set (which was two Hours and a half at this time of the Year) remained for the killing of the Paschal Lambs. See Bochart, Hieroz. P. i. L. ii. c. 50. p. 558. and our Learned Dr. Lightfoot, in his Gleanings on Exodus. Now our three a Clock in the Afternoon being the same with the Jews ninth ninth Hour, it is evident our Blessed Saviour offered up himself to God for our Redemption about the same time that this Lamb was slain, for their Deliverance out of Egypt, Mark xv. 34, 37.

Ver. 7. And they shall take of the Blood.] Which was the Means that God now appointed for their Preservation.

And strike it.] By dipping a Bunch of Hyssop into it, ver. 22.

On the two Side-posts.] Upon which Folding-doors moved. For from thence, Bochart thinks, they had their Name in the Hebrew.

And on the upper Door-posts.] The Hebrew Word Makuph is no where to be found, but in this Chapter; and its carrying in it a Signification of looking through, may induce us to think they had Lattices at the top of their Doors, through which they could peep, to see who knock'd, before they opened them. Both these were sprinkled with the Blood, but not the Threshold, lest any body should tread upon it; which had been profane, this being an holy thing. This striking or sprinkling of the Blood upon the Posts, seems to have been peculiar to the first Passover, at their going out of Egypt, and not to have been used in After-times, when there was not the same occasion for it, viz. to distinguish their Houses from the Egyptians, for their Preservation from the destroying Angel.

In the Houses wherein they shall eat it.] In which the whole Nation was gathered together, and so all delivered.

Ver. 8. And they shall eat the Flesh in that Night.] For it was not lawful to let any of it remain till the Morning, ver. 10. And the Hebrews say, they were to eat it after they had supped, and were well filled with other Meat.

Roast with Fire.] Neither raw, nor foddén (as it follows in the next Verse) for it might be sooner roasted than foddén: and they were in haste to be gone, when it was offered.

And unleavened Bread.] Partly to put them in mind of their Hardships in Egypt (for unleavened Bread is heavy and unfavoury) and partly to commemorate their Deliverance from thence in such haste, that they had not time to leaven it, ver. 39. Deut. xvi. 3.

And with bitter Herbs.] They were used for the same end, to put them in mind of their hard Bondage in Egypt, which made their Lives bitter to them, ch. i. 14. Maimonides says, there were five of these Herbs, whose Names he mentions: but it is hard for us to tell what they were. That great Man Bochartus hath given some Guesses at them; and thinks the first of them was wild Lettice, which is extreme bitter. See Hierozyoic. P. i. L. ii. c. 50. p. 603, &c. and his Canaan, L. ii. c. 15. p. 857.

Ver. 9. Eat not of it raw.] i. e. Half-roasted, when some of the Blood remains still in it. So Maimonides expounds it: and see Hottinger in his Smegma Orient. p. 169. For it doth not seem necessary to forbid them to eat it quite raw, Mankind generally abhorring such Food; unless we suppose there were such barbarous Customs now, as there were in After-times; when in some of the Gentile Feasts (particularly those of Bacchus) which had their Original in Egypt (as Herodotus tells us, L. ii. c. 49. and Plutarch also, L. de Isid. & Osir.) they tore the Members of living Creatures in pieces, and did eat them, the Blood running about their Mouths, as Julius Firmicus observes. But the Opinion of Theodoret seems to me probable (Serm. κ. Περὶ χρισμῶν) that, in old time, the wicked Demons were in love with the Sacrificing of Men to them: But when they say Mankind began to abhor such Sacrifices, and to abstain from them, as abominable Cruelty, then they invented τὰς διαμαρτυρίας ἢ ἀπομαρτίας, &c. Scourgings and Whippings, Eating of raw Flesh, and of other such like Rites, Tom. iv. p. 625.

Not foddén at all with Water.] It seems superfluous to say foddén, or boil'd with Water, there being no other way of boiling Things. But the Hebrew Word Basbal signifying to roast, as well as to boil, according as the matter is, Moses takes away that Ambiguity, by adding with Water; and also by expressly naming the opposite to it, but roast with Fire: Which was ordained in opposition to some Gentile Customs in the Eastern Countries (if they were so antient as the Times of Moses) where they boiled the Flesh of their Sacrifices, when they prayed to their Gods against Drought, by the scorching Heat of the Sun. So Athenæus relates out of Philocorus, that the Athenians did, in their Sacrifices to the Ægei, who came, in all likelihood, from the Egyptian Horus, which signifies Apollo, or the Sun. The Zabii also were wont to boil Kids in Milk.

Roast with Fire.] Contrary to the manner in all other Peace-Offerings, whose Flesh, that was allowed to be eaten, either by Priest or People, was to be foddén; even in the Feast of the Passover, as we read expressly, 2 Chron. xxxv. 13. where these Things are accurately distinguished. And Maimonides gives this as the Reason of it (why they are commanded to eat it roasted) because they went out in great haste, and had not time to boil it, P. iii. More Nev. c. 46. Some of the Gentiles in After-times roasted their Meat in the Sun, as Heliodorus tells us, lib. i. Ethiopic. And some Grecian Women (as Plutarch tells us) did the same in their Feast called Θερμολογία.

His Head with his Legs, and the Purtenance thereof.] They were to roast the Lamb whole, to avoid perhaps the Superstition of the Gentiles, who were wont to rake into the Bowels of their Sacrifices, to make curious Observations; and also (in the Ἀπολογία of Bacchus) thought themselves full of their Deity, when they eat the Entrails of their Sacrifices, with the Blood running about their Mouths, as Arnobius tells us.

Ver. 10. And ye shall let nothing of it remain until the Morning.] This was a Law about Eucharistical Sacrifices, Lev. xxii. 30. and before that, Lev. vii. 15. (only there is an Exception in the two following Verses, 16, 17. for Sacrifices that were a Vow, or a voluntary Offering) by which God provided that Holy Things should not be in danger to be corrupted, or put to profane Uses; and that they might not lose their just Estimation: as even common Meat doth, which is not so much valued, when it is kept kept till the next Day; for Men desire that which is fresh and newly dressed.

In this Paschal Sacrifice also it was the more necessary it should not remain, lest they should have been forced, either to carry it away with them, which might have been troublesome; or if they left it behind them, it might have been profaned, and exposed to contempt by the Egyptians, or at least have been corrupted, which would not have befitted so holy a Meat. Besides, there might have been danger also of turning such Reliques to superstitious Uses, as the brazen Serpent was; God working as great a Deliverance by the one, as by the other. And this we may the rather think, because it is certain the ancient Idolaters were wont to save some Part of their Sacrifices for superstitious Purposes, as appears from Baruch vi. 27. Herodotus testifies the same concerning the ancient Persians, L. i. c. 132. which the Hebrews might have been easily inclined to do, if they had left any Remains of this Sacrifice, which had such wonderful Effects for their Preservation.

And that which remaineth of it till the Morning ye shall burn with Fire.] We read in Macrobius of such a Custom among the ancient Romans, in a Feast called Protervia; where the Manner was (as Flavianus there saith) ut si quid ex epulis superfuisset, igne consumeretur; that if any Thing was left of the good Cheer, it should be consumed with Fire, L. ii. Saturnal. cap. 2.

Ver. 11. And thus shall ye eat it.] He here orders the Habit and Posture wherein they should partake of the Passover; which was like Travellers, or like those who were going about some laborious Work. So the three following Particulars plainly import.

With your Loins girt.] They wearing long and loose Garments, in the Eastern Countries, it was necessary to tie them up, and gird them about their Loins, whensoever they either went a Journey, or undertook, as I said, any great Labour; that so their Garments might not be an Impediment to them, as they would have been, if they had hung down about their Heels. See 2 Kings iv. 29.

Your Shoes on your feet.] Many fancy this refers to the ancient Custom of putting off their Shoes (which God now forbids) when they went to eat, lest they should make the Beds dirty on which they lay leaning. But Bochart hath demonstrated that this Custom was not so antient; but that in Moses's Time, and after, they sat at their Tables as we do now; of which there are many Instances in the Book of Genesis, and elsewhere. And therefore it is more likely the Jews were wont to go without Shoes, when they were in Egypt; for antiently Men did so; and that being an hot Country, there was no need of them. And besides, they were so oppressed, that they may well be supposed to want many such Conveniencies of Life. But now God commands them to put on Shoes, being to travel a long Journey. See his Hierozycon, P. i. L. ii. c. 50. p. 508.

And your Staff in your Hand.] Still the Posture of Travellers, who never went without a Staff; both to support them in slippery Places, and to defend them against Assaults, Gen. xxxii. 10. They seem now to have eaten the Lamb leaning on their Staves; and therefore stood all the Time as Men ready to depart. But these were Things peculiar only to that Passover which they kept in Egypt; afterwards they were not tied to them.

Ye shall eat it in haste.] As Men expecting every Moment to begin their Journey. This was the Foundation of many of the Laws about the Passover, as Maimonides observes, P. iii. More Nev. c. 46.

It is the LORD's Passover.] To be kept in Memory of his wonderful Mercy in sparing the Israelites when he destroyed the Egyptians; and delivering them from their cruel Bondage.

Ver. 12. For I will pass through the Land of Egypt this Night.] See ch. xi. 4.

And will smite all the First-born, &c.] A most grievous Judgment; all Children being very dear to their Parents, especially their First-born; and those more especially who are their only Children, as it is likely they were too many in Egypt. It was the forer Plague also, because no Man's Children were spared, that he might comfort his Neighbours; but they were all at the same Time bewailing their Loss. It is not certain by what Sort of Death they were smitten; but it was sudden, and extinguish'd them all in the same Moment.

And against all the Gods of Egypt I will execute Judgment.] And so Moses tells us he did, Numb. xxxiii. 4. From whence it appears, that the Egyptians were Idolaters in Moses's Days; and the Jewish Doctors will have it, that all their Idols were destroyed this Night. So Jonathan in his Paraphrase; Their molten Images were dissolved and melted down; their Images of Stone were dash'd in pieces; their Images made of Earth were crumbled into bits, and their Wooden ones reduced to Ashes. Of the Truth of which we cannot be assured; tho' we meet with it not only in Pirke Elieser, c. 48. but in the Author of Dibre ha-jamim, &c. or, The Life and Death of Moses: Whose Words are these; All the First-born, both of Man and Beast, were smitten; the Images also and Pictures destroyed; whereupon the Jews borrowing Gold, Silver, and Garments of the Egyptians, they went away laden with Riches, according to what God said to Abraham, Gen. xv. 14. That Nation whom they shall serve, will I judge; and afterward shall they come out with great Substance. This the Heathen seem to have understood (for this Story reached them) as if they had carried away the Gold and Silver and Garments of the Egyptian Idols: For so Trogus reports it (in Justin, L. xxxvi. c. 2.) that when Moses led the Israelites out of Egypt, Sacra Egyptiorum furto abstulit; he stole away the holy Things of the Egyptians, which he makes the Reason why Pharaoh pursued them. Artapanus also in Eusebius's faith, that most of their Temples were overthrown by an Earthquake, L. ix. Præpar. Evang. c. 27.

There are those, who by Elohim understand nothing but their Princes or Judges, the great Men of the Kingdom, upon whom the Judgment ment of God was now executed. But another Place in this Book, ch. xx. 23. plainly determines it to signify Images.

I am the LORD.] There is no other God but me; as he had said he would make both the Israelites and Pharaoh also to know, ch. x. 2. xi. 7.

Ver. 13. And the Blood shall be to you for a Token.] Or a Sign, by which the Israelites were assured of Safety and Deliverance from the destroying Angel. Of which token, if we may believe Epiphanus, there was a Memorial preserved even among the Egyptians themselves, tho' they were ignorant of the Original of their own Rites. For at the Æquinox (which was the Time of the Passover) they marked their Cattle and their Trees, and one another, ἐν μίλταις, with red Oker, or some such Thing, which they fancied would be a Preservative to them.

And when I see the Blood.] Wherefoever my Angel finds this Blood upon the Door-posts.

I will pass over you, &c.] Here is the Reason of the Name of Pesach, as the Hebrews call it; or Pischa, or Pascha, as it is called by the Chaldees; because God ordered his Angel to pass over, or pass by the Children of Israel, and not to smite any body in their Families, when he smote every First-born of the Egyptians, ver. 23.

Ver. 14. And this Day shall be unto you for a Memorial.] To preserve in mind God's wonderful Works, which he made to be remembered, Psal. cxi. 4. that is, ordered and disposed Things in such a Manner, that they should not be forgotten; particularly, by instituting a Festival Solemnity upon this Day, as it here follows.

And you shall keep it a Feast to the LORD, &c.] Called the Feast of the Passover; the Rites of which are all manifestly contrived to preserve a Memory of the Benefits they now received.

An Ordinance for ever.] To the End of that Oeconomy; for it often signifies only a long Duration, as Deut. xv. 17. and here imports no more, but that they should keep this Ordinance, not only now, but when they came into the Land of Canaan.

Ver. 15. Seven Days shall ye eat unleavened Bread.] The seven Days following the Feast of the Passover were observed as a distinct Festival, and called The Feast of unleavened Bread, ver. 17. because no Bread that had any Leaven in it, might be eaten all that Time. Which the Jews expound thus; not that they were bound to eat unleavened Bread all those seven Days (which was necessary only on that Night when the Passover was killed) but only not to eat leavened Bread. That was utterly unlawful; but they might eat Rice, or parched Corn, or any such Thing. See Petavius in Epiphan. Hæres. lxx. n. 11.

At their March indeed out of Egypt they were forced to eat unleavened Bread (having none else to eat) not only for seven Days, but for a whole Month; that is, from the fifteenth of the first Month, to the fifteenth and sixteenth of the next; when God gave them Manna and Quails, ch. xvi. 1, 12, 13. But Necessity, as I said, compelled them to this; they having nothing else to support them in the Wilderness during that Time; because, thro' haste, they were constrained to bring their Dough out of Egypt unleavened, ver. 39.

Even the first Day ye shall put leaven out of your Houses.] Which they searched with great diligence the Evening before, that the smallest Crumb might not be left behind: So their Doctors tell us, particularly Maimonides in his Treatise on this Subject. See Buxtorf. Synagog. Judaic. c. 17.

That Soul shall be cut off from Israel.] See concerning this Ceret (or cutting off) which is often mentioned in these Books, Gen. xvii. 14. Most think it a Punishment by the Hand of God, and not of Man.

Ver. 16. And in the first Day there shall be an holy Convocation, and in the seventh Day, &c.] The first and the last Days of the Feast of unleavened Bread were kept holy (the other five were working Days) because, as God delivered them from their cruel Bondage in Egypt upon the first Day, so he overthrew Pharaoh and his Host in the Red Sea upon the Seventh.

No manner of Work shall be done in them.] No manner of servile Work. See Lev. xxiii. 7, 8.

Save only that which every Man must eat, &c.] He that did any other Work, was to be beaten. For they equal these Days with the Sabbath in this regard; that whatsoever Work was forbidden on the Sabbath, might not be done on any such Days as these, which they call good Days. But they might provide good Cheer on these Days; tho' not more than could be eaten. See Buxtorf. Synag. Jud. c. 19. where he shows at large what Things might be done, and what not on these Days, according to the Opinion of their Doctors.

Ver. 17. And ye shall observe the Feast of unleavened Bread, &c.] He repeats it again; because it was a Thing of great moment, to have these seven Days observed intirely, and not only the Passover upon the fourteenth Day in the Evening; that they might every Year think so long of God's great Goodness, in delivering them from their miserable Condition in Egypt, as not to let the Sense of so singular a Benefit slip at any Time quite out of their Minds.

By an Ordinance for ever.] See ver. 14.

Ver. 18. In the first Month, on the fourteenth Day of the Month at even, &c.] The Passover was celebrated in the Conclusion of the fourteenth Day of this Month, just before the Beginning of the fifteenth Day; for the next Morning, when the Israelites, immediately after they had eaten the Lamb, were hastened out of Egypt, was not part of the fourteenth Day, but of the fifteenth; as we read Numb. xxxii. 3.

Until the one and twentieth Day of the Month at even.] That is, for seven Days (as was said before, ver. 15. and again is repeated ver. 19.) which began immediately after the Eating the Paschal Lamb, in the End of the fourteenth Day. For if they should be reckoned from the Beginning of the fourteenth Day, there would be not seven, but eight Days of unleavened Bread.

Ver. 19. Seven Days shall there be no Leaven found in your Houses.] This still makes the Precept stricter; that they were not only to abstain from from any Thing leavened, but not so much as to have it in their Habitations. Accordingly the Jews tell us of an exact Search which every one was bound to make, with lighted Wax-Candles, lest it should remain in any Corner or Crevice of the House. Their Scrupulosity in this Matter is exactly described by Buxtorf, in his Synag. Jud. cap. xvii. p. 394, &c.

Whether he be a Stranger, &c.] This is one of another Nation; but had embraced the Jewish Religion, by receiving Circumcision. For none else were admitted to eat of the Passover, ver. 48. Such a Person was called by the Greeks, a Proselyte.

Ver. 20. Ye shall eat nothing leavened.] This, according to the Jews, explains what follows, In all your Habitations shall ye eat unleavened Bread. That is, if they eat any Bread at all, it was to be without Leaven: See ver. 15. Accordingly, on the Day before the Passover, they were very busy in making Cakes, which they call Mazzoth, without any Butter, or Oil, or so much as Salt in them; of mere Water and Flower. Which being very insipid, some made bold (as their Authors tell us) to add Eggs and Sugar; and sometimes the richer Sort made them of mere Almonds; both for the Honour of the Feast (as they pretended) and for the Comfort of sick and infirm People, as well as to render them more pleasant. Yet on the first Day of the Feast they would eat none of these, but only the Bread of Affliction (as they called it) made merely of Meal and Water.

Ver. 21. Then Moses called for all the Elders of Israel.] Immediately after he had received the Command from God he summoned them to deliver it to the People, that it might be put in Execution. Concerning Elders, see ch. iii. 16.

Draw out, and take you a Lamb.] It is thus expounded by Jonathan in his Paraphrase, Withdraw your Hands from the Idols of Egypt, and take a Lamb to your Families, &c. By which it appears he thought this was opposed to the Rites of the Egyptians: But I know not on what Ground; for the Israelites offered no Sacrifices there.

According to your Families.] See ver. 3.

And kill the Passover.] It belonged to every Man to do it (as was said ver. 6.) and now there was no Priest, as yet, ordained; but every Father of a Family exercised that Office. I need not mention the Manner after which the Jewish Writers say it was to be slain.

The Passover.] The Hebrew Word Pesach signifies principally the Angel's passing by the Israelites, when he slew the Egyptian Children. From whence it came to signify also the Lamb that was offered in Memory of this Deliverance; and was a Means of it at this Time. So it signifies here, and in many other Places. And likewise it signifies all the Sacrifices which were wont to accompany this Lamb, and were offered to God with it, at this Festival, Deut. xvi. 2. And (lastly) the Feast it self is called by this Name, Luke xxii. 1.

And here it may be fit to note, That the Lamb being first killed in Egypt, it was killed in every Man's House; for they had no Altar there, nor any other Place where they had liberty to kill it. But after they came to the Land of Canaan, it was not lawful to sacrifice it any where, but in the Place which God appointed for his Worship, Deut. xvi. 2. From whence Maimonides concludes, that whatsoever they did with other Sacrifices, yet this could not be offered in the High Places, but only at the Temple. And it is likely they did so in the Wilderness, the Tabernacle being newly erected at the keeping of the second Passover, Numb. ix. 5.

Ver. 22. And ye shall take a Bunch of Hyssop.] So the Leper was to be cleansed, and the House infected with Leprosy, Lev. xiv. 6, 7, 49, 50, &c. and so the Prophet David prays to be purged from his Sin, Psal. li. 9. Whence it is that Hesychius calls this Herb βόλβον ομήχερα, an absterfve and purging Herb, because it was appointed by the Law of Moses for this Purpose; otherwise there is nothing absterfve in its Nature.

And dip it in the Blood that is in the Basin.] The Hebrew Word Saph, which is here translated Basin, is translated Cup in Zach. xii. 2. but the LXX. and Vulgar take it to signify the Door, or Threshold of the House, where some suppose the Lamb was killed. Certain it is, that some of the Vessels of the Sanctuary are called in the plural Number Sippin and Sippoib, 1 Kings vii. 50. Jer. lii. 19. though the Vessels which received the Blood of the Beast at the Altar of Burnt-offerings, are called by another Name: See Exod. xxvii. 3. There were no such now, and therefore they received the Blood at present in a common Basin or Cup.

And strike the Lintel, &c.] Or sprinkle it, as many understand it. For there being, as yet, no Altar, the Blood is ordered to be sprinkled in this Manner; having in it something of the Nature of a Propitiation: Because, by this sprinkling of the Blood, God's Displeasure was turned away from the Israelites, when it fell upon those Houses where this Blood was not seen.

And the two Side-posts.] See ver. 7.

And none of you shall go out of the Door of his House.] The destroying Angel could have discern'd an Israelite from an Egyptian, though he had met him in the Street: But this was requir'd to teach them that their Safety consisted in being under the Protection of the Blood of this Lamb, which was shed to save their Blood from being spilt. Thus in the Flood there was no Safety but in the Ark: Nor could Rahab have been saved, when Jericho was destroy'd, out of the House where the scarlet Thread was tied.

Until the Morning.] When they were importun'd by the Egyptians very early (not long after Midnight, ver. 31, &c.) to be gone, with all they had, out of their Country.

Ver. 23. For the LORD will pass through to smite the Egyptians.] As he had threaten'd, ver. 12. For he rehearset to the Elders what God had told him.

And when he seeth the Blood, &c. the LORD shall pass over the Door, &c.] So he had promis'd before, ver. 13. Maimonides being of the Opinion that the Zabii and other Idolaters abhorred the killing of such Creatures, thinks that God ordained this killing of the Lamb, &c. both to purge the Minds of the Jews from such false Opinions, and make Profession of the contrary; and to persuade Men that that Action, which they accounted deadly, preserv'd from Death; according to these Words, The LORD shall pass over the Door, &c. Par. iii. More Nevoch. cap. xlv.

Ver. 24. And ye shall observe this Thing, &c.] Keep this Feast, by sacrificing a Lamb, and eating no leavened Bread: Though some of the Ceremonies wherewith it was now observed, in After-times were not necessary.

Ver. 25. When you be come to the Land, which the LORD shall give you, &c.] This Deliverance is not to be forgotten, when God hath given you Rest in the Land he hath promised you. But there you are most carefully to preserve the Memory of it, by keeping this Feast every Year. And indeed, most think they were not bound to keep it till they came thither; but what they did in the Wilderness the next Year, was by a special Direction, not by virtue of the Command in this Chapter, Numb. ix. 1, 2, &c.

Ye shall keep this Service.] In all Things; except what was proper and peculiar to their coming out of Egypt.

Ver. 26. When your Children shall say unto you, What mean you by this Service?] When Children were twelve Years old, their Parents were bound to bring them to the Temple; where, seeing what was done at this Festival, they would be apt to enquire into the Meaning of it. At every Feast also of the Passover, the eldest Person at the Table instructed all the younger Sort, that were there present, in the Reason of this Institution, rehearsing these very Words, as Conradus Pellicanus observes: This is the Sacrifice of the Passover, in Remembrance that the LORD passed over the Houses of the Children of Israel in Egypt, when he smote the Egyptians, and delivered our Houses.

Ver. 27. It is the Sacrifice of the LORD's Passover.] Or, the Sacrifice of the Passover to the LORD; i. e. in honour of the LORD, who passed over the Israelites, when he smote the Egyptians. It is frequently called by the Name of a Sacrifice, ch. xxiii. 18. xxxiv. 25. Deut. xvi. 4, 5, 6. and it is called Corban; which is a Name given only to those Things which were brought to be offered up to God. See Numb. ix. 13. where, as it is called Corban, so the same Word is used for bringing it, which is commonly used about other Sacrifices. And it further appears to have been properly a Sacrifice, by the Rites belonging to it; for the Blood of it was sprinkled by the Priests, 2 Chron. xxx. 16. xxxv. 11. which, though it could not be done here, because they had no Altar in Egypt, yet the Posts of their Houses (as I observed before) were sprinkled with it; and it had an Effect accordingly.

And the People.] To whom the Elders (ver. 21.) reported these Things from Moses.

Bowed the Head and worshipped.] Expresed their Belief of what Moses had said, and humbly acknowledged God's Goodness to them.

Ver. 28. And the Children of Israel went away.] To their several Habitations.

And did as the LORD had commanded Moses and Aaron.] (ver. 1.) They kept the Passover.

So did they.] According to all the forenamed Rites belonging to it.

Ver. 29. And it came to pass that at Midnight the LORD smote, &c.] According to the foregoing Threatning, ch. xi. 4, 5. See there.

The Captive that was in the Dungeon.] The Pit, or Hole under Ground. For the Hebrew signifies the lowest Part of the Prison. See ch. xi. 5.

Ver. 30. And Pharaoh rose up in the Night, he and all his Servants, and all the Egyptians.] I suppose the Angel made a great Noise when he came to give the Blow, which made the Egyptians start out of their Sleep, and behold the Calamity which was come upon them. Or perhaps the First-born gave such a lamentable Sbrick, when they were struck, that it awakened the whole Family.

And there was a great Cry in Egypt.] It is no improbable Conjecture, which was made a great while ago by Fortunatus Scacchus, in his Mirothec. Ebraeo-christm, L. i. c. 6. that the solemn Feast among the Egyptians, wherein they went about with Candles in the Night, seeking for Osiris with Tears and great Lamentations, took its Original from Pharaoh's rising up out of his Bed at Midnight, and all the Egyptians with him; who lighting Candles, and finding their Children dead, bewailed them with loud Cries. And it is not unreasonable to think, as he doth, that Pharaoh's eldest Son, who was now slain, had the Name of Osiris; whose sudden Death, by this Stroke, all Posterity lamented in one Night of the Year: Which was when the Moon was at full, as he observes out of Apuleius; which still confirms this Conjecture, it being at a full Moon when this Slaughter was made, and the Israelites delivered out of Egypt.

For there was not an House, where there was not one dead.] If there were any Children in it.

Ver. 31. And he called for Moses and Aaron.] By some of his Servants, whom he sent to them; as ver. 33. seems to signify.

By Night.] He durst not stay till the next Morning, for fear he should have been cut off also before that Time.

And said, Rise up.] One would think by this that they found them sleeping securely in their Beds, when this deadly Blow was given to the Egyptians.

And get you forth from amongst my People, both you and the Children of Israel, &c.] For he was sorely afraid, if they staid any longer, they would bring some greater Mischief upon him.

Go, serve the LORD, as ye have said.] He had several Times made this Concession, but was never so much in earnest as now.

Ver. 32. Also take your Flocks and your Herds, &c.] Though his Heart had been often hardened, yet this Slaughter of all their First-born made such a deep Impression upon him, that he comes fully up to their Terms, yielding for the present to all they had desired; though he did not continue constant in this Mind, but soon revolted.

And bless me also.] Pray for me, as the Chaldee translates it.

Ver.

Ver. 33. And the Egyptians were urgent upon the People.] They that brought from Pharaoh a Grant of all the Israelites desired (and others also who had lost their Children) pressed very hard upon them to accept it, and that with all Speed; not out of Love to the Israelites, but for fear they should perish themselves, if they did not leave their Country. Pharaoh especially, seeing his First-born, the Heir of his Crown, struck suddenly dead, had reason to conclude the next Blow would be at his own Life.

To send them out of the Land of Egypt.] This shows they were not merely dismissed, but intreated, nay, importuned to depart. Such a Change had this Slaughter, and the general Outcry that followed upon it, made in their Hearts.

In haste.] They that were unwilling before to hearken to the Israelites Petition, now make their Petitions to them; and were so glad to be rid of them, that they would not suffer them to delay their Departure; nay, made a Golden-Bridge (as we speak) for their speedy Passage out of Egypt, ver. 35, 36.

For they said, We be all dead Men.] They were desirous the Israelites should enjoy their Liberty, rather than they lose their own Lives.

Ver. 34. And the People took their Dough, before it was leavened.] They seemed to have newly mixed their Flower and Water together, and kneaded it into a Paste or Dough, as we translate it; but had not put any Leaven into it, nor had Time to make it into Cakes, and bake them.

Their Kneading-troughs.] The Hebrew Word comprehends both the Dough, and the Thing wherein it was contained; which, in ch. viii. 3. we translate Ovens, and here Kneading-troughs, in which their Dough was carried.

Being bound up in their Cloths.] The Hebrew Word for Cloths signifies any Thing that covers another, or wherein it is wrap'd; as the Dough was in Linen-cloths, it is most likely (for that is usual) to keep it from the cold Air, which was sharp in the Night, and would have hindered its rising.

On their Shoulders.] For we do not read of any Waggon or Horses they had, for the Carriage of their Goods out of Egypt.

Ver. 35. And the Children of Israel did according to the Word of Moses.] Who had commanded them from God to do as it here follows, (ch. xi. 1, 2.) which was their Warrant, and justified the Fact.

And they borrowed of the Egyptians, &c.] So most understand it: Though some think it was a free Gift which the Egyptians bestowed upon them, when they were very desirous (as we read before) to have them gone out of their Country; which made them not only intreat, but hire them to depart. So Jacobus Capellus, ad A. M. 2503. They that had denied them leave to go away for a few Days (saith he) now press them to depart with all Speed; quin & precibus Israelitas demulcent, ac donis onerant Egyptii: See ch. iii. 23. But it is commonly thought, that the Egyptians imagined the Israelites only desired to appear as well adorned as they could before their God, at the great Feast they were to hold in the Wilderness, and so readily lent them these Jewels and fine Clothes to deck themselves withal; which they hoped would be restored to them again, as soon as the Sacrifice was over.

Ver. 36. And the LORD gave the People Favour, &c.] As he had promised, ch. iii. 21. and see ch. xi. 3.

So that they lent them such Things as they required.] Though the Men borrowed as well as the Women (ch. xi. 3.) yet the Women are only mentioned, ch. iii. 23. because they borrowed most; and the Women and Maidens of Egypt might be the more willing to bestow their Jewels and Ear-rings upon them, that they might woo their Husbands, Children and Relations, to be gone with all Speed.

And they spoiled the Egyptians.] God hath a supreme Right to all Things; and there was a just Cause why he should transfer the Right of the Egyptians unto the Israelites. See ch. xi. 2. Unto which add this Story, which is told in the Gemara of the Sanhedrin; that in the Time of Alexander the Great, the Egyptians brought an Action against the Israelites, desiring they might have the Land of Canaan, in Satisfaction for all that they borrowed of them when they went out of Egypt. To which Gibeab ben Kofam, who was Advocate for the Jews, replied; That before they made this Demand, they must prove what they alledged, that the Israelites borrowed any Thing of their Ancestors. Unto which the Egyptians thought it sufficient to say, That they found it recorded in their own Books; mentioning this Place. Well then, said the Advocate, look into the same Book, and you will find the Children of Israel lived four hundred and thirty Years in Egypt: Pay us for all the Labour and Toil of so many thousand People as you employ'd all that Time, and we will restore what we borrowed. To which they had not a Word to answer. Tertullian mentions such a Controversy, or Plea between the two Nations, L. ii. advers. Marcion. where he relates this from an ancient Tradition. See Mr. Selden, L. vii. de Jure Nat. & Gen. c. 8. Besides this, it is not impertinent to observe, that the Egyptians were declared Enemies to the Jews: Now it is not unlawful to spoil an Enemy; nor ought this, upon that Account, to be called a Theft. This Reason Clemens Alexandrinus joins to the former: See L. i. Stromat. p. 345, D. But no Body, I think, hath expressed this in better Words, and more full of Sense, than our famous Dr. Jackson, Book x. upon the Creed, Chap. 40. where considering God as become the King of this People, in a proper and peculiar Manner, and considering also what unfufferable Wrongs the King and People of Egypt had done unto this People of God, who were now become his peculiar Subjects, or Proprietary Leiges, he concludes, that this Fact, even by the Course of Human Law, or Law of Nations, was more justifiable, than Royal Grants of Letters of Mart, or other like Remedies are, against such other Nations as have wrong'd their Subjects, or suffered them to be wrong'd by any under their Command, without Restitution, when they solemnly, or by way of Embassy demanded it. In short, whatsoever the Hebrew Women took from the Egyptians, they took and possessed possessed by the Law of Reprisal; that is, by virtue of a special Warrant, granted by the LORD himself, as he was now become, in special, not only the God of his People, but their King.

Ver. 36. And the Children of Israel journeyed from Rameses.] Whether this were a City or a Country, the Israelites seem in this Place to have made a general Rendezvous (as we now speak) it being well known to them; for they were thereabout first planted, Gen. xlvii. 11.

Unto Succoth.] This Day being the fifteenth of Nisan, they began to keep the Feast of Unleavened Bread at this Place, called Succoth, from the Booths or Tents which were here first erected (no Houses being there) wherein they continued while they lived in the Wilderness; and many preferred them before Houses, when they came to Canaan. Whence we read so often such Expressions as these; To thy Tents, O Israel; or, They went every Man to his Tent.

It is an idle Fancy of R. Solomon upon this Place, that they travelled this Day 120 Miles, and that in an Hour, because it is said, ch. xix. 4. that God carried them on Eagles Wings. Some will have this Place called Succoth, because the Cloud of Glory began here first to over-spread them.

About six hundred thousand on Foot that were Men.] i. e. Were twenty Years old, and upward; all fit for War.

Besides Children.] If we reckon all under twenty Years of Age, with all the Women and old Men, there could not be less than fifteen hundred thousand Persons. A vast Increase in the Space of a little more than two hundred Years, from 70 Persons that went down into Egypt.

Ver. 38. And a mixed Multitude went up also with them.] Some think these were only a Rabble that march'd along with them, imagining they would return at three Days End; which, when they saw they did not, they began to mutiny, and quarrelled with Moses, &c. as the Author of Dibre Hajamim tells the Story. Others think that many Israelites had made Marriages with the Egyptians (as some it is plain did, Lev. xxiv. 10.) who now accompanied them at their Departure, being loth to leave their Relations. But it is most probable they were Profelytes of the Gate (as the Jews call them) who had renounced Idolatry, but were not entered into the Covenant, by being circumcised. See Selden, L. i. de Synedriis, c. 3. It is uncertain what Number there was of these; but it appears they were a Multitude.

And Flocks and Herds, and very much Cattle.] Some of which perhaps belonged to the mixed Multitude: For they among the Egyptians that feared the LORD's Word, preserved their Cattle from the Stroke of the Hail, which destroyed all that was in the Field, ch. ix. 20.

Ver. 39. And they baked.] When they came to Succoth.

Unleavened Cakes, &c.] The Scripture often mentions such Bread, Gen. xviii. 6. Numb. xi. 8. 1 Kings xvii. 12. for it was not leavened. They could not stay till it was leavened, being thrust out in haste as they were preparing it, ver. 33. which doth not signify that they put Leaven to it, when they came to Succoth (as Grotius understands it) for that was inconsistent with the Feast of unleavened Bread, which they were commanded to keep, ver. 15. and which it is reasonable to suppose they now observed, as well as killed and eat the Paschal Lamb, ver. 6, 28.

Neither had they prepared themselves any Vi-ctuals.] This justifies what I observed upon ver. 15. that they lived a whole Month upon unleavened Bread, till God sent them Manna to eat.

Ver. 40. Now the sojourning.] So the Hebrew Word Moshab most certainly signifies; not merely dwelling (as the Vulgar Latin renders it) but dwelling like Strangers, who are not in their own Country. Thus Abraham is said to sojourn, Gen. xx. 1. and Isaac and Jacob, ch. xxviii. 4. And therefore, whereas the Roman Copy of the LXX reads here κατοίκουσιν, the Habitation, the Alexandrian Copy hath περιεργασίαν, the Peregrination or Sojourning, as we well translate it.

Of the Children of Israel.] These Words comprehend their Fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, as is evident from hence; that otherwise Israel himself should not be included in this sojourning, who was the Person that brought them into Egypt, and lived there with his Family seventeen Years: Nor is any Thing more ordinary in Scripture, than under the Name of the Father to comprehend all his Posterity; and likewise, when the Posterity is only mentioned to intend also their Fathers; there being such a near Union between Parents and Children, that they are considered as one Person, Deut. xxvi. 5, 9. Judges x. 11, 12. Hosea xii. 4. and many other Places. And therefore the Samaritan Copy here rightly reads, The Habitation of the Children of Israel, and of their Fathers, &c. which is not to be taken for a Translation of these Words, but an Interpretation. And so some Copies of the LXX had it, as St. Austin observes, anciently; and Drusus lately mentions an Edition wherein it was thus paraphrased, αὐτοὶ καὶ οἱ πατέρες αὐτῶν, they and their Fathers.

Who dwelt in Egypt.] Here also the Samaritan Copy hath it (as an Explication, no doubt, not a literal Translation) who dwelt in the Land of Canaan, and in Egypt. And so the Vatican Edition of the LXX. The Habitation of the Children of Israel, which dwelt in the Land of Egypt, and in Canaan; which is no late Addition, but was in ancient Copies: for Aben Ezra testifies, in his Commentary on this Place, that they thus explained it; Which dwelt in Egypt, and in other Countries; as Drusus observes, in his Quæstæ per Epistolam 51.

Was four hundred Years.] That is, from the Time of Abraham's coming from Charran into the Land of Canaan (when this Sojourning began, till their going out of Egypt, was just four hundred and thirty Years. For from Abraham's coming to sojourn in Canaan, to the Birth of Isaac, was twenty five Years; and Isaac was sixty Years old when he begat Jacob; who was an hundred and thirty Years old when he went down into Egypt: which Numbers put together, make two hundred and fifteen Years: And from his Family's coming into Egypt, till their Departure, was just as many more. Which agrees perfectly with what the Apostle saith, That the Promise made made by God to Abraham and his Seed, could not be made void by the Law, which was four hundred and thirty Years after, Galat. iii. 16, 17. Now the first Promise made to Abraham was, when God bad him go to Canaan, Gen. xii. 3. See Gen. xv. 13. There are some indeed that reckon their stay in Egypt to have been only two hundred and ten Years; and then they took in the five Years Abraham stay'd at Charran, after he left Ur of the Chaldees, to make up these four hundred and thirty Years: Of which Opinion is Drusus in the Place abovementioned. But Josephus faith expressly, that they departed out of Egypt, δύνατοίς πέντε τοῖς δὲ κατὰ τὴν ἐνταύτην ὕστερον, Two hundred and fifty Years after Jacob came into it, L. ii. Antiq. c. 5.

All the Difficulties that have been raised by Commentators in the Exposition of these Words, are avoided by this Interpretation; if we admit, that is, only these two Synecdoche's (the Figure of Part for the Whole) first, that under the Name of the Children of Israel, is comprehended Israel himself, with his Father and Grandfather. And, secondly, that their sojourning comprehends the whole Time that this Nation dwelt in a Land that was not theirs; half of which Time, at least, was spent in Egypt. See Guliel. Vorstius, in his Notes upon Tzemach David, p. 200, & 205. Ludov. Gappellus Chron. Sacra, p. 135. But especially our most learned Primate Usher, Chron. Sacr. c. 8. where he largely confutes the contrary Opinion; which, if any one desire to see defended, I know none that hath done it better than Gerhardus J. Vossius, in his Isagoge Chronologica Dissert. vii. c. 1. &c. where he fairly represents the Arguments on both sides; but inclines himself to think the Children of Israel dwelt 430 Years in Egypt; and endeavours to answer those who assert that Interpretation which I have given, cap. xii. But acknowledges ingenuously (cap. vi.) that it is the Sense, not only of the ancient Jews, but of the ancient Christians (such as Eusebius, Epiphanius, and St. Chrysostom among the Greeks, and St. Hierom, St. Austin, &c. among the Latins) and of a vast Number of later Writers.

Ver. 41. And it came to pass, at the End of the four hundred and thirty Years.] These Years (says St. Hierom in Galat. iii.) are to be computed, ab eo tempore, quo Deus ad Abrahamum locutus est, &c. from the Time when God said to Abraham, In thy Seed shall all Nations be blessed, i. e. when he went first to Canaan.

Even the self-same Day it came to pass.] They all went out on one Day; or, they went out that very Day four hundred and thirty Years after Abraham came to Canaan. So faithful was God in his Promise to his faithful Servant.

That all the Hosts of the LORD, &c.] So they are called, for the LORD was become their King (as I observed, ch. iii. 10.) and now led them forth as their Captain-General. And this Word Hosts imports that they went out not confusedly, but in good Order; (see ch. xiii. 18.) which is the more wonderful, there being such a vast Number of them (ver. 37, 38.) that one would think they could not so soon get together, especially in any order. But Josephus hath well resolved this: That Moses, having notice of God's Intentions some Days before (see ver. 1.) had disposed them for their Departure, καὶ διατίθεσθαι εἰς πορείαν, and distributing them into several Companies, had appointed them the Place of general Rendezvous, as we now speak: Or at least directed who should march first, and what order they should observe, that they might not hinder one another in their March.

Ver. 42. It is a Night to be much observed.] In the Hebrew (as the Margin notes) a Night of Observations. That is, a very remarkable Night; or a Night in which there were many Precepts to be observed, as some will have it. Or, as Conradus Pellicanus, a Night in which the LORD, after a special Manner, watched over the Children of Israel. For which reason the Jews expect their Messiah to come in this Night; foolishly imagining he will then find them all most ready to follow him to Jerusalem. For they have now corrupted an ancient Tradition, which (I observed before, ver. 6.) was remarkably fulfilled in our Saviour's Suffering that very Evening, when the Paschal Lamb was killed, and the Children of Israel redeemed from the Egyptian Bondage.

Unto the LORD.] In honour of him, who had graciously begun to fulfil his Promise made to their Fore-fathers, ch. vi. 2, 3, 4.

This is that Night of the LORD, &c.] Which God hath commanded to be observed, because they came out at that Season (Deut. xvi. 6.) under his Conduct from the Egyptian Bondage. Or, it may be called that Night of the LORD, because his Power, and Mercy, and Faithfulness to his Promises, so signally appeared that Night.

Ver. 43. And the LORD said unto Moses and Aaron.] At the same Time, I suppose, that he instituted the Passover (ver. 1.) he added this Caution about it.

This is the Ordinance of the Passover.] A further Rule to be observed at this Feast.

There shall no Stranger eat thereof.] Several of the Jewish Doctors, by the Son of a Stranger, understand an Apostate from the Religion of Israel, to strange Worship, i. e. Idolatry; as Mr. Selden observes, L. i. de Synedr. c. 12. p. 479. But it is not to be so restrained, as appears from the next Verse, which is a further Explication of this; wherein he ordains, that no Man who did not embrace their Faith and Religion, should eat of the Passover, tho' he was a Profelyte so far, as to be permitted to live among them. For this being a Commemoration of the great Deliverance bestowed upon the Israelites, none but they were to partake of it, unless they would be circumcised, and thereby come into the Covenant made with Abraham, which gave them a Title to all the Privileges of his Children; and obliged them, as well as the natural Israelites, to give publick Thanks for this Work of their Redemption from Egyptian Bondage; to worship and serve their God according as he directed.

Ver. 44. And every Man-servant that is bought for Money.] As many were in those Times and Countries; who became their Masters proper Goods, as much as their Cattle.

When

When thou hast circumcised him, then shall he eat thereof.] He was not to be circumcised against his Will; but if he refused, after a Year's Trial (as Maimonides expounds it) to receive Circumcision, his Master was to sell him again. For it is very unreasonable to think, that he was to be compell'd to be circumcised, as those Hebrew Doctors seem to understand it, who say, That both Master and Servant were forbid to eat of it, till the Servant was circumcised. See Selden, L. ii. de Synedr. c. 1. where he shows at large, that, according to the Hebrew Doctors, no Man was to be admitted a Profelyte, to partake of the Paschal Lamb, unless his whole Family was circumcised with him, both Children and Servants.

Ver. 45. A Foreigner.] The Hebrew Word Toschab literally signifies a Dweller or Inhabitant; by which Name those pious Gentiles were called who renounced Idolatry, though they did not embrace the Jewish Religion, because they were permitted to settle among them, and dwell in their Country, which was not allowed to other Foreigners, who continued Idolaters. See Selden, L. ii. de Jure N. & G. c. 3. & c. 5. where he observes, Maimonides makes this Exception, That no such Persons might dwell in Jerusalem, because of the singular Holiness of that City; but any where else they might, without the Profession of Judaism.

And no hired Servant.] Some of them were Servants to the Jews, and so dwelt in the same House with them; and were called Hirelings, when they bound themselves to serve their Masters for three Years; as the Jews gather from Isa. xvi. 14.

Ver. 46. In one House shall it be eaten, &c.] In the first Night wherein this Sacrifice was slain they were enjoined not to stir out of Doors, ver. 22. and therefore not to carry forth ought of the Flesh abroad into another House. Besides they were in such haste, that they had no Time to send Messengers from one House to another; which Maimonides makes the Ground of this Precept, More Nevoch. P. iii. c. 46. In after-times also, that Law being in force (ver. 4.) that lesser Households, who had not Company enough to eat the Lamb up, should join with some other; it is here explained, that, for maintenance of friendly Society, they should not divide the Lamb, and carry half of it to another House, but all meet together in one, and feast upon it. Which the antient Fathers looked upon as a Figure of the Unity of the Church of Christ.

This seems to be the most natural Interpretation, that it should be eaten under one Roof. But R. Simeon saith, That God only bound them to eat in one Company or Society, not in two; but it was lawful for that Family or Society to eat it in two Places, if they pleased, Halicoth Olam, P. iv. Sect. 3.

Neither shall ye break a Bone thereof.] The Jews fancy, this Law doth not speak of the lesser Bones; but only of those in which there was some Marrow. So Maimonides in his Treatise on this Subject, C. 10. Sect. 1. And indeed, being eaten in haste, they could not have Time to break the Bones, and suck out the Marrow; which in the Place before-named (in his More Nevochim) he makes the Foundation of this Precept; which was exactly fulfilled in the true Paschal Lamb; of which this was a Figure, when he was offered for us, as St. John observes, ch. xix. 33, 36.

Ver. 47. All the Congregation of Israel shall keep it.] Women and Children, as well as Men. In after-times indeed, only Men were bound to come up at the three Feasts, ch. xxiii. 17. ch. xxxiv. 23. Deut. xvi. 16. But devout People were wont to carry up their Wives and Children with them, as appears by Elkanah, 1 Sam. i. 3, 4. and by Joseph, who went up with the blessed Virgin, Luke ii. 41. And that Place in Samuel informs us, that their Sons and Daughters did eat of the Sacrifice.

Ver. 48. When a Stranger shall sojourn with thee, and will keep the Passover, &c.] See ver. 43, 44.

No uncircumcised Person shall eat thereof.] Which is the Reason, some have thought, why they observed no Passover, as far as we can find, after that in the very next Year that followed their coming out of Egypt; because they were generally uncircumcised. But this seems to relate to Men of another Nation; who, though they were not admitted to eat of the Lamb, unless they received Circumcision; yet having renounced Idolatry, the Jews say they might eat of the unleavened Bread, and of the bitter Herbs.

Ver. 49. One Law shall be to him that is home-born, &c.] Nothing could be more equal than this, that no Man should enjoy this Privilege, who was not of their Religion; but whosoever embraced it should partake of the same Benefits.

Ver. 50. Thus did all the Children of Israel.] They kept this Passover; and afterwards another, by a special Direction, Numb. ix. but afterward, during their stay in the Wilderness, they seem to have omitted it; because they omitted Circumcision, without which (ver. 48.) they were not capable to partake of it.

As the LORD commanded Moses and Aaron, so did they.] Observed it according to all the Rites here enjoined; though in future Ages several of them were omitted, as peculiar to this Time.

Ver. 51. And it came to pass the self-same Day, &c.] On the Day after they celebrated the Passover, they began their March out of Egypt. Which was a Thing so notorious, that the Memory of it was preserv'd in Nations far distant from them, tho' the Story was much corrupted, for want of the Knowledge of these sacred Records. For Strabo mentions it, (to name no more) but saith the Report was, that the Jews were descended from the Egyptians (which might be believed by Strangers, because they dwelt so long in that Country) and that Moses was an Egyptian Priest, who had a certain part of that Country; but being dissatisfied with the present State of Things, forsook it, and many Worshipers of God (πολλοὶ τιμωῆς τὸ θεῶν) followed him. For he affirmed and taught that the Egyptians had not right Conceptions, who likened God to wild Beasts and

Cattle:

Cattle: Nor did the Africans or Greeks conceive of him better, who represented him like to Men: ὅτι γὰρ ἐν τούτῳ μόνον θεὸς τὸ περιέχον ἡμᾶς ἀπασίας καὶ γῆς καὶ θαλάσσης ὃ καλεῖται ἑσθὼν καὶ κόσμον. For there is but this one only God, that which comprehends us all, and the Earth and the Sea, which we call Heaven, and the World, &c. In which Words he makes Moses not so foolish as the Egyptians and other Nations, but attributes a senseless Opinion to him (that the World, which we see, is God) if this be the right reading of his Words. But I rather think the Place is corrupted, and it should be, ἔστι ἕως μόνου θεοῦ ὃ ποιῶν τὸ περιέχον, &c. For this is Moses's true Opinion, with which he begins his Books, that he only is God, who made the Heaven and the Earth. And this perfectly agrees with what follows in Strabo, That no Image can be made of this God, and therefore a Temple without any Image must be erected to him, &c. Which is not true, if we take the visible World to be God; for the Image of the Heaven and the Earth may be made, as well as of a Man or a Beast. However, it is true which he adds, That Moses persuaded many good Men, and brought them into that Country, where Jerusalem is the chief City; where they lived a long time happily, δικαιοπρεπῶντες καὶ θεοσεβεῖς ὡς ἀληθῶς ὄντες, doing justly, and being sincerely religious. Which is a notable Testimony from a Pagan, to be noted aureis literis, with Letters of Gold, as Casaubon speaks, in his Annotations on this Place, L. xvi. p. 760, 761.

CHAP. XIII.

Ver. 1. AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying.] After they came to Succoth; where I suppose the SCHECHINAH appeared to him, as it had done in Midian and in Egypt, to direct him in his Conduct.

Ver. 2. Sanctify unto me the First-born.] Separate, or set apart, from common Uses, for I appropriate them to my self, as it follows in the end of the Verse. This Word (Sanctify) as our Mr. Mede observes, signifies differently in several Conjugations. Sometimes it signifies to devote, and consecrate to the Service of God; and sometimes to use a thing as holy, being already devoted to him. And thus he reconciles this Place, where he bids him sanctify all the First-born, (i. e. look upon them as Things separated to his own Use, and therefore not to be used by them) with another Place, Lev. xxvii. 26. where he saith, concerning the First-born, No Man shall sanctify it, it is the LORD's; i. e. the LORD hath already set it apart to himself, and therefore no Man is to consecrate that again which God hath already consecrated, that is, taken for his own. See L. ii. de Sanctuario Dei, p. 552.

First-born.] There were two sorts of First-born. Some who were the First-born of the Father, called the beginning of his Strength, Deut. xxi. 17. The other, the First-born of the Mother, which are called here, whatsoever openeth the Womb. The Hebrews make a great difference between these two; and say, That to the former sort belong the Prerogatives, both of having the Inheritance of his Father, and also the Priesthood: but to the latter only belongs one of these Prerogatives; viz. the Priesthood. And they gather it from this very Place, Whatsoever openeth the Womb (which is the First-born of the Mother) is mine; i. e. shall be employed in my Service. But instead of these, God took the Levites to attend upon him, Numb. iii. 12. After which, the First-born were to be redeemed at a certain Rate, which was part of the Priest's Maintenance, Numb. xviii. 15, 16. See Selden de Successionibus, ad Leg. Hebr. c. 7.

Among the Children of Israel.] Whom this Precept concerned peculiarly, but no other People. Therefore the Jews say, that if one of them and a Gentile had any Beast in common between them, the First-born was free (as their Phrase is) because it is here said, among the Children of Israel, not the Gentiles. See Buxtorf. Synag. Jud. c. 38.

Both of Man and Beast.] As is further directed and explained, ver. 12, 13.

It is mine.] And therefore was to be offered to God, if it were a Male of any Beast; only an Ass was to be redeemed, ch. xxxiv. 19, 20. God intended by this Law to teach them (saith R. Levi Barzelonita) that the whole World was his, and that Men had nothing in it, but by his gracious Grant; who challenged the First-born of every thing to himself, because all was his. For the First-born Male was dearer to a Man, saith he, than the Apple of his Eye (as no doubt he was) yet he was bound to consecrate him to God. But the plainest Reason of this Law was to put them in mind of God's miraculous Providence, in sparing their First-born, when those of the Egyptians were all killed. To which the Jewish Doctors add a more antient Right God had to them; being the Persons who sacrificed to God, before Priests were ordained by the Law of Moses. So Onkelos takes the young Men, ch. xxiv. 5. to have been the First-born; and the Priests mentioned, ch. xix. 22. (Aben Ezra also, upon Numb. xvi. 1. saith the same) the Truth of which I shall examine there.

Ver. 3. And Moses said unto the People.] God seems to have commanded Moses, at the same time he gave this Precept, to repeat here at Succoth what he had said to them in Egypt, concerning the Observation of the Passover, and of the Feast of unleavened Bread; it being of great moment to have the Benefits hereby commemorated in perpetual remembrance.

Remember this Day, &c.] Which was the first Day of unleavened Bread, commanded to be kept holy, ch. xii. 16.

For by strength of Hand the LORD brought you out.] That is, by a miraculous Power; which constrained Pharaoh to let you go, much against his Will. So God promised at his first Appearance to Moses, ch. iii. 19.

There shall no leavened Bread be eaten.] Unleavened Bread was to be eaten on the Passover Night, and afterwards no leavened Bread. See ch. xii. 15, &c. where this is represented as the Sense of the Jews: But the sixth and seventh Verse following seem to say otherwise.

Ver. 4. This Day came ye out.] In the Morning of this Day they began their March,

[In the Month of Abib.] This Word Abib signifies an Ear of Corn; for then Barley began to ear. The Syriac Word bababa hath something of its Sound, which signifies a Flower: And so they here translate it; The Month of Flowers. Whence Macarius saith, God brought Israel out of Egypt, ἐν τῷ μηνὶ τῶν ἀνθῶν, in the Month of Flowers, when the pleasant Spring first appeared. See ch. xxiii. 15.

Ver. 5. And it shall be when the LORD shall bring thee into the Land, &c.] From hence they conclude this Precept did not oblige them in the Wilderness; but it was by a special Direction and Command that they observed it the Year after this, Numb. ix. 1, 2, &c. See ch. xii. 25, 50. In confirmation of which, Deut. xii. 1. is alledged, where he begins to recapitulate all the Laws they were to observe in Canaan; among which this is one, ch. xii. 5, 6. Yet this alone would not have been sufficient to prove this (for he might be thought now only to reinforce his Laws, at their Entrance into Canaan) if he had not added, ver. 8. Ye shall not do after all the Things you do here this Day, &c. Which supposes, that in the unsettled Condition wherein they were in the Wilderness, they had not kept themselves to all those Rules which follow, and had been formerly delivered.

Which he sware unto thy Fathers to give thee, &c.] Gen. xv. 18, 19, &c.

Ye shall keep this Service in this Month.] Both the Passover, and Feast of Unleavened Bread, ch. xii. 25.

Ver. 6. Seven Days thou shalt eat unleavened Bread.] This seems to confute what the Jews say, that they were not bound to eat unleavened Bread, but only when they ate the Passover. See ch. xii. 15.

And in the seventh Day shall be a Feast unto the LORD.] As the first Day was holy (ver. 3.) so was the last, (ch. xii. 16.) that they might not fail in their Gratitude for so great a Benefit, as they now commemorated.

Ver. 7. Unleavened Bread shall be eaten seven Days.] This seems still to make the Injunction plainer, that for seven Days together they should eat unleavened Bread. Which is so often repeated, because this made them sensible, more than any thing else, of the wonderful Hand of God in bringing them out of Egypt; which was so sudden and hasty, that they had not time to bake the Dough they had prepared, nor so much as put Leaven to it, ch. xii. 39.

There shall no leavened Bread be seen with thee.] From whence the Jews conclude, That not only all such Bread is to be carefully sought for, and thrown out of their Houses, but all their Vessels that have been used the Year before thoroughly scoured; lest any thing should remain in them, that might give a tincture of Acidity to the Bread that might be made in them. In which Work they spend some Days before the Passover, as Buxtorf observes in his Synag. Jud. c. 17.

Neither shall there be Leaven seen with thee, &c.] For which Cause, as he there observes, they abstain, all the time of this Feast, from all such Things as may possibly have some Leaven in them. As from Honey and Sugar, which are often adulterated with Flower, &c.

Ver. 8. And thou shalt shew thy Son in that Day, &c.] That is, on the first Day of Unleavened Bread it was to be a part of their Religion to instruct their Children in the meaning of their Killing the Lamb, and their Abstinence from Leaven. This the Jewish Doctors make one of the DCXIII. Precepts, that Parents should tell the whole Story of their going out of Egypt on the fifteenth Day of Nisan; when every one, according to his Ability, was bound in his own Language to bless and praise the Name of God for all his Miracles, which he wrought for them. They are the Words of R. Levi of Barcelona.

Ver. 9. And it shall be for a Sign unto thee.] These seem to be still the Words that the Parents were to say to their Children upon the Festivals; whereby they taught them to look upon this Observation as a Token or Memorial of what God had done for their Forefathers, when he brought them out of Egypt.

Upon thy Hand, and for a Memorial between thine Eyes.] To make thee as sensible of God's Goodness, as of that which thou hast in thy Hand; or of a Thing that is continually before thine Eyes. The Jewish Superstition about their Phylacteries took its rise from hence, but without any good ground; it being evident he speaks not of tying Parchments, or any thing else, about their Wrists, &c. but of teaching their Children the meaning of their Holy Rites. And so some of themselves have expounded it; particularly the forementioned R. Levi of Barcelona, who gives this Reason why such abundant Care was taken to have these Things remembered; Because, saith he, this is the Foundation of our Law and of our Religion: For which Cause, in all our Blessings and Prayers, we commemorate our coming out of Egypt; because it is a Sign to us, and a perfect Demonstration of the Creation of the World, and that our Lord God is the Author of all Creatures, and doth what he pleases, &c. For who but he could change the Course of Nature, and work such great and unheard of Signs as he did? This is sufficient to confute those that deny the Creation of the World, and to establish us in the Belief of God most blessed; and to persuade both that there is a Providence, and that his Power extends to all Things, both in general and particular. So he. See ver. 16.

That the LORD's Law may be in thy Mouth.] That their Children might be able to declare to their Posterity the Law of the LORD about these Matters.

For with a strong Hand hath the LORD brought thee out of Egypt.] By slaying all their First-born in one Night. See ch. iii. 19.

Ver. 10. Thou shalt therefore keep this Ordinance.] Of the Passover, and of the Feast of Unleavened Bread.

In this Season from Year to Year.] On the fourteenth, and the seven following Days of the first Month.

Ver. 11. And it shall be, when the LORD shall bring thee into the Land of the Canaanites, &c.] Under the Name of Canaanites he comprehends all the rest of the seven Nations. And these Words seem to import, that the Law of the First-born was not to take place till they came came into the Promised Land. Yet we find Numb. iii. 12, 13. that God demanded all the First-born of them, though he took the Levites in their stead: And both being numbered, and there being two hundred seventy three First-born Males more than there were Levites (ver. 41, 42, 43.) he required them to be redeemed at five Shekels apiece, and the Money to be given to the Priests, ver. 46, 47, 48. But perhaps after this, the Law was not observed till they came to Canaan.

Which be sware unto thy Fathers, &c.] See ver. 5.

Ver. 12. That thou shalt set apart unto the LORD all that openeth the Matrix.] Here he shows what he means by that Sanctification of the First-born, which was mentioned ver. 2. and for what End and Reason this was ordained. For that which is called Sanctifying there, is here called setting apart, or separating it from the rest of that kind of Creatures for another Use, viz. to be sacrificed to the LORD: For the Word beevarta, which we translate set apart, is in the Hebrew, make to pass over; which is explained ch. xxii. 30. Thou shalt give it unto me, viz. to be offered at the Altar.

The Males.] The First-born are only mentioned, ver. 2. but here it is explained to signify only the Males. If a Female came first, and afterward a Male, that Male was not devoted unto God, because it did not open the Womb, a Female coming before it.

Shall be the LORD's.] And therefore set apart from common Uses, to be employ'd in his Service; that is, every firstling Male of a Cow, Sheep or Goat, was to be offered in Sacrifice; and the Blood being sprinkled on the Altar, the Flesh of them was given to the Priests. See Numb. xviii. 17, 18. where what is here briefly delivered, is there more largely explained.

Ver. 13. And every Firstling of an Ass.] There was the same Reason for Horses and Camels; but an Ass is only mentioned, because abundance of Asses were bred in Judea; where there were few Horses or Camels. And therefore Numb. xviii. 15. it is said in general, The Firstlings of unclean Beasts thou shalt redeem.

Thou shalt redeem with a Lamb.] Which was to be sacrificed to God. If a Man had not a Lamb, he was to give the Price of one. And because all Lambs were not of an equal Price (some being worth more than others) the Rabbins say that a good Eye, i. e. a liberal Man, gave a Shekel, an evil Eye half as much, and a middle Sort of Men gave three Quarters. It was to be redeemed also within thirty Days.

If thou wilt not redeem it, then thou shalt break (or cut off) its Neck.] It was to die one way or other, and not to be employ'd in common Use; but thus to be disposed of, if they would not give a Lamb, or its Value, in Exchange for it; which Men might sometimes be unwilling to do, because Asses being so plentiful in that Country, they might not be worth so much as a Lamb. It is no improbable Conjecture of Mr. Selden, that from this Law of redeeming Asses, the Gentiles took up a Fancy, which was common among them, that the Jews worshipped an Ass's Head. See L. ii. de Jure Nat. & Gent. c. 1.

Which was one of their Calumnies also of Christians (whom they took to be the same with the Jews) as we read in Minutius Felix, Tertullian and others.

All the First-born of Man among thy Children shalt thou redeem.] See ver. 11. Humane Sacrifices were not acceptable to God. For though he once commanded Abraham to offer his Son, yet it was not actually done; and here he declares he did not approve of such Sacrifices, by commanding them not to offer their First-born to him, as they did the Firstlings of clean Beasts, but to redeem them. For the Way of the Gentile World, even in those Days, was to offer their Children to Moloch, as appears from Lev. xx. 2. where he orders him to be put to Death, who gives any of his Seed to Moloch. The very same Phrase which is used (as I observed ver. 12.) concerning sacrificing the Firstlings of their Oxen, &c. And in Lev. xviii. 21. he uses both Phrases, saying, Thou shalt not give any of thy Seed to pass through to Moloch, or to pass over to Moloch. The very same Word, which we here translate, ver. 13. set apart. And it was but necessary to give such Precepts; for, notwithstanding these Prohibitions, the Israelites fell into this barbarous Way of Worship, as we read Psal. cvi. 37, 38.

Now this Redemption of their First-born was not long after ordered by God himself, who took the Levites instead of them (as we read Numb. iii.) where a certain Sum of Money was paid for all the rest of the First-born, that were above the Number of the Levites; which Sum they, who were born after that Time, paid to the Priest.

Nor was this a Thing unknown to the Gentiles. For Paulus Venetus saith, L. i. c. 45. that the Inhabitants of that Region in India, called Tanguth, redeemed their Sons with a Ram, which they offered after the Manner of the Hebrews; which makes it probable that this Law of Moses had reached them, there being several Remainers of the Hebrew Language upon those Coasts; as Huetius observes in his Demonstr. Evang. Prop. iv. c. 6.

Ver. 14. When thy Son asketh thee in time to come, What is this?] Desires to know the Meaning of this; or whence this Custom of offering or redeeming the First-born Males is derived.

That thou shalt say unto him.] Great Care was taken for the Instruction of Children in the Rites of their Religion; it appears by this, and by ver. 8. where they are commanded to teach them the Reason of eating unleavened Bread, as here of their consecrating the First-born.

That by Strength of Hand, &c.] See ch. iii. 19.

Ver. 15. And it came to pass, when Pharaoh would hardly let us go.] Obstinate persisted in his Resolutions to keep us in Slavery, or hardened his Heart (as it may be translated by adding the Word libbo) against all the Monitions which had been given him, and the Plagues inflicted on him.

That the LORD slew all the First-born in the Land of Egypt, &c.] Which struck such a Terror into him, that immediately he dismissed us, ch. xii. 30, 31, &c.

Therefore I sacrifice unto the LORD all that openeth the Womb, &c.] Because when he slew all their First-born, he spared ours, ch. xii. 13, 23, 27.

Ver. 16. And it shall be for a Token upon thine Hand.] By this Means there was a perpetual Remembrance preserved, of God's gracious Deliverance of them, when the First-born of Egypt were slain: For nothing else can be meant by these Words, but that they should endeavour, by consecrating their First-born, to keep that Divine Benefit in mind as carefully as if they had put a Sign upon their Hand, or bound it upon their Forehead before their Eyes, to help their Memory. For it is a plain Allusion to those, who having frail Memories, are wont to tie a Thread, or some such Thing, upon their Finger, that they may not forget what they desire to remember; that which is upon their Hand being continually in view, and so not easily forgotten.

And for Frontlets between thine Eyes.] Whatsoever be the Original of the Hebrew Word Totaphot, which we translate Frontlets, it is certain it signifies no more than Zicaron in the ninth Verse; a Memorial, or Monument, as the Vulgar translates it. And so Aben Ezra expounds it, ke nu Zicaron, as it were a Memorial, and that immoveable, as the LXX take it. Yet from hence the Talmudists have extracted their Phylacteries (or Pieces of Parchment, wherein this and other Texts were written) which they fancied were a Kind of Amulets to defend them from Dangers: For so they are said to be in the Gemara Schabbath, and therefore used in their Prayers, to drive away evil Spirits, as J. Braunius, and many others have observed. I shall only note further, that this Word is found but three times in the Law, and yet the Vulgar translates it three several Ways; which shows how little the Original of it is understood, though the Sense of it is plain and certain. See Petitus, his Var. Lectiones, c. 20.

For by Strength of Hand the LORD brought us out of Egypt.] This hath been often mentioned in this very Chapter (ver. 3, 9, 14.) and now here repeated again, to make them very sensible, both that they owed their Deliverance entirely to God; and that nothing was too hard for him to accomplish.

Ver. 17. God led them not through the Way of the Land of the Philistines, &c.] That was the nearest Way from Egypt to Canaan, by the Mediterranean, to the River of Egypt (as the Scripture calls it) and so to Azotus and Gaza; which was a Journey of not above three Days, as Philo says; others say of ten. But certainly it was no great way; for the Sons of Jacob went it often to and fro, Gen. xlii, xliii, &c.

Left peradventure the People repent when they see War, &c.] The Philistines being a very warlike People, would, in all likelihood, have opposed their Passage; and God knew the Temper of the Israelites to be so timorous, that they would run away, and rather return to Egypt, than fight their Way to Canaan. For all People grow cowardly by being kept long in Slavery, which breaks their Spirits, and sinks them as low as their Condition. They fought indeed about forty Days after this with Amalek; but it was only one Battle, and then they were provided with Arms (which they had not now) from the Egyptians, whom they found dead on the Seashore. But their base Temper appeared too plainly the next Year, when they heard the Report of the Spies concerning the Inhabitants of Canaan; which put the whole Congregation into a Fit of Despair, and made them think of returning to Egypt, Numb. xiv. 1, 2, &c.

Ver. 18. But God led the People about. The Pillar of Cloud mention'd ver. 21. in which the LORD was, conducted them in a Way farther about.

Through the Way of the Wilderness.] He led them to the right Hand toward the Red-sea, and the Defart of Arabia.

Of the Red-sea.] See ch. x. 19.

And the Children of Israel went up barnessed.] Or in military Order: For though it is not likely the Egyptians suffered them to have any Arms, yet they did not go away tumultuously, like Fugitives, but march'd like Soldiers, in good Order; and, as in our Margin it is translated, five in a Rank: Which is the Interpretation of Theodotion anciently, and of Montanus, and others lately. But Hottinger translates it, in the Form of an Army: For the Arabic Word Chamis (from whence it is likely comes the Word Chamuschim here used) signifies exercitus πενταμενης, an Army consisting of five Parts; which are the Front, the main Battle, the right Wing and the left, and the Rear; Smegma Orient. p. 71. And so David Chytraeus long before him, quinque agminibus, in five Bodies, as we now speak. But the Interpretation of Aben Ezra seems to be the most proper of all others, who simply expounds it, girt about their Loins, i. e. expedite or ready, as Onkelos expresses it: For the Hebrew Word Chomashch, signifying those Parts that are under the five small Ribs, about which Men were wont to be girt, when they went to fight or to travel; this Word may well be render'd εὐζωνοι, well girt, as the LXX translate it, Josh. i. 14. iv. 13. Here indeed they translate it, ἐμπλὴ δὲ γυναικῶν ἀνέκνοαν, they went up in the fifth Generation (which St. Austin follows) taking Jacob for the first, Levi the second, Coath the third, Amram the fourth, and Moses the fifth. But as this Exposition doth not agree with the Hebrew Word, which doth not signify the Fifth, but in fives; so it cannot be said of the Children of Israel in general; for all the Tribes were not yet come to the fifth Generation. Our Nic. Fuller hath a learned Discourse upon this Word, in his Miscellan. L. v. c. 2.

Ver. 19. And Moses took the Bones of Joseph with him.] And of the rest of the Patriarchs, it is very probable; see Gen. l. 25. To which add, that the Jews say, every Tribe took Care of the Body of the Founder of their Family. Which is far more likely, than the Story which the Author of The Life and Death of Moses tells; that he carried Joseph's Coffin out of Egypt upon his own Shoulders; it being more probable that some of that Tribe undertook the Care of it. That it was buried in the Bottom of Nile, is not affirmed only by him, but by Jonathan; though others say in the Banks of Nile: And they seem all to have it out of the Talmud; where in the Gemara of the Title Sota, c. i. Sett. 47. they say the Egyptians themselves buried their Relations in the Nile, to make the Waters prosperous; and tell a vain Story, how a Woman called Serach, told Moses where the Body was, when he was at a loss where to find it, after he had searched for it three Days (as the forenamed Author tells the Tale, while the Jews were borrowing Jewels of Gold and Silver of the Egyptians) and that he called it up from thence, throwing (as he adds) the ineffable Name into the River; which brought it up presently, though in a leaden, or as others say, a marble Coffin.

For he had straitly sworn the Children of Israel, saying, &c.] See Gen. i. 25. From whence Gaulmin, L. ii. c. 2. Annot. in Vit. Mos. not improbably conjectures, that the Custom was derived of carrying the Ashes of their Ancestors into their own Country, first by Hercules among the Greeks, and long before by the Egyptians and Chaldeans; whom the Arabians, as he shows, imitated in following Ages.

Ver. 20. And they took their Journey from Succoth.] They stayed but one Day at Succoth (as Fac. Capellus supposes) where Moses gave the foregoing Directions to them: And, upon the 16th of Nisan, they marched to Ethan.

And encamped in Ephan.] So called, he thinks, because the Way here was very rugged and craggy.

In the Edge of the Wilderness.] Next to the Red Sea, called the Wilderness of Shur, ch. xv. 22.

Ver. 21. And the LORD went before them.] By the LORD we are here to understand the SCHECHINAH, or Divine Majesty, which appeared to Moses in the Bush, ch. iii. 2. when he gave him Commission to bring his People out of Egypt, and directed him all along in his Embassy to Pharaoh, and his Treaty with him, ch. vi. 1, &c. and now appeared in a glorious Cloud to conduct them, and assure them that he would take care of them. For this Cloud was a Symbol of his gracious Presence with them, and special Providence over them: It being an Emanation from him (saith R. Levi ben Gersom) which was a Sign (as others of the Jews speak) that God was Night and Day with them, to keep them from all Evil. To which the Prophets allude, Isa. lii. 12. Micah ii. 13. And though his going before them be not mentioned before this Time, yet it is most likely he appeared in this Cloud as their Conductor from their first coming out of Egypt, and led them to Succoth, and then to Ethan; as he did afterward to their Stations, Numb. x. 11, 12, &c. Which doth not signify that God himself moved from Place to Place (for he is always every where) but this Cloud was moved by him from whom it came, as a Token that he was present, by his special Favour, Care and Providence, wheresoever it went.

By Day in the Pillar of a Cloud.] It appeared from Heaven, I suppose, in the Form of a great long Pillar; which below spread it self abroad, and covered the whole Host of Israel. For it is certain, it was not only their Guide, to lead them the Way (as it here follows) but also was a Covering to them, whereby they were assured of the Divine Protection. For so we are informed, Numb. x. 34. xiv. 14. Psal. cv. 39. i Cor. x. i. And I can see no reason to think these were different Clouds, since one and the same would serve both Purposes.

And by Night in a Pillar of Fire.] The same Pillar appeared in the Night like Fire, which in the Day was like a Cloud. The Reason of which follows:

To give them Light.] That they might be able (as the next Words tell us) to travel by Night, as well as by Day. Which made the Psalmist say, he went before them all the Night with the Light of Fire, lxxviii. 14. This flaming Light I take to have been a glorious Appearance of Angels from the SCHECHINAH; for they always attend upon the Divine Majesty, who maketh his Angels Spirits, his Ministers a flaming Fire, Psal. civ. 4. Some fancy there were two distinct Pillars, as these Words, and the next Verse, seem to import: But it is plain, by other Places, it was but one and the same Pillar, which had these different Appearances. See the next Chapter, xiv. 19, 24. Deut. i. 33. Therefore Salvian rightly describes it, L. i. de Gubern. Dei, where he calls it, Mobilem columnam nubilam diem, igneam noctem, congruas colorum diversitates pro temporum diversitate sumentem; sc. ut & diem lucem lutea obscuritate distingueret, & caliginem noctis flammeo splendore claritatis radiaret. And see Greg. Nyssen, de Vita Mosi, p. 175.

Now that the SCHECHINAH, or the Glory of God, was in this Cloud, appears from hence; that it was the same Cloud which afterwards rested upon the Tabernacle, as soon as it was set up, and is called the Cloud of the LORD, Exod. xl. 38. Numb. x. 34. For the Glory of the LORD was within the Tabernacle, as the Cloud was without it, Exod. xl. 34, 35, &c. And it is there also described just as it is here, that it appeared as a Cloud upon the Tabernacle by Day, and as a Fire by Night, ch. xl. ult. And so it is also Numb. ix. 15, 16. At Even there was upon the Tabernacle as it were the Appearance of Fire, till the Morning. So it was always, the Cloud covered it by Day, and the Appearance of Fire by Night. And then it conducted them in their Journeys, as it did now, Exod. xl. 36. Numb. ix. 17, 18, &c. Which shows that this Cloud, which now conducted them out of Egypt, was the very same with that which afterwards settled upon the Tabernacle: And the Glory of the LORD being in that, I make no doubt it was so in this. Which is the Reason that the LORD is said to go before them, and to lead them by this Cloud. For though the LORD of all doth not go from Place to Place, yet this visible Glory, which represented him as in a special manner present with them (and therefore called the Glory of the LORD) did go along with them in the Cloud, to their several Stations, whither they removed.

It is no improbable Conjecture of Taubman, in his Notes upon Virgil, that from hence it was that the Poets never made a Deity to appear but in a Cloud with a Brightness in it. Ad hoc exemplum credo Poetas sancivisse nullum Numen mortalibus apparere sine Nimbo. Est autem Nimbus, nubes divina; seu fluidum lumen, quod Deorum capita tingit.

Ver. 22. He took not away the Pillar of the Cloud by Day, and the Pillar of Fire by Night, from before the People.] That is, it continued with them as long as Moses lived, till they came to pass over Jordan into Canaan, when not this Cloud, but the Ark was their Guide. And it need not seem incredible, saith Clemens Alexandrinus (L. i. Stromat. p. 348.) that they were thus led by a Pillar of Fire, when the Greeks consider that Thrasylbulus, they believe, was thus directed, πῦρ ἑωχέτο προηγούμενον, &c. by a Fire which went before him, and conducted him in a dark Winter Night through unknown Ways, when he brought back the Athenian Exiles to their Country. The Wonder was, that this Fire continued to lead the Israelites forty Years in the Wilderness; whereas that of Thrasylbulus (if it be true) was but a short Appearance: As that Light also was, which they say shone from Heaven to bring Timoleon unto his Port, when he failed to Italy.

This Pillar also the same Clemens thinks (in the Place now named) signified τὸ ἀνεκόνισον τῷ Θεῷ, that no Image could be made of God. From whence he thinks likewise it was, that the ancient Heathen, before they learn'd to make Images, set up Pillars and worshipped them, ὡς ἀνιδρύματα Θεῶν, as Representatives of God. Which Huetius hath lately made out in many Examples (in his Questiones Aletanae, p. 205, 206.) and thinks that from this Pillar, which had two Appearances, the two Pillars were erected to Hercules in his Temple at Tyre; and two likewise set up in the Temple of the Sun in Egypt.

C H A P. XIV.

Ver. 1. AND the LORD spake unto Moses.] Out of the Cloud (where the SCHECHINAH was) from whence he afterwards gave all his Laws.

Ver. 2. Speak to the Children of Israel, that they turn. They were going directly towards Horeb; unto which they ask'd Leave to go three Days Journey; and might have reached it this Night, if they had proceeded forward on the Left-hand into the Wilderness: But by this Order they turned to the Right-hand, into a Road that led them towards the Red-sea; which made Pharaoh think they had lost their Way.

And encamp before Pibabiroth.] Before the Straits of two great Mountains, full of dangerous Holes; as many think the Word Hiroth imports. And Pi in Hebrew signifying a Mouth, this Word Pibabiroth may properly be translated, in our Language, the Chops of Hiroth. The former Day they had marched about eight Miles; but now they doubled their Pace, and marched sixteen Miles from Etham hither.

Between Migdol and the Sea.] Some take Migdol to have been a Tower or Fortrefs (for the Word carries that Signification in it) upon the Top of one of the Mountains before-mentioned. But there was a Tower called Μαγδαλῶν, by Herodotus and Hecataeus, and others; which Bochart probably conjectures was this Place. Certain it is, there was a City in Egypt called Migdol, Jerem. xlv. i. And Stephanus de Urb. expressly saith, that Μαγδαλῶν was πόλις Αἰγυπτῶν; but whether the same with this Place, I cannot determine.

Over against Baal-zephon.] This, I doubt not, was the Name of a Town also, or City; as Ezekiel the Tragedian expressly calls it: For Baal was the Name of a City, 1 Chron. iv. 33. and it is likely there being more of the same Name, this was called Zephon, to distinguish it from some other Baal in those Parts; either because it lay North, or had an eminent Watch-Tower in it. There are those indeed, who following the Jewish Doctors (see Selden de Diis Syr. Syntagm. i. c. 3.) imagine there was an Image of Baal set up by the Magicians of Egypt, by Pharaoh's Order, near this Arabian Gulf, to hinder the Israelites in their Passage. And Varenius doth not quite disallow this; for he takes Baal-zephon to have been a great Plain, into which they were to enter by the Chops of Pibabiroth, in which an Idol was worshipped; which looking from the Red-sea toward the North, was called the Lord of the North, as Baal-zephon imports. And Kircher seriously maintains, it had a Power of Fascination, to stop the Israelites in their Journey, which there is no ground to believe; for such Images made under a certain Constellation, to avert evil Things, &c. were not now in use; being no older, there are good Reasons to think, than the Time of Apollonius Tyaneus, who was the first Inventer of them.

Ver. 3. For Pharaoh will say of the Children of Israel.] Here he gives the Reason for this Order, that Pharaoh might be enticed to pursue them, imagining they were in such Difficulties, that they could not avoid falling into his Hands.

They are entangled in the Land.] Perplexed, or dubious, not knowing which way to go.

The Wilderness hath shut them in.] They were cooped up, he thought, by the Sea, and by craggy Mountains, which it was impossible for them to pass; especially being incumbered with a multitude of Women, Children and Cattle.

Ver. 4. And I will harden Pharaoh's Heart.] He had hardened it before, ch. ix. 12. x. 1. but now order'd Things so, that he was more senseless than ever he had been; for having lately felt such a heavy Stroke upon all the First-born, as mollified his Heart for the present, and moved him to let Israel go; it was the highest Degree of Infatuation not to fear (as formerly they had done, ch. xii. 33.) that the next Blow (if he pursued them) would be at himself and his Followers.

And I will be honoured upon Pharaoh, and upon all his Host.] Show my Power and Justice in their Destruction; which would not have been so visible had they died of the Pestilence, when the Cattle died of the Murrain, and Pharaoh's Heart was first hardened; as it was by hardning him, so far as to follow the Israelites into the Red-sea, where he and his whole Host were overthrown; which made the Terror of the LORD's Wrath manifest to all the World.

That

That the Egyptians may know that I am the LORD.] Have the greatest Demonstration of my irresistible Power; ch. vii. 5. For the more strange the Infatuation was; which led Pharaoh and his Host to such an ignominious Death, the more apt the Hearts of the People that remain'd would be to acknowledge the Hand of God therein.

And they did so:] They marched to this Place on the 17th Day of Nisan; which was their third Day's Journey. Jacobus Capellus thinks they rested this Day, being the Sabbath, and came not hither till the 18th.

Ver. 5. And it was told the King of Egypt that the People fled.] Some of the mix'd Multitude that went along with them, (ch. xii. 38.) seeing this strange Turn, it is likely, forsook the Israelites, and returned to Pharaoh, to inform him that they had lost their Way; and were shifting for themselves by Flight into dangerous Places: Or, as it is commonly interpreted, some Spies, which Pharaoh had upon them, seeing them leave the Way to Horeb, whither they desired to go three Days Journey to offer Sacrifice, concluded they never intended to return to Egypt, but would run quite away from them. This News, we may suppose, was brought to Pharaoh on the 18th Day.

And the Heart of Pharaoh, and of his Servants, was turned against the People.] They had quite forgot their late Fears (ch. xii. 33.) which made such a Change in them, they would not suffer the Israelites to stay any longer in their Country; but those Fears being vanished, their Minds altered again, and they repented they had dismissed them.

And said, What have we done that we have let Israel go from serving us?] What a gross Error have we committed, in losing the Labour of so many Slaves? Covetousness, as I have observed, often had a principal Hand in hardning Pharaoh's Heart.

Ver. 6. And he made ready his Chariot.] Caused it immediately to be made ready; which we may suppose was done on the 19th Day, when he began to pursue them.

And took his People with him.] All that were wont to attend him on such Occasions.

Ver. 7. And he took six hundred chosen Chariots.] The best Chariots in Egypt, which were always ready prepared for such Expeditions.

And all the Chariots of Egypt.] That could be got ready on a sudden; for he had not time to muster all his Force, but made all the haste possible, lest the Israelites should get out of the Straits wherein they were, and go so far away that he could not overtake them: For which Reason he pursued them with Chariots and Horsemen, who could make larger Marches than the Israelites on foot. The Strength also of this Kingdom consisted in Chariots, which carried Men in them, who fought out of them. And every one knows that Egypt abounded with Horses as well as Chariots, and that they were accounted very strong in these, Isa. xxxi. 1. yet Bocbartus thinks all besides the six hundred Chariots Royal, were only Carriages for their Baggage. Hierozoic. P. i. L. ii. c. 9.

And Captains over every one of them.] This shows there were Men in them; and that to every Chariot there belonged a Troop of Horsemen (we know not of what Number) who were commanded by a Captain. The Hebrews say there were fifty thousand Horsemen; the Arabians make them as many more.

Ver. 8. And the LORD hardened the Heart of Pharaoh King of Egypt.] As he said he would, ver. 4.

And he pursued after the Children of Israel.] Of all the infatuated Resolutions (to use the Words of a famous Divine of our own, Dr. Jackson, Book x. chap. 11.) that either King or People adventured on, the pursuing of the Israelites with such a mighty Army, after they had most earnestly intreated and urged them to leave their Country, may well seem to every indifferent Reader the most stupid. And so the Author of the Book of Wisdom justly censures it, ch. xix. 3. For whilst they were yet mourning and making Lamentations at the Graves of the Dead, they added another foolish Device, and pursued them as Fugitives, whom they had intreated to be gone. Yet Josephus gives good Hints, that even this Effect of Divine Infatuation was but such as hath seized upon worldly wise Princes and Statesmen in former Ages; and may hereafter be inflicted upon more.

And the Children of Israel went out with an high Hand.] Boldly, and with assured Confidence; not sneakingly, like Slaves or Fugitives. So Onkelos understood it, when he translated it bare-headed; i. e. confidently, fearing nothing; having been delivered and conducted by the powerful Hand of God; as it is often repeated, ch. xiii. 9, 14, 16. unto which some refer this Phrase, and not to the Israelites. See Drusus, L. xvi. Observat. c. 2.

Ver. 9. But the Egyptians pursued after them.] This did not discourage Pharaoh and his Servants; who, perhaps, were of the same Mind with the Syrians; who fancied the God of Israel might not be alike powerful in all Places; but though he was stronger than their Gods in the Hills, yet they might be too hard for him in the Plain, 1 Kings xx. 23. So the Egyptians, who had seen how much superior Moses was to their Magicians, might possibly thus reason with themselves (as the same learned Doctor expresses it) 'Who knows whether all this Power was given unto Moses to be exercised only within the Meridian or Climes of Egypt; or whether his Commission extend over Palestine and Midian?' They presumed at least, that the LORD God of the Hebrews, had not granted Moses such a Command over the Armies or Host of Men (though he had done Wonders among reasonless Creatures) as the King of Egypt had; because the Israelites, they knew, had no Skill in Feats of Arms, no Captains of Infantry, and no Cavalry at all, no Weapons or Engines of War; of all which the Egyptians had great Abundance. Upon these, or some such like Presumptions, and vain Collections, they became fool-hardy, and desperately resolute to be revenged upon the Children of Israel, for all the Losses they had sustained by their Leaders, Moses and Aaron.

All the Horses and Chariots of Pharaoh, and his Horsemen and his Army.] By this it appears that there were both Horse and Foot, who pursued them; though it is likely the Foot were mounted, to make the greater Speed.

And overtook them incamping by the Sea, &c.] On the 20th Day of Nisan, towards Evening, they had got within Sight of the Israelites, who were just settling their Camp where God directed them (ver. 2.) having had no Time to rest themselves after so long a March.

Ver. 10. And when Pharaoh drew nigh, &c.] So that the Israelites could discern with how great a Force the Egyptians were about to attack them.

They were sore afraid.] They who had marched hither, with a big Hand (ver. 8.) full of Alacrity and Courage, now, on a sudden, were so dismay'd, that their Spirits sunk within them: For they had not a settled Confidence and Resolution wrought in them, by all the Wonders God had done for them. But, though whilst they thought Pharaoh disheartened to meddle any more with them, they went on boldly; now their Hearts began to fail them, when they saw him at their Backs. For they were unfit for War, weary also, and in a very bad Place.

And the Children of Israel cried out unto the LORD.] This had been the proper Remedy against their Fears, if in a thankful Remembrance of what God had often done for them, they had humbly beseeched him to deliver them in this great Strait; which was as easy for him to do, as to work all the Miracles they had seen in Egypt. But these Cries seem, by what follows, to have been rather the Effect of Despair, than of Hope in God: Such Shrieks as naturally proceed from Men, when they are ready to perish. Pellicanus indeed thinks, that by the Children of Israel is meant such as were good among them, who fell to their Prayers, when the rest fell to railing, as it follows in the next Verse. But such Words comprehend the Generality of the People, and not only the better Sort.

Ver. 11. Because there were no Graves in Egypt, hast thou taken us away to die in the Wildernesses?] This is very sarcastical and reproachful Language, arguing the Height of Discontent, or rather of Rage against their Deliverer. From whence we may learn, the wicked Temper of those who are ungrateful and unmindful of Benefits.

Wherefore hast thou dealt thus with us, to carry us out of Egypt?] They seem to have been of the very same Temper with the Egyptians, who had no Remembrance what they had lately felt, nor made any Reflections on what God had done in a wonderful Manner among them. This neglect of God bred such a Hardness of Heart in them and their Posterity, as was in Pharaoh and his People; which provoked God to harden them in the same Manner, to their utter Destruction: For, as the Apostle observes, God hath Mercy on whom he will have Mercy, and whom he will be hardneth, Rom. ix. 18. His Mercy, that is, was not so tied to them, because they were Abraham's Seed; but he could and would harden them, as he had done Pharaoh, if they proved as obstinate as he was.

Ver. 12. Is not this the Word that we did tell thee in Egypt, saying, Let us alone, &c.] Do not increase our Miseries, by attempting in vain to deliver us. This they seem to have said after the first Message Moses and Aaron delivered to Pharaoh; which only moved him to lay greater Burdens on them, ch. v. 21. vi. 9.

For it had been better for us to serve the Egyptians, than that we should die in the Wildernesses.] This is the Language of base and servile Spirits, who chose rather to live miserably, than die gloriously in pursuit of their Liberty.

Ver. 13. And Moses said unto the People, Fear ye not.] These Words argue a most admirable Spirit that was in Moses; who was neither angry with them, nor dismay'd at the Approach of Pharaoh; but meekly and sedately exhorts them to be of good Courage, and to trust in God, who, he assured them, would perfect what he had begun for them.

Stand still, &c.] I do not desire you should do any Thing else, but only hope in God, and wait to see what he will do for you before this Day be done.

For the Egyptians whom you have seen to Day, ye shall see them again no more for ever.] Never see them more, as they saw them now, alive; though they saw them lie dead (ver. 30.) after their Overthrow in the Sea. For the Power of Egypt was so shattered by that Loss, and they were so confounded by it, that we never read of the least Inclination in them, to attempt any Thing upon the Israelites, though they wandered forty Years in the Wildernesses.

Ver. 14. The LORD shall fight for you.] He would not have them discouraged for want of Arms, because they should have no need of them; God himself undertaking to defend them, and to discomfit their Enemies.

And ye shall hold your Peace.] Be still, and do nothing; not so much as strike one Stroke: Or, as some understand it, do you forbear your Cries: Or, he will silence all your Murmurs.

Ver. 15. And the LORD said unto Moses.] See ver. 1.

Wherefore criest thou unto me?] He doth not blame him for crying unto him for Help; but bids him continue his Prayer no longer, for he would do as he desired. Greg. Nyssen calls this ἀλάλῃσιν κεύθῳ, a Cry without a Voice; a silent Cry without speaking a Word, de Vita Moysi, p. 175.

Speak to the Children of Israel, that they go forward.] Toward the Sea, before which they lay encamped, ver. 2, 9.

Ver. 16. But lift thou up thy Rod, and stretch out thine Hand over the Sea.] By that Rod wherewith he had done such Wonders in Egypt, he bids him believe he would work a Passage for them, even through the Sea.

And divide it.] Command that it be divided, and I will effect it. For so it is explained ver. 21. nor could it be done by any Power but God's.

And

And the Children of Israel shall go on dry Ground, through the midst of the Sea.] See ver. 21, 22.

Ver. 17. And I, behold I, will harden the Hearts of the Egyptians, and they shall follow them.] The LORD would have this noted, as a special Judgment of his upon them. For of all the Hardnings or Infatuations which had possessed the Hearts of the Egyptians, this was the greatest and strongest, that they should adventure to follow the Israelites, when they saw, or might have perceived the Red-sea to open her Bosom, to give the Children of Israel a Passage.

And I will get me Honour upon Pharaoh, and upon all his Host, &c.] By giving them such an Overthrow as shall magnify both my Power and my Justice in their Destruction. All the former Judgments upon their Cattle, or Corn, and the Annoyances on their Bodies by Frogs, and Lice, and Blains, were the just Awards (as the fore-named Dr. Jackson speaks) of God's punitive Justice upon Pharaoh and his Servants, for the Wrongs that he had done to his People, by bringing them into undeserved Bondage. But he had not yet called them to an exact Account; for making away so many Infant-males of the Hebrews, as they drowned in the River. For that innocent Blood he reckons with them now, and made them the Executioners of his Vengeance on themselves, by giving them over to their own proud Presumptions of good Success, in pursuing those whom they had lately beseeched to depart out of their Land.

Ver. 18. And the Egyptians shall know that I am the LORD.] See ver. 4.

When I have gotten me Honour upon Pharaoh, upon his Chariots, &c.] By overthrowing them in the Red-sea; that the Blood of the Hebrew Infants might be required of them according to the Law of Retaliation, or most exquisite Rule (as the above-mentioned Author speaks) of punitive Justice.

Ver. 19. And the Angel of the LORD which went before the Camp, removed and went behind them.] The LORD himself is said to go before them, ch. xiii. 21. (See there.) But we must understand that where the LORD is, he is attended by his Angels: Some of which were sent from the SCHECHINAH, which was in the Cloud, to conduct the Israelites, and take Care of them. The Jews take this Angel to have been Michael, as we read in Pirke Eliefer, c. 42. He sent Michael the great Prince, &c. for so he is called, Dan. xii. 1. Others say it was Gabriel: But whichever of them it was, he was only the Commander of that Host, which, by the LORD's Commandment went before the Israelites to fight for them. The Jews call him by the proper Name of Metraton; because he mark'd out their Camp for them where they were to stay, and described their Way in their Journey to their several Stations; especially here in the Red-sea. Vid. Buxtorf. Histor. Arcæ, c. 14. p. 131, &c.

And the Pillar of the Cloud went from before their Face, &c.] This, it is evident, was done in the Day time, before the Night came; for the Cloud appeared only in the Day; in the Night there was the Appearance of Fire.

And stood behind them.] To protect them from the Egyptians, who were at their Backs, ver. 9, 10. but, by the Intervention of this Cloud, quite lost the Sight of them; as it follows ver. 20.

It may be noted here therefore once for all, that there were several Uses of this Cloud. First, To guide them in their Journey. Secondly, To protect them from the Heat of the Sun in the Wilderness, where there were few Trees, and no Houses to shelter them. Thirdly, To defend them from their Enemies, that they might not assault them. And lastly, God from hence; when there was occasion, spake with Moses. For, it is plain, he appeared in this Cloud, Deut. xxxi. 15. and from thence talked with Moses, Exod. xxxiii. 9, 10. and out of it called for Aaron and Miriam to come before him, Numb. xii. 5.

Ver. 20. And it came to pass between the Camp of the Egyptians, and the Camp of Israel.] This was done, as I said, in the Day time; and in the next Words Moses informs us, how it appeared in the Night.

And it was a Cloud and Darknes to them.] i. e. To the Egyptians:

But it gave light by Night to these.] To the Israelites.

It was at the same Time both a Cloud and a Fire; being dark on the one Side next to the Egyptians, but bright and shining on the other Side next the Israelites: So that they might see their Way, and the Egyptians not see them, nor come near them (as it here follows) all the Night.

Ver. 21. And Moses stretched out his Hand over the Sea.] Having his Rod in his Hand, ver. 16. This was done in the Beginning of the Night.

And the LORD caused the Sea to go back.] By this it is evident, that the SCHECHINAH, or Divine Majesty, was present, and employ'd his Angel (ver. 19.) in this Work. As it is well explain'd by Pirke Eliefer, c. 42. The holy blessed God appeared in his Glory upon the Sea; and it fled back, &c. So the Psalmist understood it, Psal. lxxvii. 16. The Waters saw thee, O God; the Waters saw thee: They were afraid, &c. And, ver. 19. Thy Way is in the Sea, and thy Paths in the great Waters, &c.

By a strong East-wind.] Or rather a South-wind, as the LXX translate the Hebrew Word kadim; which, though it properly signify the East; yet in many Places it is used, as Bochart hath demonstrated, for the South, P. ii. Hierozoic. L. i. c. 15.

All that Night.] All the fore-part of the Night.

And made the Sea dry Land, and the Waters were divided.] Or rather, after the Waters were divided, as Bochart shows it should be translated. Thus Isa. lxiv. 5. Thou art wroth, and we have sinned; the Meaning is, for we have sinned, as Kimchi, and we our selves also there translate it. Hierozoic. P. ii. L. iii. c. 2. p. 409.

Dry Land.] The Memory of this was preserved by the Heathen, as we find in Diodorus Siculus, L. iii. Παρὰ δὲ τοῖς πλεστοῖν καλοῦντο Ἰχθυοφάγους παρὰ δὲ τῆς λόγου, &c. 'There is a Tradition among the Ichthyophagi, who border upon the Read-sea, which they had received ἐκ παλαιότητος, from their Progenitors, and was preserved unto that Time; how that, upon a great Recess of the Sea, every Place of that Gulf (κόλπη) was quite dry, and the Sea falling to the opposite Part, the Bottom of it appeared green (from the Weeds, I suppose, that were in it) but returning back with a mighty Force, possessed again its former Place.' No Man is so blind as not to see, that this is a Description of the miraculous Work of God for the Israelites; the Memory of which those barbarous People did not suffer to perish, but propagated it to their Posterity; as Bochart well observes in his Phaleg. L. iv. c. 29. 'The Egyptians indeed; we may well think, endeavoured to blot out the Memory of this shameful Overthrow, and kept no Record of it; for Diodorus, it seems, could learn nothing of it among them (though he lived a considerable Time there) but received this Intelligence from the poor Ichthyophagi, among whom this Tradition was carefully preserved.'

The Waters were divided.] Into twelve Parts (τὸ δώδεκα ὁδὸς) according to the Number of their Tribes, as the Tradition is in Epiphanius Hæres. lxi. n. 6, 9. which he had from the Hebrews, who affirm the same in Pirke Eliezer, c. 42. And Kimchi mentions it upon Psalms cxxxvi. 13. where, because God is said to have divided the Red-sea into Parts, they fancy there were twelve Divisions, every one defended with a Wall of Water. But there is no Foundation for this in these Words, nor in Psalms lxxvii. 19. where Paths being in the plural Number, they thence also deduce the same Conceit, of a several Path to every Tribe. See Simeon de Muis on that Place.

Ver. 22. And the Israelites went into the midst of the Sea.] About the second Watch of the Night (which was at Midnight) and about break of Day they were got quite through.

Upon the dry Ground.] This was not look'd upon by the antient Heathen as incredible: For Homer makes Neptune driving his Chariot upon the Waves, and the Sea with drawing its Waters. And the Waters of Scamander being swell'd to destroy Achilles, he makes to be dried up by Vulcan. As Nonnus also makes Bacchus drying up Hydaspes, and smiting Orontes with his Thyrus to have gone over it. See the learned Hugrins, in his Questiones Alnetane, p. 206, &c.

And the Waters were a Wall unto them, on the Right-hand, and on the left.] The strong East-wind contributed, no doubt, to the cutting of the Waters in two, though not without the Help of angelical Powers. But I do not see how it could do any Thing to the compacting of the Waters to such a Degree, that they were no longer fluid, but firm as a Wall or Bank on each Side of them (see ch. xv. 8.) which was effected wholly by the angelical Ministry, who upheld the Waters in that solid Posture till the Israelites were got quite out of the Sea.

It hath been an old Question, Whether they went quite cross the Red-sea, or only fetch'd a Compass, and came out upon the same Shore from which they went in. The Hebrew Doctors are of Opinion, that they did not go over to the opposite Shore; but making a kind of Semicircle, found themselves, when they came out, in the same Country where they were before: Their Reasons are, because they could not, in so small a Time, have march'd so far; for, in the narrowest Place, that Gulf is twelve or fifteen German Miles over; so that they could not all have pass'd through in less than three or four Days, as David Chytraeus makes the Computation. But especially because Moses expressly makes their next Station to be in the Wilderness of Etham, Numb. xxxiii. 8. in which Place they were the Day before they came to the Sea, Exod. xiii. 20. therefore they were still in the same Wilderness.

Ver. 23. And the Egyptians pursued, and went in after them into the midst of the Sea, &c.] Imagining, perhaps, they were still upon the Land, or on the Shore where the Sea was retired; the Darkness of the Night not suffering them to see the Mountains of Water on each Side; or rather, their Minds being so intent to overtake the Israelites, that they regarded nothing else: For when Men are engaged in a fierce Chase of any Thing, with eager Desires and confident Hopes of it, it takes up all their Thoughts, and makes them overlook what lies before their Eyes. Thus by their own violent Passions, and proud Imaginations, God blinded their Minds, and hardned their Hearts (as he said he would, ver. 17.) to rush into their own Destruction.

Ver. 24. And it came to pass, that in the Morning Watch.] The Romans and the Hebrews also, divided the Night into four Parts, containing three Hours apiece. At the Beginning of which the Guard of Soldiers, who kept watch by Night, was changed, and thence they were called Watches. Two of them we find mentioned by St. Luke xii. 38. and St. Mark mentions them all, ch. xiii. 35. and particularly the fourth Watch, Mark vi. 48. called here the Morning Watch, which was the last of them, between Day-break and the Morning.

The LORD looked unto the Host of the Egyptians.] He frowned upon them, as we speak now in our Language. For in Scripture, God is said sometimes to look upon those whom he is about to punish, Psalms civ. 32. Amos ix. 4. Habakkuk iii. 6.

Through the Pillar of Fire and the Cloud.] By this it is manifest there was but one Pillar, which had different Appearances; and that the SCHECHINAH, or Divine Majesty, was in it. It seems to me also very probable, that whereas the cloudy Part of the Pillar had been towards the Egyptians hitherto, now it turned the other Side toward them; and the fiery Part appearing, let them see the Danger wherein they were, and, by its amazing Brightness, perfectly confounded them. So Philo seems to have understood it, when he saith (L. iii. de Vita Mosi) that from the Cloud that was in the Rear of the Israelites, there shone a fiery Appearance of the Deity. Which may well be the Meaning of the LORD's looking through the Pillar of Fire.

And

And troubled the Host of the Egyptians.] This glorious Light, I suppose, flashing in their Faces, put them into a Consternation. But Josephus adds, in the Conclusion of his second-Book of Antiquities, that there was a dreadful Storm or Tempest, with Thunder, Lightning and Hail-stones from the Cloud, which put them into the greatest Disorder, as it follows in the next Verse. Hither Dr. Hammond refers those Words of the Psalmist, lxxvii. 17, 18. The Clouds poured out Water; the Skies sent out a Sound: Thine Arrows also went abroad. The Voice of thy Thunder was in the Heaven: The Lightnings lightened the World, the Earth trembled and shook, &c.

Ver. 25. And took off their Chariot-wheels.] Some of their Wheels were broken by the Hail-stones, or burnt with Lightning; with which, it's likely, their Horses were so affrighted that they fell into Disorder; and one Chariot running against another, some of their Wheels were taken off.

That they drave heavily.] They could scarce move, or but very slowly, when their Wheels were broken, or taken off; and those Wheels that remained sunk deep into the Sand, when the Waters returned upon it.

So that the Egyptians said, &c.] They cried one to another, Let us give over the Pursuit.

For the LORD fighteth for them, &c.] Now Moses's Words were made good (ver. 14.) and the Egyptians themselves acknowledged it, ver. 18.

Ver. 26. And the LORD said unto Moses.] He spake to him out of the Cloud, where the SCHECHINAH was, as I have often said.

Stretch out thy Hand over the Sea, that the Waters may return again upon the Egyptians, &c.] God was pleased to use the Ministry of Moses in the drowning of the Egyptians, as he had done in the Preservation of the Israelites in the Sea (ver. 16, 21.) that all the People might honour and reverence him, and be obedient to his Direction.

Ver. 27. And the Sea returned to its Strength.] The Sense is truly expressed by the Vulgar, the Sea returned to its former Place. The great Walls, or Heaps of Water which were on each Side of them, falling down, and rushing upon them with a mighty Force, overwhelmed them, and filled the whole Channel as before.

When the Morning appeared.] When it was light.

And the Egyptians fled against it.] They were so frightened by the Light which shone in their Faces, and by the Thunder and Hail, &c. that they turned back, and, like Men distracted, run and met the Waters, which came tumbling down upon them.

And the LORD overthrew the Egyptians in the midst of the Sea.] The Hebrew Word imports throwing down with Violence and Precipitation; and may be translated, threw them headlong. Artapanus in Eusebius (L. ix. Præpar. Evang. c. 27.) tells this Story from the Heliopolitans, after the same Manner that Moses doth; only he makes some of them to have been killed with Lightning, and the rest drowned.

Ver. 28. And the Waters returned, and covered the Chariots, &c.] The Sea returned to its former Depth, so that they were swallowed up.

And all the Host of Pharaoh that came into the Sea after them.] Some have fancied that all the Host of Pharaoh did not perish, but only so many of them as pursued the Israelites into the Sea; which they fancy this Place intimates some did not. But the plain Meaning is, that they all came into the Sea after the Israelites, and were all drowned in it. It is a wilder Fancy, that Pharaoh alone was saved by the Angels, Michael and Gabriel, because he cried out, as he had done heretofore, ch. ix. 27. The LORD is righteous, and I and my People are wicked. Thus the Author of Dibre Hajamim (or, The Life and Death of Moses) who says they transported him to Nineveh, where he reigned as long as the Israelites wandered in the Wilderness. The same is related by other such fabulous Writers, who are soberly confuted by Eben Ezra from the following Words, There remained not so much as one of them: And from ch. xv. 4, 19. where Moses in his Song plainly makes Pharaoh to have perished among the rest: And with them an old Midrash saith, that Jannes and Jambres were drown'd, who had been the great Instruments of hardning Pharaoh's Heart. See our learned J. Gregory, Observ. c. 15.

Ver. 29. But the Children of Israel walked on dry Land, &c.] or, had walked: For it seems to be a mere Fancy, that they were still in the Sea, and had not passed quite through it, when Pharaoh and his Host were drowned; for which there is no Ground but this Word walked; which may as well be translated in the Time perfectly past, as in the present. And so, I doubt not, Moses meant, that the Israelites were safe on Shore when the Sea returned upon the Egyptians.

And the Waters were a Wall unto them, &c.] See ver. 22.

Ver. 30. Thus the LORD saved Israel.] As he had promised, ver. 13.

That Day.] Which was the 21st of Nisan, and the last Day of the Feast of unleavened Bread, which, by God's Command, was to be kept Holy, ch. xii. 16. and now there was a very great Reason for it, and for that triumphant Hymn which they sung upon this Solemnity, Chap. xv. Mr. Mede will have this Day to have been that which they afterward kept for their Sabbath, in Memory of their Redemption out of the Land of Egypt, and the House of Bondage. This he gathers from the Repetition of the Decalogue in the fifth of Deuteronomy; where, leaving out the Reason for this Commandment, from the Creation of the World, Moses inserts this other of their Redemption out of Egypt, as the Ground of observing that seventh Day rather than any other, ver. 15. Therefore the LORD commanded thee to keep the Sabbath; namely, not for the quatum of one Day in seven (of that there was another Reason, from the Example of God in the Creation) but for the Designation of that Day, after the preceding six Days, rather than any other, Discourse xv. p. 74.

And Israel saw the Egyptians dead upon the Sea-shore.] It may be interpreted, that as they stood upon the Sea-shore, they saw their dead Bodies floating upon the Waters. But it is likely also, that by the working of the Sea, and by the Divine Providence, many of their Bodies were cast on Shore, that the Israelites might have the Benefit of the Spoil, and especially of their Arms, which they wanted, and were now by this Overthrow furnished withal.

This Shore was inhabited by the Iethyophagi, among whom the Memory of this Recess and Return of the Sea was preserved (as I observed upon ver. 21.) and unto whom the dead Bodies were given for Food, as the Psalmist saith, Psal. lxxiv. 14. that is, to the Beasts, and Birds of Prey, which peopled the neighbouring Wilderness. This was done by the righteous Judgment of the LORD God of the Hebrews; who made this proud Prince, his Statefmen and Army, a Prey, not only to the Fishes and Sea-monsters, but a visible Booty (as Dr. Jackson speaks) to the promiscuous Sorts of ravenous Creatures which inhabit the Desarts.

Ver. 31. And Israel saw that great Work, &c.] Of making a Path for them to walk on dry Ground in the middle of the Sea, and then drowning the Egyptians when they followed them in the same Path.

And the People feared the LORD.] They beholding and considering the powerful Hand of God, which appeared in this great Work, it begat in them, for the present, high and awful Thoughts of him, and devout Affections to him. For the Fear of the LORD includes all Religion. Or, if we take the Word Fear in a restrained Sense, for a dread of the Divine Majesty; the Meaning is, they were sensible how dangerous, as well as vain, it is to oppose his Authority, to set themselves against his Will, or slight his Warnings, as Pharaoh and the Egyptians did.

And believed the LORD, and his Servant Moses.] Believed the Promises which God had made them by Moses, of bringing them into the Land of Canaan (ch. iii. 17.) looking upon Moses as a Servant of his, who faithfully declared the Mind and Will of God unto them.

CHAP. XV.

Ver. 1. Then sang Moses and the Children of Israel, &c.] Upon the 21st of Nisan, as I said before, which was the last Day of unleavened Bread, when they came safe through the Sea, and saw the Egyptians drown'd, they sang this Song of Praise to God, for their wonderful Deliverance. So the constant Tradition of the Hebrews is, and there is great Ground for it.

This Song.] Called the Song of Moses the Servant of the LORD (Rev. xv. 3.) because he composed it by a Divine Inspiration, to be sung by all the People; and it is the most antient Song of which there is any Memory.

Unto the LORD.] In praise of the Divine Power and Goodness, which remarkably appeared in this Deliverance.

Josephus, L. ii. c. ult. of his Antiquities, saith, this Song is composed ἐν ἑξαμέτρῳ τόνῳ, of Hexameter Verse; which Eusebius represents as the Opinion of many others, L. xi. de Prepar. Evang. c. 3. But I do not see how this can be made out, nor what St. Hierom saith concerning such Songs, in many Places. And after all the Pains that Franc. Gomarus hath taken in his Lyra Davidis, to find of what Sort of Numbers this and other Songs in Scripture consist, he hath not given any Satisfaction to learned Men; who think (as Ludov. Capellus doth in his Animadversions on that Book) that all the Bible may be made Verse, according to his Method: Nay, by his way of resolving Sentences, all the Orations of Tully and Demosthenes may be turned into Verse, of some Sort or other. The Author of Sepher Cosri seems to me to deal ingenuously; who, when the King of Cosar objects to them, that the Songs in the Bible are not artificially composed, according to Numbers and Quantities of Feet and Syllables, makes the Jew answer, That the Scripture Poetry was of a nobler Sort, not formed to tickle the Ear, but affect the Heart, by the great Height and Elevation of the Sense, together with lofty Expressions, whereby Men were moved to attend to it, and to keep it in mind, P. ii. Sect. 69, &c. And so much Abarbinel acknowledges upon this Place, 'That no such Verses, consisting in the Number and Quantity of Syllables, are to be found either in the Bible, or in the Talmud (either in the Mishna or the Gemara) but are of later Invention among the Jews, in Imitation of the Arabians, and other Nations among whom they dwelt in this long Captivity. Yet in the Scripture Poetry, there is a certain Disposition of Words, which make them melodious, and fit to be sung to musical Instruments; and so sententious, that they might be more easily remembered than simple Narrations; though now, after so many Ages, they cannot reduce this Poetry to Rules.' He tries indeed to bring this Song under certain Regulations, fancying that it consists of eight Orders or Ranks (as he calls them) two of which are very short, and two very long, and four of a middle Size; which he prosecutes with much Subtlety, but with little Satisfaction.

And spake, saying, I will sing unto the LORD, &c.] Every one join'd in this Song of Praise, which may be thus paraphrased:

Ver. 1. We will joyfully praise the LORD; for he hath in a most illustrious and magnificent Manner shown his Power; by throwing Horse and Men, when they little thought of it, into the Sea.

Ver. 2. It is he who hath given us this Victory, and therefore he is to be praised and acknowledged as our Deliverer. He is our most gracious and mighty God; for whom we will prepare a Tabernacle wherein to worship him. Our Fathers had great Experience of his Goodness, and therefore we are the more bound to make him our most thankful Acknowledgments, and give him the highest Praises.

Ver. 3. There is none can stand before the LORD, who hath perfectly subdued our Enemies, and faithfully fulfilled his Promises to his Servants.

Ver.

Ver. 4. For he bath cast Pharaoh, and all his Chariots, and great Commanders, into the Sea, as easily as one sends an Arrow out of a Bow.

Ver. 5. They are buried; and shall rise up no more.

Ver. 6. Thou hast manifested thy Omnipotence, O LORD, most magnificently: it was thy irresistible Power, O LORD, which dashed in pieces such mighty Enemies.

Ver. 7. It was a Work of thy most excellent Power; which will be ever magnified in the Overthrow of such Adversaries: With whom thou no sooner showedst thy self displeased, but they vanished as Stubble doth before the Flame.

Ver. 8. Thou didst but give the Command, and by a vehement Wind the Waters of the Sea were divided and heaped up, so that they swelled into little Mountains; and were compact like a Wall, which was upheld from falling down, till the People passed through the midst of the Sea.

Ver. 9. Our Enemies pursued us with a full Confidence that they should overtake, and make a Prey of us; and after they had satisfied their Revenge upon us, as certainly reduce us under their Yoke, as they drew their Swords against us.

Ver. 10. But with a turn of the Wind all their vain Hopes sunk on a sudden, together with themselves, to the Bottom of the Sea.

Ver. 11. There are none among all that are called Gods, in Heaven or in Earth, that are comparable to thee, O LORD, whose Perfections infinitely transcend all other; and therefore art to be praised with the greatest Fear and Reverence; for thy very Works are wonderful, and to be had in admiration.

Ver. 12. By thy mighty Power they were buried in the bottom of the Sea; into which they sank.

Ver. 13. And in great Mercy thou hast preserved thy People, whom thou hast brought out of Egypt, and rescued from cruel Servitude; and conducted, by a mighty Providence, towards the Holy Land, which thou hast promised to them, there to dwell among them.

Ver. 14. And why should we doubt of our coming thither? The Fame of this Wonder shall go before us, and strike a Terror into the most valiant Inhabitants of that Country.

Ver. 15. Nay, all their Neighbours, as well as they, shall find their Hearts fail them, and become as weak as Water.

Ver. 16. Such a Terror shall fall upon them, that they shall be no more able to stir than a Stone, when they hear of this dreadful Execution: But suffer thy People, O LORD, to pass to their Inheritance, which thou hast prepared for them.

Ver. 17. Thither shalt thou bring them, and there make them to take root in the highest Mountains of that Country, where thou hast designed a Place for thine own Dwelling; of which thy Power also will lay the Foundation.

Ver. 18. And thou shalt do more Wonders; since thy Dominion and Power endures to all Ages.

Ver. 19. For who can delibrate Thee? Who in the same Sea hast made a Grave to bury the Egyptians, and a Path for thy People Israel to walk in, as if they had been on dry Ground.

And now having given the Sense of the Song in this Paraphrase, it may be proper to confirm it, by the Explication of some Phrases in it.

Ver. 1. Hath he thrown into the Sea.] The Hebrew Word ramab signifies a sudden Precipitation, when they were in the height of their Hopes to overtake and subdue the Israelites.

Ver. 2. He is my God.] Though some think the Word El to be a Contraction of Elohim, yet it seems to be derived from ajal, and is generally thought to import Might and Strength. But I have taken in the other Notion of Goodness also. See ver. 11.

Prepare him an Habitation.] As if they thought a Cloud too mean an Habitation for the Divine Glory, they resolve to build him a Tabernacle: Just as David, ashamed he should dwell in a Tabernacle, designed to build him a Temple.

My Father's God.] i. e. Jacob's; of whom God took a singular Care, both before and after he came into Egypt.

Ver. 3. The LORD is a Man of War.] i. e. Gets great Victories, as the Targum expresses it. For when the Hebrews would express any eminent Quality, they put the Word isch before it. As in 1 Sam. xvii. 33. we meet with this very Expression concerning Goliath, a Man of War from his Youth; i. e. a great Warrior. And in the foregoing Chapter David is called both isch Milchamah, a Man of War, and isch Toar, a Man of Form or Beauty; i. e. a beautiful or comely Person, as we translate it, 1 Sam. xvi. 18. And in this very Book, isch de varim, a Man of Words, is an eloquent Man.

The LORD is his Name.] He seems to allude unto that which God said to Moses, when he first appeared to him, ch. iii. 14, 15, 16. and vi. 3, 4, 6.

Ver. 4. Pharaoh's Chariots.] The Hebrew Word Mercavah comprehends the Horses by which they were drawn; which were commonly four to each Chariot, as Maimonides probably gathers from 1 Kings x. 29. where a Horse is said to come out of Egypt at an hundred and fifty Shekels, and a Chariot at six hundred, because it comprehended four Horses: More Nerech. P. i. c. 70.

Chosen Captains.] The Hebrew Word Schalisb imports something extraordinary, either in their Stature, or in their Command; which they had, perhaps, over three Squadrons, as we now speak. But Hen. Valesius, a very learned Man, thinks the LXX rightly translated the Word by reisitas; which he translates three fighting out of a Chariot: For reisitas, and reisitas, are both Words belonging to Military Discipline (which they call Takticks) and reisitas he takes to be of the same kind, and rightly rendred by Rufinus, ternos statores, in Euseb. Hist. Eccles. L. ix. c. 9. p. 358.

Ver. 5. Sank to the bottom as a Stone.] The Waters which stood up like a Wall falling down with great Violence upon them, they sank under their Weight to the bottom of the Sea; from whence, after some time, they rose up again, and and were thrown upon the Shore (ch. xiv. 30.) though not all of them; but some seem to have been buried in the bottom of the Sea. See ver. 12.

Ver. 6. Right-hand.] Is frequently used for the height of Power, exerted in the Preservation of good Men, or the Destruction of the bad, Psal. xx. 6. xxi. 8.

Ver. 7. In the greatness of thy Excellency, &c.] All Words being too low to declare the Greatness of God's Power, which appeared in the Overthrow of the Egyptians, he endeavours to rise higher and higher in his Expressions, to show how much he admired it.

Thou sentest forth thy Wrath.] He seems to allude unto God's looking upon them, through the Pillar of Fire and of the Cloud, ch. xiv. 24. and to the Thunder and Lightning, which are supposed to have come from thence.

Ver. 8. And with the Blast of thy Nostrils.] This may relate to the strong Wind, which drove the Sea back, ch. xiv. 21.

The Waters were gathered together.] This Word Aram, or Haram, signifies to heap up together: From whence the Arabians call those great Banks, which are raised to keep in Waters from overflowing a Country, by the Name of Arem, or Harem; as Bochartus hath observed, in his Phaleg. L. ii. c. 26. And so the Word may be here translated, the Waters were heaped up as Banks, on each side of the Israelites.

Ver. 9. I will divide the Spoil.] It belonged to Kings, and chief Commanders, to divide the Spoil; as Moses, David, and Joshua did, among the Soldiers.

My Hand shall destroy them.] Or, re-possess them (as it is in the Margin) bring them back to their Slavery in Egypt.

Ver. 10. They sank like Lead.] It signifies the Suddenness of their Destruction; for a Talent of Lead sinks in a Moment.

Ver. 11. Who is like unto thee, among the Gods?] Or, the mighty Ones, as it is in the Margin. For Elim is the Plural of El, which comes from Ejalab (faith the Author of Sepher Cosri) which denotes Fortitude or Strength: For from him proceeds all Power and Might; but is himself more sublime and eminent, than to be likened to any other Power, according to these Words, which he quotes for the Proof of it, Pars iv. Sect. 3.

Fearful in Praises.] I see no Solidity in the Gloss of R. Elieser, that Moses speaks in the Plural Number, because the Angels praised God above, when the Israelites praised him below, Pirke Elies. c. 42. The plain Meaning is, that he ought to be praised with the greatest Reverence; for to him alone (as Conradus Pellicanus glosses) belongs all Honour and Glory, who can never enough be praised.

Ver. 12. The Earth swallowed them.] They who were drowned in the Sea, are here said to be swallowed up in the Earth; just as Jonah faith, when he was in the Sea, that he went down to the bottom of the Mountains, and the Earth with her Bars was about him for ever, ch. ii. 6. because the Sea, which swallowed both him and the Egyptians, is in the Depths of the Earth. R. Elieser thinks that they being thrown upon the Sea-shore, ch. xiv. 30. the Earth opened her Mouth, and swallowed them up: Which is possible; but there is no necessity of so understanding it. Rather, after the Israelites had spoiled them, the Sea which had cast them on Shore, afterwards, as is usual, carried them off again, and buried them in the Sand or Mud.

Ver. 13. Thy holy Habitation.] The Country where God himself intended to have a Dwelling-Place, ver. 17.

Ver. 14. The Inhabitants of Palestina.] The Philistines seem to have been the most valiant People in that Country, to which the Israelites were to go; and therefore here mentioned.

Ver. 15. The Dukes of Edom.] Concerning the Word Allupbe, see Gen. xxxvi. 18. By this it appears, that Idumæa was at this Time under the Government of Dukes; tho' before Moses's Death they had Kings (Numb. xx. 14.) For they often changed their Government, as I observed upon Gen. xxxvi. where Moses gives an account both of their Dukes, and of their Kings.

Ver. 16. Shall be as still as a Stone.] The LXX translate it ἀπολιθωθήτωσαν, turned into Stones; i. e. so struck with the Terror of the LORD, that they remained unmoveable as Stones; having no heart to oppose the Passage of the Israelites into Canaan.

Ver. 17. The Mountain of thine Inheritance.] Moses seems to have foreseen, by the Spirit of Prophecy, that God would place his Habitation upon Mount Sion: Which he understood, perhaps, from the Sacrifice of Isaac upon Mount Moriab, Gen. xxii.

Ver. 18. The LORD shall reign for ever and ever.] It may signify, that when they came thither, they would always acknowledge him for their Sovereign, who had done such mighty Things for them.

Ver. 19. The Horse of Pharaoh went in with his Chariots, &c.] In this, which the Greeks call the Epiphonema of the Song, Moses briefly comprehends the whole Matter of it, and makes it end as it began.

Ver. 20. And Miriam.] Or, as the LXX, the Syriac, and others read it, Mariam; which some think comes from Marab, which signifies Bitterness (as the Arabick Word Marara doth) and that their cruel Usage by Pharaoh, especially his Decree that all the Male Children should be slain, was the Occasion of this Name; for it made their Life bitter to them, as the Text faith, ch. i. 14. Thus the Author of Dibre Hajamim (or, of the Life of Moses) and our Dr. Lightfoot, and others. But Le Moine guesses, not unhappily, that it signifies as much as Marjam, which is in English, a Drop of the Sea; from which the Story of Venus was framed, among the Greeks; who feigned her to have been born of the Froth of the Sea, which gave her the Name of Aphrodite. The Fable of Diana also, as well as Venus, had no other Original, but from that which is here said of Miriam; as Huetius hath probably conjectured, in his Demonstratio Evang. Propos. iv. c. 12. Sect. 4.

The Prophetess.] She was called by this Name, I suppose, because she had a Gift of composing Hymns, in Praise of the Divine Majesty; which, it it is certain, is meant sometimes by prophefying in Scripture: See 1 Sam. x. 5, 6. And thus among the Greeks, a Prophet and a Poet were the same thing: And the Latin Word Vates fignifies both. For, as Quintilian faith, L. i. c. 10. Mufick was had in fuch Veneration in antient Times, that idem Mufici, & Vates & Sapientes judicarentur. But there are other Places of Holy Scripture, which would incline one to think that fhe alfo received Revelations from God, for the Direction of the People. Particularly Mich. vi. 4. where fhe is mentioned as one that conducted Israel out of Egypt; and her own Words, with Aaron's, Numb. xii. 2. hath not the LORD fpoken by us alfo? Which the LORD heard, and doth not contradict; but rather allow to be true: Though they had not fuch near Communication with him as Mofes had, ver. 6. Perhaps fhe instructed the Women, as Mofes and Aaron did the Men.

The Sifter of Aaron.] And why not of Mofes? The common Answer is, that Aaron and the lived longeft together; Mofes having been abfent from them forty Years. Or perhaps Mofes was not by the fame Mother, which Aaron and Miriam had. She was married to Hur, if we may believe Josephus.

Took a Timbrel in her Hand.] So the Manner was in After-times, when they prophefied, 1 Sam. x. 5, 6. 2 Kings iii. 15. and when they fang Hymns, Pfal. xxxiii. 2. lvii. 7, 8. and upon any occafion of great rejoicing, Judg. xi. 34. 1 Sam. xviii. 6. From which we may learn how antient Mufick was in the Service of God; there being nothing in which it can be better employed, than in his Praises. Therefore it was no part of the Gentile Idolatry, that they ufed fuch Instruments as thefe in their Divine Worfhip; but they honoured falfe Gods in that manner, that Mofes and the Israelites had done the true. And it ought to have a Remark fet upon it, that this way of praifing God was no part of the Mofaical Inftitution, but derived from more antient Times, before the Law was given.

And all the Women went out after her.] To join with her in the Praises of God, as the Men did with Mofes and Aaron, with Timbrels and Dances. As they played with thefe Instruments in their Hands, fo their whole Bodies made a decent Motion with their Feet. Which afterwards tended to Lascivioufnefs, but antiently was very grave, and fo becoming, that fuch Dances were as devout Exprefions of Joy, as their folemn Mufick. This appears by the Example of David, dancing before the Ark, when it was brought up from the Houfe of Obed-Edom, in a joyul Proceffion both of Men and Women, with Vocal and Instrumental Mufick, 1 Chron. xv. 27, 28, 29. Pfal. lxxviii. 26. From which Patterns all Nations, from the moft antient Times, made Dancing a part of the Worfhip of their Gods; as Huetius obferves, in his Demonftr. Evang. Propof. iv. c. 6. n. 2. who ingenioufly conjectures, in another Place of that Work (c. 12. n. 4.) that from this Dancing of Miriam, and her Companions, on the Sea-shore, Callimachus, in his Hymn to Diana, afcribes to her ἑκατόν τρεῖς χοροὶς ἀναιμένας, threescore Dancers, the Daughters of the Ocean.

Ver. 21. And Miriam answered them, &c.] i. e. She and the Women answered Mofes and the People Verfe by Verfe; or, after every Verfe fung by Mofes and the Men, Miriam and the Women interposed and repeated this Verfe (which is the firft of the Song) faying, Sing to the LORD, for he hath triumphed glorioufly, &c. And this was a way of finging in After-Times, as appears from Pfal. cxxxv. and Ezra iii. 11. of which I have given fome Account in my Preface to the Paraphrafe of the Book of Pfalms. Which juftifies, or rather commends our way of Reading, or Chanting the Pfalms interchangeably, by Responses, as we call them, or Answering one to another: Which certainly, it appears by this Place, is the moft antient Way of all other; and is reprefented, in Isa. vi. 3. as practifed by the Angels themfelves, in their Worfhip of the Divine Majefty.

Ver. 22. So Mofes brought Israel from the Red-Sea.] Not without fome Importunity; they being eagerly bent upon gathering the Spoil of the Egyptians. Some fuch thing the Hebrew Word feems to import, which is jassa, he made them to go up. Which fignifies fome Unwillingnefs or Backwardnefs; arifing either from that Caufe, or from a Defire to return to Egypt (as fome fanfy) which now perhaps they thought to be fo empty, that they might get it for themfelves.

And they went out.] From the Station where they were at the Red-Sea.

Into the Wildernefs of Skur.] Mentioned Gen. xvi. 7. and was a part of the Wildernefs of Etham, which was the general Name for this Defart, Numb. xxxiii. 8.

And they went three Days in the Wildernefs.] Viz. the 22d, 23d, and 24th of Nifan.

And found no Water.] Which was a very great Trial of them. For their Cattle, as well as they, fuffered much by it; and could not afford them Milk fufficient to quench their Thirft.

Ver. 23. And when they came to Marah.] This was the fourth Station of the Israelites, after they came out of Egypt, and in the fame Wildernefs; which had this Name given it after they came there, from the Bitternefs or Brackifhnefs of the Water.

They could not drink of the Water, &c.] This was the more grievous, becaufe they had wanted this Refreshment three Days.

Ver. 24. And the People murmured againft Mofes, faying, What fhall we drink?] It is the Conceit of Abarbinel, that Mofes brought them from the Red-Sea without the Direction of the Cloud which conducted them thither; but then left them to his Guidance. Which made the People think it was Mofes's Fault, that they were in this Diffrefs; who did not know how to lead them to the moft commodious and likely Places, for the finding good Water. And therefore from Marah they ftirred not; till the Cloud again led them; becaufe it is faid, ch. xvii. 1. they journey'd from Sin, by the Commandment of the LORD. But all this is a mere Fancy, to excufe his Forefathers; who fhould rather have prayed to God, than murmured againft Mofes. For we read exprefly, God did not take away the Pillar of the Cloud by Day, and the Pillar of Fire by Night, from before the People, ch. xiii. 22. that is, it constantly guided them in the Way wherein they should go, whether they travelled by Day or by Night. And in that very Place, which he builds his Opinion upon, where it is said, they journeyed according to the Commandment of the LORD; it is also expressly recorded, that there was no Water for the People to drink; ch. xvii. 1.

Ver. 25. And he cried unto the LORD.] He did what they should have done, made his earnest Prayer to God to relieve them in this Distress; which he instantly vouchsafed to do.

And the LORD shewed him a Tree.] We are not told what Tree this was, whose Wood being thrown into the Waters, took off their Bitterness: But, to increase the Miracle, the Jews will have this to have been a Tree of bitter Taste (which Jonathan calls Ardophne) which naturally would have made the Waters bitter, if they had been sweet. Demetrius mentions this wonderful Cure of the Waters, in Eusebius's Præpar. Evang. L. ix. c. 29.

Which when he had cast into the Water.] By the Order of the LORD, who shewed him the Tree. For the Wonder did not consist (as Huetius thinks, in his Questiones Alnetanae) in curing the Water by throwing the Wood into it (for that may be done naturally, as Pliny shows) but that he found this Wood in the Wilderness, by the Direction of God: As Elisba found, by the same divine Direction, that the throwing in of Meal would make Water sweet; which the same Pliny saith is a natural Remedy.

There be made for them.] Propounded to them, or appointed them.

A Statute and an Ordinance.] This seems to signify, that for their better Government, God now gave them a few Rules to be observed for the present, till he should more fully declare his Will to them from Mount Sinai. And it is a most antient constant Tradition of the Jews, That now he commanded them to observe the Sabbath (which they understand by Statute) and to do Justice; particularly, honour their Parents; which they understand by Ordinance or Judgment, as the Hebrew Word imports. And they instance especially in keeping the Sabbath, and honouring of Parents; because those two Commandments are pressed upon them in Deuteronomy, with this particular Inforcement, As the LORD commanded thee, Deut. v. 12, 16. which they will have to relate unto this Command at Marah. See Mr. Selden, L. iii. de Jure Nat. & Gent. c. 9. p. 314, 333, &c. And perhaps these two might be in the Number; but it is probable there were more Commands besides these, which were now given them, as the following Verse seems to intimate.

And there he proved them.] He began there to make a Trial of their Obedience, whether they would observe these Laws or no.

Ver. 26. And said, If thou wilt diligently hearken to the Voice of the LORD thy God, &c.] This was the main Thing he required of them, as Jeremiah observes, ch. vii. 22, 23. where he saith, God spake nothing to them, in the Day when he brought them out of Egypt (i. e. at this Time) concerning Burnt-Offerings and Sacrifices, but only commanded them, saying, Obey my Voice. And this Maimonides himself confesses, in his More Nevoch. P. iii. c. 32. It appears from the Scripture, and the Cabala also, that the first Precept which God gave us after we came out of Egypt, was not concerning Burnt-Offerings and Sacrifices, but it was that given us at Marah. If thou wilt diligently hearken to the Voice of the LORD thy God, where he gave us a Statute and a Judgment. And it is a certain Tradition, that the Statute was the Sabbath, and the Judgment was the taking away all Iniquity; i. e. doing justly.

I will put none of those Diseases upon thee, which I have brought upon the Egyptians.] He encourages their Obedience by a gracious Promise to preserve them from those terrible Plagues, which he inflicted upon the Egyptians for their Disobedience. Which is an Indication withal, that if the Israelites proved like them, they should be punished in the same manner as he threatens afterwards, Deut. xxviii. 59, &c.

I am the LORD that healeth thee.] There are two Parts of a Physician's Office; to cure Men, when they are sick; and to preserve them in Health, when they are well. The latter is here chiefly intended: Which the Psalmist takes notice of, when he saith, cv. 37. There was not one feeble Person among their Tribes.

Ver. 27. And they came to Elim.] They seem to have stayed but a Day at Marah, and on the 25th of Nisan to have come to this Place, called Elim (which signifies Rams) from the good Pasture which was here for the feeding Sheep, as Jacobus Capellus will have it. But Bochartus thinks that El signifies in general a Field; as El-Paran, Gen. xiv. 6. he interprets the Field or Plain of Paran; and consequently Elim signifies a part of the Wilderness, where there were large and spacious Plains. Thus I find Ezekiel the Tragedian (mentioned by Eusebius) understood it, in his Exagoge; where he brings in one talking with Moses, and pointing him to this Place, where a great Light shone on a sudden, as a Pillar of Fire, to show it to them: Which he calls λεμῶνα καλῶσκιον, a shady Meadow, and saith it was δαφιλῆς γῆος καὶ εὐδαίης, an exceeding fertile Ground, L. ix. Præpar. Evang. c. 29.

Where were twelve Wells of Water, and three-score and ten Palm-trees.] Twelve Wells of Water, according to the Number of the 12 Tribes; and 70 Palm-Trees, according to the Number of the Elders of Israel, says the Hierusalem Targum, and Jonathan's Paraphrase. Which Nachmanides so much believed, that he saith each Tribe pitched their Tents about one of these Fountains; and the seventy Elders sat down under the Shadow of the Palm-Trees, giving Thanks to God for the Benefits they now received upon dry Land, as lately they had done in the Sea. But there is no reason to think that the high Court, consisting of so many Elders, was now constituted; as I have observed before: Of which see Mr. Selden, L. i. de Synedr. c. 15. p. 626, &c. There is nothing in the Story neither, to warrant what Ezekiel says in the Place before-named, that these Twelve Springs all gushed ἐκ μιᾶς πέτρας, out of one Rock, which was in this beautiful Plain; no more than there is for what follows in him, concerning a marvellous vellous strange Bird, such as no Man ever saw before, as big again as an Eagle, of various Colours, and a most sweet Voice, which appeared to them upon this Occasion: Which he seems to have had out of some Talmudical Fable.

Palm-Trees.] This Tree delights in watry Places, and therefore no wonder for many were planted here by these Fountains. For it is noted by Pliny, that gaudet riguis, & toto anno bibere amat, the Palm-Tree delights in Places well watered, and loves to drink all the Year. There were two Sorts of these Trees; the common, and that which was called αρωματωδης, because it bare Dates; as Salmasius hath observed in his Plinianæ Exercit. p. 472, 1326. If these were of the latter Sort, they gave them the better Entertainment.

And they encamped there by the Water.] To refresh themselves and their Flocks, in this delightful Place.

CHAP. XVI.

Ver. 1. AND they took their Journey from Elim.] After they had rested a good while there, as appears by the End of the Verse.

And all the Congregation came unto the Wilderness of Sin.] Not directly; but first they went back towards the Red-Sea, which was their next Station after they left Elim; as Moses tells us, Numb. xxxiii. 10. where he gives an exact Account of all their Stations; one of which is here omitted, because nothing remarkable, I suppose, fell out there, and they did not stay long in it. This Sin is different from that where Miriam died, Numb. xx. 1. and written with different Letters.

Which is between Elim and Sinai.] So the direct Way to Sinai had been into this Wilderness of Sin; but, for some Reason which we know not, they first return'd to some Part of that Sea where they had been before.

On the fifteenth Day of the second Month, &c.] Just a Month after they came out of Egypt. And therefore, it seems, they stay'd a good while at Elim, where there was plenty of Water, and some Shade, which was now very comfortable; this second Month (which they called Ijar) answering to part of our April and May: Or otherwise we must suppose they spent some Time at the Red-sea; whither God conducted them, perhaps, to put them in mind of his late great Mercy to them there, which might incline them to be more obedient to his Commands, mentioned ch. xv. 25, 26.

Ver. 2. And the whole Congregation of the Children of Israel.] Their Elders and all are included in these Words, they being the same with those ver. 1. which certainly comprehend all that came out of Egypt. Though it's likely there were some more pious among them, who were not guilty of what follows; when the Generality were so mutinous, that they who were better disposed could scarce be discerned.

Murmured against Moses and Aaron.] This seems to be an higher Discontent than the former, ch. xv. 24. because the whole Congregation were engaged in it; whereas there it is only said, the People were concerned in it: And there they quarrelled only with Moses, but here with both their Leaders; and as that was for want of Water, so this for want of Bread; all their Dough, which they brought out of Egypt, being now spent. So Josephus and R. Bechai, which latter faith, The Dough they brought out of Egypt sufficed for a whole Month, from the fifteenth of Nisan, to the fifteenth of Ijar, and the Night of the sixteenth, they still ate of it: And then on the sixteenth, he thinks, the Manna descended; which fell on the first Day of the Week, as he argues from those Words, ver. 5. when, on the sixth Day, they are commanded to gather twice as much as on other Days; which was, says he, both the sixth Day of the Week, and of the Descent of the Manna.

Ver. 3. Would to God we had died by the Hand of the LORD, &c.] As some of the Egyptians did. A strange Wish! proceeding from great Ingratitude to God, and Forgetfulness of his Benefits.

When we sat.] That was the antient Posture of eating before this Time, ch. xxxvii. 25. xliii. 33. and afterward, Exod. xxxii. 6. Judg. xix. 6.

By the Flesh-pots, and did eat Bread to the full.] This is not likely; when they were not only mere Slaves, but under cruel Hardships: But they untruly magnify their former Condition, that they may represent their present to be more miserable than really it was.

For ye have brought us forth into this Wilderness.] They were glad to be brought out of Egypt; but their Discontent arose from their being brought into a Wilderness, where they wanted all Provisions but what they brought along with them.

To kill this whole Congregation with Hunger.] There was no Danger of their perishing presently, they having so many Flocks to feed them. But without Bread this would not satisfy them; and they were loth, it is likely, to lose any of their Stock, which they hoped rather to increase than to diminish. Or else, they longed for Dainties, as they did afterwards; which moved God to send them great Store of Fowl, as we understand ver. 12.

Ver. 4. Then said the LORD unto Moses.] He spake to him out of the Cloud of Glory, where the SCHECHINAH was, as I observed above.

I will rain Bread.] Send you down that which shall supply the Place of Bread, in a very plentiful Manner, like Drops of Rain from Heaven from above, out of the Clouds; which was, as Greg. Nyssen speaks, τὸ πᾶσι τὰ ἀριστά τιν' δαΐμα, ἢ ἐν γῆς καὶ τὸ νεφεμύμενον, &c. the most incredible of all Wonders, that Bread should be given them, not as usually, out of the Earth, but out of the Air, where no Seed is ever sown, L. de Vita Moses, p. 177.

Every Day.] It came down in daily Showers, as much only as would suffice for one Day, that they might be kept in a perpetual thankful Dependence upon God's Providence; and that this might more evidently appear to be a miraculous Work of his, who made it fall, at all Times of the Year alike. The Heathen themselves preserved some Memory of this, in that Fable of Pan (whom Huetius shows to be Moses) finding out Ceres; when she had been long wanting, to give Men Bread when they were ready to starve with Hunger.

That I may prove them.] Some think this relates to what goes before, concerning his sending them Bread every Day; which was so ordered, that he might prove whether they would murmur, because they had not enough at once for a whole Year; or humbly hope in his Mercy for a constant Supply. But the following Words [whether they will walk in my Law or no] direct us to a larger Sense; which is, that he tried whether they would be obedient to all his Commands, when he let them want nothing to support and encourage them in his Service.

Prove them.] Not as if he was ignorant, but that it might plainly appear to others, and to themselves, what they were: Or, as Maimonides interprets it, that it might openly appear to the World, that God sustains him, who follows his Worship and Service, by means that he did not think of. So he expounds this very Place, More Nevoch. P. iii. c. 24. That every one may see and know whether it be beneficial to give one's self to the Service of God or not.

Ver. 5. On the sixth Day they shall prepare that which they bring in.] When they had gathered it, and brought it into their Tents, they were to grind and bake it, &c. (ver. 23.) and make ready all Things that were necessary against the next Day; which was to be a Festival (viz. the Sabbath) on which they were to do nothing; for the Sabbath was not to be disturbed with such kind of Work: But, though on other Festivals they might prepare their Meat, and only abstain from Labour; yet on this they might not so much as dress their Meat, but it was to be done the Evening before, on which they were to prepare every Thing for the next Day. From which Preparation, this Day was called the Parasceue, Luke xxiii. 54. the Preparation for the Sabbath.

And it shall be twice as much as they gather daily.] Enough, that is, for two Days, viz. that sixth Day, and the next, which was to be the Sabbath, ver. 23. Where what is here briefly said in general, is more particularly and largely explained.

The Talmudists are generally of an Opinion, that the fifteenth Day of the second Month, when they came hither (ver. 1.) was the seventh Day of the Week: See Mr. Selden, L. iii. de Jure N. & G. c. 11. which, if it be true, they knew nothing of the Rest of the Sabbath; for they travelled upon this Day. But Mr. Mede hath observed, that it is altogether uncertain, whether or no it was the seventh Day from the Creation. It might possibly fall out so, by the Providence of God, that the seventh Day, designed by him for their Sabbath, might be both the seventh in Order from the Creation, and also from the Day of their Deliverance out of Egypt. But that which now determined this seventh Day, after six Days labour, to be their Rest, was their Redemption out of Egypt; and the overwhelming of Pharaoh and his Host in the Red-sea; which was upon this very Day. The Example of the Creation, was a Reason for sanctifying one Day in seven; but the Designation of this seventh Day, was, as I said, from their wonderful Deliverance. See Discourse xv. Book 1.

Ver. 6. And Moses and Aaron said unto all the Children of Israel.] What God spake to Moses alone, ver. 4. is delivered to the People by Aaron also, who was assistant to his Brother in the Government of them.

At Even.] On the Evening of this fifteenth Day, God sent them Quails, as we translate ver. 13.

Then ye shall know, that the LORD hath brought you out from the Land of Egypt.] Be convinced, that it was by the LORD's Direction and Command that you were brought out of Egypt, into this Place: And therefore you have no Reason to quarrel with us, who did nothing of our selves without his Order; but rather to trust in him, who can make as good Provision for you here in the Wilderness, as ever you saw in Egypt.

Ver. 7. And in the Morning.] When the Manna fell down, ver. 13.

Then ye shall see the Glory of the LORD.] His great Power (some interpret it) in sending them Bread from Heaven, and Flesh also with it. But I take it rather to refer unto the visible Appearance of the Divine Majesty, which they saw presently after this (ver. 10.) and were convinced of his real Presence in that Cloud, by the Descent of the Manna from thence next Morning; which no Power but the Divine could produce. And so I find Abarbinel himself interprets it; Their seeing the Glory of the LORD, is not to be understood of the Bread, or the Flesh he sent them, but of the Fire which appeared to all the People, to reprove them for their Murmurings.

For that he beareth your Murmurings against the LORD.] He is present among you, and takes Notice of your ungrateful Behaviour towards him.

For what are we, that ye murmur against us?] Alas! we are but poor Instruments of his, who hath done all the Wonders you have seen, and by that Means brought you hither; and therefore why do you complain of us, as if we acted any Thing by our own Authority?

Ver. 8. And Moses said, This shall be when the LORD shall give you, &c.] I say again (therefore mark it) when the LORD shall give you Flesh to eat in the Evening, and in the Morning Bread to the full; then you shall be convinced that he hath taken Notice of your Murmurings, which are really against him, who employs us only as his Ministers; and will be so gracious as not to punish your Discontents, but provide for your Necessities.

Ver. 9. And Moses spake unto Aaron.] Who was his Minister, as Moses was more immediately God's.

Speak unto the whole Congregation of the Children of Israel.] Who were all engaged in this undutiful Murmuring, ver. 2.

Come near before the LORD.] Before the SCHECHINAH, or Divine Majesty, which was in the Cloud (as I observed, ch. xiii. 21.) and now was about to break forth upon them in a glorious Manner. But, because of their Murmurings, murings, the Cloud was removed, it is probable; to a greater Distance from them, than it used to be. Bonfrerius will have it, that they were to come near to the Tabernacle of Moses, where the Glory of the LORD appeared, ch. xxxiii. 7, 9. But there is no Proof that it was wont to be there till that Occasion. See upon that Place.

For he hath heard your Murmurings.] He will show that he is among you, and observes how ungratefully you requite him. It is not unlikely that Moses bade Aaron go and speak to the People, because he himself retired to speak to God; that is, to pray for them, and to acknowledge his great Goodness in passing by their Murmurings.

Ver. 10. And it came to pass, as Aaron spake unto the whole Congregation of the Children of Israel.] According to the Command of Moses, ver. 9.

That they looked.] They were suddenly surprised, I conceive, with an unwonted Brightness; which made them look about to see whence it came: Or Aaron perhaps bade them look that Way.

Towards the Wilderness.] Whither the Cloud had conducted them, and stood at some Distance from them.

And behold the Glory of the LORD appeared in the Cloud.] The Divine Majesty appeared in flaming Light, such as they had never seen before. See ch. xiii. 21. Thus N. Lyra truly expounds, Fulgor quidam insolitus, &c. an unusual Splendor, representing the Divine Power, to reprove the Murmurings of the People.

Ver. 11. And the LORD spake unto Moses.] Who was gone, as I said, to pray unto God, whilst Aaron was speaking unto the People.

Ver. 12. I have heard the Murmurings of the Children of Israel, &c.] He repeats to Moses what he had bidden him tell them (ver. 4, 5, 6.) and perhaps spake it from the Cloud of Glory, in the Audience of all the People.

In the Evening ye shall eat Flesh.] Ver. 8.

And in the Morning ye shall be filled with Bread.] Ver. 4.

And ye shall know that I am the LORD your God.] Who brought you out of Egypt, and will provide for you here in the Wilderness.

Ver. 13. And it came to pass that at Even.] According to God's Promise, ver. 6, 8.

The Quails came up.] The only Person among the Jews, that adventures thus to translate the Hebrew Word Selau (which is used here, and Numb. xi. 31. and Psal. cv. 40.) is Josephus. All others, either keep the Hebrew Name, or make it another Thing than Quails. For Jonathan translates it Pheasants, and Abarbinel makes them a kind of Sea-fowl; and the Talmudists comprehend four Sorts of Birds under this Name, viz. that which feeds upon Figs (which the Greeks call συανις) and Thrushes, and Pheasants, and Quails. (See Bochartus, P. ii. Hierozoic. L. i. c. 14.) But all this is without good Ground; for the Account which Moses gives of Selau, in the Book of Numbers, agrees to none of these, nor any Thing that we have Knowledge of, but a kind of Locusts; which Job Ludolphus therefore pitches upon, and gives very solid Reasons for it, as I shall show when I come to that Place, Numb. xi. 31.

Came up.] From the Country over against the Desert: From the Sea, saith Aben Ezra; and Josephus, from the Arabian Gulf. Not that they were a Sea-fowl, but were in great Quantity upon that Coast.

And covered the Camp.] It seems they fell in the very Streets, as we speak; so that they needed not do more than step out of Doors, and take up as many as they pleased. This lasted no longer than that Evening; for the Manna which fell next Morning, was to be their constant Food.

And in the Morning the Dew.] Besides the Morning Dew, there was an Evening, Hof. vi. 4. Cant. v. 2. and Moses in Numb. xi. 9. mentions the Dew that fell in the Night. From whence, I suppose, came the Opinion among some of the Jews, that there was a double Dew in which the Manna was inclosed; a Dew below it, which fell in the Night; and a Dew above it, which, after the Manna was fallen, came upon it, and covered it in the Morning; by which Means, being thus inclosed, it was kept very clean.

Lay round about the Host.] Not in the Camp, but round about it on the Face of the Wilderness, (ver. 14.) For the Camp was not so clean a Place, nor so apt to congeal the Manna that fell with the Dew.

Ver. 14. And when the Dew that lay was gone up.] This shows the Dew fell first, and then the Manna fell upon it (as we read expressly, Numb. xi. 9.) whereby it was kept pure, and free from the Dust that was upon the Ground.

Behold, upon the Face of the Wilderness.] When the Dew was exhaled by the Sun, the Manna appeared, which covered the Wilderness round about them.

There lay a small round Thing.] This Word is no where else to be found in the Holy Scripture; which hath made it differently rendred. But our Translation is authorized by what is said ver. 31. that it was like Coriander-Seed; which hath respect, not to its Colour or Taste, but to its Form and Figure: And so the LXX here understood it when they translated it, ὡς τὸ κέρον λευκόν.

As small as the Hoar-frost on the Ground.] This seems to relate to the Colour, which was white; but expresses also that it was very small, like a drop of Dew frozen on the Ground.

Ver. 15. And when the Children of Israel saw it.] Which was as soon as they rose in the Morning, and went out of the Doors of their Tents.

They said one to another, It is Manna.] The Hebrew Words Manbu, are thought by some to signify as much as Mab-bu, i. e. What is it? So Pbilo, Josephus, and a great Number of the antient and modern Expofitors; who take Man to be an Egyptian Word, signifying as much as the Hebrew Word Mab. But it doth not seem likely that they joined an Egyptian Word to an Hebrew, as bu is acknowledged to be: Therefore it may be better expounded, It is a Gift, or a Portion: For Manab signifies to appoint, or order one's Diet (Dan. i. 10.) and as kav comes from kavah, by casting away the last Letter ; so may Man, in like Manner, from Manah : And the Meaning is, This is the Gift of God ; or, This is it which God hath appointed us ; not knowing (as it here follows) determinately, what to call it. Suidas seems to have thought of this, when he defines it to be ἡ ἀνοδὲν χορηγούμενη τροφή, &c. See Drusius, in his Quest. Hebraica, L. i. c. 62.

For they wist not what it was.] Had not a distinct Conception what kind of Food it was, not having yet tasted it, nor knowing certainly (as Abarbinel fancies) whether this was the Bread that Moses bade them expect ; who therefore tells them, in the next Words, that it was that Bread.

This is the Bread which the LORD hath given you to eat.] You rightly called it a Divine Gift (as Abarbinel goes on) for this indeed is the Bread which the LORD bestows upon you for your Sustenance, according to his Promise which he made you by me, ver. 4.

Ver. 16. This is the Thing which the LORD hath commanded.] Here now Moses shows how the Use of this Food was to be regulated.

Gather of it every Man according to his eating.] As much as will suffice for his and his Family's Sustenance for one Day.

An Omer for every Man.] That they might be sure to have enough, he allows every Person among them to have an Omer ; which was something less than half a Peck of our Measure. Here Abarbinel hath a pertinent Observation ; That this being a Divine Food, was not to be used as common Things are, which Men gather into Heaps, lay up in Barns, traffick withal, or lay up for their Children ; but it was to be spent as a Gift of God both to poor and rich. Some can get more of worldly Goods, and some less ; by which Means some give and others receive : But here all received from the Bounty of Heaven ; and God ordered it so, that they who were poor should not want, and they who were rich should have nothing beyond their Wants, to lay up or to sell, as they did other Things : For every one was to have only as much as he could eat ; and no Man could eat above an Omer. Which doth not signify that they gathered it by Measure, but as much as they thought would amount to that Quantity ; with an Intention, that if they had more than they needed, others should have it, who had gathered less than they needed.

Take ye every Man for them which are in his Tents.] For the Old and the Young, who could not go out to gather for themselves.

Ver. 17. And the Children of Israel did so, &c.] Gathered what they thought would be sufficient for themselves and their Families, according as they were larger, or less in Number. And when they came home, they dealt to every one the Proportion which God ordered.

And gathered some more, some less.] They were not all alike able (it is like) to gather, nor alike diligent, and so did not gather an equal Quantity. But the true Reason I have given already, viz. that some Families did not require so much as others.

Ver. 18. And when they did mete it with an Omer.] When it was brought unto their Tents, (ver. 16.) then the Father of the Family, or some of the Rulers of the Congregation (ver. 22.) measured what they had gathered with an Omer ; and gave to every one according as God directed.

He that gathered much, had nothing over.] Had no more than his Omer.

And he that gathered little, had no lack.] He that had not gathered enough to make an Omer for every Man, had it made up to him out of other Mens gatherings, who had more than enough. Abarbinel will have it, that they were so directed by a miraculous Providence, as to gather just so much for their several Families that every Person's Share would come to an Omer, and neither more nor less. And so Greg. Nyssen calls this the second Miracle, which was in the Manna, having observed one before, ver. 14. But others think, that if any Part of it remained, after every one in the Family had an Omer, it was Food for their Cattle, which, in the Wilderness wanted Grass sufficient for them. And this seems the more probable, because otherwise we must make a new Miracle, that every Man, Woman and Child, should be able to eat an Omer ; which all grant was sufficient for the Sustenance of any Man whatsoever, but was too much, sure, for a Child.

They gathered every Man according to his eating.] As they were directed, ver. 16.

Ver. 19. And Moses said, Let no Man leave of it till the Morning.] It was therefore to be all spent, one way or other, the same Day it fell ; which was the Law of all the holy Feasts, particularly of the Passover, ch. xii. 10. and of the Sacrifices of Peace-offerings, Lev. xxi. 30. Besides, God would have them depend upon his Providence, and trust him for fresh Supplies every Day, as Aben Ezra well notes. And R. Levi ben Gersom ; He that kept it till the Morning, betrayed his want of Faith, and feared God would send no more ; for if he believed, to what Purpose should he be at the Pains to keep it ?

Here was a new Wonder, that as it fell every Day for forty Years together, both in Winter and in Summer ; and likewise fell in such Quantity, that every one had an Omer, and none wanted this Measure ; so it would not keep till the next Morning ; which it might have done in its own Nature, and did once in a Week ; and in the Ark was preserved to many Generations.

Ver. 20. Notwithstanding they hearkened not unto Moses, but some of them left of it till the Morning.] Either through Unbelief, or mere Negligence, or a wanton Inclination to make an Experiment, some among them disobeyed his Command.

And it bred Worms and stank.] This was a Wonder also, that such an heavenly Food, so pure and simple, should not only breed Worms, but also stink ; which was a Punishment for their Disobedience, though a merciful one, in that God did not inflict it upon themselves, but upon their Food.

The Jews commonly take these Words to be transposed ; things being wont first to putrify, and then to breed Worms ; and in that Order Moses relates this Matter, when it was laid up for the Sabbath, ver. 22. That it neither stank, neither was any Worm therein. But Abarbinel thinks that Moses here speaks of it according to the Order wherein they found it ; which was, that first Worms

Worms appeared in it to their Eyes, and then they smelt the Stink. But in speaking of what fell out on the seventh Day, he follows the natural Order, and saith, it did not stink, neither was any Worm in it.

And Moses was wroth with them.] Chid them severely, for their Disobedience to him, who had bestowed such a singular Benefit upon them.

Ver. 21. And they gathered it every Morning, every Man according to his eating.] This is not needlessly repeated; but a further Explication of their Care and Diligence, to furnish themselves early in the Morning, with as much as was necessary, before the Sun grew hot, and melted it; or (as some of the Jews add) raised the Wind, which blew Dust upon it.

When the Sun waxed hot, it melted.] That it might not be trod upon, nor putrified. Which seems to be spoken of that which remained in the open Field ungathered: Though Abarbinel will have it, that what they had brought into their Tents melted also when the Sun grew hot; which obliged them not only to gather it early, but to bake and prepare it presently, while it was yet hard, and not dissolved. But I see no ground for this; nor is it likely that they were constrained to prepare it all together, but might any time that Day, at Supper as well as Dinner, order it according to their liking. Others of the Jews fancy, that being melted, it made little Brooks and Rivulets in the Fields, &c. But the plain Sense is, that the Sun which melted it, exhaled it also into the Air, from whence it came, and returned again the next Morning.

Ver. 22. On the sixth Day they gathered twice as much Bread, &c.] According to the Command of God, ver. 5. It appears by this Place, where it is called Bread (as it is ver. 4, 12.) that it was of a hard Substance when it fell, though it dissolved by the Heat of the Sun; being like the Corn of which Bread is made.

And the Rulers of the Congregation came and told Moses.] He had bidden them gather a double Quantity on the sixth Day, but had not told them the Reason of it (ver. 5.) and therefore they come to enquire what they should do with it. By this one would think they were the Rulers, who saw a Distribution made to every one, in a just Proportion; or, that they appointed Overseers to take care of it.

Ver. 22. And he said unto them, This is that which the LORD hath said.] This is the Commandment which I have received from God about this Matter.

To-morrow is the Rest.] Or, shall be the Rest.

Of the holy Sabbath unto the LORD.] To be kept holy, so as to do no Work therein. And therefore you must not so much as go into the Field to gather your Food; which is the Reason why you are ordered to make two Days Provision in one. The Words in the Hebrew (which we translate the Rest of the holy Sabbath unto the LORD) may be rendred, as they lie in order, the Sabbath, the holy Sabbath unto the LORD. Which Abarbinel explains, as if the Word Sabbath being repeated, signified that it was to be a Cessation from all manner of Work, because it was the Sabbath of the LORD himself, wherein he ceased from his Works.

At this Time, and not before, the Rest of the seventh Day seems to have been appointed. They performed religious Offices upon one Day in seven, but did not cease from all Labour until now. These very Words seem to show there had been some Observation of a Sabbath heretofore, and was not wholly a new Thing: For if it had, they could not have understood Moses, nor known what he meant. See what I have noted upon the Second of Genesis; where I thought it reasonable to assert, That God intended to preserve a Memory of the Creation in six Days, by appointing the seventh Day to be kept holy. And therefore the more pious any People were, the greater Respect they had to this Day. But when the World grew very wicked before the Flood, as they little thought of God, so it is likely they neglected all Distinction between this Day and others. And the Dispersion of People after the Flood very much blotted it out of their Minds, as it did many other good Things. But in the Family of Abraham we may well suppose it was continued; though not with such strict Abstinence from all Labour, as, for special Reasons, was afterwards enjoined. Which is the Cause why we read nothing of their resting in their Travels upon that Day, before their coming out of Egypt: Where they were under such cruel Servitude, that all Observation of the seventh Day, it is likely, was laid aside; they being pressed, Day and Night, by their Task-Masters, to hard Labour, without intermission. And therefore when God brought them out of that Slavery, he renewed his Command for the Observation of the Sabbath, with this Addition (in memory of their Deliverance from the Egyptian Bondage) that they should rest from all manner of Labour upon that Day. Both these Reasons are given by Moses, why God commanded it to be observed, in memory of the Creation in six Days, Exod. xx. 11. and in memory of their Deliverance from the Egyptian Bondage, Deut. v. 15.

Bake that which you will bake to day, &c.] The Words to day are not in the Hebrew, but are necessary to make the Sense plain; because they were enjoined on this Day to prepare, or make ready all Things against the next, ver. 5.

And that which remaineth over, lay up for you to be kept till the Morning.] From which Words some have inferred that there was no Prohibition of baking and seething on the Sabbath, but the contrary rather is here supposed (See Dr. Heylin, in his History of the Sabbath, Part i. p. 100.) But I do not see how this consists with the further Explication of this Matter in Exod. xxxv. 3. where they are forbidden to kindle a Fire upon this Day. Unless any one will say, that for the present they might do it, but shortly after were prohibited: Which is not at all likely. For the plain Meaning is, that if they would make any baked Meats, or boiled with the Manna, they must do it upon the sixth Day: Tho' what they did not then bake nor boil, they might safely keep till the next Day, and it should not breed Worms nor stink. But what they so kept, was to be eaten without baking or boiling; as it well might, being a Food prepared in Heaven for their eating, without any need of further Art: And therefore called Bread, even when they gathered it, ver. 22.

Ver.

Ver. 24. And they laid it up until the Morning, &c.] Without any Preparation of it, by baking or boiling; and it kept the whole seventh Day without any Putrefaction.

Ver. 25. And Moses said, Eat that to day.] Simple as it is, without baking or boiling.

For to day is a Sabbath unto the LORD.] The frequent Repetition of this in this Chapter, ver. 23. and again, ver. 29, 30. hath led the Jews into this Mistake, that the Sabbath was not ordained by God till they came out of Egypt; directly contrary to what we read in the Second of Genesis, that it was instituted from the beginning. And therefore Moses here only gives an account why this Precept was renewed at their coming out of Egypt, when there was a new religious Observation added to it, which was not necessary before, viz. resting wholly from all manner of Work. There is an excellent Discourse on this Subject, in a late learned Author, J. Wagenfiel (in his Confutation of R. Lipman's Carmen Memoriale, p. 559, &c.) who well observes, that this Precept having a peculiar Respect to the Jews, we are not bound to observe the Rest of the Sabbath with such Strictness as they did; but only as the Patriarchs did, before the giving of the Law, p. 564. As for the Translation of the Day from the seventh to the first Day of the Week, it is impossible for the Jews to prove, that the Day they observe is the seventh from the Creation. And besides that, the whole World cannot be tied to the Circumstance of Time precisely; for in some Parts of it the Sabbath will fall eighteen Hours later than in Palestine, as he evidently shows, p. 572, &c.

To day you shall not find it in the Field.] This Moses said to them, as Abarbinel thinks, in the Evening of the Sabbath; which was, in effect, a Prohibition to them, not to go out to gather it on that Day.

Ver. 26. Six Days shall ye gather it, &c.] The same Author thinks this is repeated to signify, that as long as they continued in the Wilderness, they should gather it six Days in a Week, as they did now, but never find any on the seventh.

There shall be none.] As you rest, saith he, from doing any thing about the Manna, so God will cease from sending it unto you. Upon which he makes this pious Reflection, That in this World we must work for our Souls, if we would be happy in the next World, which is an entire Sabbath or Rest: For he that labours in the Evening of the Sabbath, shall eat on the Sabbath. To the same purpose Origen, long before him, Hom. vii. in Exod.

Ver. 27. There went out some of the People on the seventh Day to gather, &c.] The same wicked Disposition remained in them, which made them on other Days keep it till next Morning, ver. 19, 20.

Ver. 28. And the LORD said unto Moses, how long refuse ye to keep my Commandments, &c.] These chiding Words are full of Indignation; and yet signify the long-suffering Patience of God with an untoward Generation. Abarbinel expounds this Passage as if, upon this Occasion, he upbraided them with all their other Transgressions; saying, 'You kickt against me at the Red-Sea, and believed not my Words; at

' Marah also you murmured; and uttered very discontented Words at Elim. Nay, after I had given you Manna, you violated my Precept, in reserving it till the next Morning. And now you break my Sabbath, what hope is there that you will observe any of my Laws?

Refuse to keep my Commandments and my Laws.] He speaks thus, say some of the Jews, because that in which they now offended, is a Thing upon which the whole Law, and all his Commandments depend. So the same Abarbinel. Because the Sabbath instructed them in the Creation of the World, upon which all the Law depends, therefore he saith, My Commandments and my Laws.

Ver. 29.] See. Consider.

For that the LORD hath given you the Sabbath, therefore he giveth you, on the sixth Day, the Bread of two Days.] You have no reason to seek it on the Sabbath, being provided before-hand with as much as is sufficient for that Day.

Let no Man go out of his Place.] The Jews say that a Man went out of his Place, if he went above two thousand Paces from his Dwelling. That is, if he went beyond the Suburbs of his City, Numb. xxxv. 5.

Ver. 30. So the People rested on the seventh Day.] The Reprehension which God gave them by Moses (ver. 28.) and the solemn Renewal of the Precept (ver. 29.) wrought so much upon them, that for the present they rested upon this Day. And they not having been used to this Rest, God did not immediately punish their Disobedience in going abroad to gather Manna: Tho' afterward he ordered a Man to be stoned for gathering Sticks on this Day; for he had often repeated this Law to them, before that Time.

Ver. 31. And the House of Israel called the Name thereof Manna.] This is repeated again, to show that the Name which they gave it at first (ver. 15.) continued to it afterward; being so apt and proper to signify God's Providence over them, that they could find no better.

And it was like Coriander-seed.] Of a round Figure, like that Seed, ver. 14.

White.] Being like Bedolach, as Moses saith, Numb. xi. 7. which signifies Pearl, as Bochartus shows in his Hierozyoic. P. ii. p. 678. where he observes the Talmudick Doctors (in the Title Joma) expressly say it was like Margalith (or Margarith) i. e. Pearl.

The Taste of it was like Wafers made with Honey.] All Things of a pleasant Relish are compared in Scripture to Honey. Whence those Words of David, Psal. xix. 11. cxix. 130. Onkelos saith, Manna tasted like Escaritæ; which was a delicious Food at Rhodes (as Bochart observes, out of Julius Pollux) between Bread and Cake (like our Bisケット, I suppose) which was so grateful, that they who did eat it were never satiated, but still desired more.

In Numb. xi. 7, 8. Manna is said to taste like fresh Oil. Which doth not contradict this: For, as Abarbinel and others observe, the Meaning is, that when it first fell before it was prepared, it tasted like Honey-wafers; but when it was baked, then it tasted like fresh Oil. And so the Words, Numb. xi. 8. plainly import: They took it, and beat it in a Mortar, and baked it, &c. and the Taste of it (i. e. thus prepared) was like the Taste of fresh Oil. Nay, the Jewish Doctors commonly say it had all manner of pleasant Savours, according to Mens different Palates; and thence they fancy it is called, ver. 29. the Bread Mischne, (which we translate of two Days) because it was changed according to the Diversity of those that did eat it; Children, young Men and old. Which Conceit the Author of the Book of Wisdom follows, ch. xvi. 20, 21.

was

Ver. 32. And Moses said, This is the Thing which the LORD commandeth.] I have this further Command to deliver from God, concerning the Manna.

Take an Omer of it.] Just so much as was assigned to every one for his daily Bread, ver. 16.

To be kept for your Generations.] For your Posterity, in future Ages.

That they may see the Bread wherewith I have fed you, &c.] For seeing with one's Eyes (saith Isaac Aramab) mightily confirms a Thing; and leaves one in no doubt of it. And he took care they should see both the Manna it self, and the Measure, which he bountifully allowed to every one of them.

Ver. 33. And Moses said unto Aaron.] What God commanded Moses, he now commands Aaron to do.

Take a Pot.] He saith nothing of the Matter of this Pot or Urn; which some say was an Earthen Pot, others say, of Lead, Brass, or Iron: And Abarbinel thinks it was of Glass, that one might see what was within. But the Apostle hath settled this Controversy, by calling it a Golden Pot, Heb. ix. 4. And so do the LXX in this Place. And indeed all the Vessels of the Sanctuary being of Gold, it was but reasonable that this, which contained such a precious Monument of God's Mercy, should be of the same Metal.

Lay it up before the LORD.] i. e. Before the Ark of the Testimony, as it is explained in the next Verse: Which shows that this Command was given after the building of the Tabernacle; and is here mentioned, because it belongs to the same Matter which Moses relates in this Chapter. Others suppose it was spoken by way of Prolepsis; which seems not to me so probable.

Ver. 34. So Aaron laid it up.] When the Tabernacle was built.

Before the Testimony.] This is the same with before the LORD, in the foregoing Verse. For the Divine Glory dwelt between the Cherubims, which were over the Ark; which is commonly called the Ark of the Testimony; ch. xxx. 6. xl. 3, 5. But here, and ch. xxv. 36. is simply called the Testimony; by an Ellipsis, or leaving out the first Word, which is very usual in other Instances: For thus it is called, the Ark of God's Strength, 2 Chron. vi. 41. but elsewhere the first Word being omitted, it is called only his Strength, Psal. lxxviii. 61. cv. 4. And therefore the Ark is called the Testimony; partly because there God gave them a special Token of his dwelling among them; and partly because the two Tables of Stone were in the Ark, which are called the Testimony, ch. xl. 20. where it is said, Moses put the Testimony into the Ark; and then immediately, ver. 21. he calls it, the Ark of the Testimony.

Ver. 35. And the Children of Israel did eat Manna forty Years.] Within a Month; which wanted to make compleat forty Years. For it begun to fall just thirty Days after they came out of Egypt (on the 15th of April) and ceased to fall on the 15th or 16th of March, the Day after the Passover, which they kept in the fortieth Year, Josh. v. 11, 12. Now in all Writers, some Days under or over, are not wont to be considered; when there is a round Number.

But there are those who fancy these Words were put into this Book after Moses's Death; for which I can see no ground. For it is certain, he lived the greatest part of the fortieth Year after they came out of Egypt, and brought them to the Borders of Canaan, within sight of it, Deut. i. 3. xxxiv. 1, 2, &c. and therefore may well be supposed to have added these Words himself to this History; as he did the foregoing, ver. 32. that all belonging to this Matter might be put together in one Place.

Until they came to a Land inhabited.] i. e. To Canaan, or the Borders of it, as it here follows. For these Words, saith Aben Ezra, have respect to the Wilderness in which they now were, which was not inhabited.

Until they came unto the Borders of the Land of Canaan.] That is, saith he; to Gilgal; which was the Borders; when they had passed over Jordan; when they did eat of the Corn of the Land, and had no further need of Manna.

Ver. 36. An Omer is the tenth part of an Ephab.] From hence also some would fain conclude, that Moses did not write this; because, say they, it is not usual, when Measures are in common Use, to tell in other Words how much they contained; which then only is proper, when they are grown out of use. But such Observations seem to proceed from an Humour of Cavilling. For why may not an Author set down distinctly Things very well known in his Time, that Posterity also may have as distinct a Knowledge of them? Besides, the very same Men complain, on other Occasions, that the Writers of History have omitted to give us an Account of several Things, which in their Time were most notorious; whereby Posterity suffers much, for want of such Information. Nor do I see any Proof, that these Measures were not as common in After-times, as they were when Moses lived.

Several learned Men have taken a great deal of Pains to reduce these Measures to those of the Greeks and Romans; particularly Salmasius, in his Epistles (N. lxxvii.) and Herman. Conringius, in a Treatise on this Subject, de Mensuris Hebraicis. But none have done it so clearly and exactly, as a very learned Person of our own Country (Bishop Cumberland, in his Scripture Weights and Measures, cap. 3.) who computes an Ephab to have contained seven White Gallons, a Bottle and half a Pint; so that an Omer was near three Quarts: Which, if any one imagine too great a Proportion to be allowed to one Person every Day, he propounds these Things to be considered. That Manna, being of a globular Figure (like Coriander-seed) must needs have many many empty Spaces between every three or four Grains; and those Vacuities may reasonably be estimated a third part of the Vessel's Capacity. And it being a light, Aerial Food, must needs be inwardly porous, and of a spongy Contexture of Parts. So that it wasted something in dressing by Fire, as it melted by the Sun when it grew hot: And consequently three Quarts might, it is probable, be reduced to three Pints of an oily, liquid Substance. Which was not too much in an hungry Desert, where they might well be thought to have refreshed themselves thrice a-day. See also what I have noted before, ver. 18.

CHAP. XVII.

Ver. 1. AND all the Congregation of the Children of Israel journeyed from the Wilderness of Sin.] Where they had been for some time (ch. xvi. 1.) and now pitched in Rephidim. That is, they rested here, after some other Stations, in their Passage hither: For Moses mentions two, between the Wilderness of Sin and Rephidim, Numb. xxxiii. 12, 13, 14. And that is the Reason of the Words here following.

After their Journeys.] They proceeded in their Journey to Dophkekah, and then to Alush, and so to Rephidim; where they stayed some time.

According to the Commandment of the LORD.] By the Direction of the glorious Cloud, which went before them, and fixed their Station for them where it rested.

And pitched in Rephidim.] This Place was in the Wilderness of Sin also, but called by a particular Name; as the Place from whence they came, was called by the Name of the whole. So St. Hierom. All the Wilderness, as far as to Mount Sinai, was called Sin; which was the Name also of one of their Stations (as Moab was both the Name of a Province and of a City) and there were four others in this Wilderness; those by the Red Sea, Dophkekah, Alush, and Rephidim.

And there was no Water for the People to drink.] This gave occasion to another remarkable Mercy of God to them; whereas nothing considerable fell out at the two former Stations: which is the Reason they are here omitted. So Abarbinel judiciously observes, Moses would not set down in this History any of their Stations, but those in which some new and notable Thing happened: The rest, in which no such thing was done, he describes in the Book of Numbers, ch. xxxiii.

Ver. 2. Wherefore the People did chide with Moses.] Expostulate with him in such an undutiful manner, that it may be translated scolded with him.

Saying, Give us Water, &c.] The Word for give is in the Plural Number; and therefore this was spoken both to Moses and to Aaron, though Moses be only mention'd as the Person they contended with. For there was no need (as Aben Ezra and others observe) to mention Aaron, because Moses was not wont to speak to the People, but by him. Abarbinel carries it further, and will have this Speech directed to Moses and to God, because they came hither by God's Commandment: Which made them insolently say, if by God's Providence we were brought to this Place, let him take care we be not killed with Thirst.

And Moses said, Why chide you with me?] Who brought you hither by God's Order.

Wherefore do you tempt the LORD?] And why do you distrust his Power, and Goodness, and Faithfulness to his Promise?

Ver. 3. And the People thirsted there for Water.] This looks like a needless Repetition, it being said before there was no Water in this Place (ver. 1.) which made the People chide with Moses, for bringing them into such an inconvenient Station. But if we consider it well, we shall find it a necessary Explication of the Growth and Progress of their Discontent. For, as Abarbinel hath well observed, as soon as they came to Rephidim, they saw it was no commodious Place, because it would not supply them with Water: Which made them begin to quarrel with Moses before they needed; merely out of fear, that when the Water they had brought from Elim was spent, there would be none for them. And now, when after a Day or two it was all gone, they were really very thirsty, and so fell into the Murmuring here spoken of, from a Sense of their Misery, as before only out of a Fear of it.

And the People murmured against Moses.] They proceeded from a lower to a higher degree of Discontent, which made them at first only expostulate and argue with him; but now they murmured against him, and at length fell into such a Rage, that they seemed to be ready to stone him, ver. 4. It is necessary to stop such Motions in their beginning.

Wherefore is this, that thou hast brought us out of Egypt?] This shows the Necessity of preserving the Remembrance of God, and of his Benefits, in our Minds. Which if this People had done, they could not have fallen a third Time into such a discontented Fit, as made them speak reproachfully of their Deliverer, and slight the wonderful Deliverance it self, which God had lately given them out of cruel Servitude. The Character which Plato (in his Axiarchus) gives of the vulgar sort of People, belongs to the Israelites above all other, viz. that this sort is ἀχαιστος, ἀφίκοτος, ἀμύδ, βδολαγος, ἀπαιδεύτος, Tom. iii. p. 369.

To kill us, and our Children, and our Cattle, with Thirst.] Children, as Abarbinel observes, can less endure Thirst than grown Men; and Cattle need abundance of Water, which is the Reason they mention them.

Ver. 4. And Moses cried unto the LORD.] Which he did not upon their first Complaint, ver. 2. because their Necessity was not so urgent: But now, seeing their Distress, and the height of their Discontent, he prays God to take care of them; hoping he would supply them with Drink, as lately he had done with Bread.

What shall I do unto this People?] He said enough, no doubt, to quiet them; by reminding them what God had already done for them, and what reason they had still to trust in his good Providence: But this would not satisfy them, unless their Thirst was presently quenched; which which he could not do for them, and therefore knew not how to appease them.

They be almost ready to stone me.] He represents to God, not only their Importunity, but his own great Danger. For having promised to bring them to Canaan, he was afraid (as Abarbinel fancies) that if they continued to think they should die with Thirst, they would take him for a false Prophet, who had deceived them with Lyes, and consequently inflict the Punishment upon him which the Law enacts against a false Prophet, which was stoning. But, the Law being not yet given, this could not be in their Thoughts.

Ver. 5. And the LORD said unto Moses, Go on before the People.] Be not afraid of their stoning (saith the same Abarbinel) but though they murmur, and are in a great Passion, and impatient, go on before them confidently through the midst of their Camps, and thou shalt see they shall not touch the Hem of thy Garment.

And take with thee of the Elders of Israel.] Not valiant young Men to thy Life-guard, but grave Persons to be Witnesses, that thou dost really bring Water out of a Rock, and the People may not say there was a Spring there before. Concerning the Elders of Israel, see ch. iii. 16.

And thy Rod wherewith thou smotest the River, take in thy Hand.] Not a Sword, or a Lance (saith the same Writer) but that Wand wherewith thou smotest the River of Egypt, and turnedst it into Blood; or didst divide the Red-sea, as some understand it: an Arm of the Sea, being by good Authors called a River.

And go.] As I bid thee.

When he is commanded to march before the People, it is supposed they were to follow; but they could not all move so soon as he and the Elders, who went before to the very Place; which the whole Body of the People could not do, the Passage to the Rock, it is likely, being narrow, so that they could not all see him smite the Rock, and behold the Water gush out; but expected till it flowed from thence unto their Camp.

Ver. 6. Behold, I will stand before thee there upon the Rock.] That is, the Glory of the LORD, which in the Cloud appeared in this Place (as Abarbinel truly expounds it) to strengthen his Faith, and to persuade the Elders that this Water was divinely given them, even as the Manna was: For, before that fell from above, the Glory of the LORD appeared (ch. xvi. 10.) as it did now, before this Water flowed to them from the Rock. So that they were fed continually by the Divine Providence, from whence they received both their Meat and their Drink.

There is an emphatical He (as they call it) before the Word for Rock; and therefore it should be translated, upon that Rock: Where Abarbinel fancies the LORD was wont to appear to Moses; but this being a rocky Place, it may only denote that particular Part of the Rock to which God directed him to go; and was the same (that Author probably thinks) with that mentioned ch. xxxiii. 22.

In Horeb.] This was not a distinct Mountain from Sinai, but only a different Part of the same Mountain; which was long, and had many Rifings, of which this was one.

And thou shalt smite the Rock.] With the Rod wherewith he smote the River, ch. vii. 17, 20.

And there shall come Water out of it, that the People may drink.] According to their Petition, ver. 2.

And Moses did so.] i. e. Smote the Rock, and brought Water out of it, in such Plenty, that the Psalmist saith, it ran down like Rivers (Psal. lxxviii. 15, 16.) to supply the Want of the whole Camp, unto which it flowed as far as Rephidim; so that they needed not to go to Horeb for it: Which is the Difference (as Abarbinel thinks) between this Miracle and that mentioned Numb. xx. where the Waters were but like a Well, to which they must go, and did not come to them, much less follow them in their Journeys, as this did. For this was a continued Fountain of Water, which flowed out of the Rock (Psal. cxiv. 8.) and made this Part of Arabia habitable in future Ages, which no Man dwelt in before. Moses doth not add, and the People drank and their Cattle, because (as Aben Ezra observes) he studied Brevity, and this was easily understood.

In the Sight of the Elders of Israel.] That they might be able to testify to the People the Truth of this Miracle, whereby they were relieved in their Distress, and preserved in their Travels through the Wilderness: The Fame of which, no doubt, reached other Nations; the Memory of it being remaining in several of their Fables. For there is a manifest Allusion to it in Euripides his Bacchæ, ver. 703. where he makes one of them smiting the Rock at Cithæron, and Waters gushing out of it.

Οὐρανὸν δέ τις λαβὼν ἔπεισεν εἰς πέτρην ᾧθεν δροσώδης ὑδατὶς ἐκπηδᾷ νότις.

This I find observed by Bochartus in his Canaan, L. i. c. 16. and Huetius hath observed many more such Instances out of Nonnus, Pausanias, and divers other Authors, in his Aneptanæ Quæstiones, L. ii. c. 12. n. 18. And he thinks it very probable, that the Fable of Janus was forged from hence; for which he alledges many Arguments (in his Demonstratio Evang.) and this among the rest, that Albricus describes his Image, holding a Rod in his left Hand, with which he smites a Stone, and out of it Water flows.

Ver. 7. And he called the Name of the Place Massah, and Meribah, &c.] That Place which before was called Rephidim, was after this called Massah and Meribah; with respect to their chiding there with Moses, which is the Import of Meribah; and their tempting God, which is the Signification of Massah. Some think this one Place was not called by two Names, but that upon the second striking of the Rock, almost forty Years after this, it was called Meribah; and till then only Massah. But in that Story it is not said the Place was called Meribah, but the Water, Numb. xx. 13.

Is the LORD among us, or not?] Doth he take Care of us, or not regard what becomes of us? For God is said to be among, or (as the Phrase in the Hebrew) in the midst of those whom he protects, and provides for, by a special Providence, as we find Deut. vii. 21. xxiii. 14. Josh. iii. 20. and many other Places.

Ver. 8. Then came Amalek and fought, &c.] The Ground of their Enmity is commonly thought to be the antient Grudge of the Seed of Esau to those of Israel: For Amalek was descended from the eldest Son of Esau, by a Concubine, Gen. xxxvi. 12. But it may very fairly also be supposed, that there was some League between the Amalekites and the People of Canaan, of mutual Defence; which might move the Amalekites to oppose the Passage of the Israelites, and endeavour to hinder their Settlement in Canaan, unto which perhaps they imagined their own Pretences to be as good; though the Israelites challenged the Promise of it belong'd to them alone.

Then came.] These Words import, that the Amalekites were the Aggressors, without any Provocation. If they fancied the Israelites would invade them, they might have prepared to defend themselves; but it was no Ground for assaulting them. Unto which perhaps they were moved (as for other Reasons, so) out of Greediness of Prey, hearing the Israelites were loaded with the Spoils of the Egyptians.

And fought with Israel.] They came out of their own Country to fight with them in the Wilderness: Or we may suppose that they attacked their Rear, as they were upon their march from Rephidim to Horeb, and cut off some Stragglers, or such as lagg'd behind, through Faintness and Weariness, as Moses relates, Deut. xxv. 18. The Author of Dibre Hajamim makes the Army of Amalek to have consisted of an incredible Number, all exercising Divinations and Incantments.

Ver. 9. And Moses said unto Joshua.] Who it seems was an eminent Person at their first coming out of Egypt.

Chuse us out Men.] Whom he knew to be as valiant as himself.

And go out and fight with Amalek.] Meet them, and give them Battle.

To-morrow, I will stand on the Top of the Hill.] To pray to God, who had lately appeared to him there, ver. 6.

With the Rod of God in my Hand.] This he said to encourage Joshua to hope God would not fail to deliver them, though a Miracle was required to bring it to pass.

Ver. 10. So Joshua did as Moses had said to him, &c.] Nothing but a strong Confidence in God, could have animated Men unexperienced in the Arts of War, to encounter such mighty Enemies.

And Moses, Aaron, and Hur, went up to the Top of the Hill.] The Jews do but conjecture who this Hur was: But we may be certain he was a Person of great Eminence for Wisdom and Piety; otherwise he would not have been joined with the Leaders of God's People, Moses and Aaron. We read indeed, 1 Chron. ii. 19.

of one Hur, who was the Son of Caleb, and Grandfather of the famous Bezaleel, who was of the Tribe of Judah. But there is nothing to persuade us that he was the Person here spoken of; nor that he was the Son of Moses's Sister, as some of the Jews tell us. See Pirke Eliezer, c. 45. where strange Stories are told of him. But it is more probable that he was Miriam's Husband, as Josephus affirms, L. iii. Antiq. c. 2. though we cannot tell whence he himself was descended.

Ver. 11. When Moses held up his Hand.] Lifting up the Hands was a Posture of Prayer, and imploring the Divine Aid, as we find in many Places, particularly Lament. iii. 40. Let us lift up our Hearts with our Hands to God in the Heavens: And it implies great Earnestness in Prayer, as doth also lifting up the Eyes, and lifting up the Soul, Psal. xxv. 1. cxxi. 1, &c. But though this be true, and no doubt Moses and his Companions prayed to God most earnestly, yet this was not the Occasion of his lifting up his Hand, which was to advance the Rod of God, which he held in his Hand, and lifted up as their Standard or Banner, to which they should look, and hope for Help; from the mighty Power of God, who had done such Wonders by that Rod.

That Israel prevailed.] The Sight of the Rod of God inspired them with such Courage, that their Enemies could not stand before them.

And when he let down his Hand, Amalek prevailed.] Their Spirits flagg'd, when they did not see the Rod, and they began to give Ground; imagining perhaps that Moses despaired of Victory, who (the Fight being long) was not able always to keep his Hand erect.

Ver. 12. But Moses's Hands were heavy.] Through Weariness, by long holding them out upon the Stretch.

And they took a Stone and put it under him, and he sat thereon.] It seems he had been standing before, which gave them the greater Advantage of seeing the Rod, but made him the more weary.

And Aaron and Hur stayed up his Hands.] Were his Supporters; which, it is probable, was in this Manner: Sometimes Moses held up the Rod in his Right-hand, and sometimes in his left (for ver. 11. he speaks only of one Hand which was lifted up, or let down) and Aaron stood on one Side of him (suppose his Right-hand) and Hur stood on the other; who by that Means, help'd by turns to uphold his Hands in that Posture; for if they had done it both together, they might have been as weary as he.

And his Hands were steady, &c.] Were kept up stretched out, without falling down, till Sun-set.

Ver. 13. And Joshua discomfited Amalek and his People, &c.] Routed their whole Army. One would think the Name of their Kings was Amalek (as the Kings of Egypt were called Pharaoh) because he mentions Amalek and his People. Otherwise, if Amalek signifies collectively the Amalekites, then his People must signify those who were confederate with them.

Ver. 14. And the LORD said unto Moses.] He appeared, it's likely, to him again in this place, place (as he had done ver. 6.) and gave him this Order.

Write this for a Memorial in a Book.] Make a Record of it, as he did both here, and Deut. xxv. 17, &c. And no Body was so fit to do it as he, who saw all that fell out in this Fight; and was the undoubted Author of what we read in this Book, which was written by himself.

And rebearse it in the Ears of Joshua.] That he, who was to be the Leader of God's People after Moses, might never enter into any League with the Amalekites: For his Prosperity depended upon the Observation of the Commands given by God to Moses; which therefore were carefully written in a Book, and delivered to him, that they might not be forgotten. See Josh. i. 7, 8. where there is a plain Proof that the Laws delivered by Moses, were written before Joshua entred into the Land of Canaan.

For I will utterly put out the Name of Amalek from under Heaven.] Have a perpetual Quarrel with them, till they be quite extinct, as they were partly by Saul, 1 Sam. xv. and partly by David, 1 Sam. xxx. 17. and partly by the Children of Simeon, 1 Chron. iv. 43. Balaam also prophesied of their utter Destruction, Numb. xxiv. 20. which may seem a hard Sentence; but it was (as Maimonides observes) to terrify others from the like Malice. For as particular Persons are sometimes punished very severely for an Example to others, so are Families and Nations. And Amalek, being the very first that drew a Sword against Israel, unprovoked, God passed this heavy Doom upon them; whereas Ammon and Moab (saith he) who out of mere Covetousness committed what they did against Israel, and wrought Mischief to them by Craft and Subtlety, had only this Punishment inflicted upon them, that Israel should not contract Affinity with them, &c. Deut. xxiii. 3, 4. xxv. ult. More Nevoch. P. iii. c. 41.

Ver. 5. And Moses built an Altar.] Commonly Altars were built for Sacrifice; which Moses perhaps here offered in Thankfulness to God for his Benefits, particularly this great Victory. But they were also built sometimes only as Memorials (Josh. xxii. 26, 27.) as this perhaps was; he thinking it fit to preserve the Memory of this Victory, not only by writing, but by this Monument also, and the Inscription he left upon it.

And be called the Name of it JEHOVAH-Nissi.] Or, the LORD my Banner, i. e. by him we overcame them. Some will have it translated, not he called it, but he called him, i. e. the LORD, by the Name of the LORD, who lifted up a Banner, i. e. fought for them, Psal. lx. 6. From which Inscription Bochartus thinks, came the Name of Dionysus among the Greeks; who, from this Word Nissi, call'd him Nysseus, or Nyseus; and, adding the Name of their own Jupiter to it, called him Διόνυσος, L. i. Canaan, c. 18. For Bacchus is said to have been a great Warrior, and to have made mighty Conquests; and as Huetius observes, is called Arsepbes; which is the very Name given to Moses by the Egyptians, who called him Osarsiph.

Nay, in Orpheus his Hymns, Bacchus is called Mises; which seems to be the same with Moses; out of whose Story, all that the Greeks and others say of Bacchus, seems to have been framed, as he shows with great Probability, Demonstr. Evan. Propos. iv. c. 4. n. 3.

Ver. 16. For he said, Because the LORD hath sworn, &c.] In the Hebrew the Words are, The Hand upon the Throne of the LORD. Which is commonly interpreted, The LORD hath sworn by his Throne. So R. Solomon and Aben Ezra, and the Chaldee, whose Paraphrase is, This is spoken with an Oath, from the Face of the terrible One, whose Majesty is upon the Throne of Glory, that the LORD will have War with Amalek, &c. That is, saith Maimonides, he hath sworn by himself (More Nevoch. P. i. c. 9.) for in this, and all other Places, the Word Kisse (i. e. Throne) signifies his Magnificence and Power; which is not any Thing without his Essence, but is himself.

But here being no mention of lifting up the Hand, which is the Phrase for Swearing (Exod. vi. 8. Deut. xxxii. 40.) it may more simply be expounded, because the Hand of the LORD, sitting upon the Throne of his Majesty, is stretched out, and holds up his Banner to fight with Amalek throughout all Generations. For Moses seems to allude in this Phrase to what he had said ver. 11, 12. When Moses lifted up his Hand, then Israel prevailed, &c. and bids them take Notice it was his Hand, i. e. the Omnipotent Power of God, which gave them this Victory; and would perpetually prosecute Amalek, till they were destroyed.

Joseph Scaliger would have Kes-jab to be but one Word, and to signify the same with Kese; which, according to him, is the last Day of the Month on which this Battle was fought: And so this to be a Part of the Inscription upon the Altar; as if he had said, This Pillar was set up on the last Day of the second Month, to declare ἀσπονδον πόλεμον, irreconcilable War with Amalek for ever, L. iii. de Emend. Temp. p. 223. But this is too bold a Conceit, and is confuted by Hacspan and Glassius. There is a more ingenious Conjecture (which I have somewhere met with) if there were any Thing in Scripture to warrant it; that laying the Hand on the Throne, was a Form of Swearing, as touching the Altar was among some Nations; which was as much as our laying the Hand on the Bible: A principal external Character of a solemn Oath. Whence Juvenal saith, Atreists do intrepidus altaria tangere, touch the Altars boldly, without trembling, i. e. make no Conscience of an Oath.

But the marginal Translation, after all, is very literal, and makes the Sense exceeding plain and clear: Because the Hand (of Amalek) is against the Throne of the LORD (i. e. against God himself) therefore the LORD will have War with Amalek from Generation to Generation. This is easy and natural, and agrees with the whole History; that because they came out, and opposed the Design of God, who, in a visible and most glorious Manner, conducted the Israelites to the Land he had promised to give them, he would never be reconciled to them.

For it was an high Affront to his Majesty, who had lately done such astonishing Wonders, as were famed, no doubt, in all the neighbouring Nations, ch. xv. 14, 15.

C H A P. XVIII.

Ver. 1. NOW Jethro, the Priest of Midian, &c.] Many antient and later Versions have it Prince of Midian: See chap. ii. 16.

Heard of all that God had done for Moses and for Israel, &c.] The Fame of which went into all the Countries thereabout, ch. xv. 14, &c.

Ver. 2. Took Zipporah, Moses Wife, after he had sent her back.] It is uncertain, when Moses sent her back to her Father; but it is likely it was done at her own desire, when she saw how difficult his Work was likely to prove in Egypt: See ch. iv. 26. The Hebrew Word seems to some to intimate a Divorce; as the Mauritanian Jews take it. But all Christian Versions, and that of the German Jews, and the Persian, understand it as we do. See Selden de Uxor. Hebr. p. 929.

Ver. 3. And her two Sons, &c.] Whose Names carry in them a thankful Remembrance of God's great Mercy to him. Gershom.] See ch. ii. 22.

Ver. 4. Eliezer.] Who is thought to have been born a little before he left Midian, and went out of Midian into Egypt by God's special Direction. See ch. iv. 25.

Ver. 5. And Jethro, &c. came unto Moses.] Took a Journey out of Midian to give him a Visit.

Into the Wilderiness.] Into the same Wilderiness, where Moses and the Israelites now were.

Where he incamped at the Mount of God.] viz. At Horeb, which was not far from Midian, it appears from ch. iii. 11. where we read, that when Moses fed Jethro's Flock, he led them hither to this Mount; which is called God's Mount, because there he appeared first to Moses, ch. iii. 2, &c. and had lately appeared there again upon the Rock, ch. xvii. 6. unto which Place he bid Moses lead the Congregation (ch. xvii. 5.) who were now, I suppose, incamped thereabout after the Fight with Amalek in Rephidim, which was not far from it.

Ver. 6. And he said unto Moses.] By a Letter which he sent him from the Place where he was incamped (of which these were the Contents) to give him Notice of his coming: Which was but necessary, that he might, without any Impediment, pass the Guards; which we may well think Moses had set very carefully, after the Fight with Amalek, who had suddenly surprized the hindmost of the People, Deut. xxv. 18.

I, thy Father-in-law Jethro, am come unto thee, &c.] Am upon the Way, and come near to thee.

Here it may be fit to take Notice, that there is a great Dispute among Interpreters, about the Time when Jethro came from Midian, with Moses's Wife and Children; whether immediately after the Fight with Amalek, as it is here set down; or some Time after, when the Israe- lites were better settled. One would think, that he could not but take the first Opportunity to visit Moses, and to bring him and his nearest Relations together, after he heard the News of their coming out of Egypt, and their passing the Red-sea, &c. the News of which could not but reach him, who was a Borderer upon this Wilderiness. Yet the Hebrews are generally of an Opinion, that this fell out, after the giving of the Law at Mount Sinai: And many Christians have been of the same Mind; particularly such great Men as our most learned Primate Usher, ad A. M. 2514. and Mr. Selden, L. ii. de Synedris, c. 2, where he saith, no other Account of it is to be received [neque aliam sane sententiam omnino amplexandam sentio] but they are not agreed in what Year he came. Some say it was in this first Year after their coming out of Egypt: And the Hebrews have an Opinion, that it was in the Month of Tisri, and on the eleventh Day of that Month, when Jethro gave the following Counsel to Moses, ver. 19, &c. i. e. above three Months after God gave the Law from Mount Sinai, or after Moses received the second Tables. But others are as confident that it was in the second Year, and place this Story according to Order of Time after Numb. x. 28. or, as Dr. Lightfoot thinks, it should come in between the 10th and 11th Verses of that Tenth of Numbers. And Primate Usher, in like Manner, judges his coming to have been about that Time. But though all this be uncertain, yet Mr. Selden thinks he hath a strong Ground to affirm, it was after the giving of the Law, from what we read Deut. i. 6, 9, 10, 11, &c. And I confess, it seems plain from thence, that the Regulation, which Moses made by the Advice of Jethro, was after God spake to them in Horeb, which is the same with Mount Sinai. For though he did appear at Horeb before this (as I observed ch. xvii. 6.) yet he said nothing then of that which Moses mentions (Deut. i.) which was after the giving of the Law; at which Time he saith, there (ver. 9.) it was that he told them, he was not able to bear them himself alone, &c. But notwithstanding this, I cannot think that the coming of Jethro to Moses was deferred so long (for no Reason can be given why Moses here places the Story of it, if it did not follow their Fight with Amalek) though he did not give him the Advice for the better Administration of Justice, till after God had delivered the Law from Mount Sinai, as I shall observe in its proper Place.

Ver. 7. And Moses went out to meet his Father-in-law.] Before he came into the Camp, or at least, before he came to his Tent; that he might show the great Respect he bare to him, and his Joy to see him.

And did Obedience, and kissed him.] Welcomed him according to the Custom of those Countries.

And they asked each other of their Welfare.] Had such Discourse together, as Friends commonly have at their Meeting, till they came into the Tent.

And they came into the Tent.] Into the Tent of Moses; or rather, the Tent prepared to entertain Jethro.

Jethro. But the Talmudists are so possessed with the Opinion, that this happened some Months, if not a whole Year, after the Law was given, that they take this Tent to have been Beth-midrash, the House of Exposition; or the School where Moses made the People understand the Law. For so Jonathan, in his Paraphrase upon this, and the foregoing Verse: I, thy Father-in-law, am come unto thee, that I may be made a Proselyte. And if thou wilt not receive me for my own sake, yet admit me for the sake of thy Wife and Children, which I bring with me. And Moses went out from under the Cloud of Glory to meet him, &c. and when they had mutually saluted, they came into the Tabernacle of the House of Learning. But nothing can be more absurd than this Fancy, that he carried him immediately to hear a Lecture upon the Law.

Ver. 8. And Moses told his Father-in-law all that the LORD had done to Pharaoh, &c.] It seems to me, from these Words, and those that follow, that all we read hitherto about this Matter, fell out in order of Time, as it is here set down. For if it had happened after the giving of the Law, it is most probable he would have said something of the most remarkable Passage of all other, God's glorious Appearance to them on Mount Sinai, and the Law he had delivered to them, &c. Whereas, at this Meeting, he only relates what God had done to Pharaoh, and to the Egyptians, and how the LORD delivered them; and all the Travel that came upon them by the way; which comprehends their passing through the Red-Sea, and their want of Water and Bread, and their Fight with Amalek: That is, all that we read in the foregoing Chapters. And accordingly Jethro rejoiced for their Deliverance from the Egyptians, ver. 9. and gives Thanks to God for it, ver. 10. taking notice of nothing else.

Ver. 9. And Jethro rejoiced for all the Goodness which the LORD had done to Israel, &c.] The Gentiles, as Conradus Pellicanus here observes, more devoutly acknowledged God's Mercies when they understood them, than the Jews themselves did. With which our Saviour, when he came, upbraids that People; finding such Faith among the Gentiles, as he could not meet withal in Israel.

Ver. 10. Blessed be the LORD, who hath delivered you out of the Hand of the Egyptians, &c.] This may relate to the Preservation of Moses and Aaron, who had brought the forest Plagues upon Pharaoh and the Egyptians; and yet God suffered them not to hurt them.

Who hath delivered the People from under the Hand of the Egyptians.] And then this relates to the Deliverance of the whole Body of the People from the Egyptian Bondage, and to the Overthrow of Pharaoh and his Host in the Red-Sea; whereby the Israelites were finally delivered from under the Hand, i. e. the Tyranny and Oppression of the Egyptians.

Ver. 11. Now I know that the LORD.] He knew the true God before, but was now fully convinced that he alone was the most High.

Is greater than all Gods.] Than all that the World accounted Gods. For he did not acknowledge any more Divine Powers than one; but he speaks according to the common Opinion Men had in those Days, of other Gods besides the most High. This is a common Acknowledgment of good Men in After-times, Psal. lxxxvi. 8, 10. cxxxv. 5.

For in the Thing wherein they dealt proudly, he was above them.] If we refer this to what immediately goes before (viz. all Gods) the Meaning is, that the LORD appeared superior to all the Egyptian Gods, who insolently attempted, by the Magicians, to equal him in his wonderful Works; but were baffled and exposed to Contempt, and at last thrown down in their Images, ch. viii. 19. ix. 11. xii. 12. But it is commonly thought to relate to the Egyptians and Pharaoh, mentioned in the foregoing Verse: And then the Meaning is, that the LORD confounded them that proudly contemned his Authority, saying, Who is the LORD, &c. ch. v. 2. whom he forced to beg his Pardon, ch. ix. 27. and at last drowned him and his Host in the Red-Sea, when they said, in an haughty, boasting Manner, I will pursue, I will overtake, I will divide the Spoil; my Lust shall be satisfied upon them, &c. ch. xv. 9. And to this purpose the Chaldee expounds it; In that very Thing wherein they thought to judge (i. e. to punish or destroy) the Israelites, they were judged themselves; i. e. drowned in the Sea, as they intended to drown all their Male-Children.

Ver. 12. And Jethro, Moses Father-in-law.] He is constantly thus described (ver. 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8. and every where else but ver. 9, 10.) to distinguish him from any other Jethro; to whom these Things might possibly be thought to belong. Took a Burnt-offering.] Which was to be wholly consumed upon the Altar, and nothing of it eaten by any body, Lev. i. 9. This now may be thought to have been done, after the giving of the Law at Mount Sinai; which Moses here mentions, because he would put together all that belongs to Jethro's Story (though not all done at the very same Time) just as I said he did what belonged to the History of the Manna, ch. xvi. 33, 35. See there.

And Sacrifices.] i. e. Peace-offerings; of which the People, as well as the Priests, were to be Partakers, Lev. vii. 34. Deut. xxvi. 7. And regularly there never were any Burnt-offerings made, which were wholly consumed upon the Altar, but Peace-offerings attended upon them; if they were not Offerings for the whole Congregation, but for particular Persons; that so they who brought them, might feast also with God upon the Sacrifices. For feasting upon Sacrifices was an Appendix unto all Sacrifices whatsoever, one way or other; if not by themselves, yet by the Priests, who eat of the Sin-offerings, as the Proxies of the People. Of this there are numerous Instances, not only among the Jews, after the Law was given, but among other People, who had this Custom antecedent to it; as appears from Numb. xxv. 2. where the Midianites invite the Israelites to the Sacrifices of their Gods, and the People did eat, &c. Which they did not learn from Moses, but derived from higher Antiquity; it is probable even from Abraham himself.

For God.] To be offered unto God. Who offered them we are not told; but it should seem by the Word took, that Jethro himself (who was a Priest) was permitted to perform this Office; in token that they owned him to be a faithful Servant and Minister of the most high God; as Melchisedeck was. And accordingly it follows that Aaron was invited, with the Elders of Israel, to come and feast with him upon these Sacrifices.

And Aaron came.] This seems to signify that Aaron was but a Guest, and had not been the Priest who offered the Sacrifices. For though we suppose the Law to have been now given, yet it is likely Aaron and his Sons were not yet consecrated, nor the Service of God as yet ordered; according to the Law that had been delivered; no more than Judicatures were erected, as after this they were by the Advice of Jethro.

But of these Things we can have no absolute Certainty, but only make probable Conjectures.

And all the Elders of Israel.] See ch. iii. 16.

To eat Bread.] To partake of the Sacrifices that had been offered; for this comprehends the whole Meal, Gen. xliii. 25.

Before God.] Before the Tabernacle, where God dwelt. Or, if that was not yet set up, in the Place where God appeared in an extraordinary Manner, which it is likely was in the Tent of Moses, ch. xxxiii. 7.

Ver. 13. And it came to pass on the morrow.] The next Day after this solemn Sacrifice; which the Jews (I observed above) say was on the 11th Day of Tisri. So Sepher Mechilta, and others from thence, as Mr. Selden hath noted, L. ii. de Synedr. c. 2. p. 75.

That Moses sat.] That was the Posture of Judges.

To judge the People.] To hear Causes and determine them.

And the People stood by Moses, &c.] That was the Posture both of the Plaintiff and the Defendant. And there were now so many Causes brought before him, that they took up the whole Day: So that he had no time to eat and refresh himself.

Ver. 14. And when Moses Father-in-law saw all that he did to the People.] He either was present, and observed himself, or was informed by others what insupportable Pains he took.

He said, What is this Thing that thou dost to the People?] What a Burden is this, to judge the Causes of a whole Nation?

Why sittest thou thy self alone?] Takest more upon thee than any one Person is able to bear.

And all the People stand by thee, from Morning to the Even?] Till both thou and they are tired.

Ver. 15. Because the People come unto me to enquire of God.] I cannot refuse to do Justice; and there is none but my self, to declare what the Law of God is in such Cases, as are brought before me.

To enquire of God.] Doth not signify here to desire him to consult the Divine Majesty for them; but to decide their Controversies, according to the Mind of God, declared in the Laws he had given him. So the LXX. to seek for Judgment from God; and the Vulgar, to seek God's Sentence. For what was determined according to God's Law, was the Judgment of God; and so it is called by Moses. See Mr. Selden, L. i. de Synedr. c. 15. p. 610.

Ver. 16. When they have matter.] Of Controversy.

They come to me.] That I may decide it.

And I judge between one and another.] Determine where the Right lies.

And I do make them know the Statutes of God, and his Laws.] This explains what is meant by enquiring of God; i. e. what was the Law of God, in the Case brought before him. From which we may probably gather, that the Law was already given from Mount Sinai, and all the other Laws and Statutes which follow (ch. xxi. xxii. xxiii.) before this happened. Unless we will say, as some do, that Moses was directed upon the spot (as we speak) by a secret Inspiration, how to determine every Cause.

Ver. 17. The Thing that thou dost is not good.] Neither profitable for thy self, nor for the People; as it follows in the next Verse.

Ver. 18. Thou wilt surely wear away.] Decay apace, and without remedy; as the Phrase in the Hebrew signifies.

Both thou and the People that is with thee.] Such tedious Attendance will impair them also, as well as thy self.

For this Thing is too heavy for thee, &c.] Too much for one Man to undergo.

Ver. 19. Hearken now unto my Voice.] Be advised by me.

I will give thee counsel, and God shall be with thee.] Though I am no Israelite, I will take upon me to be thy Counsellor; and I doubt not God will show my Advice to be good, by the good Success which will attend it.

Be thou for the People to Godward, that thou mayst bring the Causes unto God.] Appoint others to hear Causes, and do thou give thy self μὴν τῇ τῷ Θεῷ δεσπόμενος, to the Worship and Service of God alone; as Josephus expounds it, L. iii. Antiq. c. 3. or, as Ruffinus glosses, reserve thy self only to the Ministry of God; to attend, that is, upon him, and know his Mind. Which, if it be the Sense, must be understood with this Exception, only in greater Causes (as it follows afterward) which he was to hear himself. And that may well be the Meaning of these Words, When the People bring any Matter to thee, which is too hard for other Judges to determine (ver. 22.) do thou, if need be, carry it to God, that he may resolve thee. Not that he was always to consult the Oracle, for he knew in most Causes the Sense of God's Law; but in some it might be necessary to have a particular Direction from Heaven. As in Numb. xv. 34, 35. xxvii. 5, &c.

Ver. 20. And thou shalt teach them Ordinances and Laws.] How these two differ, is not certain: but Ordinances are commonly taken to concern Matters of Religion; and Laws civil Matters of Justice and Charity. In both which he was, if the Case required it, to bring it to God; and then to report to the People what his Resolution was about it.

And shalt shew them the Way wherein they must walk.] How to behave themselves towards God.

And the Work that they must do.] How to behave themselves one towards another.

Ver. 20. Moreover.] Now in order to this.
Thou shalt provide out of all the People.] Look out such Men as are qualified according to the following following Directions. Which he did in this manner, as he himself relates, Deut. i. 13. where he saith to the People, Take ye wise and understanding Men, &c. In the Hebrew it is give ye, i. e. present to me such Men as you think fit for this Office: And then it follows, I will make them Rulers over you. They chose them; and then he approved them, and gave them authority. Or perhaps they presented a good many whom they thought qualified, and out of them he appointed such as he judged most meet. And thus he saith again, ver. 15. So I took the chief of the Tribes, &c. See Mr. Selden, L. i. de Syndr. c. 15. p. 632.

Able Men.] Men able to endure Labour; or Men who are not needy, but rich and wealthy; or Men of Parts, or Men of Courage: For it may refer to any of these, especially the last; such as did not fear potent Persons, but God alone, as it here follows.

Such as fear God.] Men truly religious, who would fear to offend God, by doing Injustice; but not fear to offend Men, by doing Right.

Men of Truth.] Honest, upright Men, whose Love to Truth would make them sift it out, by hearing both sides patiently, with impartial Attention and unbiassed Affection.

Hating Covetousness.] Not greedy of Money, but abhorring Bribes, and all base Ways of Gain. Which, as Demosthenes says, ἐκτρονὰς ἡ παρὰ πλῆγας ποιεῖ τὸς δικαστὰς, makes Judges besides themselves, and no better than mad.

For all these good Qualities they were to be eminent, and noted among the People, as Moses's Words import, Deut. i. 13. where he bids them present to him, not only wise Men and understanding, but also known among their Tribes; generally accounted Men of Understanding and Integrity.

And place such over them, to be Rulers of Thousands, &c.] The Hebrew Words are such, that it cannot be determined by them, whether this relate to the Number of Rulers, or of People that were to be ruled by them; as Mr. Selden observes, and discourses upon it very largely, in the fore-mentioned Place, L. i. de Syndr. c. 15. p. 615. Where he shows that Decemvir, for instance, was not only one set over ten, but one of the ten Judges of which a Court consisted; and so the rest may be interpreted. But the most antient and most received Sense is, that he doth not speak of the Number of Judges (for what a strange Court would that be, in which there was a thousand Judges?) but of the People, of whose Causes they were to take cognizance: And it is commonly thought also there was but one Ruler over a Thousand (Families or Men, it is uncertain which) and so of the rest; though the Words may import more than one in each of their Judicatures; whether greater or smaller. The Talmudists make a prodigious Number of Judges of each sort; but it is most rational to think that Jethro's Meaning was, That he should constitute greater and lesser Judicatures, according to the Division of their several Tribes, into Thousands, Hundreds, Fifties, and Tens; and a competent Number of Persons appointed to be Judges in these greater or lesser Courts.

For that their Tribes were divided into Thousands (for Instance) is apparent from several Places, Josh. xxii. 14. Judg. vi. 15. [where Gideon saith, my Family (in the Hebrew it is my Thousand) is the meanest in Israel] 1 Chron. xii. 20. Mic. v. 2. These Thousands Corn. Bertramus takes to be Families, whom the Hebrews call Houses; which were divided into so many Heads, as they call them, as the Tribes were into Families. And of these he thinks Jethro advises him to make such Rulers as are here mentioned, of several Degrees. But others (particularly Herman. Conringius, de Republ. Hebr. Sect. 19.) think we are to understand only Rulers over a thousand Men, not Families; as it is certain in Military Affairs, the Captains of Thousands were only of a thousand Soldiers, Numb. xxxi. 14.

Rulers of Hundreds, Rulers of Fifties, and Rulers of Tens.] There were four Orders of these Rulers; but whether there was a Subordination of the lower Order to the higher, as in Armies there is of the Captain to the Colonel (as we now speak) and the Inferiors to him, I cannot determine.

Ver. 22. And let them judge the People at all Seasons.] Sit every Day, some or other of them, in their several Districts. See ver. 26.

Every great Matter they shall bring to thee.] Not if they were able to determine it themselves, for they had power to hear all Causes; but when they found any too difficult, they were to refer it to be heard by Moses himself. So R. Levi ben Gersom explains it: Every great Cause, in which they know not what to judge, they shall bring to thee, and thou shalt show what is right; or how it is to be decided.

There are those indeed who think there were several sorts of Causes, that might not be brought before these inferior Courts; but were to be referred for Moses's hearing and judging. These they make to be Four: First, All Sacred Matters, or Things belonging unto God; which they gather from ver. 19. Secondly, All Matters of Equity, where the Rigour of the Law was fit to be mitigated. Thirdly, All Capital Causes. And lastly, such as the Chiliarchs, i. e. Rulers of Thousands, and the other Judges referred to him. But this is said without ground; for it is plain all sorts of Causes might be determined by the inferior Courts, if they were able to make an end of them, whether Civil or Sacred. Only those which were too difficult for them; that is, when they did not find a Law to direct them, or it was obscure, or they could not agree about the Punishment, then they were to be brought before Moses. So he himself charges; not that the People should bring such Causes to him as they thought difficult, but that the Judges themselves should bring them, i. e. order an Appeal to him, Deut. i. 17. Bring it unto me (speaking to the Judges) and I will hear it. Which shows the Cause had been at the Bar of other Courts before, and that it was not unlawful for them to meddle with it, if they had been able to determine it. And accordingly we read here below, ver. 26. that the Judges did so. In short, these Words do not intimate that there were some Causes the other Judges might not try, if they were able; but only that such Things as they found themselves not skilful enough to determine, they should bring to him. See Mr. Selden, in the forenamed Book, p. 633, &c.

But every small Matter they shall judge.] Hitherto Moses had heard all Causes promiscuously, great and small; but Jethro well advises him to delegate the Labour of judging all Causes liquidi juris (as the Lawyers speak) where the Right was clear, and to reserve no part of the Judicature to himself, but where the Law it self was either defective or obscure.

So shall it be easier for thy self, &c.] Thou wilt ease thy self of a great Burden, by appointing others to take their Share of it.

Ver. 23. If thou wilt do this Thing, and God command thee so.] If thou wilt follow this Advice, by God's Approbation; who was to be consulted whether he allowed it.

Then thou shalt be able to endure.] Thy Days will be prolonged; which otherwise will be shortened with this intolerable Labour.

And the People go to their Place in Peace.] Go home very much satisfied with such quick Dispatch, and happy Composure of their Differences.

Ver. 24. So Moses hearkened to the Voice of his Father-in-law, &c.] Followed his Counsel, by God's Approbation, with whom no doubt he advised, ver. 23. Here the Samaritan Copy inserts those Words of Moses, Deut. i. 9, &c. I am not able to bear you myself alone, the LORD your God hath multiplied you, &c. Which he spake indeed when he made this Constitution, but did not set it down in this Book; where he intended only a short Account of these Transactions.

Ver. 25. And Moses chose able Men, &c.] Out of those who were presented to him by the People. See ver. 20.

Ver. 26. And they judged the People at all Seasons.] Whensoever they resorted to them: For some Court or other sat every Day, that was not appointed by God for other Business, i. e. for Religion.

The hard Causes they brought to Moses, &c.] It is plain by this that the Judges, not the People, brought the hard Causes unto Moses; for the People could not know whether they might not have a Remedy nearer hand (than by going to him on all Occasions) till they had tried.

Ver. 27. And Moses let his Father-in-law depart.] After he had staid some time with him, and could not prevail with him to stay longer (which he earnestly desired) and go with them to see the Accomplishment of God's Promises to them; as those Words, Numb. x. 29, &c. are thought to signify. But perhaps that Hobab there mentioned, was not Jethro himself, but his Son; whom Moses also persuaded not to return to his own Country: For he makes no Reply, much less denies to stay with Moses, when he pressed him the second Time, though he refused at first, ver. 32. But this I shall consider in that Place.

And he went his way into his own Land.] To make his Children, or the People of the Land Proselytes, saith the Chaldee Paraphrase. Which it's probable he endeavoured (i. e. to bring them to true Religion) and effected in some measure:

So that Piety was propagated in some Families among them to future Generations. For the Rechabites came out of this Country, 1 Chron. ii. 55. whose Virtue Jeremiah praises in the latter end of the Jewish Church, Chap. xxxv.

C H A P. XIX.

Ver. 1. In the third Month.] Or, in the third new Moon. For the Hebrew Word Chodesh signifies a new Moon, as well as a Month: Nay, that is the prime Signification, from whence the other is derived. And so we are to understand it here; that on the New Moon, i. e. the first Day of the third Month (called Sivan) after their coming out of Egypt, they came into the Wilderness of Sinai. Which was just forty-five Days after they departed out of Egypt. For if we add to the fifteen Days of the first Month twenty-nine, which made the second, these put together, with this New-Moon, make forty-five. Unto which if we add that Day when Moses went up to God (ver. 3.) and reported, when he came down, the Message God sent by him to the Elders of Israel; and the next Day after, when he returned their Answer unto God (ver. 7, 8.) with the three Days more, which God gave them to prepare themselves for his coming down among them (ver. 10, 11.) there were just fifty Days from their Passover to the giving of the Law upon Mount Sinai; which laid the Foundation of the great Feast of Pentecost.

The same Day.] i. e. On the fore-mentioned New Moon, of the third Month.

Came they into the Wilderness of Sinai.] So called from that famous Mountain Sinai, which gave the Name to the Wilderness which lay before it. This Mountain was also called Horeb, Deut. iv. 10. they being only different Tops of one and the same Mountain, but this higher than Horeb; so that one may see the Red-Sea from thence, as they that have travelled into those Parts affirm, who say it is now called by the Arabians Tur; and by Christians, the Mountain of St. Catherine.

Ver. 2. For they were departed from Rephidim, &c.] They began to move from Rephidim toward that part of the Mountain called Horeb, upon their murmuring for want of Water, ch. xvii. 5, 6. But seem to have returned thither to fight with Amalek, ch. v. 8. And then they were led by God to this other side of the Mountain, which is called the Wilderness of Sinai.

There Israel encamped before the Mount.] For the glorious Cloud having led them hither, rested upon the Mount; as appears from the Words following.

Ver. 3. And Moses went up unto God.] Whose glorious Majesty appeared upon the Mount.

And the LORD called unto him out of the Mountain.] Or rather, For the LORD called to him out of the Mountain, where the Divine Glory rested: Unto which he would not have presumed to go, if the LORD had not called to him to come up thither. Which was upon the second Day of the third Month.

Thus shalt thou say to the House of Jacob, and tell the Children of Israel.] There was some Reason, sure, for calling them by these two Names, the House of Jacob, and the Children of Israel; which perhaps was to put them in mind, that they who had lately been as low as Jacob when he went to Padan-Aram, were now grown as great as God made him, when he came from thence, and was called Israel.

Ver. 4. You have seen.] There needs no Proof; for you your selves are Witnesses.

What I did unto the Egyptians.] Smote them with divers sore Plagues, and at last drowned them and their Chariots in the Red-sea.

And how I bare you on Eagles Wings.] Kept you so safe, and placed you so far out of the Reach of your Enemies, as if you had been borne up on high by an Eagle; which are observed to carry their young ones, not in their Feet, as other Birds were wont to do, but on their Wings; and to soar so high, and with so swift a Motion, that none can pursue them, much less touch them. Bochartus hath observed all the Properties ascribed to the Eagle, with respect to which, Interpreters have thought God's Care of his People to be here compared with that Bird, Hierozyic. P. ii. L. ii. c. 5. But after all, he judiciously concludes, that Moses best explains his own Meaning in his famous Song, Deut. xxxiii. 11. where the Eagle's fluttering about her Nest, and making a Noise to stir up her young ones to leave their dirty Nest, and try their Wings, represents the many Means God had used to rouse up the drooping Spirits of the Israelites, when they lay miserably oppressed under a cruel Servitude, and encourage them to aspire after Liberty, and to obey those whom he sent to deliver them.

And brought you unto my self.] And by that Means brought you hither to live under my Government: For this was the very Foundation of his peculiar Empire over them, that he had ransom'd and redeem'd them out of Slavery, by a mighty Hand and stretch'd out Arm (as he speaks ch. xiii. 3. Deut. iv. 34.) so as he had not delivered any other Nation, and thereby made them his own, after an extraordinary Manner peculiar to them alone. This Joshua also recalls to their Mind when he was near his Death, and renewed this Covenant of God with them, ch. xxiv. 5, 6, &c.

Ver. 5. Now therefore.] Having wonderfully delivered them, and supported them in a miraculous Manner, by Bread from Heaven, and Water out of a Rock; he now proceeds to instruct them in their Duty, as Greg. Nyssen observes, L. de Vita Moysis, p. 172.

If you will obey my Voice indeed, &c.] If you will sincerely obey me as your King and Governor, and keep the Covenant I intend to make with you, then you shall be mine above all the People of the Earth, whose LORD I am as well as yours; but you shall be my peculiar Inheritance, in which I will establish my Kingdom and Priesthood, with such Laws as shall not only distinguish you from all other Nations, but make you to excel them. This is the Sense of this Verse and the following.

A peculiar Treasure unto me.] i. e. Very dear to me; and consequently I will take a singular Care of you, as Kings do of those Things which they lay up in their Treasury. So the Hebrew Word Segullab signifies. Which Origen proves they really were (notwithstanding all the Calumnies of Celsus) their Laws being so profitable, and they being so early taught to know God, to believe the Immortality of the Soul, and the Rewards and Punishments in the Life to come, and bred up to a contempt of Divination (with which Mankind had been abused) as proceeding rather from wicked Dæmons, than from any excellent Nature; and to seek for the Knowledge of future Things in Souls, which, by an extraordinary Degree of Purity, were rendered capable to receive the Spirit of God, L. v. contra Celsum, p. 260. And this the Author of Sepher Casri happily expresses, when he saith, Our peculiar Blessings consist in the Conjunction of our Minds with God, by Prophecy, and that which is annexed to it; that is (as Muscatus explains it) the Gift of the Spirit of God. And therefore he doth not say in the Law, if you will obey my Voice, I will bring you after Death into Gardens of Pleasure; but ye shall be to me a People, and I will be to you a God, Pars i. Sect. 109.

For all the Earth is mine.] Which made it the greater Honour, that he bare such a special Love to them.

Ver. 6. And ye shall be unto me a Kingdom of Priests.] An honourable, or a divine Kingdom; not like worldly Kingdoms, which are defended by Arms, but supported by Piety; or a princely People, that should rule over their Enemies. For the same Word signifies both Priests and Princes: And, in the first Times of the World, none was thought fit to be a Priest, but he who was a King, or the Chief of the Family; as we see in Melchizedek and Jethro.

That God was peculiarly the King of this People, I observed above, ch. iii. 10. and here he expressly owns this peculiar Dominion over them, by saying, Ye shall be to me a Kingdom. And one Reason, perhaps, why he saith they shall be a Kingdom of Priests, is because they were governed (whilst they continued a Theocracy) by the High Priest, as the prime Minister under God, who, in all weighty Causes consulted God what was to be done; and accordingly they ordered their Affairs, ch. xxviii. 30. Numb. xxviii. 21. which is the Reason why God commands Moses to make such Garments for Aaron as should be for Glory and Beauty (or, for Honour and Glory) as we read ver. 2. of that Chapter, i. e. to make him appear Great, like a Prince; for they were really royal Garments: And for his Sons also, he was to make Bonnets of the like Kind for Honour and Glory, ver. 40. they being in the Form of the Tiara, which Kings wore; and are joined in Scripture with Crowns, Job xxix. 14. Isa. iii. 23, &c. Whence Philo says, in his Book de Sacerd. Honoribus, that the Law manifestly dressed up the High Priest, εἰς σεμνότητα καὶ τιμὴν βασιλέως. But the Liberty and Freedom also wherein they were instated, I doubt not, is signified by these Words, Kings and Priests (as Onkelos translates them, and as it is expressed in the New Testament, Revel. i. 6. v. 10. and the Syriac also, Kingdom and Priesthood) for Kings and Priests were, of all other Men, freed from Oppression. And thus I find our Mr. Thorn-dike, a most learned Man, glosses upon these Words (Review of the Rights of the Church, p. 132.) God called them Kings, because redeemed from the Servitude of Strangers, to be a People; Lords of themselves; and Priests, because redeemed to spend their Time in Sacrificing, and feasting upon their Sacrifices (under which Figure he afterwards represents the happy State of his Church, Isa. lxi. 6.) though they sacrificed not in Person, but by their Priests appointed in their stead, by Imposition of the Elders Hands, Numb. viii. 10.

An holy Nation.] A People separated to God from all other Nations, and from their Idolatry, to serve God in an acceptable Manner.

These are the Words which thou shalt speak unto the Children of Israel.] The Sum of what he was to say to them, comprehending both their Duty and their high Privilege.

Ver. 7. And Moses came.] Down from the Mount, where he had been with God, ver. 3.

And called for the Elders of the People.] The principal Persons in the several Tribes (see ch. iii. 16.) which he seems to have done in the Evening of the second Day of the Month.

And laid before their Faces all these Words, &c.] Plainly declared to them what God had given him in charge; which they went and propounded to the People of the several Tribes, whom they represented.

Ver. 8. And all the People answered together, and said.] All with one Consent declared, as here follows.

All that the LORD hath spoken we will do.] They consented to have the LORD for their King, and promised to be obedient to his Will.

And Moses returned the Words of the People unto the LORD.] This seems to have been done the next Day, which was the third Day of the third Month. Upon which Report made to God for the Peoples Consent, he proceeds, after a few Days Preparation, to declare the Laws by which they should be govern'd, Chap. xx, xxi, xxii, xxiii. and then in the xxivth Chapter these Laws pass into a Covenant between God and them.

Here Moses plainly acted as a Mediator between God and the People.

Ver. 9. And the LORD said unto Moses, Lo, I will come unto thee.] Appear upon the Mount.

In a thick Cloud.] In a darker Cloud than that, which had hitherto gone before them to conduct them; so that they should see nothing but Flashes of Lightning which came out of it in a very frightful Manner (ver. 16, 18.) For that there was Fire in it, appears from Deut. iv. 11. v. 22, 23. though at first, perhaps, only a thick Cloud appeared as a Token of his Approach.

That the People may hear when I speak with thee.] Though they saw no Similitude, yet they plainly heard a Voice speaking unto Moses, and declaring their Duty. Maimonides indeed thinks, that the Words were directed only unto Moses, and that the Israelites heard merely the Sound of the Words, but did not distinctly understand them,

More Nevoeb. P. ii. c. 33. which is directly against what Moses says, Deut. iv. 12. The LORD spake unto you out of the midst of the Fire, &c. and ch. v. 4, 5. The LORD talked with you Face to Face in the Mount, &c. saying, I am the LORD thy God, &c. Which Words are plainly directed to all the People.

And believe thee for ever.] They had been staggered in their Belief, after they had professed it at the Red-sea (ch. xv. ult.) but after this, it might be expected they would never question his Authority any more.

And Moses told the Words of the People unto the LORD.] Or rather, for Moses had told, &c. Upon which Account God was pleased to make the foregoing Declaration. Till they had owned him for the LORD their God, i. e. their King and Governor, he did not speak unto them at all, but only unto Moses: But now, that they had consented to be his, he resolves to speak audibly to them, and henceforth to dwell among them; and, in order to it, fix his Tabernacle with them: For which he gives Order (Chap. xxv, &c.) immediately after they had entered into Covenant to do as they had promised.

Or, these Words (which seem to be a needless Repetition) may relate to that which follows, and be translated thus: Moses having told the Words of the People unto the LORD, the LORD said unto Moses, Go unto the People, and sanctify them, &c.

Ver. 10. Go unto the People, and sanctify them to Day and to Morrow.] This shows that Moses was sent down early on the fourth Day, to prepare them for the Appearance of the Divine Majesty among them, by sanctifying them; that is, separating them from all Uncleannefs, or rather from all common and ordinary Employments; that they might give themselves to Fasting and Prayer, and Abstinence from otherwise lawful Pleasures. For Pirke Eliezer takes Abstinence from their Wives, mentioned ver. 15. as a Part of this Sanctification, cap. 41. And so doth Gregory Nyssen in his Book de Vita Moses, p. 178. And Maimonides observes, that Separation from Wine and strong Drink, is called Holiness in the Law of the Nazarites, Numb. vi. 5. and therefore may be thought Part of the Sanctification here required, More Nevoeb. P. i. c. 33.

And let them wash their Clothes.] The Hebrews understand it of washing their whole Bodies: For thus Aaron and his Sons were to be consecrated to their Office, ch. xxix. 4. xl. 12. and therefore thus the People were now to be made a holy People unto the LORD, and made fit for the Presence of the Divine Majesty; under whose Wings (as they speak) none were received in future Times, i. e. made Profelytes, but by Baptism (or washing of their whole Body) which was taken from this Pattern. And accordingly where we read in the Law of particular Purifications by washing their Clothes in case of any Uncleannefs, as Lev. xi. 25, 28, 40. xiv. 8, 47. (where Moses speaks of cleansing a Leprous Person) Numb. xxxi. 24. (where he speaks of cleansing Soldiers) and many other Cases, they understand it in the very same Manner. In some Cases indeed it is expressly prescribed; Lev. xv. 5, 6, 7. xvi. 26, &c. and they expound all others, where Clothes only are mentioned by the same Rule; as Mr. Selden shows, L. i. de Synedr. c. 3. where he observes, that in the Pagan Language, pure Garments signify the washing of the whole Body. See p. 29.

Ver. 11. And be ready against the Third Day.] He doth not mean the third Day of the Month, but the third Day after this Command to sanctify themselves, in which they were bound to spend two intire Days; and then the LORD promised to come down in all their Sight upon Mount Sinai; that is, when they were fit to receive him, by their professing themselves an holy People, of which that outward Washing was a Token.

For the third Day the LORD will come down, &c.] Not from the Mount, but from Heaven, upon Mount Sinai: On which the SCHECHINAH descended in a Cloud, which struck a great Awe into them; for it was darker than the Pillar of the Cloud, by which they had been conducted hither, through which some Rays or Glimpse of a glorious Majesty that was in it broke forth upon them.

Ver. 12. And thou shalt set Bounds unto the People round about.] To keep them at a due Distance, out of a just Reverence to the Divine Majesty.

Take Heed unto your selves that ye go not up, &c.] This Caution also was given them to work and preserve in their Minds a most profound Reverence of the Divine Majesty, and to those Laws which were to be delivered from this Mount.

Ver. 13. There shall not an Hand touch it, but he shall surely be stoned, or shot through.] Be stoned, if he were near at hand; or shot through with Darts or Arrows, if at a Distance. So Aben Ezra: And so Jonathan likewise translates the latter Clause; They shall throw Darts at him: And so our old Translation, Stricken through with Darts. But the Talmudists, and the greatest Lawyers among the Jews, expound both these Clauses of stoning, which was twofold, as we read in the Misna Tit. Sanbedrin. c. 6. either by throwing Stones at a Malefactor, or throwing him down from an high Place upon Stones. And thus this last Phrase imports in the Hebrew, and may properly be translated, projiciendo projicietur, he shall be violently thrown down, or, thrown down headlong. It is the very same Word with that ch. xv. 4. concerning the casting Pharaoh's Chariots into the Sea. And this was a Punishment, as Mr. Selden observes, like that among the Romans, from the Saxum Tarpeium, which the Jews inflicted upon some captive Edomites, 2 Chron. xxv. 12. and Jebu inflicted upon Jezabel, 2 Kings ix. 32. on which Story R. Levi ben Gersom observes pertinently, That as she caused Naboth to be stoned, so she was punished her self in the same Kind; for stoning, saith he, was either by throwing Stones at Malefactors, or throwing them down upon Stones; to justify which, he alledges this Place in Exodus. And David Kimchi makes the same Observation. See Mr. Selden, L. i. de Synedr. c. 5. p. 74, &c.

VOL. I.

When the Trumpet soundeth long.] When the Sound of it is protracted, or drawn out, and consequently was less terrible than while it was shorter and broken. See ver. 16.

They shall come up to the Mount.] To the Foot of it, ver. 17. that they might more plainly hear the Voice of God.

Ver. 14. And Moses came down from the Mount to the People.] As he had been commanded, ver. 10.

And sanctified the People.] Commanded them to sanctify themselves (as the Author of Sepher Cosri explains it, P. i. Sect. 87.) both with internal Sanctification and external; among which the Principal was, Separation from the Company of Women, as it here follows, ver. 15.

And they washed their Clothes.] See ver. 10. Unto which add, that it is no Wonder they used this Purification before the giving of the Law; which had been antiently in Use among their Ancestors upon solemn Occasions: As appears by what I observed on Gen. xxxv. 2. where Jacob; before the Building of an Altar to God in Bethel, as he had vowed, cleansed his Family after this Manner: For so Aben Ezra truly expounds these Words be clean, wash your Bodies; which was the old Rite of Cleansing. See there.

Ver. 15. And said unto the People, be ready against the third Day.] Prepared to hear the Words of God.

Come not at your Wives.] For this Time was set apart for solemn Fasting and Prayer, that they might be fit to converse with God, by having their Minds abstracted from earthly Things.

Ver. 16. And it came to pass on the third Day.] See ver. 11.

There were Thunders and Lightnings.] Which broke out of the thick Cloud, to awaken them to attend unto his Majesty, who was approaching.

And a thick Cloud.] In which a flaming Fire presently appeared (ver. 18.) ὡς ἀεὶ ὁ ὄρος γένηται τὸ εἶδός, so that the Mountain could not be seen; as Greg. Nyssen explains it, de Vita Moysi, p. 179.

And the Voice of the Trumpet.] The heavenly Ministers, who were Attendants upon the Divine Majesty, made a Sound like that of a Trumpet, to summon the People to come and appear before God, and receive his Commands.

Exceeding loud.] Beyond what the Blast of any Men could make; for it made the whole Camp quake, as the following Words tell us.

Ver. 17. And Moses brought forth the People out of the Camp.] When their trembling was abated, by the Remission, as we may suppose, of the Sound of the Trumpet.

To meet with God.] That they might be espoused to him.

And they stood at the nether Part of the Mount.] Below at the Foot of it, not presuming to touch it; which they were severely forbidden, ver. 11, 12. See Deut. iv. 11.

Ver. 18. And Mount Sinai was altogether on a Smoke.] Nothing could be seen but Smoke, mixed with a Flame.

M m 2

Because

Because the LORD descended on it in Fire.] The SCHECHINAH came down into the thick Cloud (ver. 9, 16.) with a glittering Company of Angels, who appeared like Flames of Fire, unto which they are compared by the Psalmist, civ. 4. Thus Moses himself seems to expound it, Deut. xxxiii. 2. He came with ten thousands, or Myriads, of holy ones (i. e. of Angels) from his right Hand went a fiery Law for them. Which plainly relates to this Appearance at Mount Sinai.

And the Smoke thereof ascended as the Smoke of a Furnace.] Mix'd with Fire, which went up even to the Midst of Heaven, as Moses explains it, Deut. iv. 11.

And the whole Mount quaked greatly.] See Psal. lxxviii. 8. civ. 32.

Ver. 19. And when the Voice of the Trumpet sounded long.] It is a different Word here in the Hebrew, from that ver. 13. which we translate sounded long; signifying that it proceeded, or went on, either a long Time, or to a greater Loudness.

And waxed louder and louder.] In the Hebrew the Words are exceeding strong; ὑπερέχον ἐαυτῷ ἢ σαλπίζ, &c. the Trumpet exceeded itself; the succeeding Blasts transcending those that went before, as Greg. Nyssen well interprets the Whole.

Moses spake.] The People trembled before at the loud Sound of the Trumpet (ver. 16.) but now it grew so very terrible, that Moses himself said (as the Apostle expounds this Passage, Heb. xii. 21.) I exceedingly fear and quake. For hither, I think, Junius rightly applies those Words.

And God answered him by a Voice.] Bidding him not be afraid, but come up unto him, as it follows in the next Verse. Greg. Nyssen thinks that the Voice of the Trumpet, ὡς ἐπαγγέλει, became articulate with the Organs of Speech, by the Divine Power.

Ver. 20. And the LORD came down upon Mount Sinai.] It is said before, that the LORD descended upon it, ver. 18. therefore the Meaning here is, that the SCHECHINAH, or Divine Majesty, settled there to speak unto the People.

On the Top of the Mount.] On the highest Part of it, that there might be the greatest Distance between him and the People, who stood at the Foot of it.

And the LORD called up Moses, &c.] He stood lower before, though not so low as the People; but now is called up higher, even to the very Place where God was; and consequently enter'd into the midst of the Fire and Smoke, wherein the Mountain was wrapped (ver. 18.) upon God's Appearance there. From which, in all Probability, the Persians (who had heard or read what is here related) framed the Story of their Zoroaster; who wandering in desert Places, was carried up to Heaven, and saw God encompassed with Flames, which he could not behold with his own Eyes (the Splendor of them was so great) but with Eyes which the Angels lent him; and there he received from him a Book of the Law, &c. See Huetius Demonstr. Evang. Propos. iv. c. 5. n. 2.

Ver. 21. And the LORD said unto Moses, Go down and charge the People, &c.] It seems, that upon Moses's going up, some of the People thought of approaching nearer, out of Curiosity, to see if they could discover more of the Divine Majesty. And therefore God sends him down again immediately, to bid them remember the Charge he had given them, and not dare to come nearer than they were.

And many of them perish.] As many as were so presumptuous. Many sometimes signifies all: And here all that should adventure to go beyond their Bounds.

Ver. 22. And let the Priests also.] Who these were, is much disputed; for Aaron and his Sons were not yet consecrated. The Jews (it is commonly known) readily answer, they were the First-born, whose Prerogative it was to minister to God as his Priests, till the Law of Moses ordered Things otherwise: But I have often observed this not to be true; being confuted by several Examples of others, who sacrificed and were not the First-born. And lately there is a learned Man, who, in a just Discourse, hath overthrown this Opinion (see Campeg. Viringa Observ. Sacre, L. ii. c. 23.) which was called in question, and briefly censured some Time before, by a very learned Friend of mine, Dr. Outram, de Sacrificiis, L. i. c. 4. Conradus Pellicanus, in the Beginning of the Reformation, seems to have given a better Account of the Priests here mentioned, which were the prime and most honourable Persons in the several Tribes, the Elders, and such as administrated the Government under Moses; among which there might be some of the First-born, nay, it is possible, many of them, but not by any special Right which they had to this Office.

Which came near unto the LORD.] To perform Divine Services. By which one would think he speaks of those who had been already employed in this Office: For having before this built an Altar (ch. xvii. 15.) some think it probable Sacrifice was offered upon it. But if it were only a Monument, and no Sacrifices were to be offered till they came to the Mount of God, who was to appoint them; then Moses pick'd out the most excellent Persons (as I said before) to perform this Service when they came there, ch. xxiv. 5.

Sanctify themselves.] Nothing was said before of their Sanctification, which is here enjoined by it self; because their high Office required a peculiar Separation to prepare them for it.

Lest the LORD break forth upon them.] Lest, when they come near to sacrifice, God should be offended with their Uncleanness, and destroy them. This supposes they might go nearer than the People.

Ver. 23. And Moses said unto the LORD, the People cannot come up to Mount Sinai, &c.] He thought it was needless to go down to restrain the People, having given them the Charge which God commanded him, ver. 11, 12. and set Bounds about the Mount (as it here follows) by drawing a Line, perhaps, beyond which they should not pass, and thereby separating the Mount from them, which he calls sanctifying it.

Ver. 24. And the LORD.] Or, but the LORD.

Said unto him, Away, get thee down.] He knew the Peoples Inclinations better than Moses did; did; and therefore commanded him to make no Delay, for fear they should grow more bold than he imagined.

And thou shalt come up, and Aaron with thee.] After he had delivered this new Charge to them. Which was the more necessary, because Aaron being also called up, they might think likewise of sharing this Privilege.

And Aaron with thee.] Unto whom God did this great Honour, because he was to be called shortly to the Dignity of the High-Priest; and would be the more respected by the People, when they saw him admitted far nearer to God than they were.

But let not the Priests and the People break through, &c.] But let not any body else, as they love their Lives, presume to pass beyond their Line: No not the Priests, on whom I have bestowed the Honour of coming nearer to me than other Men; ver. 22.

Ver. 25. So Moses went down unto the People, and spake unto them.] Delivered the Message to them, and to the Priests, as he was directed: And then (as he was also ordered) returned to the Mount, and his Brother with him; but not to the top of the Mount, where he was before (ver. 20.) as appears from the nineteenth Verse of the next Chapter. Which shows that Moses was there where the People might speak to him: And therefore, if he went up now to the top of the Mount, he came down again; when the LORD spake audibly to them, and stood in a Place where he might be a Mediator between them. So he himself saith, Deut. v. 4, 5. that when the LORD talked with them Face to Face in the Mount, he stood between the LORD and them: And accordingly it follows, ver. 23. of that Chapter, that when they heard the Voice out of the midst of the Darknes, they came near to Moses, and said, &c. which shows he was not far off from them, though nearer to God than they.

But perhaps Moses and Aaron did not come up into the Mount till after the ten Words (or Commandments) were spoken; when Moses, we read, ch. xx. 21. drew near unto the thick Darknes where God was; though we read nothing of Aaron there. Which inclines me to think the foregoing Account of this Matter to be the truer.

CHAP. XX.

Ver. 1. AND God spake all these Words, saying.] After the Trumpet had summoned them all to attend, and sounded a long time louder and louder, there came a Voice from the SCHECHINAH, or Divine Majesty, out of the midst of the Fire (as we read Deut. iv. 12. v. 4, 22.) that is, of the Angelical Host, which incircled him, and appeared like Flames of Fire: Which made the Apostle say, the Law was ordained by Angels (Gal. iii. 19.) who were then in attendance upon the Divine Majesty, as his Retinue, when he spake all these Words, that follow to the end of the seventeenth Verse; which are called the Ten Words, or Commandments, in ch. xxxiv. 28. And he spake them with so great a Voice, Deut. v. 22. that all the People, who were very numerous, plainly heard them: Which was very wonderful.

This was upon the sixth Day of the third Month, called Sivan. See Selden, L. iii. de Jure N. & G. c. 11.

Ver. 2. I am the LORD thy God, which have brought thee out of the Land of Egypt, &c.] In this Preface to the Ten Commandments he asserts his Right to give them Laws, not only in general, as he is LORD of all, but by a peculiar Title he had to their Obedience; whom he had taken to himself, after a special Manner; to be his People, by bringing them out of the Land of Egypt, and the Servitude under which they groaned there. This was a Benefit fresh in their Minds, and most apt to affect their Hearts: And therefore he doth not say (as the Author of Sepher Cosri observes, P. i. Seet. 17.) I am the LORD of Heaven and Earth; or, I am thy Creator; but, I am the LORD thy God, who have shown a particular Favour and Kindness to thee, by bringing thee out of the Land of Egypt, &c. when he became their King by a special Title (as I observed, ch. iii. 10.) and upon that Account gave them these Laws, whereby they were to be governed; and gave them peculiarly to them (as the fore-named Author notes) who were tied to the Observance of them, by virtue of their Deliverance out of Egypt, and God's placing his Glory among them. Whereas, if they had been tied to them by virtue of their Creation, they would have belonged to all Nations as much as unto them. Thus he. Maimonides will have these Words, I am the LORD thy God, to signify the Existence of God; and the next (ver. 3.) his Unity: Which two are the great Foundations of Religion, More Nevoch. P. ii. c. 33. And indeed the Word JEHOVAH, or LORD, is generally thought to signify he who is of himself: And the next Word ELOHIM, which is the most antient Name of God in Scripture, learned Men of late derive from the Arabic Word Alaba (there being no Root in Hebrew remaining; from whence it can so regularly come) which signifies to worship, serve, and adore. Hottinger hath taken a great deal of Pains, in his Hexaemeron, and elsewhere; to confirm this out of that, and out of the Ethiopick Language also: The Jews say indeed, that Elohim is the Name of Judgment, as Jehovah is of Mercy; but Abarbinel confutes this, to establish a Notion of his own (viz. the omnipotent Cause of all Things) which others oppose as much as he doth the former. And therefore most, I think, now rest in the fore-named Notion, that it properly signifies Him, who only is to be religiously worshipped and adored; as it follows in the next Words.

Ver. 3. Thou shalt have no other Gods.] That is, believe in one God; or, believe there is no other God but me, as Nachman interprets it; and consequently worship no other God. This is the great Foundation (as the Hebrews speak) of the Law; for whosoever confesses any other God, he denies the whole Law. And they truly observe also, that this negative Precept includes the Affirmative, viz. a Command to worship him, the only God. As when Naamau saith, he would would neither offer Burnt-offering, nor Sacrifice, to any other God, but the LORD; it is plain he meant that he would sacrifice to him, 1 Kings v. 17. See Selden, L. iii. de Jure N. & G. c. i.

Before me.] As they were not to forsake him, and worship some other God, so not to worship any other God together with him, as many did, 2 Kings xvii. 33. For in his Presence he could not endure any Competitor.

Ver. 4. Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven Image, &c.] The Difference between Pesel, which we translate graven Image, and Temunah, which we translate Likeness, seems to be, that the former was a protuberant Image, or a Statue made of Wood, Stone, &c. and the other only a Picture drawn in Colours upon a Wall, or Board, &c. Both which, some have thought, they were prohibited here so much as to make; whether it were the Image or Picture of the Stars, or Birds, or Men, or Beasts, or Fishes, for fear they should be drawn to worship them. Thus it is certain, Origen understood this Commandment, when he said, there was not permitted to be so much as ωγραφοῦν, ἢ τε ἀγαλμασποιοῦν ἐν τῇ πολιτείᾳ ἀνθρώπων, &c. a Picture-drawer, or a Maker of Statues, in their Commonwealth; to take away all occasion of drawing Mens Minds from the Worship of God, L. iv. contra Cels. p. 181. Clemens Alexandrinus was of the same Opinion, L. v. Stromat. and Terullian, Lib. de Spectaculis, c. 23. Which they derived in all probability from the Jews, who from the Time of the Maccabees, to the Destruction of Jerusalem, thought they were forbidden by this Law to make an Image or Figure of any living Creature, especially of a Man. This Harmannus Conringius hath plainly demonstrated (in his Paradoxa de Nummis Ebraeorum, c. 5.) out of many Places in Philo and in Josephus. The latter of which tells us, Lib. xviii. Archaeolog. c. 5. that all their Governors before Pilate were wont to use Ensigns in Jerusalem without the Image of Caesar in them, because their Law forbade εἰκόνας ποιεῖν, the making of Images. And when Vitellius was to lead the Roman Army through Judæa against the Arabians, with Images in their Ensigns, the People ran to meet him, beseeching him to forbear it; ἐκ γὰρ αὐτοῖς ἐνὶ αἰσῶνι πάρεστιν ἀπειροὺς εἰς αὐτῶν περὶ εἰκόνας, for it was not consonant to the Laws of their Country to see Images brought into it. But whether this was the antient Exposition of the Law before those Times, may be doubted. The Talmudists think it was unlawful to make any Figures of Celestial Bodies, either prominent or plain, though it were for Ornament-sake: But as for Animals, they might make prominent Statues of them, except only of Men; the Images of whom they might draw on a Plain. See Selden, L. i. de Jure Nat. & Gent. c. 6, 7, 8. Which Distinctions most look upon as ungrounded; and the common Opinion is, that Moses did not forbid the very making of an Image, but that they should not make them to set up in the Place of Divine Worship.

Ver. 5. Thou shalt not bow down thy self to them, nor serve them.] If they saw an Image (as they must needs do in other Countries, though we suppose they had none among themselves) he requires them not to use any Gesture, or to do any thing that might signify Reverence or Honour given to them. Such were prostrating themselves before them, bowing their Bodies, kissing their Hands; much less to offer Sacrifice, or burn Incense, &c. to them. Here seems to be a plain Gradation in this Commandment; three Things being here forbidden, if we take the first Part of it to signify that they might not, so much as make a graven Image, or any Likeness of any thing, for fear they should be tempted to Idolatry. But though this may be supposed to have been a Sin, yet not so great as the next, to bow down to them; which was a Degree of Honour too high to be paid unto any Image: But was not the highest of all; which was to serve them, by offering Sacrifice, burning Incense, making Vows to them, or swearing by them; or consecrating Temples to them, or lighting Candles before them.

For I the LORD thy God am a jealous God.] This Reason shows that this Commandment is different from the first, and not a Part of it: For worshipping of Images is forbidden, not merely because he was their God, and there is but one God; but because he is a jealous God, who could not endure any Corival, or Confort, in that which was proper to himself. And so the antient Jews, and Christians also, before St. Austin, took this for the second Commandment. The Arabian Christians, in later Times, particularly Elmacinus, distinctly names the Ten Commandments, in that Order which we now do; as Hottinger observes, in his Smegma Orientale, p. 436.

Visiting.] i. e. Punishing with heavy Judgments, Lev. xxvi. 39.

The Iniquity of the Fathers upon the Children.] This was threatened to terrify them from this Sin, which would ruin their Families; being a kind of high Treason against the LORD of Heaven and Earth. Yet Aben-Ezra understands it only of such Children as trod in the Steps of their Forefathers; for if they repented, the Punishment was mitigated, Lev. xxvi. 40, &c.

Unto the third and fourth Generation.] That is, as long as they could be supposed to live (which might be to see the third, and perhaps the fourth Generation) he threatens to pursue them with his Vengeance in their Posterity; whose Punishment they themselves should behold, to their great Grief. So great was his Hatred to this Sin, and so odious were such People to him. Thus Maimonides expounds it, in his More Nevoch. P. i. c. 54. 'Visiting the Iniquity of the Fathers upon the Children, is threatened only against the Sin of Idolatry; as appears from what follows, that such Sinners are called Haters of him. And he mentions only to the fourth Generation, because the most a Man can live to see of his Seed, is the fourth Generation. Accordingly God orders, saith he, that if any City proved Idolaters, the Inhabitants should be destroyed utterly, and all that was therein, Deut. xiii. 13, 14, 15. Fathers, Children, Grand-Children, Great Grand-Children, and the new-born Children, were all killed for the Sin of their Parents.' Hence he saith, Deut. vii. 10. he repayeth them that hate him to their Face; which is there twice mentioned,

[Of them that hate me.] For he looked on them not only as Enemies, but as Haters of him. It is an Observation of the same Maimonides, that in the whole Law of Moses, and in the Books of the Prophets, we shall never find these Words, Fury, Anger, Indignation, Jealousy, attributed to God, but when they speak of Idolatry; nor any Man called an Enemy to God, an Adversary, an Hater of him, but only Idolaters, Deut. vi. 14, 15. xi. 16, 17. xxxi. 29, &c. Nehem. i. 2. Deut. vii. 10. Numb. xxxii. 21. Deut. xii. 31. xvi. 22. See More Nevoch. P. i. c. 36. which he repeats c. 54. No Man is called an Hater of God, but an Idolater; according to that, Deut. xii. 31. Every Abomination to the LORD, which he hateth. By which it appears that they counted the Worshipers of Images Idolaters; though they did not think these Images to be Gods (for no Man in the World ever thought an Image, made of Wood and Stone, Silver or Gold, to be the Creator of Heaven and Earth, or the Governor of the World) but took them only for Things intermediate between God and them, as he there speaks.

This was a Law so well known to the antient Heathens, that the best Men among them would suffer no Images to be set up in their Temples. In particular, Numa forbade this to the Romans, which he learnt, as Clemens Alexandrinus thinks, from Moses. Inasmuch, that for the space of an hundred and seventy Years, though they built Temples, yet ἀγάλμα ἔδεν, ἔτε πλεον, ἔτε μὲν γράψιν ἐποίησαν, they made no Image, neither Statue, nor so much as a Picture, L. i. Stromat. p. 304. Plutarch relates the same in the Life of Numa Pompilius, and adds this Reason, that he thought it a great Crime to represent the most excellent Being, by such mean Things; and that God was to be apprehended only by the Mind. The antient Persians pretend to have received the same Law from their Zoroaster; who, in a number of Things, is so like to Moses, that Huetius thinks (not without reason) his Story was framed out of these Books.

Ver. 6. And showing Mercy unto Thousands.] To invite their Obedience, he promises to be kind unto them and their Posterity, for many Generations (so Thousands signifies) who were loyal and faithful to him. Such is the infinite Goodness of God, that he delights more in showing Mercy, than in Acts of Severity; there being such a Disproportion between the one and the other, as there is between three or four, and a thousand. Which made the heavy Punishment of Idolaters the more reasonable, because they might have enjoyed such great and long continued Blessings, if they would have kept close to their Religion.

[Of them that love me.] Adhered to him alone, as the only Object of Worship and Adoration; with such an Affection as a chaste Wife bears to her Husband. For God now espoused this Nation to himself (as the Prophets taught them to understand it) and therefore all the Idolatry which is forbidden in these Commandments, is called going a whoring from him.

And keep my Commandments.] Not only professed to be his intirely, but proved it by observing his Precepts. Which keeping or observing of his Commandments, is mentioned here perhaps, and not in any of the following Commandments; because this and the first were the principal, upon which the rest depended: There being no reason to mind what he said, if they acknowledged any other God but him.

Ver. 7. Thou shalt not take the Name of the LORD thy God in vain.] By the Name of the LORD, in Scripture, is meant the LORD himself: And to take or lift up his Name, is to swear by him. So this Word Nasa sometimes signifies, without the Addition of God's Name, Isa. iii. 7. Jissa, he shall lift up in that Day; which we truly render, In that Day he shall swear: Which they did then, with the Hand lifted up to Heaven. And to take his Name, or swear in vain, is to swear falsely. That's the principal Meaning undoubtedly, that they should not call God to witness unto a Lye; promising in his Name that which they meant not to perform; or affirming, or denying with an Oath, that which they knew not to be true: For so the Word Schawe frequently signifies, in Scripture, a Lye. This relates not to their giving a Testimony before a Judge upon Oath (of which he speaks afterward, in a distinct Commandment) but to their Intercourse and Commerce one with another. For an Oath, saith R. Levi of Barcelona, ought to establish every thing: And thereby we declare our selves to be as much resolved concerning that which we swear, as we are concerning the Being of God.

Heathens themselves accounted an Oath so sacred a Thing, that it was capital for a Man to forswear himself, as Hen. Stephanus (in his Fontes Juris Civilis, p. 7.) observes out of Diodorus Siculus, L. i. And the Reason he gives of it is this, That such a Man committed two heinous Crimes, by violating his Piety to God, and his Faith to Men, in the highest degree.

But besides this, both Jews and Christians always understood swearing lightly, upon frivolous Occasions, or without any Necessity, to be here forbidden. R. Levi, before-mentioned, saith this Precept may be violated four several Ways, besides swearing that which we mean not to perform. And Salvian applies this to the trivial naming of God and our Saviour, upon all Occasions, and sometimes upon bad Occasions: Nil jam pene vanius quam Christi nomen esse videatur, &c. Every body then swearing by Christ he would do this or that, though of no consequence whether he did it or no, or perhaps a Thing which ought not to be done, L. iv. de Gubern. Dei, p. 88. edit. Baluz.

They that understand this of Swearing by false Gods (which are called vain Things in Scripture) do but trifle; that is condemned in the foregoing Commandment, it being a piece of Worship to swear by them.

For the LORD will not hold him guiltless, &c.] If Men did not punish the false Swearer, the LORD threatens that he will. And so Mankind always thought, as appears by the Law of the twelve Tables (mentioned by Hen. Stephanus, in the Book quoted above) Perjurii pena divina exitium, humana dedecus: The divine Punishment of Perjury is utter Destruction; the human Punishment is Disgrace or Infamy. And Alexander Severus was so sensible of this, that he thought, Juris jurandi contempta Religio, satis Deum ultorem habet: The Contempt of the Religion of an Oath, hath God for a sufficient Avenger. For an Oath is the strongest Bond that is among Men, to bind them to Truth and Fidelity; as Cicero speaks, L. iii. de Offic. c. 31. Witnesses, faith he, the twelve Tables; witnesses our sacred Forms in taking an Oath; witnesses our Covenant and Leagues, wherein we plight our Faith to Enemies; witnesses the Animadversions of our Censors, qui nulla de re diligentius quam de jurejurando judicabant, who judged of nothing more diligently than of an Oath.

Nor was the other sort of vain (that is, light and idle) Swearing, without any just Occasion, suffered to go unpunished: For Mr. Selden observes, out of Maimonides (L. ii. de Synedr. c. 11. p. 497.) that if any Man was guilty of it, he that heard him swear was bound to excommunicate him (what that was, he shows in the first Book) and if he did not, he was to be excommunicated himself. And there is great reason for these civil Laws, which have provided a Punishment for this Crime; not only because it is a great Disrespect to God, to use his Name so lightly, on every trivial Occasion; but because such Contempt of the Divine Majesty makes Men fall into the fearful Sin of Perjury.

Ver. 8.] Remember the Sabbath-day to keep it holy.] Be mindful of the Day called the Sabbath, to make a Difference between it and all other Days, so that it be not employed as they are.

Ver. 9. Six Days shalt thou labour, and do all thy Work.] This is not a Precept requiring Labour, but a Permission to employ six Days in a Week about such worldly Business as they had to do. Which Permission also God himself abridged, by appointing some other Festival Days; as all Governors may do, upon some special Occasions.

But the seventh Day is the Sabbath of the LORD thy God.] Appointed by his Authority to be a Day of Rest from your Labours.

In it thou shalt not do any Work.] Herein the peculiar Respect to the seventh Day consisted: On all other Days they might work, but on this they were to cease from all manner of Work. In which very Thing was the sanctifying of this Day; it being hereby separated and distinguished from all other Days, in a very remarkable Manner. But then it naturally followed, that having no other Work to do, they should call to mind the Reason why it was thus sanctified, or set apart from other Days. And the Reason, say the Jews themselves, was, That having no other Business, they might fasten in their Minds the Belief that the World had a Beginning; which is a Thread that draws after it all the Foundation of the Law; or the Principles of Religion. They are the Words of R. Levi of Barcelona.

Besides which, there was another Reason, which I shall mention presently. But by this it appears, that the Observation of this Day was a Sign, or a Badge, to whom they belonged: A Profession that they were all the Servants of Him, who created the Heaven and the Earth, as God himself teaches them to understand it, ch. xxxi. 13, 17. And that their Minds might be possessed with this Sense, he ordered this solemn Commemoration of the Creation of the World to be made once in seven Days. For, as if there had been quicker Returns of it, their secular Business might have been too much hindered; so, if it had been delayed longer, this Sense might have worn too much out of their Minds.

Thou, nor thy Son, nor thy Daughter, &c.] They might no more employ others in their worldly Business on this Day, than do it themselves. But their Children, though they understood not the Reason, were to rest; that in time they might learn this great Truth, that all Things were made by God.

Nor thy Cattle.] Their Oxen and Asses, and all other Creatures wont to be employed in their Labours, were to enjoy the Benefit of this Rest as well as themselves, Deut. v. 14. Which was absolutely necessary; it being impossible for their Servants to rest (as is here also required) if they were to set their Cattle on work.

Nor thy Stranger that is within thy Gates.] No Stranger, who, by being circumcised, had embraced the Jewish Religion. But other Strangers might work; who only dwelt among them, having renounced Idolatry, but not taken upon them the Obligation to observe their whole Law. Yet if any such Person was a Servant to a Jew, his Master might not employ him on the Sabbath-day in any Work of his; but the Man might work for himself, if he pleased, being not bound to this Law. See Selden, L. iii. de Jure N. & G. c. 12.

Ver. 11. For in six Days the LORD made Heaven and Earth.] There were two Reasons for the Sanctification of this Day. One was, because God rested from his Work of Creation on the seventh Day, which is mentioned here; the other was, because he had given them Rest from their Labours in Egypt, which he mentions in the vth of Deuteronomy. There is no body hath explained both these better than Maimonides, More Nevoch P. ii. c. 31. 'There are two different Causes, faith he, for this Precept, from two different Effects. For when Moses first explained to us the Cause of this Celebration, in the Promulgation of the Ten Commandments, he faith it was, because in six Days the LORD made Heaven and Earth. But in the Repetition of them, he faith, Remember that thou wast a Servant in Egypt, &c. therefore the LORD thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath-day, Deut. v. 15. The first Cause is the Glory and Magnificence of this Day; as it is said, Therefore the LORD blessed the seventh Day, and sanctified it, Gen. ii. 3. This was the Effect of that Cause, for in six Days he made Heaven and Earth (This was the Reason, he means, of the first Institution of the Sabbath) But that he gave this Precept of the Sabbath unto us (i. e. the Israelites) and commanded us to observe it, was from the other Cause, which followed the first Cause, because we were Servants in Egypt. All which Time we could not serve according to our own Will and Pleasure, nor had any Rest, or observed a Sabbath: And therefore God gave us this special Precept of Resting and Cessation from Labours, ‘Labours, to join together these two Reasons, viz. the Belief of the Beginning of the World, which presently suggest to us the Being of God; and then the Memory of God’s Benefits unto us, in giving us Rest from our intolerable Burdens in Egypt.

Wherefore he blessed the Sabbath Day, and hallowed it.] In the Beginning of the World he blessed the seventh Day, Gen. ii. 3. and now particularly chose this seventh Day for a Sabbath, which he ordered them to observe in Memory of their coming out of Egypt on that Day, as I observed, ch. xvi. 5, 23. by which he preserved in their Minds, that singular Benefit which he had bestowed upon them; ‘and most manifestly (saith Maimonides in another Place, P. iii. c. 43.) procured great Ease to all Sorts of Men, by freeing a seventh Part of their Lives from wearisome Labour; which hath another Blessing in Conjunction with it, that it perpetually preserved and confirmed that most precious History and Doctrine concerning the Creation of the World.’

Ver. 12. Honour thy Father and thy Mother.] In another Place they are commanded to fear them, Lev. xix. 3. and as here the Father is put before the Mother, so there the Mother is put before the Father, to show (as Maimonides takes it, in his Treatise called Memarim, c. 6.) that we ought not to make any Difference between them; but they are both equally to be honoured and revered: Which is a Duty of such great Concernment, that we are taught by the placing of this Commandment immediately after those which peculiarly relate to God’s Worship; that next to his Majesty, our Parents are to be honoured with that Reverence, Love, Obedience, and Maintenance, which is due to them. And therefore notorious Disobedience to them is threatened with Death, as well as Apostacy from God. Wherein this Honour or Fear doth consist, is taught in all Books of Religion; and Mr. Selden hath named a great many Things wherein the Jews place it, as the learned Reader may see, L. ii. de Synedr. c. 13. p. 558.

I shall only add, that this was a Law among the Heathens, mentioned by Sallustius, Charondus, and others, in these Words, τὰ πέντα τὸς γονεῖς τιμᾶτωσαν, let Children honour their Parents. And thus Ulpian expresses it, Filio semper honesta et sancta persona Patris videri debet. And afterward Filium Patrem et Matrem venerari oportet. With much more, that Hen. Stephanus hath collected in his Fontes et Rivi Juris Civilis.

That thy Days may be long in the Land, &c.] As Disobedience to Parents is, by the Law of Moses, threatened to be punished with Death; so on the contrary, long Life (which is the greatest worldly Blessing) is promised to the Obedient; and that in their own Country, which God had peculiarly enriched with abundance of his Blessings. Heathens also gave the very same Encouragement, saying, That such Children should be dear to the Gods, both living and dead. So Euripides.

Ὅσι δὲ τὸς τεύοντες ἐν βίῳ σέβει,
Ὅδ’ ἐστὶ καὶ ζῶν καὶ θανὼν θεοῖς φίλος.

And this famous Senarius, mentioned by the same Hen. Stephanus, with many other notable Passages.

Ἰκανὸς βιώσεις γνησσομένων τὸς γονεῖς.

Thou shalt live long (or, as long as thou canst desire) if thou nourish thy ancient Parents. Whence Children are called by Xenophon, and others, Γνησσοί.

Ver. 13. Thou shalt not kill.] After the Command about the Respect due to Parents, naturally follows the Regard we ought to have to all other Men, who spring from them. And the greatest Injury we can do another, is to take away his Life; whereby he is deprived of all the Enjoyments of this World, and human Society it self is also wounded, which cannot subsist if its innocent Members cannot be safe. Innocent, I say, for this Commandment doth not hinder Men from defending themselves from Violence, ch. xxii. 2. nor forbids Magistrates to punish those with Death, who commit Crimes worthy of it; for this is to preserve the Lives of other Men, ch. xxii. 18, 19, 20.

Ver. 14. Thou shalt not commit Adultery.] Next to a Man’s self, his Wife is nearer to him, than any other Person, they two being one Flesh. Which makes the Injury done to him in her Person, a Breach of human Society next to Murder: Nay, the LXX place this Commandment before the other, Thou shalt not kill; virtuous Women valuing their Chastity more than their Lives; and the Crimes to which mere Pleasure tempts Men, being more grievous, in the Opinion of the great Philosopher, than those to which they are stimulated by Anger. Whoredom is also forbidden in the Law of Moses, and Incest; as wounding any Man is, as well as Murder: But in these ten Words, which are a short Abridgment of their Duty, it was sufficient only to mention the principal Things of every Kind, which were hateful to God and injurious to Men.

Ver. 15. Thou shalt not steal.] This was to injure Men in their Goods and Possessions, either by open Rapine, or by Craft and Cheating, against which God intended to secure them by this Precept. Several Sorts of this Sin, are afterwards mentioned in particular Laws.

Ver. 16. Thou shalt not bear false Witness against thy Neighbour.] As our Neighbour is not to be injured by us in Deeds so not in Words, by giving a false Testimony against him before a Judge; which is the chief Sin of this Kind. This is both an Injury to our Neighbour, and an Affront to God, in whose place the Judge is, whom we go about to deceive.

Large Commentaries on these Commandments are not to be expected; which may be found in many Authors, commonly known.

Ver. 17. Thou shalt not covet thy Neighbour’s House, &c.] Here is forbidden so much as the designing any Mischief to others in any of the Things forementioned. For as all Injuries in Word or Deed are prohibited in the four preceding Commandments; so in this he prohibits those which are only in the Heart or Counsels of Men, but never come to light. And in the Enumeration of the Things they were not to covet, he begins first with that which was last mentioned, and so backward to the other. For he saith, Thou shalt not covet thy Neighbour's House, by designing to bear false Witnesses, or to commit Theft. And then follows, Thou shalt not covet thy Neighbour's Wife, by intending to abuse her, if Opportunity served; nor his Man-servant, nor his Maid-servant, &c. which are his principal Goods. He saith nothing of thirsting after his Life; which is supposed to be unlawful, because less than that is forbidden.

Menander hath something like this;

Μὴ δὲ βελόνῃς ἑαυτὸν ἐπιθυμῆς Πάμμιλλε,
Ὅ γὰρ Θεὸς βλέπει σε πλησίον παρών.

Do not so much as covet the Thread of a Needle, for God sees thee, being intimately present with thee. See more in Grotius's Prolegomena in Excerpta ex Stobæo.

Ver. 18. And all the People saw the Thundrings, &c.] Seeing being the principal Sense, it is frequently put for the rest: And this Passage may be translated, they sensibly perceived, &c. See Gen. xlii. 1. and Drusus's Quaestiones Hebr. L. i. c. 10.

The Thundrings and the Lightnings.] Chap. xix. 16.

And the Noise of the Trumpet.] Which ceased while God spake the Ten Words to them; but now began again, together with Thunders and Lightnings, when they were ended. For as they were introduced in a most majestick Manner, to raise their Attention, and strike an Awe into them; so they were closed, that they might be the more sensible of the Dreadfulness of that Majesty who spake to them, and that they might have a greater Reverence to his Law.

They removed, and stood afar off.] They were at the bottom of the Mount while God spake to them; but now started back, for fear those Flames they saw upon the Mountain (Deut. v. 25.) and perhaps flashed from thence in a terrible Manner, should devour them. How far they removed, we know not; some think to the Place where they were encamped before this glorious Appearance, out of which Moses brought them to meet with God, chap. xix. 2, 17.

Ver. 19. And they said unto Moses.] By the Heads of their Tribes and their Elders (Deut. v. 23.) who came from the People to Moses, while he remained still in his Place. For he saith there, they came near unto him, when they spake these Words; which signifies they were at some distance before.

Speak thou with us, and we will hear, &c.] They desire that what God had farther to command them, he would be pleased to acquaint Moses with it, and they would receive it as his own Words; but should die with Fear, if they heard him speak any more with his own Voice. This is more largely related, Deut. v. 24, 25, &c. And accordingly God afterward communicated to Moses alone the rest of his Laws, both concerning Religion and Civil Government.

Ver. 20. And Moses said unto the People.] He bad the Elders return this Answer to the People that sent them.

Fear not.] Be not afraid of your Lives; no Hurt shall come to you.

For God is come to prove you.] God intends, by this dreadful Appearance, to discover unto your selves and others whether you will be such as you pretend, ch. xix. 8.

And that his Fear may be before your Face.] And that you may have an awful Sense of him in your Mind, by having before your Eyes continually the Glory of his Majesty, of which you were lately sensible, ver. 18.

That you sin not.] Let this be your only Fear, not to offend God, by disobeying his Commands.

Ver. 21. And the People stood afar off.] In their Tents, within their Camp. For God commanded him to bid the Elders, after this Discourse, to go to their Tents, from whence they came; where, I suppose, the rest of the People were, Deut. v. 30. But he bad Moses stay with him; and he would, as they desired, tell him all the rest of the Things, which he intended to enjoin them, ver. 31.

And Moses drew near unto the thick Darknes where God was.] Who called him to him again, as he had done before, ch. xix. 20. There is a curious Observation in Pirke Elieser, that the Hebrew Word here is not Nogesh, he approached, or drew near, as we translate it; but Niggesh, he was drawn near: The Angel Gabriel or Michael (as he fancies) coming and taking him by the Hand, and leading him up to God, cap. xli. But this signifies rather that he did not go up of his own Accord, but was called by God to draw near to his Divine Majesty. Which he did the next Day, upon the seventh Day of Sivan; and received fifty-seven Laws (besides the ten which God himself delivered) partly Civil, and partly Religious; which were Explanations of the Decalogue.

Ver. 22. And the LORD said unto Moses.] When they were together in the thick Cloud before mentioned.

Thus thou shalt say unto the Children of Israel.] When thou goest down again to them.

Ye have seen that I have talked with you from Heaven.] The Apprehension of one Sense (as Maimonides phrases it, More Nevoch. P. i. c. 46.) is usually in Scripture put for the Apprehension of another. As, See the Word of the LORD, Jer. ii. 31. that is, hear it, or mark it diligently. Or the Meaning here may be, You saw, i. e. perceived, by the Thundrings, and Lightnings, and all the rest of the Tokens of a Majestick Presence, that it was I who spake from above.

Ver. 23. Ye shall not make with me.] The Hebrew Writers here make a Pause, or full Stop, as if it were a complete Sentence. And the Meaning is explained in the Talmud to be, Ye shall not make the Similitude of the Ministers, that minister before me above, as the Sun, the Moon, the Stars, or the Angels; Gem. Bab. upon Avoda Zura. And so Maimonides, upon the same Subject; it is unlawful to form the Images of the Sun, the Moon, the Stars, the Celestial Signs, or or Angels, according to that which is written, Ye shall not make with me; i. e. nothing like the Ministers that minister to me above. See Selden, L. ii. de Jure N. & G. c. 6. p. 198. But if we join these with the following Words, the Sense is the same; that as they acknowledged no other Gods but him, so they should not make any Image to represent him. To inforce which, the Word make is repeated in the End of the Verse, whereby greater Efficacy is added to the Command.

Gods of Silver, or Gods of Gold shall ye not make unto you.] He gives this Caution, lest by the Splendor of these Metals they should be tempted (being prone to Superstition and Idolatry) to make such kind of Representations. For by Gods are meant Images to represent him, which at the first were made very glittering, like the heavenly Bodies; but afterward they proceed to worship Images of mere Wood, or Stone.

The Coherence of this, with the foregoing Verses, is something obscure, unless we observe how this is reported in the Book of Deuteronomy; where Moses puts them in mind, that they saw no Similitude on the Day that God spake with them in Horeb, ch. iv. 15. and therefore ought not to make them a graven Image, the Similitude of any Figure, &c. ver. 16, 17, 18, 19. Accordingly the Meaning is here, ye have seen that I talked with you from Heaven (i. e. you heard only a Voice, but saw no Similitude of Man, or any other Creature) therefore ye shall not represent me by any Image, though never so rich and glorious. And thus Greg. Nyssen seems to have understood it, de Vita Moysi, p. 180. God gave Moses many Divine Commandments, the chief of which is, ἡ εὐσέβεια, καὶ τὸ τὰς περὶ πάντας ὑπολήψεις πρὸς τῆς θείας φύσεως ἔχειν, Piety towards God, and to have becoming Notions and Conceptions of the Divine Nature, as transcending all visible Things, nay, all our Thoughts, and like to nothing that we know. And therefore he bids them, in their Conceptions of him, not to look at any Thing they saw, nor liken τὸ τὸ παρὸς ὑπερκεμένον φύσιν, the Nature which transcends the whole Universe, to any Thing that they were acquainted withal.

There was the greater Need of this Precept, if the Egyptian Worship in these Days, was the same with that in other Times; when Osiris was adored in the Form of a golden Ox, or an Ox of Wood all gilded over, as Plutarch calls it, βῆς διαχρυσος.

Ver. 24. An Altar of Earth shalt thou make unto me.] For the better Observation of the foregoing Commandment, he orders that his Altars should be made as plain and simple as might be. Either of Sods and Turfs of Earth (which were easily prepared, in most Places, whilst they staid in the Wilderness) or of rough and unpolished Stone (if they came into rocky Places, where no Sods were to be got) that so there might be no Occasion to grave any Image upon them. Such Altars Terullian observes were among the antient Romans, in the Days of Numa; when, as they had no sumptuous Temples, nor Images, so they had only temeraria de cespite altaria, Altars hastily huddled up of Earth, without any Art, Apolog. cap. 25. which Jamblicus calls βωμοὶ αὐτοχέδιστοι, ex tempore Altars

(as we would now speak) thrown up on a sudden. And so Scioppius pretends he found some MS. have it in that Place of Terullian, not temeraria, but temporaria; Altars made only for a present Use, not to remain after the Sacrifice was done. Nay, Fortunatus Scacckus will have it, that Moses here commands them to make the Earth their Altar, as the Words may be translated out of the Hebrew; which he thus interprets, Thou shalt mark out a Place upon the bare Ground, and there offer Sacrifice, Myrothec. ii. Sacr. Elæochrysf. c. 56.

And shalt sacrifice thereon thy Burnt-offerings, &c.] This Form of Worship, as Maimonides himself acknowledges, was appointed by God, because it was used in all the World: Which moved him not to abolish it, but to translate it, from created and imaginary Beings, to his own most adorable Name. Therefore he commanded us, faith he, to make him a Sanctuary, (ch. xxv. 8.) and consecrate an Altar to his Name, and offer him Sacrifices (for which he alledges this very Text) and on the contrary prohibits us to do such Things to any other Being, ch. xxii. 20. xxxiv. 13, 14. More Nevoch. P. iii. c. 32.

In all Places.] This shows that the foregoing Commandment hath a peculiar Respect to the Time they were in the Wilderness (especially till the Tabernacle was erected) when they were in their Travels, removing from Place to Place, and not fixed in any; Then these Altars were very proper, which might be prepared on a sudden, and as suddenly thrown down again.

Where I record my Name.] Or cause it to be remembred and acknowledged, by some Token or Symbol (that is) whereby he signified that he would be worshipped there. Which Sense the Chaldees seems to me to have expressed most exactly; In every Place where I shall make my Glory (i. e. the SCHECHINAH) to dwell, from whence I will bless thee; i. e. hear their Prayers. This must be the Meaning here; because the Ark, which was the Memorial of God's Presence with them, was not yet made: Or else he means the Sacrifices and Altars before mentioned, which Mr. Mede thinks may be here pointed at; because these were Rites of Remembrance, whereby the Name of God was commemorated and recorded, and his Covenant with Men testified and renewed. See Book ii. pag. 453, &c. And indeed the Word Zacar doth most certainly signify, not only to remember or record, but to worship and to perform Sacred Offices: So the Meaning may be, in every Place where I exhibit my self to be worshipped and honoured.

I will come unto thee, or, meet with thee.] Upon which Account the Tabernacle of the LORD was called Ohel Moed, the Tabernacle of Meeting. Not because of the Peoples meeting there to worship (as is commonly supposed, when we translate those Words, the Tabernacle of the Congregation) but of God's meeting there with his People, as Mr. Mede observes (p. 436.) from many plain Places of Scripture, Exodus xxix. 42. xxx. 36. Numb. xvii. 4.

And I will bless thee.] Give thee Testimonies of my gracious Presence and Acceptance. The Gentiles believed their Gods were present, where their Images were worshipped. But he promises to be present in all Places whatsoever where he would have his Name celebrated (i. e. where he would be worshipped) though their Sacrifices were offered upon the most mean and simple Altar.

Ver. 25. If thou wilt make me an Altar of Stone, &c.] If it cannot be made without Stones (saith Maimonides, P. iii. More Nevoch. c. 45.) take Care that the Stones remain in their own natural Form, and that they be not polished, &c. This was to avoid Idolatry, for fear they should make any Figure with the Tools they employed in shaping and fashioning the Stones after an artificial Manner; or should reserve the Pieces of Stone that were paired off for superstitious or magical Uses. Just, saith Maimonides, as he forbids planting a Grove near his Altar, for that was to imitate Idolaters, Deut. xvi. 22. See Deut. iv. 15, 16. which plainly shows this was the Reason of this Command.

In short, these Altars were built like those of Turf, on a sudden, without any Art, only by piling Stones one upon another. Such an Altar David built upon a special Occasion, 2 Sam. xxiv. 25. and after him Elijah, 1 Kings xviii. 31, 32. and Fortunatus Scacchus makes it probable, that it was such an one which Ezra built, at their Return from Babylon, to their own Country, cb. iii. 2, 3. Myrothec. ii. Sacr. Eleoebryf. c. 59. where he represents the Form of such an Altar among the Heathen, out of an ancient Monument, p. 585. And there is little Doubt, I think, that the Altars built by the Patriarchs were of this Sort, particularly that which Abraham erected whereon to offer his Son Isaac, Gen. xxii. 9. for it was raised so suddenly, that no Art could be employed about it.

I omit other Reasons which the Jews alledge for this Law, for they seem to me to be fanciful: And shall rather observe, that Plato, in his Laws, ordered all Things belonging to the Service of God, should be very simple and plain, without any Cost or Ornament; and therefore forbids Gold, Silver, or Ivory, because they were Things too invidious (ἐπιφθονοῦς ἔσθια) and Brass and Iron he would not have used, because they were πολέμων ὄργανα, the Instruments of War; but one single Piece of Wood or Stone should serve for an Image, and that made in a Day's Time, L. xii. de Legibus, p. 955, 56. Edit. Serran.

It seems difficult also to reconcile these two Verses with God's own Ordinance; not long after in the 27th Chapter of this Book; where he bids Moses to make him an Altar, neither of Earth nor of Stone, but of Shittim-wood, covered with Brass, for the Use of the Tabernacle, where he recorded his Name. But it is to be considered, that these two Verses speak only of occasional Altars (as I may call them) which they might have Use of, not only before, but after the Tabernacle was erected. These God doth not forbid, when there was a special Reason for them; but he intending there should be no stated Altar, but that at the Tabernacle, he would have these made of unpolished Stones, laid one upon another, that they might be thrown down as soon as raised; and that they might not draw People from the Tabernacle, nor administer occasion of Idolatry, by an artificial Workmanship and Imagery. Now that there were such Altars raised upon certain great Occasions, but not to continue, appears from the Sacred History. For cb. xxiv. 4. Moses built one at the Foot of Mount Sinai, by God's Command it's likely, and of this Fashion. And he gave Order for building one of Stone after they came to Canaan (Deut. xxvii. 1, 2, 3.) which Joshua performed, according to this Rule, as is expressly said, Josh. viii. 30, 31. Of this Sort were those of Gideon and Manoah, Judg. vi. 24, 26. xiii. 19. And we read of Altars built by Samuel, 1 Sam. vii. 17. and by Saul, cb. xiv. 35. and David, as was before observed, 2 Sam. xxiv. 25 and Solomon, 1 Kings iii. 2, 34. besides the Altar which was in the Tabernacle and the Temple.

Ver. 26. Thou shalt not go up by Steps unto my Altar.] This was most suitable to the State of Travellers, to have their Altars low, not lofty. Besides, he would not have them imitate the Gentiles, who sacrificed in high Places, imagining their Sacrifices were most acceptable, when they were nearest to Heaven: Whence the Egyptians, living in a flat Country, wherein were no Mountains, built Altars of a very great Height, which could not be well done by Sods of Earth, or Stones loosely laid together: Nor would God have it done, when he ordered Moses to make an Altar of Brass and Wood at the Tabernacle, which, it is evident, was so low, that a Man might stand and minister there without being raised from the Earth; for it was but three Cubits high (cb. xxvii. 1.) which is less by one Cubit than the ordinary Stature of Men.

Not go up by Steps.] There were Steps in the Temple built by Solomon, unto the brazen Altar, which was ten Cubits high: And Ezekiel expressly mentions them in the Description of his Temple, cb. xliii. 17. which seeming to disagree with this Command, Interpreters are much concerned to reconcile them. And the forenamed Fortun. Scacchus, c. 63. contends earnestly that no Altar was higher than three Cubits; and therefore those Steps mentioned by Ezekiel did not belong to the Altar, but to the Basis or Ground-work (as we speak) upon which it stood. But this is said without good Ground; for we read expressly, that Solomon's Altar was ten Cubits high (2 Chron. iv. 1.) at which therefore the Priest could not minister, without some Steps, whereby he ascended so high as to be able to lay on the Wood, and the Sacrifice upon it, &c. By Steps therefore (to omit other Conjectures) I understand many Steps (which are here forbidden) such as the Gentiles had to go up to their Bamoth, or high Places; as we see by one of the Pyramids in Egypt, and the high Tower at Mexico, to which they ascended by an hundred and eighty Steps. But a very few served for Solomon's Altar; and they were so contrived also, as the Hebrew Writers tell us, that there was no Danger of that which God intended hereby to prevent, in the Words following.

That thy Nakedness be not discovered thereon.] The Hebrews say it was a kind of Causeway or Bridge, whereby they went up to the Altar, which which rose by little and little, till they came to the Place where they were to stand. See L'Empereur upon the Codex Middoth, Cap. iii. Sect. 3. Or else the Steps were so broad and so little distant one from another, and the Ascent thereby made so easy and equal, that there was no need of lifting up their Legs high, and therefore no danger of discovering the lower Parts of the Body (their Thighs, Buttocks, and Secret Parts) which might have been seen by those below (had they ascended by many large and high Steps) under such loose Garments as were worn in those Countries; and thereby the Priests might have been exposed to Contempt, and the People moved to Laughter, or had bad Thoughts excited in them. In short, the Meaning is, they should not go up many Steps, far distant one from another, so that one must have taken large Strides to ascend them.

The Jews say, particularly Maimonides, P. iii. More Nevoch. c. 45. that the Worshippers of Baal-Peor were wont to discover their Nakedness, that is, their Secret Parts, before him. Which he takes to be the Reason of this Command, lest any such Thing should happen in God's Presence: And this was the Reason also of another Law, that the Priests should have Breeches made for them, which none of the People wore in those Times, but the Priests alone; and that only when they ministered. The Gemara Hierosolym. upon the Story of Balaam, gives a long Account of this impure Worship, as L'Empereur observes upon Codex Middoth, c. 3. § 4. But there is no Proof of this from any antient Author; and the Babylonian Gemara gives a different Account of the Worship of Peor; which looks as if the Jews studied how to make it ridiculous, as well as filthy. But if there were any solid ground for it, it would afford the clearest Explication of this Place.

CHAP. XXI.

Ver. 1. NOW these are the Judgments thou shalt set before them.] By Judgments are meant such Political Laws which God thought fit to give for the Determination of Differences among the People, and that they might be justly and peaceably governed: Which, tho' they were not spoken with such Pomp and Majesty as the Ten Commandments were (and much less were the Ceremonial Precepts delivered with such Solemnity) yet the Israelites believed that they came from the same Authority, though spoken to Moses in the Mount privately, and not in the Audience of all the People; as appears by their Submission to these, no less than to the other Laws. And there was great reason for it; it being their own Desire not to hear God's Voice any more, but to be instructed by Moses what God required, and they promised to obey it, ch. xx. 19.

Ver. 2. If thou buy an Hebrew Servant, &c.] Or a Slave: Some Persons sold themselves by reason of Poverty: Of which sort the Hebrews understand that Law, Lev. xxv. 39. Others were sold by the Court of Judgment: Which was in case of a Theft they had committed; for which, not being able to make Satisfaction unto him that had received the Damage, they were condemned to be his Servants. Of these they interpret this Place, and Deut. xv. 12. But this Sale, they say, did not extend to both Sexes; for a Woman was not to be sold for Theft.

In the seventh Year he shall go out free for nothing.] If the Damage was so great, that his six Years Service had not satisfied for it, yet he was not to be kept longer. And his Servitude also might end sooner, by Manumission, or Redemption, or the Death of his Master, if he were a Gentile, or a Proselyte. Nay, if he were an Hebrew, his Death put an end to it, in case he left no Son. And his Master also was bound to maintain his Wife and Children (if he had any) all this Time; giving them Food, Raiment, and a Dwelling, though they were not to be his Servants. See Mr. Selden, L. vi. de Jure N. & G. c. 7.

It is remarkable, that he sets this Law in the first Place, because Mercy; next to Piety, is the most excellent Virtue: And God would have his People, saith R. Levi Barzelonita, adorned with, and full of the noblest Qualities; which are Benignity and Mercy.

This Year of Release also being a sacred Year, the whole Land being holy to the LORD, so that no Man might challenge any Right or Propriety in it, to sow his Field, or reap that which grew of it self, &c. it was Sacrilege for any Master to keep a Servant from his Freedom, when the Year came; which was the LORD's Release, as we read expressly, Lev. xxv. and Deut. xv. Whence it was, that because the Jews were so profane as to break this Law, and not give their Servants Liberty (as we read in the xxxivth of Jeremiah) God punished them with a Captivity of seventy Years, in which the Land lay waste, till it had fulfilled the Years of Rest which they would not observe; as Mr. Mede hath truly noted, Discourse xxvi. latter end.

Ver. 3. If he come in by himself, &c.] That is, a single Man without a Wife; so he was to depart. But if he was a married Man when he was sold, as the Master was not to let his Wife and Children want Food, and Raiment, and Habitation, while he continued his Slave; so when he was free, he was not to meddle with them, or detain them from their Father and Husband, Lev. xxv. 41.

Ver. 4. If his Master have given him a Wife.] Unto such a Servant as this, who was sold by the Court of Judgment, his Master might give a Gentile Maid to Wife (and no other Hebrew, but such as he, might marry a Gentile) that he might beget Children of her, who were to be the Master's Servants or Slaves for ever. The Hebrew Doctors say, the Master could not do this, unless such a Servant had a lawful Wife and Children before of his own, who were not to be kept from him; but he might beget Children for himself, as well as for his Master, who could not impose upon him more than one Maid-servant, to be his Wife. He that sold himself also, was not subject to this Law. But as his Master could not impose a Wife of this sort upon him, so neither was he bound, when the the Servant went free, to bestow any Gift upon him; which was due only to him that was sold by the Court for Theft (Deut. xv. 12.) to whom the antient Jews say he was to give thirty Shekels.

And she have born him Sons or Daughters.] During his Service.

The Wife and Children shall be his Master's, &c.] For the Wife was a Slave as well as himself, when he married her: And she was given to wife, merely that he might beget Slaves of her. Who therefore continued with the Master, as well as their Mother, when the Man had his Liberty: For they were not so much his, as his Master's Goods; who had such a Power over them, that he might circumcise them, as he did his own Children, without their Consent. See Selden, L. vi. de Jure N. & G. c. 7. and de Uxore Hebr. L. i. c. 6. p. 39.

Ver. 5. And if the Servant shall plainly say.] In the Hebrew the Words are, saying, shall say; i. e. stand in it (as we speak) and stedfastly resolve, by saying it; not in a Fit, but constantly.

I love my Master, my Wife, and my Children, &c.] If his Love to such a Wife and Children, who were not properly his own, was greater than his Love to Liberty; which made him still desire their Company, and chuse to stay with his Master, who had been so good to him.

Ver. 6. His Master shall bring him to the Judges.] That it might appear he was not fraudulently or forcibly detained against the Law, but with his own Consent, or rather at his Desire.

He shall also bring him to the Door, or the Door-post.] After the Case had been heard, and the Judges had given Sentence.

And his Master shall bore his Ear through with an Awl.] In token that he was now affixed to his House, and might not so much as step over the Threshold without his Leave, but be obedient to his Will for ever. This is to be understood only of one that was sold by the Court, not of him that sold himself. And though the Hebrews take this to have been a Mark of Infamy, set upon a Man who chose Servitude before Liberty; yet it being chosen out of Love to his Master, I cannot think that they intended by this Act to disgrace him, but look upon it only as a solemn Addition of him to his Master's Service; which was done, it is likely, in the Presence of the Judges. This Custom of boring the Ears of Slaves, lasted a long time after this in Syria and Arabia, as Bochartus shows out of Juvenal, Sat. i. and Petronius, L. iii. Hierozoic. c. 6. p. 1.

He shall serve him for ever.] Till the Year of Jubilee, or till his Master died (for his Son was not to detain him, when his Father was dead) unless he would release him, or he was redeemed.

Ver. 7. And if a Man sell his Daughter, to be a Maid-servant.] Besides the two former sorts of Persons sold to be his Servants, there was a third here mentioned, which is thus expounded by the Hebrews; That she was to be a Virgin under Age; that is, less than twelve Years old and a Day. For if she was more than that, it was not lawful for him to sell her: And when she came to be of Age, it put an end to her Ser-vitute, as well as the Year of Jubilee did, or Redemption, or the Death of her Master. Besides, her Father might not sell her, unless he were reduced to extreme Poverty. If he did, without such Necessity, he was forced by the Court of Judgment to redeem her. And she was not to be sold neither, unless there were some hope her Master or his Son might take her to wife.

She shall not go out as the Men-Servants do.] There were other, and better Conditions for her, than for the Servant, mentioned ver. 3, 4. particularly, her Master could not marry her to any body, but to himself or his Son.

Ver. 8. If she please not her Master, who hath betrothed her to himself.] This shows she was sold to him, upon the Presumption he would take her for his Wife; and there was such a previous Agreement about this, that there needed no other Espousals: But if, after this, he changed his Mind, and did not like her enough to make her his Wife, then God ordains as follows.

Then shall he let her be redeemed.] She was to serve her Master six Years, if she was sold for so long; unless she was redeemed (which her Master is here required not to refuse) or manumitted, or set free by the Year of Jubilee, or by the Death of her Master; or (which was peculiar in this Case) the Signs of her being ripe for Marriage appeared. See Selden in the Place before-mentioned.

To sell her to a strange Nation he shall have no Power.] No Man had power to sell an Hebrew Servant to one of another Nation; and therefore by a strange People (as the Word is here in the Hebrew) must be meant an Israelite of another Family, that was not of her Kindred, nor had any right of Redemption.

Seeing he hath dealt deceitfully with her.] Frustrated her Hope of marrying her.

Ver. 9. If he hath betrothed her to his Son.] Which was expected from him, if he did not think fit to marry her himself, he shall deal with her after the manner of Daughters. If the Word be relate to the Father, the Meaning is, he shall give her a Portion, as if she were his own Daughter. If it relate to the Son, the Meaning is, he shall treat her like a Wife.

Ver. 10. If he take him another Wife, her Food, &c.] If after the Son had married her he took another Wife besides, he was still to perform to this all those Things that belong to a Wife, viz. give her Food, and Raiment, and at certain Times (which were determined by Law in some Countries) cohabit with her as her Husband. From this Place the Hebrews have made a general Rule, That these three Things are owing to all Wives from their Husbands, viz. Alimony, Clothes, and the Conjugal Duty. For howsoever the Vulgar Latin understand the last Word, the Hebrews generally take it for that which St. Paul calls due Benevolence, 1 Cor. vii. 3. See Selden, de Uxor. Hebr. L. iii. c. 4. Now what was accounted Alimony, and sufficient for Clothes, he shows cap. v. and what belongs to the other cap. vi. The Hebrew Word Gonata, which we translate Duty of Marriage, properly relates to the stated and determined Time, wherein every thing is to be done; and therefore here here signifies the Use of Marriage, certo tempore & modo; as Bochart hath well expounded it, L. ii. Canaan, c. 11. Many indeed will have it derived from מין, from which comes מין an Habitation; as if it signified here the Cohabitation of a Man with his Wife. But Aben Ezra rather refers it to ענין, from whence comes ענין Time: Whence Gonat signifies the set and appointed Time wherein every thing is done. And so the Chaldee uses the Word goneta, for the Term prescribed to every thing (as the same Author observes) that it may be done in due time and manner.

Theodorick Hackspan thinks Moses here speaks of the Father; to whom all the precedent and subsequent Acts belong, and not to the Son.

Ver. 11. And if he do not these three to her.] i. e. Neither marry her to himself, nor to his Son, nor suffer her to be redeemed.

Then she shall go out free without Money.] When she came of Age, and was ripe for Marriage, she was to be set free, and pay nothing for her Freedom: Nay, on the contrary, he was to give her something, as appears from Deut. xv. 12, 13, 17. What the Signs of Puberty were, Mr. Selden shows, Lib. de Successionibus, c. 9.

Ver. 12. He that smiteth a Man, so that he die.] That is, commit wilful Murder, as we now speak.

Shall surely be put to death.] Wheresoever we find this Word Maveth (Death) absolutely, without any Addition, it always signifies Strangling. They are the Words of R. Levi Barzelonita. But the Jewish Doctors will not have this Law extend unto Proselytes of the Gate, much less to Gentiles; whom, if any Israelite killed, he was not to suffer Death for it. See Mr. Selden, L. iv. de Jure N. & G. c. 1. But Plato, in his Book of Laws, L. ix. p. 872. hath determined more justly than these Rabbies, that in the Case of Murder, the same Laws should be for Strangers and for Citizens.

Ver. 13. And if a Man lie not in wait.] Do not design to kill another.

But God deliver him into his Hand.] But he happens, as we speak, to kill a Man by that Action which aimed at another End. This the Scripture expresses more religiously, by acknowledging God in every thing that falls out, who permits such Things as are mentioned, Deut. xix. 5. whereby a Man is killed, without the Intention of him who was about such Actions.

Then I will appoint him a Place, whither he shall flee.] He may flee to one of the Places, which I will appoint for his Security. Which Place, the Jews say, was the Camp of the Levites, while they continued in the Wilderness: But when they came to Canaan, there were Cities appointed for this Purpose, as we read Numb. xxxv. 11, 12. Deut. xix. 2, 3, &c. And there being several kinds of involuntary killing Men, the Hebrews make these οὐρανισμεία, or Places of Refuge, to belong only to one of them, for the rest did not need them; as Mr. Selden shows, L. iv. de Jure N. & G. c. 2. An Officer of Justice was not bound to flee, if he chanced in the Execution of his Office to kill a Man that resisted him. Nor a Master, if he killed his Scholar; or a Father his Son, when he gave him Correction.

Ver. 14. But if a Man come presumptuously.] The Vulgar Latin rightly translates it indus-triously, or with design to kill him; for it is opposed to Ignorance. The Hebrew Word also carries in it a Signification of boiling Anger; which doth not alter the Case: For if a Man, in the height of his Rage, resolved to kill another, and laid wait for him to execute his Design, it was justly judged to be wilful Murder, and punished with Death. Which was far more equal than Plato's Law, That such a Man should only be banished for three Years; as he, that on a sudden killed a Man in his Anger, only for two, L. ix. de Legibus, p. 867.

Upon his Neighbour.] The Hebrew Doctors by Neighbour understand only an Israelite, or a Proselyte of Justice. As for others, they were not put to death, if an Israelite killed one of them. Which was not the Intent of this Law; wherby God would have all Men that lived among them safe and secure from being murdered.

To slay him with Guile.] By which it appeared the Act was designed and deliberate. For two Things are denoted by this Word with Guile; first Fore-thought, and then Delay, as Isaac Karo observes: See L'Empereur in Bava kama, Cap. iii. Sect. 6.

Thou shalt take him.] If it be enquired who should take him, it seems to be determined, Deut. xix. 12. where the Elders of the City were to fetch away a wilful Murderer from the City of Refuge. In After-Times the King ordered it, as Moses did while he lived, 1 Kings i. ult. ii. 29. By which Places it appears, That if a Man refused to come from the Altar (being judged upon proof to be a wilful Murderer, or other high Offender) he might be there killed; as Georg. Ritterbusius shows, Lib. de Jure Asylorum, c. viii. where he observes out of Plutarch, in his Laconia, that Agefilaus declared publicly at the Altar of Pallas, where he sacrificed an Ox, that he thought it lawful to kill one that treacherously assaulted him, even at the Altar. And thus the Practice was among Christians (as he there shows) when their Temples became Sanctuaries to Malefactors.

From my Altar.] This was an Asylum, as well as the Cities of Refuge; but under many Limitations, both with respect to the part of the Altar, and to the Persons that fled thither, and to the Crime they had committed; as Mr. Selden shows, in the Place above-mentioned, p. 475.

That he may die.] Though he was the High-Priest, and in the Act of Sacrifice, he was to be taken away without Delay, if he had committed wilful Murder; if it was involuntarily, then he was to be taken from thence, and carried to the City of Refuge: For God would not have a pious Place (as Conradus Pellicanus glosses) be a Protection to Impiety. See Mr. Selden, L. iii. de Synedr. c. 8. p. 100.

Maimonides's Observation is pertinent enough upon this Occasion: That the Mercy which is shown to wicked Men, is no better than Tyranny and Cruelty to the rest of God's Creatures; and therefore tho' such Persons fought to God for his Patronage, by betaking themselves to that which was dedicated to his Name, he would not afford them any Protection, but commanded them to be delivered up to Justice; More Nevoch. P. iii. c. 39.

Ver.

Ver. 15. And he that smiteth his Father or Mother.] So as to wound them, and to make the Blood come; or to leave a Mark of the Stroke, by making the Flesh black and blue, as we speak: Selden, L. ii. de Synedr. c. 13. p. 556.

Shall be surely put to death.] Strangled (say the Hebrews, see ver. 12.) by the Sentence of the Judge, there being competent Witnesses of the Fact, as in other Cases. The giving them faucy Words, or making Mouths at them, which signified Contempt, was punished also with Whipping. There was no need to say any thing of killing them; for all wilful Murder was punished with Death. And Solon, it is commonly noted, made no Law about this; because it was not to be supposed any Man would be so wicked. Nor was this Crime known among the Persians, as Herodotus saith, in his Days. Nor do we find any mention of it in the Law of the twelve Tables. But in After-Times there were most severe Punishments enacted against Parricide, which are described at large by Modestinus. And Diodorus Siculus tells us of the like among the Egyptians. See Hen. Stephanus, in his Fontes & Rivi Juris Civilis, p. 18. Plato would have him that killed either Father or Mother, Brethren or Children, not only to be put to death, but to be disgraced after his Execution, by throwing his dead Body naked into a common Place without the City, where all the Magistrates, in the Name of the People, should every one of them throw a Stone at his Head, and then carrying him out of the Coasts leave him without Burial, L. ix. de Legibus, p. 873.

Ver. 16. He that stealeth a Man.] By a Man the Hebrews understand an Israelite, whether he was a Freeman, or but a Servant; as Mr. Selden observes, L. vi. de Jure N. & G. c. 2.

And selleth him.] No Israelite would buy him, and therefore such Plagiaries sold him to Men of other Nations. Which made the Crime to be punished with Death; because it was a cruel Thing, not only to take away his Liberty, but make him a Slave to Strangers.

Or if he be found in his Hand.] Though he had not actually sold him, yet his Intention was sufficiently known by his stealing him.

Shall be surely put to death.] I observed above, ver. 12. they interpret this Phrase every where to signify strangling. If it be said any where his Blood shall be upon him, it signifies stoning. Maimonides makes this the Reason why such a Man was condemned to die, because it might well be thought he intended to kill him, whom he violently carried away (at least, as I understand it, if he could not find means to sell him) More Nevoch. P. iii. c. 41.

Ver. 17. And he that curseth his Father, or his Mother, &c.] The Hebrews take this Law to concern those who cursed their dead Parents, no less than those who cursed them when they were alive; but not without Premonition, and Witnesses, as in other Capital Crimes: And not unless they cursed their Parents, by some proper Name of God, as Mr. Selden observes out of the Jewish Doctors, L. ii. de Synedr. c. 13. This and the other Law, ver. 15. enacted Death as the Punishment of such Crimes, because they were a Sign (saith Maimonides, More Nevoch.

P. iii. c. 41.) of a desperate Malice, and audacious Wickedness; being a Subversion of that Domestic Order, which is the prime Part of good Government: See Lev. xx. 9. And thus far the Athenians went in this Matter, that by their Law a Son was disinherited who reproached his Father. And if the Father did not prosecute such a Son, he himself became infamous. So Sopater ad Hermogenem; Τὸν ὕβριστὰ τὸν αὐτὸ πατέρα μὴ μετέχεν τῆς οὐσίας καὶ τὸν ὑβριστὰ πατέρα μὴ ἐπιτίθει τῷ πατρὶ ἀτιμόν εἶναι. By the same Law also, if he struck his Father, both his Hands were to be cut off; as we read in Heracles Ponticus, in Allegor. Homer. and in Quintilian, Declam. 372. Qui patrem pulsaverit, manus ei incidantur. And by another Law he was to be stoned to death, as the Author of Problemata Rhetor. tells us: Νόμος ἐκέλευσε τὸν τυφάλα αὐτὸ τὸν πατέρα λιθοβολῆσαι; and that without any formal Process against him, ὡτὶ τῷ δέμῳ ἀνετίθεται.

Ver. 18. And if Men strive together.] Fall out and quarrel.

And one smite another.] So that from Words they proceed to Blows.

With a Stone, &c.] Men usually in their Anger take up any thing that is next at hand, to throw at him against whom they are enraged; or finding nothing, smite them with their Fists.

And he die not, but keepeth his Bed.] Sometimes the Blow falls in such a Place, that sudden Death follows; or such a Wound or Bruise is given, as confines a Man to his Bed.

Ver. 19. If he rise again, and walk abroad, &c.] If a Man recovered so far as to get up and walk abroad after the Stroke, it was presumed (though he died not long after) it was by his Negligence, or something else, not of the Blow he received. And upon the hearing of the Cause, the Judges were to acquit the Man that gave the Blow; i. e. he was not to die for it.

Only.] The Hebrew Particle Rak signifies but or truly, as well as only; and here expresses, that the Man who gave the Blow should not escape all Punishment, but suffer something for the Hurt he had done. Yet if we take it to signify only, the Sense is not much altered; for the Meaning is (as Constant L'Empereur observes, in Bava kama, Cap. viii. Sect. 1.) by this Word to exclude Death, but not other Punishment in his Purse.

He shall pay for the loss of his Time, &c.] The Jews say, in Bava kama, Cap. viii. Sect. 1. that Satisfaction was to be given him for the Loss he had sustained, in five Things; for the Hurt in his Body, the Loss of his Time, the Pain he had endured, the Charge of Physician and Surgeon, and the Disgrace; all which they there endeavour to prove out of the Scripture. Two of them are plainly here. The first of which the Doctors upon the Misna consider with great Nicety, as L'Empereur observes upon the fore-named Treatise; some Men being able to earn more by their Labours than others; and the Disability the Stroke brought upon them, being more or less, of a larger and shorter Continuance; with respect to all which, a proportionable Compensation was made to them.

And shall cause him to be thoroughly healed.] Here they also distinguish between the Cure of the Wound, Bruise or Swelling, caused by the Stroke, and of any other breaking out that he chanced to have at the same Time. He was bound to pay for the Cure of the former, but not of the latter. And if after a Man was cured he fell ill again, he that struck him was not bound to take Care of his Cure.

The same Provision is made in the Civil Law, as L'Empereur notes, which perfectly agrees with this Constitution of Moses — Judex computat mercedes medicis præstitas, cæteraquæ impendia, quæ in curatione facta sunt: Præterea operas quibus caruit, aut cariturus est ob id, quod inutilis factus est.

According to Plato's Laws, he that wounded another in his Anger, if the Wound was curable, was to pay τὴ βλάβης τὴν διπλασίαν, double to the Damage the wounded Man sustained thereby. If it was incurable, he was to pay fourfold; and so he was to do likewise if it were curable, but left a remarkable Scar. If the Wound was given involuntarily, he was to pay only simple Damages: Τυχὸν γὰρ νομοέτης εἰδὼς ἱκανὸς εἶναι: For no Law-giver is able to govern Chance, L. ix. de Leg. p. 878, 879.

Ver. 20. If a Man smite his Servant, &c.] A Slave, who was not an Israelite, but a Gentile.

He shall surely be punished.] With Death, say the Hebrew Doctors (in Selden, L. iv. de Jure N. & G. c. 1. p. 463.) if the Servant died while he was beating him; for that is meant by dying under his Hand. But it seems more likely to me, that he was to be punished for his Cruelty, as the Judge who examined this Fact, thought meet. For his smiting with a Rod, not with a Sword, was a Sign he intended only to correct him, not to kill him. And besides, no Man could be thought to be willing to lose his own Goods, as such Servants were.

Ver. 21. Notwithstanding, if he continue a Day or two.] A Day and a Night, as the Hebrew Doctors interpret it.

He shall not be punished.] Because it might be presumed he did not die of those Strokes.

He is his Money.] His Death was a Loss to his Master; who therefore might well be judged not to have any Intention to kill him; and was sufficiently punished by losing the Benefit of his Service.

Ver. 22. If Men strive, and hurt a Woman with Child.] Who interposed between the contending Parties, or came perhaps to help her Husband.

So that her Fruit depart from her.] She miscarry.

And yet no Mischief follow.] She do not die, as the Hebrew Doctors expound it. See Selden, L. iv. de Jure N. & G. c. 1. p. 461.

He shall be surely punished, according as the Woman's Husband will lay upon him.] Her Husband may require a Compensation, both for the Loss of his Child, and the Hurt or Grief of his Wife. Yet he was not to be Judge in his own Case; but it was to be brought before the publick Judges, as it here follows.

And he shall pay as the Judges determine.] Who considered in their Decree what Damage was done; which was estimated by the Hurt his Wife received in her Body, and by the lessening of her Price, if she were a Slave, and might be sold. Unto which several other Mulcts were added, to be given to the Woman herself, as Mr. Selden observes in the Place above-named.

Ver. 23. And if any Mischief follow.] If the Woman did die.

Thou shalt give Life for Life.] In the Interpretation of this, faith Jarchi, our Masters differ. For some by Life understand that which is properly so called, or the Person himself; so that it should signify being put to Death: But others understand by it a pecuniary Mulct; that so much Money should be paid to the Heirs, as the Person killed might have been sold for. The LXX carry it to quite another Sense; which is, that if a Woman miscarry, and the Child was, μὴ ἐξεκτισμένον, not yet formed and fashioned, that the Man who occasioned the Miscarriage was to pay a Fine. But if it were formed, then Life was to be given for Life. So that this whole Law is to be understood of an Abortion; and according to the Condition of the Abortive (not the Life or Death of the Mother) so the Punishment was to be inflicted: And thus Philo takes it, and hath a large Discourse upon it. See Selden, L. iv. de Jure N. & G. c. 1. p. 464. and Constantine L'Empereur in Bava kama, p. 200, &c.

Ver. 24, 25. Eye for Eye, Tooth for Tooth, &c.] These and all the rest that follow, to the End of the 25th Verse, the Hebrews understand to signify pecuniary Mulcts, as may be seen in their Comments upon this Place: And Maimonides gives three Reasons for it, which L'Empereur takes Notice of, and endeavours to confute in his Annotations upon Bava kama, p. 187, &c. 198, &c. But after all, there seems to be a great deal of Reason, at least in many Cases, to admit of a Compensation: As in that mentioned by Diodorus Siculus, L. xii. where the one-eyed Man complained of this Law (which was among the Heathen) as too rigid; for if he lost the other Eye, he should suffer more than the Man whom he injured, who had still one Eye left. Upon such Considerations Phavorinus argues against this Law, which was one of the twelve Tables, as not possible to be justly executed, according to the very Letter of it: For the same Member of the Body is far more valuable to one Man than it is to another. For Instance; the Right-hand of a Scribe, or a Painter, cannot be so well spared as the Right-hand of a Singer; and therefore the Law of the twelve Tables, concerning Taliones (Like for Like) was with this Exception. Ni cum eo pacet; that is, if he who had put out a Man's Eye, or taken away the Use of any other Member, would not come to an Agreement, de talione redimenda, to make him Satisfaction, and redeem the Punishment, he was to suffer in the very same Kind. So Sex. Cæcilius expounds it in Aulus Gellius, L. xx. c. 1.

Ver. 26. If a Man smite the Eye of his Servant, or the Eye of his Maid, &c.] It is but Reason that this should extend to all Servants, though of another Nation, not merely to those who were Jews. And so Maimonides seems to allow, allow, when he saith, This is a Precept of Piety and Mercy to poor Wretches, who should not be any longer afflicted with Servitude, when they have lost a Member of their Body, More Nevoch. P. iii. c. 41. And therefore the common Resolution of their Doctors is very cruel, that Gentile Servants (whom they call Canaanites) who were not circumcised, should not have the Benefit of this Law: For they thus distinguish Servants of another Nation; some were circumcised and baptized, others still remained Gentiles, or were only Profelytes of the Gate. The former Kind might be set free three ways; by being redeemed by a Price paid by themselves or any Friend; by Manumission, and by Virtue of this Law, upon the Loss of any Member. For though only an Eye and a Tooth be here mentioned, yet herein are included all the rest of the principal Members of the Body, which being mutilated, cannot be repaired; which they reckon to be four and twenty in all. If they did not dismiss such a Servant thus maimed, the Court of Judgment, upon an Appeal to it, compelled them to give him his Liberty, with a Certificate of it. But the second Sort of Gentile Servants could be made free only by the two first Ways, having no Benefit (according to this Doctrine) by this third Way here mentioned. See Selden, L. vi. de Jure N. & G. c. 8. But Heathens themselves were more merciful than these Doctors; for the Civil Laws (as L'Empereur observes upon Bava kama, Cap. 8. Sect. 3.) made better Provision for Slaves when they were hardly used.

Ver. 27. And if he smite out his Man Servant's Tooth, &c.] The Loss of a Tooth was not so great as that of an Eye; yet to prevent Cruelty, God ordained a Master should lose the Service of his Slave for so small a Loss as this.

Ver. 28. If an Ox gore a Man, or a Woman, that they die, then the Ox shall be surely stoned.] This was not a Punishment to the Ox, as the Sadducees, saith Maimonides, cavil against us, but to his Owner; who was admonished hereby to look better after his Cattle: For which Reason also the Ox was not to be eaten, More Nevoch. P. iii. c. 40.

And his Flesh shall not be eaten.] Because God would have the Owner entirely lose all Benefit by it, as Maimonides interprets it. And so Josephus, L. iv. Anticteol. c. 8. μὴ δὲ ἐσθῆναι τὸ σῶμα αὐτοῦ, &c. It was not permitted to be so much as profitable to him for his Nourishment. And the Hebrew Doctors say, that if a Man eat so much as the Bigness of an Olive of this Flesh, he was to be scourged: By this Means both he and others were admonished to be more careful and cautious. And God also declared how heinous the Crime of Murder is, the Punishment of which, in some Sort, reached even unto Beasts; which were therefore also stoned when they had killed a Man, that no more might be in Danger of their Lives by them. Some think its Flesh therefore could not be eaten, because, being stoned, it was a Carcase whose Blood was in it. But Maimonides answers to this (in his Treatise of forbidden Meats) that the Scope of the Law is, that as soon as the Sentence for its being stoned was pronounced, it became unclean. Nay, if a Man, to prevent this Sentence, killed it after a legal Manner, no Man might eat a Bit of it. And when it was stoned, the Flesh was neither sold nor given to the Gentiles, nor to the Dogs, &c. as Bochart observes, L. ii. Hierozioc. P. i. c. 40.

The same Maimonides, in his Treatise of Pecuniary Mulcts, rightly extends this Law to other Creatures, whether Beasts or Birds, that any Man kept; as L'Empereur observes upon Bava kama, cap. 4. sect. 5. And Plato, I observe, hath the very same Law, that ἐὰν ὁ πάροχός τις ἢ ζῶον ἄλλο τι σφενδάσῃ τινά, &c. if an Ox, or any other Animal, kill a Man (except it were in the publick Combats) the Officers called ἄρχοντες, that were set over their Fields, were to kill it, and throw it out of their Territories, ἐξωστῆναι τῆς χώρης ἀποκτείναντας διέδοισαι, L. ix. de Legibus, p. 873.

But the Owner shall be quit.] The Loss of his Ox was all his Punishment. And if th^e Owner did not kill the Man, but only wound him, in that Case the Owner was obliged to give him such a Compensation as the Judge might think equal, and to take Care the like happen'd not again.

Ver. 29. But if the Ox were wont to push in Time past, and it hath been testified to him, &c.] In the former Case the Owner was only punished with the Loss of his Ox, it being the first Time that it had been known to push. But if the Ox had formerly been known to be so unruly, and he had been told of it, and yet did not take Care to prevent further Mischief; then he, as well as the Ox, were to be put to Death. The Jewish Doctors indeed have soften'd this by divers Exceptions: As first, they say it was to be proved that the Ox had pushed upon three several Days; for though it appeared he pushed a great many Times in one Day, it would not make the Man liable. And secondly, it was to be testified not only to the Owner, but before the Magistrate, that he had pushed so often. And lastly, they interpret the last Words of this Verse (the Owner also shall be put to Death) of Punishment by the Hand of Heaven; that is, they leave him to God. See Bochart in his Hierozioc. P. i. L. ii. c. 40. But though Abarbinel propounds this as the Opinion of their wise Men, yet he was sensible of its Absurdity: For he confesses that God doth decree the Sentence of Death should be executed upon the Owner of the Ox; only he thinks that he remits something of the Strictness of it in the next Verse. And there are three Cases here mentioned relating to this Matter; one in the foregoing Verse, where the Ox is ordered to be stoned; another in this, where the Owner is also made liable to be put to Death; and a third in the next Verse, where a pecuniary Mulct is only set upon him.

Ver. 30. If there be laid upon him a Sum of Money, then he shall give it for the Ransom of his Life.] By this it appears there might be a Case wherein the Owner of the Ox should not be put to Death, but only be fined, though the Ox had been wont to push, and he was told of it. And the Interpretation of this and the foregoing Law, which is given by Constantine L'Empe- reur, reur, is not unreasonable, upon Bava kama, c. 4. § 5. Either the Knowledge which the Owner had of the ill Conditions of his Ox, was certain or uncertain; and his Carelessness in preventing the Mischief he was wont to do, was greater or lesser; and the Friends of him that was killed pressed the strictest Justice, or were content to remit it. In the former Cases (if the Knowledge was certain, the Carelessness very gross, and the Friends were strict in the Prosecution) he was punished with Death; but if otherwise, he was punished only by setting a Fine upon him. Certain it is, that the foregoing Law might prove too rigorous in many Cases (as if the Ox pushed, being provoked; or broke loose, when he was tied up; or was let go by the Negligence of a Servant, &c.) and therefore God permitted the Judges to accept of a Ransom, as they saw cause; which was to be paid according as the Sanhedrim thought meet. So Jonathan.

Whatsoever is laid upon him. He was to submit to the Fine, whatsoever it was; and it was given to the Heirs of him that was killed. If a Man's Wife was killed, the Jews say it was given to the Heirs of her Father's Family, and not to her Husband.

Ver. 31. Whether he have gored a Son, or have gored a Daughter, &c.] Because what was said, ver. 29. of killing a Man or a Woman, might have been restrained to the Father or Mother of a Family, whose Loss was greatest, and their Lives most precious, therefore the same Law is here extended to the Children; yet both Jonathan and Onkelos confine it to the Children of Israelites, as if all Mankind besides were nothing worth. See Bochartus in the Place above-mentioned.

Ver. 32. If an Ox shall push a Man-servant or a Maid-servant, &c.] Whether the Servant was of greater or lesser Value, saith Maimonides, the Punishment was the Payment of thirty Shekels (and the Loss of the Ox) half the Price of a Freeman, who was estimated, he saith, at sixty Shekels, More Nevoch. P. iii. c. 40. He adds, in another Place (in his Treatise of Pecuniary Mulets) that the Owner was not bound to pay this Ransom, unless the Ox killed the Man out of his own Ground. For if he was killed within the Owner's Ground, the Ox indeed was stoned, but no Ransom was paid. Divers other Cases he mentions in that Book, as L'Empereur observes upon Bava kama, p. 85. where he takes notice that Solon himself wrote βλάτης τέτραπδων νόμον, a Law concerning the Mischief done by Cattle, as Plutarch relates in his Life.

Ver. 33. And if a Man shall open a Pit, &c.] In the Street, or publick High-way, as Jonathan rightly interprets it. For if he opened or digged a Pit in his own Ground, he was not concerned in this Law, tho' another Man's Beast fell into it.

And not cover it.] If he did cover it conveniently, though in time the Cover grew rotten, and a Beast fell into it, he was not bound to make it good, as Maimonides resolves the Case.

Ver. 34. The Owner of the Pit shall make it good, &c.] There were so many Cases arose upon this Law, that it is not easy to number them. Maimonides hath amassed together abundance belonging to this Matter, with wonderful Accuracy, as Bochartus observes; who hath transcribed a great many of them, in his Hierozoic. P. i. L. ii. c. 40. p. 391, &c.

Ver. 35. If one Man's Ox hurt another's, that he die.] Which equally belongs to all other Cattle, as Maimonides observes; for the Law mentions an Ox only for example-sake.

They shall sell the live Ox, and divide the Money, &c.] Though the Ox that was killed was worth as much more as the other, yet Satisfaction was to be made only out of the live Ox, which did the Mischief; as the same Maimonides observes, who hath several Cases upon this Law, as may be seen in the fore-named Book of Bochartus, p. 393. But it might so happen, that the Ox which was killed was of little Value, and the live Ox worth many Pounds: In which Case it seems so unreasonable the Man whose Loss was small should be a great Gainer by the Sale of the Ox which did the Mischief, that the Jewish Lawyers resolve the Meaning of this Law is, the Man whose Ox was killed, should receive half the Damage he had sustained; as L'Empereur observes upon Bava kama, cap. 1. § 4.

Ver. 36. Or if it be known that the Ox hath used to push, &c.] There is a great Difference between what is done casually, and what is done constantly. The former Verse speaks of the Hurt done by a Beast that was not wont to push; and this, of the Hurt done by one that was notoriously mischievous; and accordingly, greater Damages were given in this latter Case, than in the former. And by this general Rule the Jews regulated all other Cases; making those Mischiefs, that were done by Beasts which were wont to hurt, or were of a hurtful Nature, to be punished above as much more, than the Mischief done by a Creature that was not wont to hurt, or with a part of his Body which uses not to hurt. See L'Empereur, in Bava kama, Cap. 2. Sect. 1.

CHAP. XXII.

Ver. 1. If a Man shall steal an Ox, or a Sheep, and kill it, or sell it.] Before the Theft was discovered to be done by him.

He shall restore five Oxen for an Ox, and four Sheep for a Sheep.] There is a smaller Satisfaction required in other Things, ver. 9. and here is also a Disproportion observable between the stealing of an Ox and of a Sheep. The Reason of both was this; That Money, Goods, Garments, Jewels, which Men keep in their Houses within Towns and Cities, are better guarded, and not easily stolen, as Cattle in the Field: And of Cattle in the Field, an Ox was more easy to be stolen than a Sheep; for Sheep feeding in Flocks, may be all in view of the Shepherd; but Oxen feeding scattered one from another, are not so easily observed and kept by the Neatherd. Thus Maimonides, More Nevoch. P. iii. c. 41. But the true Reason of the Difference between an Ox and a Sheep, seems to be, That an Ox was of greater Value, and likewise useful to more Purposes in Husbandry (as ploughing, carrying in, and treading out the Corn, &c.) which made the Punishment of stealing an Ox greater than that of stealing a Sheep. Yet there was a Difference between a Thief who came and confessed his Sin of his own accord, and him that stood out till he was apprehended and convicted of it: For in the former Case, Moses seems to require only the Restitution of that which was stolen, with the Addition of a fifth Part of the Value, and a Sacrifice, Lev. vi. 4, 5. All this is far more equal than Plato's Constitutions, which for all Thefts require the same Punishment, which was paying double; ἐπί τε μέγα ἐλάττω σμυγρόν κλέσθῃ τις, ὅς ἑστύμῃ κείδω, &c. L. ix. de Legibus, p. 857.

Ver. 2. If a Man be found breaking up.] Some translate it, If a Man be found with a digging Instrument; or, it may signify any Sort of Weapon; yet he was to be taken in the very Act of breaking up, or digging.

And be smitten that he die, &c.] The Master of the House might kill the Robber in this Case; because it might well be thought he intended to kill him rather than lose his Booty. The Law of the twelve Tables allowed this, as A. Gellius relates, L. xi. c. 18. Duodecim Tabulæ nocturnum furem quoquo modo, diurnum autem, sese telo defenderit, interfici impunè voluerunt. It was one of Plato's Laws also, that if a Thief enter'd a Man's House in the Night, he might innocently kill him: Νύκτας φῶρα εἰς οἰκίαν εἰσέλθας, ἐπὶ κλοπῇ χειρμαίνων, ἐάν ἐλθὼν κλέψῃ τις, καθάρις ἔστω, L. ix. de Legibus, p. 874. But the Hebrew Doctors make some Exceptions; as if he did not fly, and if there were no Witnesses present; for if there were, then it was like Theft in the Day-time. See Grotius, L. ii. de Jure B. & P. cap. i. sect. 12.

Ver. 3. If the Sun be risen, &c.] When they might possibly know who he was; and it might be presumed he intended only to steal, not to kill; then to kill him was to be accounted Murder.

He shall be sold for his Theft.] For six Years. But the Hebrew Doctors have many Mollifications of this Law: For they say, a Woman was not to be sold; nor a Man, but for the principal Sum: For double, or four or fivefold, he was not to be sold, but have Credit for it till he was able to pay. And he was not to be sold who robb'd a Samaritan; nor if he had stolen less than he was worth when sold, &c. with many other, which so mitigate, that they almost abrogate it. But the Law of the twelve Tables thought it Reason, a Thief should be delivered to him whom he robb'd, to be his Slave; as A. Gellius tells us, L. xx. c. 1. See Bochart. Hierozoic. P. i. L. ii. c. 40.

Ver. 4. If it be certainly found in his Hand alive, &c.] There was a great Difference between Killing or Selling, after the Stealth, and having these Cattle found alive with him. In the former Case, he was punished four or fivefold, ver. 1. but in this only double: Because the former concealed his Theft with more Industry, and left less Hope of Discovery and Restitution than in the latter, as Bochart there observes: Where he also takes Notice of the like Law at Athens, mentioned by Demosthenes, and by A. Gellius, L. xi. c. 18. But the Hebrews here also have their Exceptions; and will not have this extended to Women, Children, and Servants.

He shall restore double.] In Case he did not confess the Fact himself, but was otherwise found out. For if he did accuse himself, and had neither sold nor kill'd that which he stole, he was not to restore double. He that stole from another Thief, was not bound, as Maimonides thinks, to restore double. But in Case a Thief kill'd what he had stolen, and after that consecrated it to God, he was obliged notwithstanding to restore fourfold; though if he consecrated it before he kill'd or sold it, only to restore double. For though the Sanctification of a Thing, after the Sin was committed, did not take away the Guilt, yet, before he aggravated his Fault by Killing or Selling what he stole, the Sanctification lessened the Punishment. See L'Empereur in Bava kama, cap. 7. sect. 1, 2.

Ver. 5. If a Man shall cause a Field or Vineyard to be eaten.] This our Rabbins, saith R. Levi of Barcelona, understand concerning the Damage done by Beasts eating another Man's Grass or Corn, &c.

And shall put in his Beast.] This they understand of the Damage that may be done by their Feet, in treading down the tender Grass or Corn.

Of the best of his Field, and of the best of his Vineyard, shall he make Restitution.] What is determined in this Case, the Jews extend to all other; That Men should make Satisfaction for the Wrong done to their Neighbours in any Kind, with the best of what they possessed of that Kind. So the Misna in Bava kama, cap. 1. sect. 1. and Abarbinel on this Place, Damages are paid out of the best: Which made Men very careful in looking after their Beasts, that they did no hurt in their Neighbours Ground. For which Plato orders only such Satisfaction to be made as the Αγεργόμοι should judge meet, L. viii. de Legibus, p. 843. But the Jews were so scrupulous in this Matter, that, to prevent the Damage one Man might do another, they made a Constitution that no Man should keep Goats, or Rabbits, or any such like small Creatures, near the Corn-fields or Vineyards, or Olive-yards of his Neighbour; no, nor in any Parts of the Land of Israel (as the Misna hath it in the Bava kama, cap. 7. sect. 7.) but in Syria, or in the Deserts of their own Land. This the Talmudists carry so far, as to urge it to inept Superstition; as L'Empereur observes on that Place.

Ver. 6. If Fire break out, &c.] The Hebrew Word properly imports that which breaks out of it self (as R. Levi Barcelonita observes) so that the Meaning of this Law is, that though a Man kindle a Fire within his own Bounds, and it spread further to the Damage of his Neighbour, he shall be guilty, though he had no Hand in putting the Fire to the Stacks of Corn which were burnt by it; because he should have look'd better after it when he had kindled it. For every Man, saith he, is bound to watch the Fire that he kindles, lest it do Mischief, it being its Nature to break out, and catch hold of any Thing that is near it: And therefore Plato ordains (in the Place Place mentioned upon the former Verse) that, ἐὰν πυρεύων τινὲς ἄλλω μὴ δειουλασθῇ ἅς τῷ γείτονι, &c. if a Man set fire to any combustible Matter, and do not take care his Neighbour receive no Harm by it, he shall pay such Damages as the Magistrates judge just. But here the Jewish Lawyers consider at what distance the Fire was kindled; and resolve, that if there was a Fence of four Cubits high, or a publick High-way, or a River between the Fire and the Field, or Stack of Corn that was burnt, the Man that kindled it was free. See Bava kama, Cap. 6. Sect. iv, v. and L' Empereur, in his Annotations there.

Ver. 7. If a Man shall deliver unto his Neighbour Money, or Stuff to keep, &c.] The Equity of the Law contained in this and the following Verse, is very well explained by Maimonides, P. iii. c. 42. More Nevoch. He that takes a Neighbour's Goods or Money to keep for nothing, and hath no Profit thereby, doth a Kindness to his Neighbour, and therefore is not to bear the Loss of them; which must fall upon the Owner himself. But he that desires to be the Keeper of his Goods, and receives a Benefit by the Use of them, or is paid for his Care, must make them good if they be stolen. Or if the Owner and the Keeper equally partake of the Profit, they must equally bear the Loss. R. Levi Barzelonita interprets this Place of that which a Man takes into his Custody, chinnam (as his Word is) gratis, as we speak, without any Reward for his Care in keeping it.

Ver. 8. Shall be brought to the Judges.] The principal Judges were called Elohim, Gods. And there were to be three of them at least; who were to examine upon Oath (ver. 11.) and endeavour to find out the Truth. See Selden, L. ii. de Synedr. c. 5. p. 232.

To see.] i. e. Find out.

Whether he hath put his Hand unto his Neighbour's Goods.] Or, whether through Negligence he suffered them to be stolen. In which he was bound to make them good, as Maimonides saith, in the Place before-mentioned: Who will have the Name of Elohim originally belong to Judges; and from thence to be translated to God, the Judge above all, P. ii. c. 2. But of this see cb. xx. 2.

Ver. 9. For all manner of Trespas, whether it be for Ox, or Ass, or Sheep.] Though these be only mentioned, yet the Law reaches to all Cattle whatsoever.

Which another challengeth to himself.] There is great variety in the Translation of these Words (as Mr. Selden shows, L. ii. de Synedr. c. 12.) but, according to ours, the Meaning is; When a Man affirms that he either deposited such Things with his Neighbour, or lent them to him, or that he took them (as R. Levi Barzelonita interprets it, Præcept. liv.) both Parties were to be brought before the Judge, that he might examine where the Right lay.

He shall pay double unto his Neighbour.] i. e. He who pretended to have deposited the Goods (suppose) was to pay double, if he brought an unjust Action against his Neighbour; or he with whom the Goods were deposited was to pay it, if it appeared he had dealt fraudulently: But if it were found that the Goods were lost by mere Chance, he was not bound to pay any thing.

Maimonides explains it thus, according to the Opinion of the Talmudists (as Mr. Selden observes, in the Place now mentioned) when a Man brings an Action against another, about such Things as are here mentioned, and the Defendant confesses part of the Charge, but denies the rest, he was to restore as far as he confessed; but for the other which he did not confess, he was to be put upon his Oath. Or if he denied the whole, and he that brought the Action had but one Witness against him, he was to purge himself by an Oath; for by the Law no Man was compelled to clear himself by an Oath, but in three Cases, of which this was one, when a Man was guilty by one Witness.

Ver. 10. If a Man deliver unto his Neighbour an Ass, or an Ox, or a Sheep, or any Beast to keep, &c.] If he lend any of these Things to his Neighbour upon certain Considerations, or let them for Hire, and his Neighbour affirms that they died, or were hurt, or driven away by Enemies, who carried them captive, but there was no Witness of any of these Allegations; then the Cause was to be brought before the Judge, to find out the Truth, in the Manner following:

Ver. 11. Then shall an Oath of the LORD be between them both, &c.] If there was no other way to discover the Truth, then he to whom they were delivered was to purge himself by an Oath that he had not killed the Beast, nor done any thing to hurt it; and the Owner was to trouble him no further: Nor was he bound to make any Satisfaction, provided he had used these Goods according to the Agreement between them; for if he had employed them contrary to their Contract, then he was bound to make them good to the Owner of whom they were borrowed or hired. If he refused to take the Oath, he was pronounced guilty, and Restitution was ordered to be made out of his Goods. But there were some Temperaments of this Law; for every Man was not admitted to purge himself by an Oath. For Instance: He that was of so bad a Reputation, that they had a Suspicion he would not stick to perjure himself, was not admitted to be adjured; no, though he that brought the Action required it, &c. See Mr. Selden, L. ii. de Synedr. c. 12. p. 520.

Ver. 12. And if it be stolen from him.] Thro' his Negligence who was intrusted with it.

He shall make Restitution to the Owner thereof.] Because he was bound to have look'd better after it, by receiving Wages for his Care and Pains in keeping it (as some interpret) or ingaging to make it good, if he did not take the same Care of it, as if it had been his own.

Ver. 13. If it were torn in pieces, then let him bring it for witness, &c.] If he could produce any part of it, as an Evidence that it was torn, and he endeavoured to rescue it, he was not to make it good. But here the Hebrew Doctors make many Exceptions: For they would have him make good what was torn by one Wolf alone; because they think he might have been able to defend the Cattle against one, though not against against many. If also he put the Oxen or Sheep into a Pasture wont to be infested with wild Beasts, or Thieves; or if he did not call in the Help of his Neighbours, &c. in these, and such like Cases, he was to make good that which was torn, as Maimonides reports their Judgment. See Bochart, Hierozoic. P. i. L. ii. c. 44.

Ver. 14. If a Man borrow ought of his Neighbour, and it be hurt or die.] This the Hebrew Doctors think concerns such Things as were lent to another out of Kindness, without any Consideration for the Use of them. About which, if there arose any Controversy, by reason of some Maim that it received, or its Death, it was to be determined by the Rule following.

The Owner thereof being not with it, he shall surely make it good.] These Words, and those in the beginning of the 15th Verse (But if the Owner be with it, he shall not make it good) seem to signify, that if the Owner was with the Thing that was lent, at the Time of its Hurt or Death, it was to be presumed he would do his best to preserve it, and see it was not ill used, and so must bear the Loss: But if he was not present at that Time, then the contrary was presumed, that the Borrower was in fault, and therefore bound to make it good. Which, though it may seem hard, was but necessary to make Men careful, and do their best to preserve what was lent them in pure Kindness. R. Levi of Barcelona (Præcept. lvi.) interprets it quite another way, in this manner: That if the Owner was with it at the Time it was borrowed, though not present at the Time of its Hurt or Death, the Borrower was free; but if the Owner was present at the Time of the Hurt or Death, but not at the Time of lending, he was bound to make it good: For the Matter (saith he) depends upon the beginning of it.

Ver. 15. If it be an hired Thing, it came for his Hire.] Some make the Hebrew Word Sachir (which we translate hired Thing) to relate unto the Person, if he be a Mercenary; i. e. the Man who lends, agrees to let the Borrower have it at a certain Price, &c. But this is the same, in effect, with the Sense of our Translation, which makes this Word relate to the Thing itself: Which if it were borrowed with a Condition to pay so much for the Use of it as the Lender demanded, then the Man who hired it was not bound to make it good, whether the Owner were present or not, when it was hurt, or died: But the Owner was to run the hazard, because of the Hire which he received for the Use of the Thing.

Ver. 16. If a Man intice a Maid that is not betrothed, and lie with her.] Whosoever lay with such a Maid in the City, was thought to have been an Inticer only (unless Witnesses came and proved that he forced her) because it might be well supposed her Voice would have been heard, if she had cried out upon the Force in the City. But if he lay with her in the Field, where no body could hear, it was presumed to be a Rape. Thus Maimonides, and other Hebrew Doctors.

He shall surely endow her to be his Wife.] This Law doth not say, as the Old Translation hath it, he shall endow her, and take her to be his Wife, but only, endow her to be his Wife; that is, give her such a Dowry, that she might be his lawful Wife. So the same Hebrew Doctors understand it; who will not have it to be a Command that he should marry her (though that was best) but only that he should make Satisfaction for taking away her Virginity; which was, by paying so much, in the Nature of a Dowry, as would render her fit to be his Wife, if both of them could agree. Yet so, that if either he, or she, or her Father refused (for it was in the Power of any of these, as they say, to hinder the Marriage) he paid this Mulct, as the Dowry of a Virgin, to her Father. See Selden's Uxor Hebr. L. i. c. 16. There is another Law of this Nature, Deut. xxii. 28, 29. but it speaks of a Virgin deflowred by Force: Of which see there.

Ver. 17. If her Father utterly refuse to give her unto him.] Here is mention made only of the Father, not of the Man that deflowred her; who, one would think, should have been bound to marry her, if she and her Father pleased. And so Josephus, ὁ πατήρ παρδόν, &c. αὐτὸς γαμήτω. But if the Father of the Damfel did not like to give her to him, he was to pay as here is directed.

He shall pay Money according to the Dowry of Virgins.] That is, saith Josephus, fifty Shekels, τὴν τιμὴν τῆς ὑβρεως, as a Satisfaction for her Reproach; L. iv. Archaeol. c. 8.

Ver. 18. Thou shalt not suffer a Witch to live.] This Law about Witches follows the other about Virgins; because Witches, among other Practices, help by evil Arts to allure and entice silly Virgins to consent to Mens Solicitations. Epiphanius reports, from one that saw it, such a Magical Operation used by a Jew, to procure the Love of a Christian Woman; who was preserved from the δύναμις φαρμακείας, Power of his Witchcraft, by the Seal of Christ (as he calls the Sign of the Cross) wherewith she fortified herself, at the first Attempt made upon her, Heref. xxx. n. 7, 8. But such wicked Wretches did a world of other Mischief, and therefore were to be put to death, whether they were Men or Women. The Scripture indeed mentions a Witch only (saith the Gemara of the Sanhedrim, c. 7. n. 10.) because for the most part they were Women, who were addicted to Magick. So Maimonides also; because the greater part of Evil Works are performed by Women, therefore the Law saith, Thou shalt not suffer MECHASSHEPHA, a Witch to live; P. iii. c. 37. More Nevochim. Where he discourses of the Sorts of Witchcraft; and in general affirms, that there were no Magical Works performed, without respect to the Stars: For such People held that every Plant had its Star, and so had every Animal, and all Metals. For Example; they said, 'Pluck such a Leaf, or such an Herb, 'when the Sun, or any other Planet, is in such 'a Place: Let such a Metal be melted under 'such a Constellation, or such a Constitution of 'the Moon; and then say such and such Words, 'and let a Fume be made with such Herbs or 'Leaves, and that in such and such a Form, and 'then this or that will follow. This was their 'Doctrine, and such Works as these were the 'peculiar Worship of the Stars, who were delighted,

‘lighted; they imagined, with such Actions, ‘Words, or Fumes, and for the sake of them ‘would do whatsoever was desired.

All this, he saith, he took out of their Books then extant; from which he concludes, That the Scope of the Law being, that all Idolatry should be taken out of the World, and that no Virtue should be ascribed to any Star, of doing good or hurt to Men (which Opinion led Men to their Worship) it necessarily followed, that all Witches and Wizards shall be put to Death, because they were Idolaters; though after a peculiar and different Way from that wherein the Vulgar worshipped Idols. And he thinks that a Witch is rather mentioned than a Wizard (though both intended) because Men are naturally more tender towards the Female Sex, and apt to favour them; and therefore it is as if Moses had said, Thou shalt kill even a Woman that is guilty of this Crime. But afterward, Lev. xx. 27. he commands both Men and Women to be stoned.

Others of the Hebrew Doctors (particularly R. Levi Barzelonita) give this Reason why Witches were not to live, ‘Because they directly ‘thwarted God most blessed, who made all ‘Things when he created them for such and ‘such Purposes; which they perverted, and by ‘Devices of their own, made to serve other ‘Ends, which God never designed’. Præcept. lxii. But this they could not do without the Help of evil Spirits; and therefore their Crime consisted in entering into a Familiarity and a League with them, whose Assistance, upon such Occasion, they invoked; which was, in Effect, a renouncing of God.

This was an Impiety which had overspread the whole World, especially the Eastern Parts of it. And as for the Romans, we find a Law as old as the twelve Tables against Witchcraft; Apud nos in duodecim Tabulis cavetur, ne quis alienos fructus excantassit, as we read in Seneca, L. iv. Nat. Quæst. c. 7. where he mentions the like Law among the Athenians. For the Greeks were extremely addicted to this, especially in Theffaly; of which none, that I have read, spake so plainly at Plato, in his eleventh Book of Laws, p. 932, 933. where he orders Punishments, not only for those who destroyed others by Portions, but for those who pretended to be able to revenge themselves or others, ἢ μαγιστείας τε ποιοῦντες ἢ ἐπωδαῖς καὶ καθάρσεσσι λεγόμεναις, ‘either by certain Inchantments, or by Charms, ‘or by those Spells which are called Ties, or ‘Knots: Concerning which, he acknowledges ‘it is hard to know any Thing, or to persuade ‘others there is nothing in them: For if a Man ‘see any where κίβητα μιμήματα πεπρασμένα, ‘&c. waxen Resemblances, made and set either at their Doors, or in the turning of the ‘Ways, or at the Tombs of their Ancestors; ‘none can prevail with him to neglect these ‘Things, because he knows not what Efficacy ‘is in them’. And therefore he would have even such People, who used these Sorts of Witchcrafts, to be put to Death, if they were Professors of any Sort of Knowledge (as Μαγιστὸς καὶ τελεσφόρος) but if they were simple People, he leaves the Judges to punish them, as they found Reason.

Ver. 19. Whosoever lieth with a Beast, shall surely be put to Death.] This is so infamous a Sin, and such a Dishonour to Nature, and the Author of Nature (as Conr. Pellicanus well glosses) that it was not fit such a Person should live upon the Face of the Earth, but die without Mercy. See Lev. xviii. 23. xx. 15, 16. where this is more largely handled.

Ver. 20. He that sacrificeth unto any God, save unto the LORD only, he shall be utterly destroyed.] Sacrifice being the principal Act of Worship in those Days, includes in it all other Acts of Worship and Divine Service, which they were required to pay to the LORD alone, ch. xx. 2, 3, &c. but the Punishment of doing otherwise was not enacted till now: Of which he treats more largely, Deut. xvii. 2, 3, &c. See there.

Ver. 21. Thou shalt neither vex a Stranger, nor oppress him.] Here are two distinct Commands. The first of which [not to vex a Stranger] the Hebrews will have to consist in not upbraiding him with his former State of Heathenism, nor giving him any opprobrious Words; as saying, Remember what thou wast, or what thy Father did. And this was neither to be done to a Profelyte of Justice, nor to a Profelyte of the Gate, as far as Mr. Selden could judge of their Opinion herein, L. ii. de Jure N. & G. c. 4. The second [not to oppress him] consisted in not using him hardly, in their Dealings with him, by making him pay, for Instance, for any Thing more than it was worth: Which, the same Mr. Selden (L. vi. c. 5. p. 690.) thinks, the Hebrews were of Opinion, belonged only to their Usage of Profelytes of Justice, who were perfectly in their Communion. But this is very unreasonable; for (as R. Levi Barzelonita himself observes) by thus treating any Profelyte, they might endanger their Return to Paganism again, out of Indignation to be so despised; and much more when they saw they were wrong’d: Which God took Care they should not be, because they were more helpless than other Men, and had fewer Friends. Which is the Reason that this Precept (as the Jews themselves have computed) is inculcated in one and twenty Places. See particularly chap. xxiii. 9. Lev. xix. 33.

For ye were Strangers in the Land of Egypt.] There could not be a more powerful Reason to move them to treat Strangers kindly than the Remembrance of their own Oppressions in Egypt, from which they were delivered by the mere Mercy of God, which they ought to imitate.

Ver. 22. Ye shall not afflict any Widow, or fatherless Child.] Give them no trouble either in Word or Deed, as the same R. Levi interprets it (Præcept. lxxv.) but in all their Commerce with them, in buying, selling, or any other intercourse, treat them not only civilly, but kindly and benignly. And the Reason of the Precept, saith he, is the same with the former; because Widows and Orphans have few or none to protect them, or plead their Cause; and therefore the Law took care of them, as if their Husbands and Parents were yet alive.

Ver. 23. If thou afflict them in any wise.] By giving them ill Language, or by insulting over them, or destroying their Goods; much more if

if any Man finote them, he was liable to the Judgment of God, as Nachmanides interprets it.

And they cry at all unto me.] A Child, faith the same R. Levi, cries to his Father, and a Wife to her Husband; but the Widow and the Fatherless cry unto me, and I will hear them, for I am merciful.

I will surely hear them.] Punish you for your ill Usage of them, as it follows in the next Verse.

Ver. 24. And my Wrath shall wax hot.] This signifies their Punishment should be Οὐρανόθεν, sent upon them from God; who orders no Penalty to be inflicted by their Judges, because he intended himself to be their Avenger, and that in a very remarkable Manner, by serving them in their kind; as it here follows.

And I will kill you with the Sword, and your Wives shall be Widows, and your Children fatherless. Here the Hebrew Doctors cry out, Measure for Measure (as R. Levi observes) for he threatens that the Wives of those that afflicted them should be Widows, and their Children fatherless, and find none to take pity upon them. For with the Measure that Men mete withal, others shall mete to them: If a Woman (as he goes on) shall afflict them, she shall die, and her Husband shall marry another Wife, which shall afflict her Children.

Ver. 25. If thou lend Money to any of my People.] That is, to an Israelite.

That is poor by thee.] By a poor Man they do not understand one that goes a begging, but one in such Want that he is more to be pitied than those who have the Confidence to beg in the Streets. The Foundation of this Precept (as the before-mentioned R. Levi observes) was to fix in them the great Virtue of Mercy, Kindness, and Clemency; whereby poor People being help'd, in this way of lending them Money gratis, might recover again to a better Condition, by the Goodness of God to them.

Thou shalt not be as an Usurer to him.] Neither domineer over him, nor make him pray, and intreat, and wait long, as if he were a Slave; nor exact any thing for the Use of the Money.

Neither shalt thou lay upon him Usury.] Not make him find Sureties: Or, as some of them interpret it, this is a Precept requiring all Israelites to have no hand in letting out Money to Usury; either by writing the Bonds, or by being a Witness to them, or by being bound with others for the Interest of Money: For the Word they observe is in the Plural Number, Ye shall not put upon him Usury. Which Law, concerning Usury, is fully handled by Mr. Selden, L. vi. de Jure N. & G. c. 9, 10. where he shows that some Usury was forbidden by the Law, and other by the Decrees of their wise Men. The Law forbid them to contract to receive back again any Sum of Money more than they lent. But it was further required by their wise Men, that they should not receive any Gift before-hand to induce them to lend; nor any thing afterward by way of Gratuity, or to express their Thankfulness. Yet this last was permitted, in the Loan of Orphans Money, as Maimonides saith. And what was thus forbidden to be done to an Israelite, was permitted to be done to a Gentile. Nay, some will have that to be an affirmative Precept, which we read Deut. xxiii. 20. obliging them to take Usury of a Gentile, if they lent any Money to him. But that Maimonides contradicts. And there are those who think this Law only forbid them to take Usury of a poor Israelite, but not of a rich; it being unreasonable that he should increase his Wealth by the Use of his Neighbour's Money, and he have no Profit thereof.

Ver. 26. If thou at all take thy Neighbour's Raiment.] His Coverlid, as we speak, or Bed-clothes. For it is plain, by what follows, he speaks of that which was to keep him from the Cold in the Night.

To pledge.] As a Security for the Payment of the Money which he lent him.

Thou shalt deliver it to him by that the Sun goeth down.] This shows that he speaks of a poor Man; which is more fully declared Deut. xxiv. 12, 13.

Ver. 27. For that is his Covering only, &c.] It was contrary to Humanity, to keep from him the only Thing he had to keep him warm in his Bed; for it was in effect to kill him.

And it shall come to pass, when he crieth unto me, that I will hear him.] Punish thee for thy barbarous Cruelty (ver. 23.) And besides, the Hebrew Doctors say, he was to be beaten, by order of the Court of Judgment.

For I am gracious.] And would have you like my self.

Ver. 28. Thou shalt not revile the Gods.] i. e. The Judges, as no doubt it is to be interpreted. See Mr. Selden, L. ii. de Jure Nat. & Gent. c. 13. p. 268. And the Hebrew Doctors give this Reason for it; because it tends to terrify them from doing Justice, and exposes them to the Contempt and Hatred of the People; whom it also inclines to Sedition. But many of them (see him, c. i. p. 9.) will have another Precept contained in this, that they blaspheme not the Name of the Most High. Some few also (among whom is Philo) fanny it to be a Command not to revile the Gods that other People worship, though they be false ones. And so Julian the Apostate took it; who is confuted by St. Cyril, as Mr. Selden there observes.

Nor curse the Ruler of thy People.] That is, either the Prince of Israel, or the President of the great Sanhedrim. So R. Levi Barzelonita (Præcept. lxxvii.) The Intention of the Scripture is to admonish us of our Duty to him, who is the Prince of the Empire of Israel; with respect both to the Dominion of the Kingdom, and of the Law (as his Words are) it being a great Crime to speak evil of him, by whose Care all Differences were composed, &c.

If any Man was guilty of this Crime, he was to be scourged three times; and if he were the Son of a Prince, he had four Scourgings. And that very justly; for Heathens themselves reckoned this among the greatest Offences. It was one of the Laws of Charondas (as Hen. Stephanus observes, in his Fontes & Rivi Juris Civilis) ἔσω δὲ μέγιστα ἀδικήματα, θεῶν καλαφρόνησις, καὶ γονέων κακωσις ἐκείνη καὶ ἀρχόντων καὶ νόμων ἐπιγνώσις, καὶ ἐκδοσις ἀτιμίας δικαιοσύνης, Let these be reckoned the greatest Crimes;

Crimes; Contempt of the Gods, and voluntary Abuse of Parents; disrespect to Rulers and Laws, and voluntary Dishonour of Justice. In like Manner Zaleucus ordains, that next after the Gods, and Demons, and Heroes, παρὰ τῶν θεῶν καὶ δαίμονων καὶ ἡρώων οὐκ ἐστὶν ἀπὸ τῶν τιμῶν; Parents, and the Laws and Rulers, should be equally had in Honour. And Plato thought those that would not be subject to them, were unsufferable; because they had the Spirit of the old Titans, who would have pull'd the Gods out of their Thrones, οὐκ ἐξουσιάζουσιν τοὺς θεοὺς ἐκ τῶν θρόνων.

Ver. 29. Thou shalt not delay to offer the first of thy ripe Fruit, &c.] The Hebrews will have this to be a Direction for the bringing unto God, in due Order, those Things which were to be offered to him. As first, the Trumab, which was the first Oblation that was made out of the Corn when it was newly threshed out; which was to be, they say, a fiftieth Part, which was given to the Priest. Then the first Tithe, which was given to the Levites, and the second Tithe, which the Possessors eat at Jerusalem, when the Tabernacle was settled there. This Order, they say, God here requires them not to invert, by offering that last which should have been first. So R. Levi of Barcelona, Præcept. lxxviii. But, from what follows, it seems to relate only to the First-fruits of their Harvest, and of their Vintage, which they were bound to bring as soon as they were ripe; and it was the Portion of the Priests. See Deut. xviii. 4. There was no determinate Portion prescribed; but they who were tolerably good (as the Hebrews say) gave a fiftieth Part, liberal Men a fortieth, and covetous Men a sixtieth; less than which was not accepted for a Trumab.

The First-born of thy Sons shalt thou give me.] The Reason of this is given Chap. xiii. when it was first enacted.

Ver. 30. Likewise shalt thou do with thine Oxen, &c.] See ch. xiii. 2, 12, 15.

On the eighth Day thou shalt give it me.] It was not acceptable to God, because not fit to be offered to him till the eighth Day, for the same Reason that Children were not circumcised till the eighth Day. For all Creatures, when they are newly born, saith Maimonides (P. iii. More Nevoch. c. 49.) by reason of their abundant Moisture, are so weak and feeble, that it is doubtful whether they will live or no; and therefore, till seven Days be over, they are look'd upon as but Abortives (so his Words are) and scarce numbered among the Living. Besides, they are not sufficiently purged till then, from the Foulness of their Stomach and Bowels; which is another Reason they were not to be offered unto God, who did not accept that which was imperfect or impure. Whatsoever was the Reason, this Law was observed also among the Gentiles, as Bochart shows out of Pliny in his Hierozoic. P. i. L. ii. c. 50.

Yet there was this Difference between these, and the First-fruits mentioned in the foregoing Verse; that though these Creatures were fit for Sacrifice on the eighth Day, yet they might stay longer before they were offered, though not beyond the Year; for then they were not accepted (as was before observed, ch. xii. 5.) but the First-fruits of Corn, Wine and Oil, were to be offered presently as soon as they were ripe.

Ver. 31. And ye shall be holy Men unto me.] Because the Israelites were a peculiar People, separated to God by peculiar Laws and Rites by him instituted (and thence called an holy Nation, ch. xix. 6.) therefore God commanded them to distinguish themselves, even in their Diet, from other People, and look upon it as below their Dignity, to eat such Things as the Gentiles did. This is the Meaning of their being holy to God, as appears from Deut. xiv. 2, 3. 21.

Neither shall ye eat any Flesh that is torn of Beasts in the Field.] Both because the Blood was in it, and it was devoured by unclean Creatures. R. Levi, beforementioned, saith, it was unwholesome; which he makes the Reason of the Prohibition. But whether it was torn by a Wolf, a Lion, or a Bear, or any other Beast, it made no Difference, if so be it died presently, or not long after. So the Jews interpret the Hebrew Word Terephab, as L'Empereur observes out of Moses Mikkotfi (in his Notes upon Bava kama, cap. 7. sect. 2.) who saith it signifies that which a Beast tears, or bruises, so that it is near to Death, though it be not actually dead. For if it was dead, they call it נבלה Nevelab, a Carcase; which in their Language signifies not only that which dies of it self, but which is killed with a Weapon, or torn by a wild Beast. Accordingly they take Terephab here to signify not only that which is torn by Beasts, but that which any other way is so hurt, that it is near to Death: As if it fall from an House, and break its Ribs, or other Members; or an Arrow be shot through its Heart or Lungs, or any Disease have affected those vital Parts. If Death were likely to ensue upon such Things, it was not to be eaten.

In the Field.] Whether it were torn in the Field, or any other Place, it made no Difference; but the Field is mentioned because there commonly such Things happen.

Ye shall cast it to the Dogs.] R. Solomon saith, they might sell it to the Gentiles, whom the Jews counted no better than Dogs: Which agrees with the Decree in the Misna (Bava kama, cap. 7. sect. 2.) that though it appeared afterward, a Thief had stolen what was torn, yet he was to make the legal Restitution; contrary to the Opinion of R. Simeon, who absolved such a Thief, because he might not eat it, and consequently have no Benefit by it. But most thought he might sell it; and therefore was liable to make Satisfaction. If any Israelite did eat of it, he was to be scourged. Sir J. Marsham quotes the like Precept out of Phocilides his Verses, which end thus:

— ἄνθρωπος ἀπὸ ἀνθρώπου ἐδάωται.

Let Beasts be eaten by Beasts. Chron. Egypt. Sec. ix.

CHAP. XXIII.

Ver. 1. THou shalt not raise a false Report.] The Hebrews think this Law peculiarly concerns Judges, who are not to suffer their Minds to be prepossessed with false Reports; For that Word we translate raise, signifies also to take up, i. e. to entertain, or receive (as we have it in the Margin) and give Credit to Reports. And consequently they were not to hear any Man's Cause, unless his Adversary was present; but to look upon all as false, which was said by one Party alone, without the other. So R. Levi of Barcelona. Yet he confesses that the Law hath respect also to him who brings an Action against another; that he should not lay his Cause before the Judge, in the Absence of him that is to answer, though the Judge would hear it. And he also adds, that the Rabbins take it to comprehend such as report a Calumny, or that receive it, or give a false Testimony. And Philo thinks the Greeks from thence took that Law, μὴ μαρτυρεῖν ἀκοήν, not to make a Proof of a Hearsay; which was in the Attick Law, as Mr. Selden observes, L. ii. de Synedr. c. 13. p. 576. And it seems to me most rational, to take this to relate to Witnesses (as the following Clause doth) that they should neither calumniate any Man, nor bring ungrounded Reports to carry a Cause.
P p their

Put not thy Hand with the Wicked to be an unrighteous Witness.] This the Hebrews likewise think concerns Judges, who are required not to receive the Testimony of a wicked Man, nor do any Thing upon his Suggestions. And here they mention ten Sorts of Persons, whose Testimony was not to be received. But the last Words in this Clause incline one to think it rather concerns Witnesses than Judges: For to put one's Hand with another, is to help and assist him, to be confederate with him: And therefore, to put the Hand with the Wicked, is to help a wicked Man in a bad Cause, viz. (as the last Words interpret it) by giving a false Testimony in his Behalf. Of the Hebrew Word Chamas, which we rightly render unrighteous, or unjust, Bochartus hath a long Discourse in his Hierozyic, P. ii. L. ii. c. 15.

Ver. 2. Thou shalt not follow a Multitude to do Evil.] This may well be thought to respect Judges, as the foregoing Verse doth Witnesses: And the most obvious Meaning is, That no Judge should condemn an innocent Man, though the whole Court, besides himself, gave Sentence against him. But many of the Jews say, that they should not condemn one whom they thought guilty, if he was cast only by one Voice: If there were a Majority of two, then, indeed, they say, a Judge was bound to join with them. See Mr. Selden, L. ii. de Synedr. c. 5. p. 229. and c. 6. p. 259. where he shows they take the Word evil, in this Place, to signify the Evil of Punishment. See also cap. 12. p. 525. But this seems to be only a Subtily. Their Opinion is more reasonable, who, by the Hebrew Word Rabbim, here understand not a Multitude, but great and potent Men; to whom a Judge was not to have respect in Judgment, no more than to a poor Man; who (ver. 3.) is opposed to those Men of Might. But what follows, I think, will better interpret this.

Neither shalt thou speak in a Cause, to decline after many to wrest Judgment.] This is interpreted by Maimonides to signify, That no Judge was to give his Sentence in a Capital Cause, either for absolving or condemning, according to the Opinion of the rest, if he were not able to deliver any Opinion of his own. See Mr. Selden, L. ii. de Synedr. c. 13. p. 529. Other Fancies they have about the Word Rabbim in this Clause of the Verse, which he notes there, c. 9. p. 421. But the Sense I think will be most plain and easy, if we take Rabbim in the first Part of the Verse (as we do) for the Multitude; and in this latter Part, for the great and potent, or ruling Men, who are generally attended by a Multitude, and expound the whole thus; That the Judges were not to be deterred, either by the People, or by mighty Men, to pronounce a false Judgment. This agrees with what follows, and with Lev. xix. 15.

Ver. 3. Neither shalt thou countenance a poor Man in his Cause.] So as to give a wrong Judgment in his Favour. The Word we translate countenance (in Hebrew tebedar) signifies to adorn, or honour; and so we translate it, Lev. xix. 15. and so it may be translated here, Thou shalt not adorn, or set off a poor Man's Cause with fine Words and plausible Colours, to make it look better than it is. See Deut. i. 16, 17.

Ver. 4. If thou meet thy Enemy's Ox or Ass going astray, thou shalt surely bring it back to him again.] The Samaritan Copy adds (after Ox or Ass) or any other Beast. And Moses himself extends it to all Sorts of Goods that are lost, Deut. xxii. 3. But the Jewish Doctors (as R. Levi of Barcelona confesses) restrain the Word Enemy, to an Israelite; as if they thought not themselves bound to any such Kindness for one of another Nation. This perhaps they gathered from Deut. xxii. 1, 2. where, instead of the Word Enemy, we find Moses uses the Word Brother. But this should have taught them to look upon all Men, even Enemies, as Brethren, having the same common Original, and bearing the Image of the same God.

This Verse may be connected with the foregoing in this Manner: If you be inclined to show Pity, do it in such Instances as these, but not in Judgment.

Ver. 5. If thou see the Ass of him that hateth thee, lying under his Burden.] His Ass is only mentioned, but Oxen, and other such like Creatures are intended, as appears from the former Verse: Yet this likewise the hard-hearted Jewish Doctors would have belong only to an Israelite who hated them. And they put several Cases upon this Law: As, What if the Beast be a Gentile's, and the Burden belong to an Israelite, or on the contrary, what is to be done? And if they meet with two Beasts belonging both to Israelites, and labouring under Burdens; but one the Beast of a Friend, the other of an Enemy; which is he bound to help? In which they resolve, That he is by this Precept to have regard to the Beast of his Enemy; that he may subdue his evil Affection, which would persuade him otherways. How far also the Word see extends, is a Question among them; that is, how far they were to go out of their Way to lend their Help; with such like Niceties, which I shall not trouble the Reader withal.

And wouldst forbear to help him, thou shalt surely help with him.] The Sense is clear enough; but the Construction of the Words, in the Hebrew, brew, is not so plain. For the Word Azab, which we translate help, signifies to leave or forsake: And so the Chaldee here interprets it; Thou shalt in that moment dismiss or forsake thy enmity to him, and go and help him. And L. de Dieu to the same purpose; Rather than leave him under his Burden, quit thine enmity to him, &c. A great many other Ways there are to make out the Grammar of the Hebrew Words; but Bochart thinks all in vain: Unless instead of the Particle lo with a Vau, we admit it with an Alaph: And then they run clearly in the Hebrew in this manner, Thou shalt cease (or abstain) from leaving him (i. e. not follow thy own ill Inclinations, to pass by him) leaving thou shalt not leave him, (i. e. by no means leave him) viz. to raise up his Beast himself, as if it nothing concerned thee. Or, Thou shalt abstain from leaving it, (i. e. the Ass labouring under his Burden) I say thou shalt by no means leave it. The same thing is repeated, because it is a Command so opposite to Mens depraved Affections; and therefore was fit to be inculcated, that they might not lightly pass it over. See Hierozyoic. P. i. L. ii. c. 40. p. 399.

Ver. 6. Thou shalt not wrest the judgment of thy Poor in his Cause.] As they might not favour a Man because he was poor (ver. 3.) so much less might they wrong him; or not do him right, because he wanted Money to prosecute it. There seems to be an Emphasis (as Conradus Pellicanus observes) in the Word thy Poor: Importing that they had such a relation to them, that they ought to be as much concerned for them, as any other Member of their Body.

But the Jews fancying this to be sufficiently included in the Precept before-mentioned, ver. 3. understand here by the Poor, a bad Man; who is pauper præceptorum, non facultatem, one that wants Virtue, not Money. To whom a Judge might not say, he was a wicked Fellow, and condemn him without any farther Examination of his Cause: For it belongs to God (saith the same R. Levi) to execute Judgment upon the ungodly, and not to the Judges.

Ver. 7. Keep thee far from a false Matter.] i. e. From a false Judgment (for he seems to speak to the Judges) and neither admit that which is false, nor pronounce it.

And the Innocent and Righteous slay thou not.] That is, saith the before-named R. Levi Barzel. beware carefully, lest thou takest away the Life of him, that may be innocent of that whereof he is accused. And therefore he saith, the Judges were to condemn no Man, but by the Testimony of two Eye-witnesses. And they make this Precept as much as, Thou shalt not judge out of Conjectures. Nay, if there were two Witnesses, that did not speak to the same matter, he was not to be condemned. As if one Witness said, he saw such a Man break the Sabbath, and another said, he saw him commit Idolatry; Judgment was not to be given against him, upon this Testimony; because Moses saith, Slay not the Innocent. Another Example of which is still more close, which is mentioned in the T. Sanhedrim: If one said he saw him worship the Moon; and another that he saw him worship the Sun; the Man was not to be condemned who was thus accused, because the Witnesses did not speak to the same sort of Idolatry. See Selden, L. ii. de Synedr. c. 13. p. 567. By the same reason they were not to acquit him, who was plainly convicted of such Impieties.

Vol. I.

For I will not justify the wicked.] i. e. Such an unjust Judge.

Ver. 8. And thou shalt take no gift.] No, not to absolve the Innocent; or to condemn the Guilty: As it is interpreted in Siphri.

For a Gift blindeth the Wise.] Such Presents made to a Judge; are apt to cast a Mist (as we speak) before his Eyes; i. e. to corrupt his Understanding; tho' he be otherwise perspicacious enough, to discern between Truth and Falshood, Good and Evil, 1 Sam. viii. 3. The Word which we translate wise, is in the Hebrew Piccehim, open or seeing: Concerning which consult Bochart, L. i. Canaan, c. 16. p. 470.

And perverteth the Words of the Righteous.] By Words seems to be meant the Sentence of those who might otherwise have been inclined to be righteous and upright Judges.

The Hebrew Lawyers say, that not only pecuniary Gifts are here forbidden, but such Words also (I suppose they mean Promises of Reward) as may win the Affection: And that he who gave the Present was guilty, as well as he that received it. See Selden de Synedriis, L. ii. c. 13. p. 570. But especially Joh. Coch. ad excerpt. Gem. Sanhedrin. Cap. i. Sect. 10. Annot. 4. where, among other things, he gives this ingenious derivation of the Hebrew Word Schockad, which we translate Gift (out of the Treatise called Cketuboth, where it is said to be as much as Schechu chad, that is, whereby he is one. For the Party who receives the Gift hath his Mind so drawn to the Giver, that he becomes one and the same with him. And no Man is fit to be Judge in his own Cause. Plato thought this so necessary a Law, that he expressly enacts (L. xii. de Legibus, p. 955.) that all Men who served their Country in any Office, should ἀσχευὶ χάρις διακονεῖν, perform their Duty without Gifts: Ὁ δὲ μὴ παρόμενος ἀπλῶς τεθνάτω ἀλλὰ τῇ δίκῃ. He that offended against this Law, was to suffer Death. Which was the Law of the twelve Tables among the antient Romans; Judex qui ob rem dicendam, pecuniam accepisse convictus est, capite punitor: A Judge that is convicted to have received Money, for giving his Sentence, let him lose his Head.

Ver. 9. Also thou shalt not oppress a Stranger.] This was said before, ch. xxii. 21. but then it was a Precept to all Israel; which is here applied peculiarly to Judges; whom he would have to deal equally with Strangers, and to make no difference between them and Israelites, remembering what they themselves were not long ago; and that they found by experience it was Affliction enough to be Strangers. That's the Meaning of what follows in this Verse.

For ye know the Heart of a Stranger; seeing ye were Strangers in the Land of Egypt.] Ye have felt what a distressed Condition that is; how friendless and helpless. See Deut. xxiv. 17, 18. xxvii. 19.

Ver. 10. And six Years thou shalt sow thy Land.] There was the same reason for dressing their Trees.

P p 2

And

And gather in the Fruit thereof.] Together with the Fruit of their Trees.

Ver. 11. But the seventh Year thou shalt let it rest, and lie still.] Neither sow, nor reap, nor prune the Trees, nor gather the Fruit.

The Poor of thy People may eat.] And the Levites, and themselves also; who might take their share, not to lay up, but for present Use; though not as Proprietors, but in common with the rest of the Country. Whence it was that Alexander the Great, allowing them to live by their antient Laws, among other things granted τὸ ἑξῆς ἑκάστου ἔτους ἀνάσσειν ἑνάς, every seventh Year should be Tribute free; Josephus, L. ix. Archæol. c. 8. For since they received nothing, it seemed reasonable to him they should pay nothing.

And what they leave, the Beast of the Field shall eat.] This signifies God sent such vast Plenty, when they observed his Laws, that so much sprung up of it self, as would more than satisfy Men, and afford Food to the Beast.

In like manner thou shalt deal with thy Vineyard and Oliveyard.] Under these two are comprehended all other sort of Fruit-trees, as the Hebrews themselves acknowledge, who give several Reasons for this Law. Which was ordained, saith Maimonides, (P. iii. More Nevoch. c. 39.) in compassion to all Men in general, that they might have some time of breathing and refreshment. But principally, say others of them, to be a Memorial of the Creation of the World, and the Production of all Things by the Power of God, in six Days, and his resting on the seventh. Their exposing all Things in common which that Year produced, as well as letting the Land rest, put them in remembrance (saith R. Levi of Barcelona, Præcept. lxi.) that God was their Preserver as well as Creator: The Earth bringing forth Fruit every Year, not by its own proper Strength, or of its own Accord, but because it hath a Lord upon whom it depends; who, where he pleases, hath a right to dispose of its Fruit to a publick use. This Command also bred in them a trust in God, and in his Providence; and was a Curb to Covetousness, and taught them Mercy also and Liberality. Philo adds, that this was a politick Contrivance to let the Earth rest; partly that it might have time to recruit its Strength, that it might bring forth more plentifully; and partly that the People might grow stronger, and more apt for all Employments, by so long forbearance of their Labours. This Eusebius thought worthy to transcribe out of him at large, in his Præpar. Evang. L. viii. c. 9.

But this Precept about the Year of Rest, is more fully delivered in Lev. xxv. 2, 3. where see what I have noted.

Ver. 12. Six Days thou shalt do thy Work, and on the seventh Day thou shalt rest.] He would not have them imagine, they should rest less on the Sabbath this Year, than in others, because this whole Year was a kind of Sabbath; but keep it with the usual strictness; which is the reason, perhaps, of the repetition of this Precept in this place.

That thine Ox and thine Ass may rest, &c.] This shows that one great End of instituting the Observation of this Day at Marab (ch. xv. 25. ch. xvi. 23.) was, that Men and Beasts might rest, in remembrance of the Rest that God had given them from their Burdens in Egypt. See ch. xxxv. 2. R. Levi Barzelonita observes that this Precept is repeated in the Law twelve Times.

Ver. 13. In all things that I have said unto you, be circumsp[ec]t.] Be cautious lest you offend in any of the fore-named Particulars; but especially in that which follows.

And make no mention of the Names of other Gods.] Such Cautions as these to prevent Idolatry, are repeated no less than forty four times in the Law, as the same R. Levi observes. And the Meaning of this is, either that they should not swear by other Gods, or make any Vows in their Names; but consequently enter into Society with Gentiles (as the best of the Hebrew Writers understand it, and as the vulgar Latin takes it) or that they should not so much as simply name the Gods of other Nations. They who are of this last Opinion, differ in their Explication of it. For some of them say, only the calling them by such Names as attribute some Divinity to them, is the thing forbidden; not calling them by their proper Names of Moloch or Bell, or the like: And thus Tertullian understood it. But there are others, who think it unlawful so much as to use any of their Names in common Discourse; tho' there be no mention of their Divinity. For Chemos and Milcom, and such like Names, they say, are not mentioned in Scripture, but with Detestation and Reproach (as the Abomination of the Moabites or Ammonites) and therefore they think it unlawful to say, I invite thee on the Feast-Day of such an Idol of the Gentiles, or the like. Yet some of those who imagine the simple use of their Names to be forbidden, except the Names of those mentioned in Scripture. So Maimonides; The Names of the Idols of the Gentiles which are mentioned in Scripture, it is lawful for us to name; as, Peor, Bell, Nebo, Baal, &c. See Selden, L. ii. de Jure N. & G. c. 13. p. 269, &c. They say, this Precept binds Men and Women, in all Places, and at all Times; and the Punishment for its violation, was Beating.

Neither shall it be heard out of thy Mouth.] i. e. With any respect or reverence to them: Otherwise, the simple Pronunciation of the Name was not unlawful.

The Sabbath being instituted, partly to preserve them from Idolatry, some think the Reason why this Precept is joined to that.

Ver. 14. Three Times shalt thou keep a Feast unto me in the Year.] viz. At the Passover, Pentecost, and when they gathered all the Fruits of the Earth, and dwelt in Tabernacles; as it follows in the next Verses. The first of which was plainly instituted, in memory of their coming out of Egypt. The second, some think, was in memory of their coming into Canaan, (rather of the overthrow of Pharaoh in the Sea; and giving the Law on Mount Sinai.) And the third, in memory of their dwelling so long in the Wilderness, and of the Wonders which God did there; as Maimonides observes in his More Nevoch. P. iii. c. 43. At these three great Solemnities three things were to be done: First, They were to make a Feast. Secondly, To appear before God in the Court of the Temple. And, Thirdly, To rejoice. Besides which, they were to bring certain Offerings unto God.

Ver,

Ver. 15. Thou shalt keep the Feast of unleavened Bread, &c.] See ch. xii. 17, &c. xiii. 6, 7.

In the Time appointed of the Month Abib.] Or in the Month of new Ears of Corn: See ch. xiii. 4. For many Learned Men (particularly Huetius) think this Word Abib not to be a proper Name, but an Appellative (as they speak) the Proper Names of Months being not yet used among the Hebrews; who spake of them before the Captivity of Babylon, according to the Order and Number wherein they stood, viz. first, second, third, &c. Month. See Demonstr. Evang. Prop. iv. Cap. de Libro Joshua, n. 2.

And none shall appear before me empty.] The Phrase in the Hebrew (which we translate appear before me) is very remarkable, viz. None shall see my Face: Which doth not signify that they beheld the external Symbol of his Presence, but that they looked directly that way where it was; and that they should not be accepted by God, unless they brought some Present with them. For none approached to an earthly Majesty in those Countries without a Present (as we read in the sacred Story) which was a Token of Love and Affection, as well as of Respect and Honour. And therefore this Precept did not belong only to this Feast, but to all the three mentioned in the Verse before, as appears from Deut. xvi. 16. And accordingly there were special Oblations ordained by the Law it self, which were then to be made. At the Passover, when their Harvest began, they were to bring a Sheaf of the First-fruits of their Harvest, and might not eat any Corn till this was done, Lev. xxiii. 10, 14. At the next Feast they brought two wave Loaves, for a second First-fruit of their Wheat-harvest, Lev. xxiii. 17. and at the Feast of Tabernacles they offered the First-fruits of Wine and Oil. See Mr. Mede, Disc. xvi. p. 355. Besides all which, good Men brought Free-will Offerings; which are often mentioned in the Law.

Ver. 16. And the Feast of Harvest.] Called also the Feast of Weeks, ch. xxxiv. 22. because it was seven Weeks after the Passover. Mr. Mede, in the Place now named, thinks this was called the Harvest-Feast; because as Harvest began at the Passover, so it ended at Pentecost. And thus Bochart also: At the Passover they first put the Sickle into the Corn; and about Pentecost Harvest was finished, and all brought into the Barn, Hieroz. P. i. L. iii. c. 13. But this seems not to be true; for now only the First-fruits were brought, which were not offered in the end, but in the beginning of Harvest. And so it follows here.

The First-fruits of thy Labours, which thou hast sown in the Field.] Which is not to be understood of all their Labours, but of those Fruits which were first sown in the Ground. It being therefore called the Harvest-Feast, because the principal Part of Harvest, viz. the Wheat-Harvest (as it is expressly called, ch. xxxiv. 22.) then began: Which sort of Grain was sown before Barley, as that was before Flax; and therefore here called the First-fruits of their Labour sown in the Field.

And the Feast of In-gathering.] Called also the Feast of Tabernacles, Lev. xxiii. 34.

Which is in the end of the Year.] By this it appears that their Year antiently began in the Month Tisri, about Autumn: At which Time the World it self began, as Scaliger, and a great many other Learned Men assert, with such Reasons as are not easy to be confuted.

When thou hast gathered in thy Labours out of the Field.] At this Feast their Harvest was completed; the Fruits of the Earth being not only ripe, but gathered into their Barns. Which was the Foundation of the great rejoicing we read of at this Time; because God now gave them some Rest and Respiration, as Maimonides speaks; from their Employments, More Nevoch. P. iii. c. 43. where he observes that Aristotle himself, in his 8th Book of Ethicks, mentions such a Feast among the Gentiles, and upon the same ground, in these Words, as he recites them: Antiently Sacrifices, and publick Assemblies for the sake of Sacrifices, were in the gathering of the Fruits and Products of the Earth; as if the Sacrifices were offered for their Respiration. The Israelites dwelt in Booths at this Feast for another Reason; and their dwelling in Booths was now most tolerable (as the same Maimonides there notes) because the Weather was moderate at that Time, when they were not wont to be troubled either with Heat or with Rain.

Ver. 17. Three times in the Year all thy Males shall appear before the LORD God.] This Verse more fully explains what was said ver. 14. by showing where they should keep these Feasts, viz. before the LORD; i. e. in the Place where his most glorious Majesty should settle; which was first in the Tabernacle, and afterward in the Temple: And then who should appear before him there, viz. all the Males. Others were not bound to it; though some religious People carried their whole Families with them, as appears by Elkanah, 1 Sam. i. This Command is repeated ch. xxxiv. 23. and the true Reason of it seems to have been this: That while they dwelt in the Wilderness they ate no Meat at all at their private Tables, but what had been first offered up to God at the Tabernacle, Lev. xvii. 4, 5. Which Precept was dispensed withal when they came into the Land of Canaan, and dwelt, many of them, so remote from the Tabernacle, that they could not come up every Day to sacrifice, Deut. xii. 21. Instead of which therefore there were these three constant and set Times appointed in the Year; in which every Male was bound to come up, and seek God at his Tabernacle, and there eat and drink before him. Whence the Sacrifice which was then offered, was wont to be called a Sacrifice of Seeing; as Dr. Cudworth hath observed, in his little Treatise of the Right Notion of the Lord's Supper. But, as the Doctors interpret it, they were not bound to bring their Males to appear before the LORD, till they were able to walk, in their Father's Hand, up from Jerusalem to the Temple.

Ver. 18. Thou shalt not offer the Blood of my Sacrifice.] That is, the Paschal Lamb, as Jonathan in express Words interprets; and as it appears from ch. xxxiv. 25. That the Passover was a Sacrifice, I observed before, ch. xii. 27.

With leavened Bread.] There being three great solemn Feasts, appointed in the foregoing Verses (ver. 14, 17.) in this and the following he prescribes some Rules, how they were to be observed. And here, in this Verse, ordains two Things relating to the Passover; that it should not be eaten with unleavened Bread; nor any of the Fat of it remain until the Morning. Both which were ordained before (ch. xii. 10, 14, 15.) in its first Institution; and here repeated, upon its being mentioned again with the other Feasts.

It may be fit for me here to observe, that to move the Israelites to keep this Passover with the greater Care, God calls it both here, and in ch. xxxiv. 25. after a peculiar Manner, my Sacrifice, and my Feast (as the latter Part of this Verse may be translated) being a Feast of a most solemn Nature, and a Sacrifice then offered of singular Use. For which Reason he requires them, as not to offer it with Leaven (which was at that Time forbidden for special Reasons) so not to reserve the Fat of the Offering till the next Day: For that was not for the Honour of the Sacrifice; Flesh being apt quickly to corrupt in those hot Countries, and to offend the Palate, or the Nose, which had been against the Dignity of the Sacrifice. Which is the Reason the Jews give, why the Flesh of the Peace-offerings was not to be kept till the third Day, Lev. xix. 6. It was to preserve the Magnificence of the Sacrifice; Things kept so long, being apt to stink. Whence εωλα, Yesterday's Meats, in Hippocrates, is the same with σαπες, corrupt: And Galen expounds εωλίζεν by the Word προυνεῖν, to tend to Corruption; as Pet. Castellanus observes, L. i. de Esu Carnium, c. 5. p. 42.

Ver. 19. The first of the First-fruits of thy Land thou shalt bring unto the House of the LORD thy God.] This Precept hath a respect to the next Feast, that of Pentecost. And therefore, though there were several First-fruits, which were all to be offered in their Time (which were of seven Things, Barley, Wheat, Figs, Pomegranates, Olives, Dates, and Grapes) yet here are meant only the two Loaves or Cakes made of their new Wheat, which were to be offered at this Feast (Lev. xxiii. 17.) for till this was done, they might not make use of their Corn. See more concerning this Matter on Lev. xxiii. 10. R. Levi of Barcelona, and others, rightly observe that this was brought as an Acknowledgment unto God, that he was the Giver of all good Things.

Thou shalt not sethe a Kid in its Mother's Milk.] This Precept hath a particular Respect to the third Feast, that of the in-gathering of the Fruits of the Earth, in the End of the Year, mentioned ver. 16. And the Jews commonly take it to be a Prohibition against eating a Kid so boil'd, or tasting of the Milk; taking it to be a Precept against Cruelty. But here is not a Word about eating, either of the Kid or the Milk; but only about boiling. The famous Bocbartus mentions three other Interpretations, but confutes them all; and taking the Words simply, as we translate them, supposes there was some such Custom as this among the Gentiles, which Moses would not have them imitate. And so doth Maimonides, in his More Nevoch. P. iii. c. 48. where he takes this indeed for a Command not to eat Flesh with such Milk; but saith, that, besides it was very gross Nourishment, &c. it seems to him it was prohibited, because it smelt of Idolatry; the Gentiles doing so in their Worship, upon some of their Feasts. He could not find indeed, as he confesses, any such Rite in the Books of the Zabii: But yet he was confirm'd in this Opinion, by the Law constantly mentioning this, only when it speaks of their Feasts; for there are other Places where we meet with it; ch. xxxiv. 26. Deut. xvi. 21. in both which he speaks, as he doth here, of their three great Feasts. At the last of which, Abarbinel expressly affirms, the ancient Idolaters were wont, when they gathered the Fruits of the Earth, to sethe a Kid in its Mother's Milk, that their Gods might be the more propitious to them. But as he names no Author for his Opinion, so he doth not explain the manner of it. Our most Learned Dr. Cudworth was the first Person who happily found this in a Karaite Writer; who saith, All the Trees and Fields, and Gardens, were sprinkled with this Broth (of a Kid sethed in its Mother's Milk) after a magical Manner, to make them more fruitful in the following Year. This Bocbart also takes to be the truest Interpretation, and quotes the forenamed Doctor for it (not having seen the Author himself) P. i. Hierozoic. L. ii. c. 52. See Right Notion of the Lord's Supper, p. 25.

To which may be added, that a Goat was anciently used in Magical Rites; and that Demons were wont to appear in that Form. But it must be noted withal, that in every one of the three Places, where this Precept is mentioned, the LXX translate the Word we render Kid, by ἀρνίον, a Lamb; though every where else they translate it καίριον. And I make no question, but we are to understand here either a Lamb or Kid boil'd in its Mother's Milk; and the Hebrews say, any other clean Creature. Concerning which I shall add no more, but that nothing could be more contrary to Nature (and therefore agreeable to the Institutions of the Devil) than to boil any young Creature in the Milk of its Mother, from whom it came. Which they first offered to their Gods, and then eat some of it themselves, and the rest they sprinkled as before-said. Some Relicks of which Custom we find even among the Romans themselves, who propitiated Sylvanus, with offering him Milk, and Faunus with a Kid: And every one knows both these were used in the Worship of Bacchus.

Ver. 20. Behold I send an Angel before thee.] In the 23d Verse he calls him mine Angel; by which the Jews commonly understand Michael, there being but a very little Difference between Malachi (which signifies my Angel) and Michael. But a great many Christians think this was not a created Angel, but an increated, viz. the Eternal Son of God; who, they suppose, appeared to Moses in the Bush, and conducted them all along to Mount Sinai. Which I am afraid to assert, because it seems dangerous to me (as I observed upon Gen. xlviii. 16.) to call him simply an Angel, i. e. a Minister or Messenger, without any such Addition as that in Mal. iii. 3. The Angel of the Covenant. For so he was at his Incarnation, of which he there speaks: Before which I dare not ascribe to him such ministerial Works as these, of bringing the Children Children of Israel out of Egypt, and going before them to lead them the way to Canaan. This was properly the Work of an Angel, to whom Moses attributes it, when he orders his Ambassadors to say to the King of Edom, Numb. xx. 16. When we cried unto the LORD he heard our Voice, and sent an Angel, and hath brought us forth out of Egypt, &c. But this Angel was a prime Minister in the heavenly Host, by whom he was accompanied. So he saith to Joshua, ch. v. 14. I am come as Captain of the Host of the LORD: Which is the Title of Michael, in Dan. x. 13, 21. But though we thus understand it here, this doth not exclude the Presence of God himself, but rather proves it: For this Angel and his Host were sent from the SCHECHINAH, who was in the Pillar of Cloud; which was moved by this Angel, and conducted them through the Wilderness. See ch. iii. 2.

To keep thee in the Way, &c.] To preserve and protect them, as well as to direct and guide them, till they came to Canaan; which was the Place God had prepared for them.

Ver. 21. Beware of him.] Or observe him.

Obeys his Voice.] Because he did but report what God himself commanded; who was there present with them, as long as they obeyed him.

Provoke him not.] By any Disobedience.

For he will not pardon your Transgressions.] But punish you, when you contumaciously offend me.

For my Name is in him.] He acts by my Authority and Power, and sustains my Person, who am present where he is. For the Name of God is said to be there, where he is present after a singular and extraordinary Manner, 1 Kings viii. 16, 1 Chron. vi. 5, 6. Maimonides expounds it, My Word is in him; i. e. saith he, God's Will and Pleasure was declared by the Angel, P. i. More Nervoeb. c. 64. In which he seems to follow the Chaldee, who translates it, for his Word is in my Name; i. e. what he speaks is by my Authority.

Ver. 22. But if thou shalt indeed obey his Voice, and do all that I speak.] By this it appears that the Words of the Angel were the Words of God, who spake by him; and both are to be understood to be present. See Gen. xxii. 11, 15.

Then I will be an Enemy unto thine Enemies, &c.] God and the Angel seem to me to be so distinguished in this Verse, that we should not look upon the Angel as God, but as his Minister.

Ver. 23. For my Angel shall go before thee.] The Word Malachi (my Angel) consisting of the very same Letters with Michael, the Author of Baal Hatturim takes it, as if he had said, Michael, my proper or peculiar Angel, &c.

And bring thee unto the Amorites.] Who were the principal People in the Land of Canaan, and had made themselves Masters of the first Country which Joshua conquered. See Gen. x. 16.

And the Hittites, and the Perizzites, &c.] Concerning these, and the other People here mentioned, see Gen. x. 16, 17. xv. 19, &c. The Reader cannot but observe that here are only six Nations mentioned, whereas there were seven in all, whom God delivered up into their Hands, Josh. iii. 10. Yet in another Place, where he commands them all to be utterly destroyed, Moses mentions but six, as he doth here, Deut. xx. 17. For as some have conjectured, the Gergasites, who are here omitted, had been subdued by the Amorites, and were mixed with them; who were the most powerful of all the seven Nations, and had spread themselves into many Parts of the Country; as appears from Gen. xiv. 13. Numb. xiii. 29. Deut. i. 7, 19, 44.

Ver. 24. Thou shalt not bow down to their Gods, nor serve them.] This is a Caution against the Idolatry of the People of Canaan; into whose Country, when he had brought them, he charges them to be so far from doing any Honour to their Gods, either outwardly, by bowing down to them, or inwardly, by serving them; i. e. as some of the Hebrews interpret it, praying to them, or giving them Thanks, &c. (Selden, L. iii. de Jure N. & G. c. 3.) that he commands them to break them down, and utterly destroy them.

Nor do after their Works.] These Words are so large, that they may comprehend all the abominable Things which were done by the seven Nations (mentioned in Lev. xviii. and other Places) But here the Matter seems to restrain them to their Worship, which he would not have them imitate, by building Temples or Altars in honour of their Gods, or offering such Sacrifices as they did, or observing any of their religious Rites.

But thou shalt utterly overthrow them.] This relates to the People of the Land; as it is explained in Deut. xx. 17.

And quite break down their Images.] For they were bound intirely to root Idolatry out of the Land of Canaan; though in other Countries, which they might conquer, they did not think themselves bound to break their Images, as Selden observes, L. ii. de Jure N. & G. c. 2.

Ver. 25. And ye shall serve the LORD your God.] Worship him, as he directs, and no other Being. I observed before, that none were so senseless as to imagine a Figure of any Thing made of Wood or Stone, &c. to be the Creator of Heaven and Earth: But they worshipped them (as Maimonides well observes) as Things intermediate between the most High and them; which is here forbidden, More Nervoeb. P. i. c. 36.

And he shall bless thy Bread and thy Water, and I will take Sickness away from thee.] This is a Promise that he would abundantly supply them with Meat and Drink, and also give them Health; without which they could take no Comfort in that plentiful Provision.

Ver. 26. There shall nothing cast their Young, nor be barren in thy Land.] Abortion and Barrenness hinder all Propagation, both in Men and Beasts; and therefore to the two foregoing Blessings, of Plenty and Health, he adds two more in this Place; a numerous Increase of their Cattle, and of their own Progeny; together with long Life in the Land which he gave them.

The Number of thy Days I will fulfil.] Thou shalt come to a good old Age, such as healthful Men (who are not cut off by any Accident) are wont wont to attain: Procopius Gazæus gathers from hence, that there is not a fixed Term set for every Man's Life. But it rather seems to suppose that there is a Term fixed, beyond which Men cannot ordinarily go (to some a longer; to some a shorter, according to their several Constitutions) but may come short of it, by various Accidents, and by their own ill Usage of themselves; or by the Judgment of God; who also, in regard to their Obedience, prolongs the Life of some Men beyond what it would naturally reach.

Ver. 27. I will send my Fear before thee.] Strike a Terror into the Inhabitants of Canaan before thou comest thither, which shall facilitate the Conquest of them. See Josh. ii. 9, 10. With which agrees the Story that is told in the Gemara Hierosol. ad Tit. Shebith (by R. Samuel ben Nachman) that upon Joshua's denouncing War against the seven Nations, the Gergasites fled into Africa. Which may be true perhaps of a part of them, but not of them all; for some of them were remaining, it appears from the Book of Joshua, ch. iii. 10. and xxiv. 11. This is confirmed by another Story in the Talmud, of the Africans suing to Alexander the Great to be restored to their antient Possessions in Canaan (which I mentioned before) and the old Inscription in Procopius (L. ii. de Rebus Vandal.) not far from Tangier, which said the antient Inhabitants of that Country fled from the Face of Joshua the Son of Nun. Selden, L. vi. de Jure N. & G. c. 13. p. 736.

And I will destroy all the People to whom thou shalt come.] Make them more afraid, when they come to fight; so that presently they shall run away, and be easily slain: For that's the Meaning of the last Words, I will make all thine Enemies turn their Backs to thee.

Ver. 28. And I will send Hornets before thee.] Either before they came thither, or when they march'd against the People of that Country. Both seem to be true; that many of them were forced to quit their Country, when it was infested by the Hornets God sent in great Swarms among them; and that they who remained, when they came to fight, were assaulted by these Hornets, which flew in their Faces, and so sorely prick'd their Eyes (as Kimchi and R. Solomon take it) that they could not see to strike a Stroke. Whence those Words of Joshua (who expressly saith this was fulfilled) ch. xxiv. 12. that the Amorites were not driven out by the Sword and Bow of the Israelites, but by the Sting of these Hornets. Which seem also to have pursued them when they fled away, and killed them in their lurking Holes, where they hid themselves after the Fight, Deut. vii. 20.

Which shall drive out.] That several Nations have been driven out of their Country by contemptible Creatures, such as Frogs, Mice, Snakes, and Gnats, is made good by Bochartus out of several Authors. And he hath particularly shewn, that by these very Creatures, Wasps and Bees, People have been forced to forsake their Country, as Herodotus, Appianus, and Strabo testify: See his Hierozoic. P. ii. L. iv. c. 13. p. 539, &c. where he shows the Sting of this sort of Wasp (called a Hornet) is of all other the most pernicious; for it is bigger than the ordinary Wasp, and fiercer; seldom stinging, as Pliny saith, without putting Men into a Fever: Ibid. p. 543. And of their flying at Mens Eyes, see what he alledges out of good Authors, p. 535.

The Hivite, the Canaanite, and the Hittite from before thee.] These three Nations it seems were principally infested by the Hornets; among whom perhaps they were more venomous than elsewhere (for so R. Solomon saith, their Poison was deadly) though the rest of the Nations also felt their Sting, as we read in Josh. xxiv. 11, 12.

Ver. 29. I will not drive them out from before thee in one Year.] All the Reasons of which are not here declared (as they are elsewhere, Judg. iii. 1, 2, 3.) because he would not dishearten them.

Left the Land become desolate, &c.] i. e. Left some part of the Land should be left without Inhabitants, and so be possessed by wild Beasts; which might have been very dangerous to the Israelites in other Parts, where they were settled. For if all the People of the seven Nations had been destroyed at once, the Israelites were not yet numerous enough to people the whole Country; especially when two Tribes and an half were settled on the other side of Jordan.

Ver. 30. By little and little I will drive them out before thee.] Diminish them by Degrees, till they were wholly expelled.

Until thou be increased and inherit the Land.] Until the Israelites were grown so numerous, that they were able to stock the whole Country.

Ver. 31. And I will set thy Bounds, &c.] This was the utmost Extent of the Country, which he intended to bestow upon them (see Gen. xv. 18.) but they did not enjoy it till the Times of David, 2 Sam. viii. 1, 3, &c. and Solomon, 1 Kings iv. 21, 24. when their Dominion seems to have been enlarged not only to Euphrates, but even beyond it, Ezra iv. 16, 20. (See my Paraphrase upon Psal. lxxii. 8.) Before these Times, it appears by the Book of Joshua, and those that follow, that many of the old Inhabitants remained long after his Death.

From the Red-sea to the Sea of the Philistines.] These were the Bounds from East to West. For though the Red-sea was towards the South, yet the farthestmost Part of it lay East. And the Sea of the Philistines is that now called the Mediterranean, which was full West.

And from the Desert.] Of Arabia, called Sbur, ch. xv. 22.

Unto the River.] i. e. To Euphrates; which made the Southern and Northern Bounds of the Country God promised to them.

For I will deliver the Inhabitants of the Land into thy Hand.] This seems to relate to that Land which the seven Nations inhabited: For as far as Euphrates they never drove out all the Inhabitants, but only made them Tributaries.

And thou shalt drive them out before thee.] In such manner as is mentioned in the foregoing Verses.

Ver. 32. Thou shalt make no Covenant with them.] i. e. With the People of the seven Nations.

ons. But with other Gentiles they might make Covenants; only not suffer them to live in their Land, unless they renounced all Idolatry. Nay, Maimonides is of Opinion, that such of the seven Nations as renounced Idolatry, were to be received into their Friendship: For that Law in Deut. xx. which requires them to send a Summons to every City before they besieged it, with an offer of Peace, he extends even to them, and grounds his Opinion upon Josb. xi. 19, 20. As for that Objection which seems to lie against this, about the Gibeonites, who needed not by Craft to have obtained a League with the Israelites, if this were true Doctrine: His Answer is, That Josbua had sent a Summons, with offers of Peace to them, and all the rest; which they rejected, but would afterward have gladly accepted, and then it was not to be admitted; and therefore they contrived that cunning Way to be received into Friendship with the Israelites. See P. Cuenæus, L. ii. de Republ. Hebr. c. 20. And Selden, L. vi. de Jure N. & G. c. 13. where he quotes a Passage out of the Hierusalem Gemara, which says, That Josbua sent three Letters to the Gibeonites. But he shows withal, that other Jews contradict this, and expressly declare the seven Nations were not to be invited to Peace. What the Terms were on which others were invited, see there cap. 14.

All this considered, I am inclined to think Maimonides his Opinion to be true, which that Place in Josbua very much favours; and so doth the Story of Rabab, and the Practice of Solomon; who only put the Remainder of these Nations under Tribute, 1 Kings ix. 20, 21.

Nor with their Gods.] This prohibits them to suffer any of the seven Nations to exercise Idolatry among them, as R. Levi of Barcelona interprets it: Or rather, he forbids them to make any Vows to their Gods, or oblige themselves to perform any Act of Worship to them.

Ver. 32. They shall not dwell in thy Land.] If a Gentile did renounce his Idolatry, he might dwell among them, and was called a Stranger, Toshab, dwelling, or inhabiting. But if he did not forsake it, they might not sell him a Foot of Land, nor let him hire a House among them; only he might come and sell Commodities to them, as the same R. Levi expounds it. But Maimonides says, they might not so much as suffer them to pass through their Country, when they had Power to hinder it; which others think too rigid an Opinion, as Mr. Selden shows, L. ii. de Jure N. & G. c. 3. p. 155, &c.

Left they make thee sin against me.] All Society with Idolaters was forbidden, lest they should infect the Israelites with their Infidelity (as the same R. Levi speaks) of which there was the greater Danger, because they were too prone to follow the Gentile Customs.

For if thou serve their Gods.] This Caution being repeated three Times in this Chapter, ought to have been the more diligently observed by the Jews, and made them more fearful of entering into Familiarity with Idolaters, who were of various Sorts: For not only every Nation had its proper and peculiar Gods, but every City, Town, House, nay, every Man made themselves Gods according to their Fancy.

VOL. I.

It will surely be a Snare unto thee.] Bring great Calamities upon thee, and at last be thy Ruin; as it is explained Josb. xxiii. 13. Judges ii. 3. For instead of driving out the seven Nations, they brought Israel under their Yoke, and grievously oppressed them, as we read in the Story of the Judges, particularly in the ivth Chapter.

CHAP. XXIV.

Ver. 1. AND he said unto Moses.] When God had delivered the foregoing Law unto Moses in the Mount, where he was with him (ch. xx. 21.) after he had spoken the Ten Commandments, he bad him go down (as we read here he did, ver. 3.) and set them before the People, ch. xxi. 1. And when he had engaged them in a Covenant to observe these Laws (ver. 7. of this Chapter) then to come up to him again, and bring Aaron, and the rest that are here mentioned, with him.

Come up.] To receive further Orders from the Divine Majesty, together with the two Tables of Stone.

Unto the LORD.] To the Mount, where the Glory of the LORD appeared, and from whence he had spoken the Ten Words.

Thou, and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, &c.] But not all to the same Nearness unto the Divine Majesty; as appears by the following Verse.

And seventy of the Elders of Israel.] This seems to intimate that there were more than LXX called Elders; but these were the Chief, being perhaps the Heads of those Families which came into Egypt, which were just Seventy. See ch. xviii. 12. For he doth not direct Moses how to chuse them (as Corn. Bertram observes, L. de Repub. Jud. c. 5.) but speaks as if they were well known and distinguished from other Persons by the Rank they held among them; and therefore called, ver. 11. the Nobles, or as the Latin speaks, Magnates, seu Optimates, the great Men, of the best Quality in Israel. The Reason of their being thus called up to God, was to be Witnesses of Moses's ascending up to the Place where the Divine Majesty appeared, and that they also might have some Sight of it, ver. 10.

And worship ye afar off.] All of them, before they came to the Mount, were, at a good Distance from it, to fall down prostrate before God, that they might be possessed with such an holy Reverence to him, as not to presume to approach nearer than they were ordered.

Ver. 2. And Moses alone shall come near the LORD.] Unto the very Top of the Mount, where the Glory of the LORD abode, ver. 16, 17, 18. unto which none was admitted but himself: Who now came nearer than he had done before (ch. xx. 21.) for he went into the midst of the Cloud, ver. 18.

But they shall not come nigh.] Unto that Part of the Mount whither he went, but keep in a lower Station.

Neither shall the People go up with him.] But stay at the Bottom of the Mount (as they did before the giving the Ten Commandments, ch. xix. 17.) below the Place where the Elders were. So I think Maimonides rightly understands this Place, in his More Nevoch. P. ii. c. 32. where, speaking of the several Degrees of Prophecy, or Familiarity with God, he observes that Moses was here placed in the supreme Degree (he alone being allowed to come near the LORD) below him was Aaron placed, and below him Nadab and Abihu, and below them the LXX Elders, and beneath them the rest of the People: Which is the Meaning of that Saying of their wife Men, Moses is a Wall by himself, and Aaron a Wall by himself; that is, they were in separate Apartments at this glorious Appearance of God.

Ver. 3. And Moses came.] From the Mount, where he had received the Precepts mentioned in the three foregoing Chapters.

And told the People all the Words of the LORD, and all the Judgments.] Some understand here by the Words of the LORD, the Ten Commandments, called the Ten Words, ch. xxxviii. 18. But these Words the People heard spoken by God himself, and not by the Report of Moses. Therefore I take these Words to signify rather what he had spoken in the latter Part of the foregoing Chapter, from the 20th Verse to the End. And then by all the Judgments, he means those Laws which he had received for their good Government in the 21st, 22d Chapters, and the former Part of the 23d.

And all the People answered with one Voice, and said.] In all likelihood Moses had told the Elders what God had said to him; and they went and told it to the People, who gave the following Answer to them. For thus it was before, ch. xix. 6, 7.

All the Words that the LORD hath said, will we do.] They had consented before in general, to do whatsoever God required of them, having owned him for their King and Governor (ch. xix. 6, 7, 8.) but now they consent in particular, after God had declared what he would have them do (in the 20th Chapter) and Moses had also reported the rest of the Judgments delivered in the 21st, 22d, 23d Chapters.

Ver. 4. And Moses wrote all the Words of the LORD.] Both the Ten Commandments, and all the rest of the Judgments deliver'd in the foregoing Chapters. God indeed wrote the Ten Commandments himself; but, for the present, Moses made a Record of them, that the People might not only hear, but read what they had to do.

And rose up early in the Morning.] The next Morning, it is likely, after he had received those Judgments, and delivered them to the People, and wrote them in a Book; which was upon the seventh Day of Sivan, as I observed, ch. xx. 21. that is, on the sixth of our June, as Jac. Capellus reckons: Therefore on the eighth of Sivan, he built the Altar, &c. as it here follows.

And builded an Altar under the Hill.] At the Foot of the Hill, where the People were allowed to stand. This Altar was to represent God, to whom Sacrifices were offered upon it.

And twelve Pillars, according to the twelve Tribes of Israel.] This was to represent all the People. The Gentiles abusing such Pillars to Idolatrous Uses, the erecting of them is afterward forbidden in the Law. But before the building of the Tabernacle, Moses here erects them, as Jacob had piously done in former Times, Gen. xxxv. 14. See Selden, L. ii. de Jure N. & G. c. 6. p. 185.

Ver. 5. And he sent young Men of the Children of Israel.] These are said by the Hebrews, to be the First-born, as Onkelos here expressly translates it, He sent the First-born; and the Paraphrase ascribed to Uzielides follows him, adding this Reason; Because the Aaronical Priests were not yet consecrated. The Arabick and Persian Versions say the same, as Mr. Selden hath observed, L. i. de Succession. ad Pontif. c. 1. and most Interpreters have been of the same Mind. But I have often observed before (particularly ch. xix. 22.) that I can see no Proof of this, that they only officiated as Priests; every Man antiently, in his own Family, having a Right to offer Sacrifice till the Law of Moses restrained it to the Family of Aaron. Therefore I take these young Men to have been the choicest Persons among them, whether First-born or others, who had been appointed to minister unto God. For Joshua, who is called here (ver. 13.) Moses's Minister, is, in Numb. xi. 28. called his young Man. Such were fittest for all Service, especially for that of Sacrificing to God; for which they antiently chose the strongest and properest Persons, as we see in the Greek Story of Jason (which our learned Dr. Spencer observes, p. 140.) whose Sacrifices were led to the Altar by the young Men of his Company, i. e. Men of greatest Strength and Beauty, L. i. Argonaut. And this so far remained, after the Priesthood was confined to the Family of Aaron, that no Man was permitted to officiate at the Altar, after he was fifty Years of Age; that is, when he was past his best (as we speak) the Flower and Strength of his Age, Numb. viii. 25. Fortunatus Scacchus conjectures, that there were twelve of these young Men, one of each Tribe, who offered in the Name of their Brethren, Myrothec. Sacr. Eleocheism. p. 2. c. 59.

Which offered Burnt-offerings, and sacrificed Peace-offerings of Oxen unto the LORD.] Tho' Oxen are only mentioned, yet there were other Creatures sacrificed, as appears from Heb. xi. 19, 20. And in following Times, Peace-offerings might be either of Calves, or Lambs, or Goats, as we find in Lev. iii. and so might Burnt-offerings also; see Lev. i. 2, 10. Our learned Primæ Usher thinks also there were Expiatory Sacrifices offered together with these Burnt-offerings and Peace-offerings, and that in the first Place, ad A. M. 2513. mens. 3.

Ver. 6. And Moses took half the Blood, and put it in Basins.] It may be a Question, whether he speaks of the Blood of all the Sacrifices, or only of the Expiatory (if there were any) or of the Burnt-offerings, or Peace-offerings. But which way soever that be determined, this half of the Blood, it is certain, was reserved to be sprinkled on the People, ver. 8.

Concerning the Word Aggenot, which we translate Basins, the learned Reader may consult Bochartus in his Hierozytic, P. i. p. 549.

And half of the Blood he sprinkled on the Altar.] The Altar representing God (as was said before, ver. 4.) this Blood sprinkled upon it, signified that he, for his Part, engaged to be faithful in the Covenant he now made with them, and they they with him, by performing all the Promises he had newly made them by Moses in the latter End of the foregoing Chapter ; especially those four great Promises of Plenty, Health, numerous Offspring, and Long-life, ver. 25, 26. together with the driving out the People of Canaan from before them, ver. 27, &c.

Ver. 7. And he took the Book.] Some have made it a Difficulty to find what Book this was, and have been pleased to fancy, that some Book which Moses wrote is lost ; when this plainly refers to what is said ver. 4. where we read, that Moses wrote all the Words of the LORD, that is, the Commandments and Judgments mentioned in the four foregoing Chapters ; which, though they made no great Volume, yet might be called a Book in their Language ; for even the Bill of Divorcement, which they gave their Wives (and was very short) is called by this Name of Sepher, a Book, Deut. xxiv. 1.

Of the Covenant.] That they might remember upon what Terms he would bestow upon them the fore-named Blessings, he engages them in a solemn Covenant to observe the Commandments and Judgments contained in this Book.

Ver. 8. And Moses took the Blood.] That half of it which was in the Basons, ver. 6.

And sprinkled it on the People.] As he had sprinkled one Half on the Altar, in token God was a Party in the Covenant, so he sprinkled the other Half on the twelve Pillars, which represented the Children of Israel, in token that they were the other Party engaged in the same Covenant. Thus our fore-named Primate, and several others understand it ; and it carries some Show of Probability in it. Yet I cannot think it unlikely, that it was sprinkled upon the LXX Elders, by whom the People consented, if not upon all the People, who stood next to the Altar, and are here expressly mentioned. The Apostle to the Hebrews, ch. ix. 19. saith, he sprinkled the Book as well as the People ; which is not here mentioned, but supposed. For when he went to sprinkle the Blood, we must conceive he laid down the Book, that he might be at more liberty for this other Action : And perhaps he laid it on one of the Pillars, where it was sprinkled, as they were, together with the People, whom they represented.

And said, Blessed the Blood of the Covenant, which the LORD hath made with you concerning all these Words.] Look upon your selves as obliged by this Blood, to observe all the Commands which I have delivered to you in the Words you have heard : For there were two Ways of making Covenants antiently, both which were here used. The first was after a Sacrifice had been offered, to sprinkle the Blood of it upon both Parties who were to be Confederates ; which was done here, ver. 6, 8. And secondly, the Confederates thereupon proceeded to eat together some Part of the Sacrifice ; which follows, ver. 11. where we find the Elders of Israel (who represented the People) did eat and drink in the Presence of God.

Ver. 9. Then went up Moses and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, and LXX of the Elders of Israel.] These Things being done, they went up into the Mount as they were ordered, ver. 1. i. e. they went up to that Part of the Mount where Aaron and his Sons, and the Elders, were appointed to come ; but no further.

Ver. 10. And they saw the God of Israel.] When Moses is commanded to come near unto the LORD (ver. 2.) Maimonides acknowledges it may be understood of his local Approach to the Place, where the Light, or Glory of God then appeared, Mere Nevech. P. i. c. 18. And therefore it is something strange, that he expounds the Elders seeing God, of their Apprehension of him by their Understanding ; and not rather of their beholding some Glimpse of that visible Majesty, which was on the Top of the Mount. For that, I doubt not, is the Meaning, as appears by what follows. And so the Chaldee expound it, They saw the Glory of the God of Israel ; surely, we may well suppose, with an heavenly Host of Angels, attending upon the SCHECHINAH, or Divine Majesty, as it was also called.

And there was under his Feet.] This hath made some conceive, that this visible Glory appeared in the Form of a Man, with his Back towards them, standing upon a shining Pavement. But this is contrary to Deut. iv. 15. For though that be spoken of another Time and Place, viz. the giving of the Law, which all the People heard, but saw no Similitude ; yet if the Elders had afterward seen a Similitude, it would have spoiled Moses his Argument, they being the Representatives of the People. This glorious Light therefore, far surpassing all other, had no Form, nor could be described by any Art ; and consequently by its Feet, is meant only the lower Part of it, which rested, as it were, upon a most glorious Pavement. And thus the Divine Majesty is said to have had a Foot-stool (which was the Cover of the Ark) though it had no human Shape.

As it were a paved Work of Saphire Stone.] The glorious Majesty of God was represented as having under it a Pavement suitable to it self, very bright and shining. For there is a Sort of Saphire, called χρυσόρυς, spotted with little Points, or Pricks of Gold, which shine like Stars interspersed in the Body of it. See Salmasius in Solunum, p. 131, 203. Such was this Pavement, as we may gather from the following Words.

And as it were the Body of Heaven in its Clearness.] As clear as the purest and sereneest Sky, when it is all spangled with Stars. All which signifies, as I take it, that the Glory of the LORD appear'd far above the Glory of the Sun in its greatest Brightness, upon a Pavement sparkling like the Stars in the Heaven, when it is most clear. The LXX, instead of the Words, saw the God of Israel, have, saw, videtur, the Place of the God of Israel. As if they saw a Throne, upon which there was a visible Majesty, beyond all Description : And if this be admitted, then this Throne may well be said to have Feet, standing upon such a glorious Pavement. And so they translate it in the next Verse, where this is repeated.

Ver. 11. And upon the Nobles of the Children of Israel.] i. e. The Elders before mentioned, ver. 1, 9. called here Azizim, to signify that they were the prime and choicest Persons among the Israelites. For Aziz signifies to separate ; and consequently Atzilim imports Men distinguished from others, either by their Birth, Office, or some excellent Qualities.

He laid not his Hand.] Did not hurt them. Whereas it was the common Opinion, That they who saw God (though it was by one of his Angels) should presently die. The Splendor of that glorious Light was so dazzling, that it was a singular Favour it did not put out their Eyes, as the Light wherein St. Paul saw our Saviour did his. We are told, ver. 17. The Sight of the Glory of the LORD was like devouring Fire. Which might put them in fear perhaps they had been scorched by it, when it flash'd out upon them; but they found not the least Hurt by it. Thus Jonathan saith in his Paraphrase upon the xxxi^d Chapter, that when Moses delayed to come down from the Mount, the People fancied him to be burn'd up by the Fire which shone from the Presence of God, which there appeared.

This Sight of God which he vouchsafed to the Elders, was in all likelihood to convince them that he was among them, and had spoken to them, and sent them the Precepts before-mentioned, by the Hand of Moses.

Also they saw God, and did eat and drink.] After they had seen God, they were so far from receiving any Harm, that they feasted with him upon the Reliques of the Peace-offerings, with great Joy and Gladness. Or we may suppose that the Glory of the LORD shone upon them as they sat down to eat and drink, in token of their full Consent to the Covenant now made (for so the Custom was of making Covenants, Gen. xxiv. 30. xxxi. 54.) and that notwithstanding they continued to finish their Feast, not being dispirited (as good Men were sometimes afterwards with glorious Visions, Dan. x. 8, 16, 17.) but rather strengthen'd and made more vigorous.

The Word for saw, in this Verse, is different from that in the former; importing, I suppose, that this Appearance of God to them lasted some Time.

Ver. 12. And the LORD said unto Moses.] He called to him perhaps with an audible Voice, from the Place where they saw his Glory, that they might know how familiar he was with God, and might more readily receive whatsoever Commands he brought from him.

Come up to me into the Mount.] To the Top of the Mount, where the Glory of the LORD was, ver. 17. For hitherto Moses had gone no further than the rest, but was with them when they did eat and drink before the LORD.

And be there.] Stay with me there, ver. 18.

And I will give thee Tables of Stone.] Not only the Jews, but Epiphanius also fancies these Tables were made of Sapphire, from what was said ver. 10. But the Words signify plainly enough that they were of Stone.

And a Law and Commandments which I have written.] From this Place the Jews endeavour to establish their unwritten or oral Law, i. e. their Traditions; which, they say, were now deliver'd, together with the Tables of Stone. So Maimonides, in his Preface to Jad Chazeka; 'All the Precepts which were given to Moses on Mount Sinai, were given with their Explications; according to what is said, I will give thee Tables of Stone, and a Law, and Commandments; where by the Law is meant the written Law, and the Commandments denote the Explication of it, which we call the Oral Law.' Thus he, and others of them, directly against the Text itself, which saith expressly, both of the Law and the Commandments here mentioned, that they were written. See Selden, L. ii. de Synedr. c. 16. Therefore by Law and Commandments, we are to understand nothing else but the Law contained in the Ten Commandments.

That thou mayst teach them.] Instruct the People to observe them, as the most sacred of all other Precepts; being written, as well as spoken, by God himself, who taught Men by this Example how to preserve their Laws. For Aristotle saith in his Problems, that in old Time, Men being ignorant how to write, ἵνα μὴ ἐπιλανθάνωμαι, were wont to sing their Laws; that they might not be forgotten; it being the Invention of the Corybantes, ἱεῖς αὐα λίδας (as Theopompus speaks) to set up Pillars, and engrave their Laws upon them: Which Solon at last wrote on wooden Tables, called ἄζοις and κύβεις, which were laid up in the Temple of the Mother of the Gods. Vid. Sam. Petitiū Præfat. in Leg. Atticas.

Ver. 13. And Moses rose up.] From among the Elders, with whom he was before.

And his Minister Joshua.] Who attended him further than the Elders, but not into the Place where he went. For God intending him to be Moses's Successor, seems to admit him unto a nearer Familiarity than any one else besides Moses.

And Moses went up into the Mount of God.] The Place where the Divine Glory appeared. But Joshua staid for him in some lower Part of the Mountain, expecting his return: For he did not go up to the Top of the Mount, as appears from the xxxi^d Chapter; where Moses's Descent from thence being mentioned, Joshua is not named till it be said that Moses was come down from the Mount, ver. 15, 17. He went with them therefore till he enter'd into the Cloud, and then he staid as it were at the Door, waiting for his return.

Ver. 14. And he said unto the Elders.] Before he left them, he gave them this Order.

Tarry ye here for us.] Not in the Place where they had seen God, and did eat and drink with him, whither the People might not come; but rather in the Camp, or some Place near it, whither the People might, upon Occasion, resort to them: Unto which Place Moses seems to have walk'd with them from the Mount, before he returned to go up into it; or, at least, pointed them unto it with his Finger, that they might there wait for him.

Until we come again to you.] He could not tell how long God would detain him, and therefore commands them to govern the People till his Return to them.

And behold, Aaron and Hur are with you.] Who seem to have been of greatest Authority next to himself; and were with him in the Mount when the Israelites fought with Amalek, Chap. xvii.

If any Man have any Matters to do, let him come unto them.] In all Causes which were too hard for the Elders to determine, he directs them to go to Aaron and Hur, as they were wont to do to him. By this it appears, that these seventy Elders were some of the Judges appointed by the Advice of Jethro (ch. xviii. 22.) which he continued to follow, and orders them to observe in his Absence.

Ver. 15. And Moses went up into the Mount.] Having said this, he and Joshua left them; and he went into the higher part of the Mount.

And a Cloud covered the Mount.] That Part of it where he was; so that the People, and Joshua also, lost the sight of him.

Ver. 16. And the Glory of the LORD abode upon Mount Sinai.] That visible Majesty, which shone in extraordinary Splendor, was settled for the present upon the Top of this Mount.

And the Cloud covered it.] i. e. Covered the Glory of the LORD, not the Mount, as Aben Ezra observes. For the Cloud was not the Glory of the LORD, but encompassed and covered it: So that for six Days nothing but the Cloud appeared to the Israelites; till on the seventh Day the Cloud was rent (as I take it) or opened, and the Glory of the LORD appeared like flaming Fire.

Six Days.] Thus long it was hidden in a Cloud, so that Moses himself could not see it, but remained wrapt up in Darkness; which might have astonished him, if he had not been supported by the Divine Power, and a comfortable Sense of God, who had often appeared to him, and conversed familiarly with him.

And the seventh Day he called unto Moses.] The second Time (for he had called to him before, to come up to him, ver. 12.) commanding him to approach into his glorious Presence.

Out of the midst of the Cloud.] Where the Divine Glory was, and now broke out and appeared, I suppose, unto Moses. Some think the seventh Day might be the Sabbath, upon which God chose to appear to him.

Ver. 17. And the Sight of the Glory of the LORD was like devouring Fire, on the Top of the Mount, in the Eyes of the Children of Israel.] It broke out of the Cloud after six Days, so that the People saw it like flaming Fire. To which the Psalmist seems to allude, Psal. xcvi. 2, 3. Clouds and Darkness are round about him, and Fire goeth before him, &c. Thus the Glory of the LORD is described in other Places, as within a Cloud, and sometimes breaking out of it, Exod. xl. 35. where the Cloud is said to be upon the Tabernacle, and the Glory of the LORD to fill it with; which, ver. 38. is described like Fire. See also Numb. xvi. 42. And thus, at its first appearing, there was a Pillar of a Cloud, and of Fire led them, ch. xiii. 21. And it sometimes appearing in an amazing Brightness, beyond that of the Sun; and sometimes being wrapt up in as thick a Cloud; God is likewise said, both to dwell in Light, and in thick Darkness, 1 Kings viii. 12.

Ver. 18. And Moses went into the midst of the Cloud.] From whence the LORD had called to him, ver. 16. Therefore he broke through the thick Cloud, into the very Presence of God; which was in a secret part of the Cloud, called the midst of it.

And gat him up into the Mount.] To the Top of it, where the Glory of the LORD appeared to him, in the midst of the Cloud; the external Parts of which and the Fire only being seen by the People.

And Moses was in the Mount forty Days; and forty Nights.] That he might receive the two Tables of Stone, and the Gift of Prophecy (as Elmacinus, an Arabian Christian, adds) with Directions for the making the Tabernacle, and all Things belonging to it, and the Service to be performed there by the Priest, apparelled according to Divine Prescription, &c. which follows in the ensuing Chapters; where Moses relates what Orders God gave him about every thing relating to his Divine Service. And it need not seem strange, as Clemens Alexandrinus excellently speaks (L. i. Stromat. p. 351.) that Moses received his Laws from God; when the Greeks pretend the fame of their Minos: Only they say he went into Jupiter's Cave, and was nine Years there in learning the Laws which he gave him; when Moses was but forty Days in the Mount, where God visibly appeared. They believed also that Lycurgus received his Laws from Apollo; and Zaleucus (as Plato, Aristotle, and divers others whom he mentions, say) received his from Minerva. All this was firmly believed among them, who, in not acknowledging the Divinity of Moses's Ministration, were very ungrateful; for his was the Archetype, as he speaks, or Pattern of what was pretended in their Stories.

Forty Days and forty Nights.] It may be a Question, whether the six Days that he remained in the Cloud, before the LORD called him higher, be included in these forty Days; or were only preparatory to his nearer Access to God. They may well be both: For it is not said he was in the midst of the Cloud forty Days and forty Nights, but that he was so long in the Mount. Part of which Time was spent in the dark Cloud, and the rest in the bright Presence of God, in the midst of the Cloud: And in all that space he did neither eat nor drink; ch. xxxiv. 28. Deut. ix. 9.

God could, if he had pleased, have revealed to him all his Mind in a less Time: But the Method of the Divine Wisdom is to do all Things gradually. For instance, the Substance of a Child in the Womb (saith the Author of Schalsch. Hakkabalab) is not perfected in less time than forty Weeks, in all which time it receives no Meat nor Drink (at the Mouth we must understand him) and so many Days did the Divine Power work in Moses, to form him into a new Essence (as his Words are) and give him a full Comprehension of all that God communicated to him. And all this time he neither did eat nor drink; for these Actions (says that Jew) prejudice the Understanding, which God intended to exalt, by depressing the bodily Faculties and Powers, which for want of Meat and Drink were brought down very low, that the Understanding might be raised and lifted up. And thus we find in After-times, that Daniel chastened his Body,

Body, for three whole Weeks together, the better to dispose him for heavenly Vision, ch. x. 2, 3, 12.

This Ascent of Moses from the cloudy Part of the Mount, to the fiery Top of it, was upon the 14th of Sivan; and we may suppose, as Jacobus Capellus doth, that the Cloud accompanied him, as he went up, to defend him from the circumambient Flame.

C H A P. XXV.

Ver. 1. AND the LORD spake unto Moses.] Out of that glorious and flaming Light, wherein he appeared to him.

Ver. 2. Speak unto the Children of Israel.] When he went down from the Mount.

That they bring me.] In the Hebrew, take for me, out of their Goods.

An Offering.] The Hebrew Word Terumah (or as some pronounce it, Trumab) is commonly translated an Heave-offering, or Offering lifted up; which the Chaldee translates, that which is separated from common Use: And in the Separation, perhaps, was lifted up towards Heaven, in token that they desired God to accept it.

Of every Man that giveth it willingly with his Heart, ye shall take my Offering.] They were only to be moved to it, but not importuned; much less told what Quantity they should give; but every Man was left to his own good Inclination. And accordingly Moses delivered the Mind of God unto them, when he came down from the Mount; and they made a free Oblation, ch. xxxv. 5, 21, 29. Besides which, there was also a Tribute laid upon them, for the Ransom of their Souls, ch. xxx. 12, 13, 14. which amounted to a great Sum of Money, as we find in ch. xxxviii. 24, &c.

Ver. 3. And this is the Offering which ye shall take of them.] The Things which ye shall accept as an Offering to me.

Gold, and Silver, and Brass.] Unto what Uses these were to be employed, we are told afterwards.

Ver. 4. And blue, and purple, and scarlet.] Wool or Yarn, or Stuff (or as Abarbinel will have it, Silk) of these Colours. About which there is much Dispute; but no Translation hath better described them than our English: For Thebelet, which we translate blue, and Abarbinel will have it to be a Sea-green, is certainly a Sky-colour. So Maimonides expresses it, the Colour of the Firmament; and Kimchi calls it Ultramarine. This hath been demonstrated by Braunius, who shows how it was dyed, L. i. de Vest. Sacer. Hebr. c. 13.

Argaman also he hath demonstrated (c. 14.) signifies purple, as we translate it. For both Josephus and Philo say so; and he brings many Proofs that they say true. And there being several sorts of Purple, he shows this had in it the brightest and most florid Redness; the manner of Dying, which he also there demonstrates. See also Bochartus, concerning these two Words Thebelet and Argaman, in his Hierozyic. P. ii. L. v. c. 10, 11.

Tholaat-shani we also rightly translate Scarlet, as the same Braunius shows, c. 15. of the forenamed Book; and very probably makes the Word Scarlet signify as much as the Colour of Tyre: For Sar, or Sarra, is Tyre; and Lacea is a red Colour.

Abarbinel most absurdly makes this to be the native Colour of Silk, without any Dye. See Bochart. Hierozic. P. ii. L. iv. c. 27. p. 624.

And fine Linen.] The Hebrew Word Schejesh signifies that pure Linen called Byssus: So the Chaldee calls it butz. Which was peculiar to Egypt, as some say, where their Priests were clothed with it; and thence called linigeri. But Philostratus saith there was a Byssus among the Indians, with which the better sort of People were clothed. And Pausanias saith it grew in Elis, and in no other part of Greece. See Salmasius, Plin. Exercit. p. 998. and what I have noted on Gen. xli. 42.

And Goat's Hair.] In the Hebrew there is only the Word Izim, which signifies Goats; but all Interpreters, by a common Ellipsis, understand it of their Hair. And Jarchi saith it signifies the Flower of Goats-hair; or, as we speak, the Down, the very softest Part of it. And no other Wool (as they call it) was accepted for the Use of the Sanctuary (if we may credit Abarbinel) but only this; for the Wool of Lambs and Sheep was vile in comparison with this, which was precious in the Eastern Countries, where excellent Cloth was made of it, not inferior to Silk in Softness and Brightness; as the same Braunius observes, L. i. de Vestitu Sacer. Hebr. c. 9.

Ver. 5. And Rams-skins dyed red.] Or red Rams-skins; for such there were in the Eastern Countries, which were naturally of that Colour.

And Badger-skins.] The Hebrew Word Thebasim, which we translate Badgers (following those who think Thacas to be the same with the Latin Word Tazus) the ancient Interpreters take for a Colour. And Bochartus hath at large endeavoured to prove that it signifies a kind of violet or purple Colour. So that God commands them to offer red and violet Rams-skins. See Hierozyic. P. i. L. iii. c. 30.

And Shittim-wood.] Kimchi saith this was the best kind of Cedar: But Aben-Ezra takes it for the Wood of a Tree which grew in the Wilderness, not far from Mount Sinai, in that Place where the Israelites sometimes incamped, Numb. xxv. 1. called Shittim from this Wood; unless the Wood were so called from the Place where it grew. And thus St. Hierom seems to have understood it. For he saith upon Jos. iii. that they were great Trees, which were not to be found in the Roman Countries, or in cultivated Places, but in the Desert of Arabia only; out of which very broad Boards might be cut, exceeding strong, and of incredible Smoothness and Beauty. And, upon Isa. xli. he calls it Lignum imputribile, an incorruptible Wood (as the LXX also here translate it, ξύλα ἀσυντρίβα) very smooth, excelling all Wood in Firmness and Brightness, &c. See Menochius, L. v. de Repub. Hebr. c. 2.

Ver. 6. Oil for the Light.] For that Lamp that was to burn continually in the Sanctuary.

Spices for anointing Oil, and for sweet Incense.] See ch. xxx. 23, &c. and ver. 34, 35, &c.

Ver. 7. Onyx-stones.] Or Sardonyxes. See Gen. xi. 12.

And

And Stones to be set in the Ephod, and in the Breast-plate.] There were two Onyx-stones to be set in the Ephod, ch. xxviii. 9, 10, &c. and the other Stones (whose Names are there mentioned, ver. 17, 18, &c.) were to be set in the Breast-plate.

These five Verses contain all the Materials which were to be used about the Sanctuary, and the Garments of the Priests who were to attend there. The only Question is, How they got such Things in the Wilderness? Some think they brought them with them out of Egypt, as it is evident they did Gold, Silver, and Jewels. And Abarbinel thinks they also trafficked with the neighbouring People, while they remained here, of whom they bought Oil, and Spices, and Shittim-Wood, &c. which is probable enough, every Thing being to be had for Money, of which they brought good Store from Egypt.

Ver. 8. And let them make me a Sanctuary.] Now follow Directions for the making an House for God, and every Thing belonging to it; for so this Place is sometimes called, God's House or Habitation, because there, as Abarbinel observes, the SCHECHINAH, or Divine Majesty, had its residence. And it is called a Sanctuary, or Holy Place, because no uncircumcised, or unclean Person might enter into it. For under the Name of Sanctuary is comprehended, as the Jews rightly understand it, all the Courts belonging to it, as well as the very House it self; with all the Utensils, or sacred Vessels, which are afterward prescribed for the Service of it.

That I may dwell among them.] God resolving to manifest himself, as in a peculiar manner, constantly present among them, was pleased to order a Tent or Tabernacle to be built for him; wherein, while they sojourned in Tents in the Wilderness, he dwelt among them in a visible manner, by the SCHECHINAH, or Habitation of the Divinity, which was fixed here; and was a special Type of God's future dwelling in human Nature. In short, this Sanctuary was his Palace, saith Moses Nachmanides, wherein he dwelt as their King. And accordingly Schem Tob, upon Maimon's More Nevoch, P. iii. c. 40. pertinently observes, that God ordered all manner of Things, belonging to a Palace, to be in this House; particularly, Ministers that constantly attended on him; a Table with daily Provision; all manner of Utensils, such as Pots, Spoons, Forks, &c. a Closet proper to himself alone, that the most vulgar Understanding might conceive their King, the LORD of Hosts, continually resided there. And indeed the Hebrew Word Mikdash, which we render Sanctuary, sometimes signifies a Palace, Ezek. xxviii. 18. and so Kimchi interprets it upon Isa. viii. 14.

Among them.] In the Hebrew, in the midst of them. For the Tabernacle, when it was erected, was placed in the midst of their Camp, Numb. ii. 17. Which was the Reason that all unclean Persons were to be removed out of their Camp, lest God, who dwelt in it, should be offended by the Pollution, Numb. v. 3. And this is the Reason why God is said to walk among them (Lev. xxvi. 12. Deut. xxii. 14.) because he dwelt in that Tent, which moved up and down, as they did while they dwelt in the Wilderness.

Ver. 9. According to all that I shew thee, the Pattern of the Tabernacle, and the Pattern of all the Instruments thereof, so shalt thou make it.] This signifies that God showed him a Model (as we now speak) of the House he was to make, and of all the Things belonging to it: And accordingly he bid him rear it up, ch. xxvi. 30. according to the Mischpat, the Scheme or Draught he shewed him in the Mount: Which represented every thing so lively and distinctly, and in their just Proportions to him, that he was the better able to make them. For things seen, and seen in all their Dimensions, as Abarbinel observes, are more easily retained, as well as conceived, than things that are only heard. And Greg. Nyssen had reason when he said (de Vita Moïsis, p. 181.) that God did not represent the Sanctuary to Moses merely in a Picture, much less give him an Idea of it only in his Mind; but set before him a Structure which he should imitate. For so the Hebrew Word Tabnit (which we translate Pattern) signifies a Structure, or Building; which cannot be better expressed than by the Word Model, which he now saw of the House he was to erect. Thus Maimonides explains this Word, in distinction from Temunah, which signifies only the Resemblance of a thing; whereas Tabnit signifies the Structure, or disposition of it, i. e. saith he, its Form; whether it be in a Square, or Circle, or Triangle, or any other Figure; and he quotes this Place for it, and ver. 40. More Nevoch. P. i. c. 3.

Which confutes the Fancy of those, who will have Moses to have framed this House, and all belonging to it, according to the Fashion of such Things which he had seen in Egypt, and were in use among other Nations: Unto whose Religion he designed to make him as conformable, as might be safely allowed. And particularly made this Tabernacle to be carried on the Priests' Shoulders, as the Tabernacle of Moloch was, &c. Nothing seems to me to be further from the Intention of Moses, or rather from the Directions which God here gives him, than this Conceit. He had a more divine Guide than the Egyptians, and made Things by a heavenly Pattern, and not according to their Modes. The Jews were so possessed with this Opinion, that when the Temple came to be built, instead of this Tabernacle, they say it was done by consulting the Oracle; and by the solemn Decree of the King, and of the great Sanhedrim, and of the Prophets; for which they alledge this very Place, as Mr. Selden observes out of the Mishna, and Maimonides, &c. L. iii. de Synedr. c. 13. n. 2.

Ver. 10. And they shall make an Ark.] Or little Chest, or rather Coffer, which was to be placed in the very inmost and most secret part of God's House (in his Cabinet, as we now speak, into which none enter'd but himself) the better to represent his Dwelling among them. And therefore was called the Ark of the LORD, Josh. iv. 5, 11. and the Ark of God, 1 Sam. iii. 3. For herein was put his most precious Treasure, those divine Records, the two Tables of Stone, wrote with his own Finger, called the Tables of Testi-

Testimony, ch. xxxi. 18. because they were the Testimony of the Covenant between God and the Israelites; whereby he testified his Will, and they their Obedience to it. Whence the Ark itself is called the Ark of the Testimony, ch. xxx. 6. (from whence also the whole Tabernacle had its Name, Numb. ix. 11.) and the Ark of the Covenant of the LORD, Numb. x. 33.

Of Shittim-Wood.] See ver. 5.

Two Cubits and an half shall be the length thereof, and a Cubit and an half the breadth thereof, and a Cubit and an half the height thereof.] In this Shape, and in these Dimensions, it was set before Moses in the Mount; that he might direct it to be made exactly of such an oblong Square (as we speak) as is here described, in its length, breadth and height. There are great Disputes among the Jews about a Cubit, which is commonly thought to be half a Yard of our Measure, that is, 18 Inches. But one that hath taken a great deal of Pains to examine such things (Dr. Cumberland, late Bishop of Peterborough) hath, in a very learned Discourse about the Scripture Measures, given strong Reasons to incline us to think that the Egyptian and the Jewish Cubit were about 21 Inches. And if they had not been so, the Table (which is described ver. 23.) would have been inconvenient, being but three Quarters of a Yard high, i. e. 27 Inches (according to the common Notion of a Cubit) which is too low for a Table. Whereas, according to his account, it was about thirty two Inches, which is a very convenient height for a Table. See ch. ii.

Ver. 11. And thou shalt overlay it with pure Gold.] Not merely gild it, but lay it over with thin Plates of Gold; for if they had been thick, it would, as Abarbinel notes, have been too heavy to carry. Thus we see Chests now sometimes plated with Iron, in some parts of them.

Within and without.] So that nothing but Gold could be seen, whether it were shut or open.

And shalt make upon it a Crown of Gold round about.] A Border or Lift of Gold went round at the Top of it; which was call'd a Crown, because it compassed every part of it; but was of another figure, nor round, but square, as the Ark was. It was of great use, as well as ornament, for the better settling the Propitiatory upon the Ark, that it might not slip off, but be kept up firmly by this Border going round about the top of the Ark. And it might the better be called a Crown, because it was of some height, for the surer supporting of the Propitiatory.

It may not be improper here to observe, that as the antient Crowns were only a plain Circle of Gold, or other thing, so they were set upon the Heads of none but their Gods, as Pliny tells us, L. xvi. c. 4. who says there that Bacchus was the first that put a Crown upon his Head, which was made of Ivy. Certain it is, that God requires those things which were peculiarly sacred to him and his Service to be crowned, as a Mark of their excellency; which were four only; this Crown upon the Ark, and that upon the golden Table (ver. 24. of this Chapter) and upon the Altar of Incense, ch. xxx. 3. and on the Head of the High Priest, ch. xxix. 6.

Ver. 12. And thou shalt cast four rings of Gold for it.] Which were of massy Gold, we must suppose, because the Ark was carried by Staves put into these Rings.

And put them in the four Corners thereof.] The Hebrew Word Paamoth comes from Paam, which never signifies a Corner in the holy Scripture; but always a Foot, or Basis, or Step, as Aben Ezra notes; which hath made some think, the Ark had Feet to stand upon (such round Knobs as now our Chests and Boxes many times have) tho' the Scripture doth not mention them. But we are not to make Conjectures out of our own Heads; which some have carried so far as to fancy there were Wheels in these Feet, for the Ark to run upon, which made it God's Chariot wherein he rode. But, whoever heard of a Chariot carried on Mens Shoulders? Therefore Nachmanides more reasonably conceives, that these Rings were indeed 'in the Corners of the Ark, but not in the higher (as R. Solomon would have them) but in the lower; and therefore said here to be in the Feet. For the Scripture calling the Top of every thing the Head of it, the Bottom is commonly there called the Feet: And so the Ark (by placing the Rings and Staves in the bottom) was carried on high upon the Priests Shoulders, representing God who is highly exalted.

And two Rings shall be on the one side of it, and two Rings on the other side of it.] That is, in the length of it (as Josephus expressly testifies) and not in the breadth.

Ver. 13. And thou shalt make Staves of Shittim Wood.] Of such a length that the Ark might be at a decent Distance from those that carried it.

And overlay them with Gold.] With Plates of Gold, as the Ark it self was, ver. 11.

Ver. 14. And thou shalt put the Staves into the Rings, by the Sides of the Ark.] The Hebrews say these Staves were ten Cubits long.

That the Ark may be born with them.] Upon the Shoulders of the Levites, particularly the Sons of Korah. See Numb. iv. 4, 5, 6, &c. ch. vii. 9. For it was a Crime to carry it any other Way, either in their Hands, or drawn in a Cart. Compare 1 Chron. xiii. 7. with ch. xv. 15.

Ver. 15. And the Staves shall be in the Rings of the Ark.] Continue and remain in the Rings, when they were once put therein.

They shall not be taken from it.] When they set down the Ark they were not to take out the Staves, and put them in again when it was to be carried, but let them, as we said, continue in the Rings, that there might be no danger of letting them fall (which had been a great irreverence) and because they would be best preserved, and take less harm there, than any where else; and if they had occasion to remove the Ark, suddenly, all would be ready; and the Levites were hereby kept from touching the Ark, or coming nearer to it than the Ends of the Staves.

Ver. 16. And thou shalt put into the Ark, the Testimony which I will give thee.] The two Tables of Stone, containing the Ten Commandments, which are called the Testimony, and the Two Tables of Testimony (ch. xxxi. 18.) because they testified what the Will of God was, which they had consented to observe; and were therefore fore publick authentick Instruments, attesting the Covenant between God and them. Whence the Ark which contained these, is called the Ark of the Testimony (as I observed above, ver. 10.) ver. 22. and in a great many other Places of the xlvth Chapter. And in one Place it is called the Testimony, ch. xxx. 36. and the Ark of the Covenant of the LORD, Deut. x. 8. because the Ten Words were the principal part of the Covenant, to which they stood obliged. And perhaps the Book of the Covenant which Moses made with them (ch. xxiv. 7.) is comprehended under the Name of the Testimony. For though we read in 1 Kings viii. 9. There was nothing in the Ark save the two Tables of Stone, &c. yet the Apostle mentions some other things that were not in, yet by or before the Ark, Heb. ix. 4. But I assert nothing in this matter; and shall only further observe, that this direction, for putting the Testimony (or Tables of Stone) into the Ark, is given before any order is taken, for making a Covering to it, which follows after. And therefore he was to put in the Law before the Cover was set on; for though, ver. 21. this be mentioned again, and put after the Cover is named, yet the meaning is, that he should set on the Cover, having put in the Law. And it is repeated, that he should be very careful of this, because the Cherubims were to protect and defend it.

Ver. 17. And thou shalt make a Mercy-seat.] The Hebrew Word Capporet literally signifies a Covering of any thing; and that is the proper signification of this Mercy-seat (as we translate it) which was the Covering of the Ark; for it had no Door, but was open at the Top, so that they might put the Tables of the Covenant into it, and then it was to be fasten'd above by this Cover; which any one may discern by its Dimensions, was exactly fit for it.

Others will have it called Capporet, not from Capar, to cover, but from Cippor, to expiate, and render propitious. And so indeed the Apostle calls it inashenon, the Propitiatory; because God here shewed himself to be propitious, and appeased by the Blood of the Sacrifices, which was sprinkled before this Place. But the Reason of this Translation may be, because when Sins are pardoned, they are said in Scripture to be covered. The LXX put both these together in their Translation, which is inashenon epideuma.

Of pure Gold.] Not of Wood crufted over with Gold; but all (as Abarbinel speaks) of solid Gold, because it was the Cover of the Ark, in which were the Tables of the Covenant written with God's Finger, than which nothing was more precious.

Two Cubits and an half shall be the Length thereof, &c.] Which was the Length of the Ark, ver. 10. as the Breadth was a Cubit and an half, both of that and this; which shows this was the Cover of the Ark, being most exactly adapted to it.

Ver. 18. And thou shalt make two Cherubims of Gold.] We read of Cherubims in the Beginning of the World; and have good reason to believe thereby is meant Angels. See Gen. iii. 24. But in what shape they appeared we are not told, nor is there the least Signification of it here in this Place, but what we can gather from ver. 20.

So that I can only say this, they were of such a Shape as the Angelical Ministers appeared in, which attended upon the Divine Majesty in the Mount; or rather such as God shewed Moses a Pattern of, whereby to represent these heavenly Ministers; for both the Ark, and all belonging to it, were made according to the Model God gave him; not from any Egyptian Pattern, as some imagine. Bockart seems to me to speak judiciously, when he saith, there were not Figures of Angels, but rather Emblems whereby the Angelical Nature was in some sort expressed, Hierozoic. P. i. L. ii. c. 25. And were therefore ordered to be made, as Maimonides conjectures, that the Jews might be confirmed in the Belief of the Existence of Angels, which is the Second Article of their Faith, next to the Belief of God. And he commanded Two to be made; because if there had been but one, it might have led them into a dangerous Error, that this was the Figure of God, whereby they might have been inclin'd to worship it. But there being Two of them ordered, with this Declaration, the LORD our God is one God, it led them into right Thoughts, that God had many of these Angelical Ministers. Thus He: More Nechoch. P. iii. c. 45.

Of beaten Work shalt thou make them.] The Hebrew Word Mikshesh, which we translate beaten Work, signifies that both of them should be made out of the same Piece of Gold that made the Cover of the Ark; so as to be one continued Work with that, not separate from it. This appears to be true from the next Verse, Min hacapporet; out of the Mercy-seat shall ye make the Cherubims, &c. or, from the Mercy-seat shall they proceed, on the two Ends of it.

Ver. 19. And make one Cherub on the one End, and the other Cherub on the other End.] This looks like a Tautology (saith Abarbinel) it being said in the foregoing Words, in the two Ends of the Mercy-seat; but it is far from it, being a Declaration (as he takes it) that the Cherubims should not be placed both on one side of the Ark; nor so, as not to be opposite one to the other; but one on one side, and the other on the other side.

Even of the Mercy-seat shall ye make the Cherubims, on the two Ends thereof.] They were not to be made separate from the Mercy-seat, and afterwards joined to it, but to be made out of it, so as to be one piece with it (as was said, ver. 18.) which in the Execution of this Command appears very plainly, ch. xxxvii. 8.

Ver. 20. And the Cherubims shall stretch forth their wings on high.] This shows they were made like flying Creatures; but had not the Resemblance of any Fowl, that we know. So Josephus, ἑρμα πτερυγῶν, μορφήν ἔχοντες ὅτι οὐτ' ἀνθρώπων ἐνερμένον παραπλήσια, &c. flying Animals, like to none of those which are seen by Men; but such as Moses saw figured in the Throne of God; when he beheld, he means, his Majesty in the Mount, attended by the heavenly Host, L. iii. Antiq. c. 8. and again, L. viii. c. 2. As for the Cherubims, no body can tell, or conceive what they were like; ἑδῆς ὁποῖα τις εἶπεν ἢ ἐξ εἰκότος δυνάσαι. Some indeed think, that we may understand from what Ezekiel saith of them, their true Figure; and that they had the Face of Oxen; for that Face which in Ezek. i. 10. is called the Face of an Ox, is afterward called, ch. x. 14. the Face of a Cherub. But it is to be consider'd, that there is no proof the Cherubims here spoken of by Moses, had the same Face with those mention'd by Ezekiel, but were rather a quite different representation; for here God was represented as dwelling, nay sitting, and abiding among the Israelites; but there as removing and departing quite away from his Dwelling-place; and consequently, I conceive, his Ministers and Attendants appeared then in quite different shapes from what they had now.

Stretch forth their Wings on high.] As being upon the wing (to use our Language) that is, ready to fly, whither they were ordered by the Divine Majesty.

Covering the Mercy-seat with their Wings.] Their Wings were not to lie close to their Bodies, but to be raised up (as was said before) and spread, so that meeting together, they made, as it were, a Seat over the Ark, called the Throne of God.

Their Faces shall look one to another.] To signify, faith Abarbinel, their mutual consent and concord.

Towards the Mercy-seat shall the Faces of the Cherubims be.] They were so contrived that they looked downward, when they looked one to the other; to show (faith he) that they were Keepers of the Law, which was under the Mercy-seat.

Ver. 21. And thou shalt put the Mercy-seat above upon the Ark.] Having first put in the Testimony which he gave him (as it here follows) then he was to set the Mercy-seat upon the Ark (within the Crown which encompassed it) as a Cover to it. See ver. 16.

Ver. 22. And there will I meet with thee.] When thou hast occasion to consult me, I will there be present to communicate my Mind to thee: So Abarbinel. After the Ark is made, and the Law put into it, and the Cover laid upon it, I will speak with thee, from the Midst of the Mercy-seat, between the Cherubims: So that thou shalt not need to come up hither any more into the Mount, to fetch down Prophecy (as his phrase is) but I will give it thee from thence, and tell thee all that is to be taught Israel. See ch. xxx. 6.

And I will commune with thee from above the Mercy-seat, from between the two Cherubims, &c.] Here the Glory of the LORD resided, between the Cherubims; whose Wings were the Seat of the Divine Majesty; as the Cover of the Ark before-mentioned was his Foot-stool; for he is said to sit between the Cherubims, Psal. lxxx. 2. and the Ark is called his Foot-stool, Psal. xcix. 8. cxxxii. 7. This therefore being that Part of the Sanctuary, which was the Place of his peculiar Abode, where he is said to dwell, 1 Sam. iv. 4. (see de Dieu there) when Moses had any occasion to consult him, he was to resort hither; where God promises to meet him, and confer with him from hence; as we read he did, Numb. vii. 89.

Of all Things which I will give thee in Commandment unto the Children of Israel.] This shows that he resided here as their Lord and Governor; the Wings of the Cherubims composing his Throne, whereon he sat as their King, to give Orders for their Government; which more Imperatorio de Tribunali loquebatur, he delivered from this supreme Tribunal, after the Manner of Emperors (as Fortunatus Scacchus expresses it) or great Princes, who were wont in all Countries to have such magnificent Thrones erected, from whence to speak to their Subjects. Myrothebe. Sacrorum Elæocbrism, ii. c. 36.

Thus far he hath named only the Furniture of the inward House and Cabinet of the Divine Majesty, called the Holy of Holies. Now follows the principal Furniture of the outward House, called the Holy Place.

Ver. 23. Thou shalt also make a Table.] Which is a necessary Part of the Furniture of an House; and therefore here ordered to be made, in token of God's dwelling among them, ver. 8.

Of Shittim-Wood.] Of the same Materials with the Ark, ver. 10.

Two Cubits shall be the length thereof, &c.] It was neither so long, nor so broad as the Ark; but of the very same height, ver. 10. Josephus, to make the Greeks apprehend its Fashion, saith, it was like the famous Table at Delphi, L. iii. Antiq. c. 9. Which, if it be true, was made, it seems, in imitation of the Table of Moses.

Ver. 24. And thou shalt overlay it with pure Gold.] Just as the Ark was (see ver. 10.) and therefore it is probable, that the lower Parts of it, as well as the upper, and the Feet also, were plated with Gold; so that it might be called a golden Table.

And make thereto a Crown of Gold round about.] See ver. 10. where the same is directed for the Ark; and this had the same Use to keep what was set upon the Table from slipping off, and falling on the Ground.

Ver. 25. And thou shalt make unto it.] That is, to the Crown of Gold, as (Fortunatus Scacchus understands it) tho' others refer it to the Table.

A Border of an Hand-breadth round about.] Which came down below the Crown or Cornice, as they now speak. Tho' some think this Border was towards the Bottom, to join the Feet more firmly together.

And thou shalt make a golden Crown to the Border thereof round about.] Wheresoever this Border was (which I suppose was plated with Gold, like the Table) it had a Crown or a Cornice, as an Ornament to it. For this Crown was different from that mentioned in the foregoing Verse; and was under the Border (as the other Crown was above it) as Fortunatus Scacchus apprehends it; Myrothebe. ii. c. 38.

Ver. 26. And thou shalt make for it four Rings of Gold.] As there were for the Ark, ver. 12. only they were to be cast, these to be made: But how we are not told.

And put the Rings in the four Corners, that are on the four Feet thereof.] The Hebrew Word here for Corners always hath that Signification; being quite different from that Word which is used ver. 12. when he speaks of the Ark. Which may well incline us to Josephus's Opinion, that these Rings were not below, as they were in the Ark, but on the upper Part of the Feet of the Table; so that it was not carried up on high, as the Ark was, but hung down between the Priests, on whose Shoulders the Staves rested.

Ver. 27. Over against the Border shall the Rings be, &c.] Just below the Border and the Cornice before-before-mentioned (ver. 25.) were these Rings to be placed; as the Border and its Cornice were placed below the upper Crown (or Cornice) which compassed the Top of the Table, ver. 24.]

For plates of the Staves to bear the Table.] This expresses the Use of the Rings.

Ver. 28. And thou shalt make the Staves of Shittim-Wood, and overlay them with Gold.] Such as were made for the Carriage of the Ark, ver. 13.

That the Table may be borne with them.] By the Priests upon their Shoulders. For the Tabernacle being a moveable House, there were frequent Occasions, as they journeyed from one Place to another, to carry this Table along with them, as they did all other Things belonging to the House of God.

It is not ordered that the Staves should remain in the Rings, as they did in those belonging to the Ark (ver. 15.) because they might have been an Hindrance to the Priests in their Ministration at this Table every Day. Therefore it is likely, they were laid up in some Place near it, and put in when they travelled, as they were ordered to be, Numb. iv. 6.

Ver. 29. And thou shalt make the Dishes thereof.] It is not easy to give an Account, either of the Form, or of the Use of these Kebaroth, which we translate Dishes, i. e. Patins, whereon to put the Bread, which were twelve Loaves, Lev. xxiv. 6. and the Frankincense which was to be set upon each row of Loaves, ver. 7. This is a plain Sense, if the Loaves stood upon Dishes, and not immediately upon the Table, as Fortunatus Scaccus thinks they did: And therefore imagines they were full of fine Flour, of which the Bread was made; or with Oil, which was to be mingled and used in their Sacrifices. But this is more unlikely than the other, the Flour not being kept here in the holy Place, but in the outward Court; and his Reason for it is not solid; which is, That the Heads of their Tribes offered every one of them a silver Charger (so we render the same Word we here translate a Dish, Numb. vii.) full of fine Flour mingled with Oil. But those were not for the Use of this Table, on which such large Dishes or Chargers could not stand, there being no room for them. Therefore at last he fancies them to have been Salt Sellers, which were set upon the Table together with the Bread, being used at all Meals. And Philo, as he observes, seems to be of this Opinion, who speaking of this Table (in his Third Book of The Life of Moses) saith, ἐπὶ τῷ ἄρτι καὶ ἀλάτι, upon it were Loaves and Salts; from whence he conjectures there were two Salt-dishes at least. See his Myrothecium Sacror. Eleoebriſm. L. ii. c. 41.

And Spoons thereof.] If this be a true Interpretation of the Hebrew Word Cappoth, their use was to put Incense into the Dishes, and to take it out; for that they contained Incense, is evident from Numb. vii. 14, 20, 26, &c. Which makes the fore-named Author think this Word should rather be render'd Vials, which Pollux numbers among the sacred Vessels, and it is plain were used in offering Incense in the Temple; for St. John saw the Twenty four Elders, having every one of them golden Vials full of Odeurs, or Incense, Rev. v. 8. whence it is the LXX translate this Word ἀποτοια. The Form of which Fort. Scaccus, in the Place fore-mentioned, hath adventured to describe.

And Covers thereof.] Wherewith both the Loaves and the Incense were covered. So it is commonly understood. But Fortunatus Scaccus endeavours at large to prove that the Hebrew Word Kesoth is rightly translated by the LXX σκευή, which were Vessels used in their Libamina, when they poured Wine upon the Sacrifice, or upon the Altar, when they sacrificed. For Authors do not agree when this was done; some saying the Wine was poured out after the Sacrifice was slain, and laid on the Altar; others, that it was most commonly done before. The Manner being, first to throw Frankincense into the Fire on the Altar, then to pour out the Wine, and then the Sacrifice was slain. In which order Homer and Ovid report it, as Cuperus observes in his Apotheosis Homeri, p. 71. However this be, it is certain, from Hesychius, Pollux, and Suidas, that σκευή signifies such a Vessel: And Josephus saith, that when Pompey went into the holy Place, he saw there such Vessels as these, together with the Table and Candlestick, ἀρχιαιεῖς, καὶ ἀρχαῖαι, καὶ τετραίτες, καὶ σκευή, καὶ ἀμυθήβια, &c. L. i. de Bello Jud. c. 5. The only Objection against this is, that there was no use for such Vessels in that Place. To which I think it may be truly answered, that it was fit notwithstanding God's House should be furnished with all kinds of Utensils.

And Bowls thereof.] So St. Hierom understands the Hebrew Word Menakioth, which, following the LXX. he translates Cyatbos; the Form of which, Fortunatus Scaccus (in his fore-named Book, cap. 44.) hath endeavoured to make out, and establish this as the certain Meaning of the Word. But it is very hard to tell of what Use they were here, where no Drink was used; and yet our marginal Translation of the next Word seems to favour it, making these to pour out withal. And indeed the Hebrew Word signifies both to cover and to pour out. But the former seems most proper here, unless we take these to have been Bowls (or such like Vessels) set here merely to signify more completely, that God kept House among them (as we speak) they being part of the Furniture of a Table.

Others think they were Stands, upon which the Dishes of Bread were set.

To cover withal.] If we allow of this Translation, and it relate to the Word Bowls immediately preceding, then it signifies these Vessels were a larger sort of Covers. Or it may refer to the Whole, that all the fore-named Vessels were made to cover the Table entirely. But the marginal Translation being also agreeable to the Hebrew Text, it may possibly declare the Use of the fore-named Vessels, which was to pour out withal. For in their Libamina there were several Sorts of these Vessels used among the Gentiles; one only to taste the Wine before the Sacrifice, which Scaccus thinks was that the Romans called Simpulum; another to pour it upon the Sacrifice when it was offered, which they called Guttus, because it had a narrow Mouth, out of which the Wine came out by little and little.

Out of pure Gold shalt thou make them.] All Things in this part of the House were of Gold, that the Royal Palace of their King might be most sumptuously furnished, suitable to the Greatness of his Majesty.

Ver. 30. And thou shalt set upon the Table Shew-Bread.] In the Hebrew, Bread of the Face, or Presence, because it was set before the Ark of the Covenant where God was present. The fore-mentioned Fort. Scacchus thinks the Heatben from hence borrowed their Custom of setting sacred Loaves before Ceres, in her Feast called Theismophoria, as he observes out of Atbenæus, L. iii. Deipnosoph. c. 25. and other Places. Vid. Myrothec. ii. Sacr. Eleocrysm, c. 39.

Before me alway.] These Loaves constantly stood upon the Table (new ones being brought, when the old ones were removed every Sabbath-day) before the Divine Majesty; a Cloth being spread upon it, whereon these, and all the fore-named Things were set, Numb. iv. 7. And they were Twelve of them in all, representing the Twelve Tribes of Israel, whose Offering these were to God, whose Ministers ate them in the holy Place, Lev. xxiv. 5, 7, 8, 9. They were set in two Rows, one piled upon another, as Josephus represents them.

When Maimonides wrote his More Nevachim, he confesses (P. iii. c. 5.) to that Day he was ignorant of the Reason of this Table, and the Bread continually upon it. Which is very strange, when at the Beginning of these Directions, God had declared he would have an House built, that he might dwell among them, ver. 8. which Dwelling among them, was admirably represented, by its having in it all Things belonging to a Dwelling-House, particularly a Table and Bread (signifying all Provision) whereby they were made to understand, that God, as was said before, kept House among them. Which no body hath explained so well as an incomparable Writer of our own, Dr. Cudworth, in a Discourse put out long ago, concerning The Right Notion of the Lord's Supper, cap. vi. where he observes out of Nachman, That there was a Table and Candlestick ordered for this House, because they were the ordinary Furniture of a Room. For which Reason the Table had its Dishes, Spoons, Bowls and Covers, (tho' they were never used) and was always furnished with Bread upon it; as the Candlestick also had Lamps continually burning. From hence it was likewise that there was a continual Fire, in this Dwelling of God, upon his Altar. And, to carry on the Notion thoroughly, constant Meat and Provision brought to it, by the Sacrifices there offered, which were partly consumed by Fire upon God's own Altar; and partly eaten by the Priests, who were God's domestick Servants, and therefore to be maintained by him. And besides the Flesh of the Beast offered up in Sacrifice, there was a Mincha, or Meat-Offering, made of Flour and Oil; together with a Drink-Offering, which were ever joined with the daily Burnt-Sacrifice, being the Bread and the Drink which were to go along with God's Meat. So the Sacrifices are called in the first of Malachi. It was also strictly commanded, as we read in Leviticus, that Salt should accompany every Sacrifice and Oblation; because it was not fit, as the same Nachman observes, that God's Meat should be unfavoury. And all these were to be consumed on the Altar only, by the holy Fire which came down from Heaven, because they were God's Portion, and therefore to be consumed by himself in an extraordinary manner.

There are those of the Jews who look upon this Bread, set on God's Table, as an Acknowledgment that they received their Food from God. And we may add, that this Bread being made of the same Corn, which they eat of themselves, is still farther represented to them, that they were God's Convivæ; who continually entertained them with that Provision which was made for him.

Ver. 31. And thou shalt make a Candlestick of pure Gold.] Another necessary Piece of Furniture for a House, especially when there were no Windows in it.

Of beaten Gold shall it be made.] Not hollow, but of solid Gold.

His Shaft.] The main Body or Trunk of it.

And his Branches.] Which shot as it were out of the Trunk.

His Bowls.] Or Cups: For so the Word Gebieba is translated, Gen. xlv. 1, 5. and they were in the Fashion of an Almond, as it is ordered, ver. 33.

His Knops.] Round like an Apple or Pomegranate; as the Word Caphtoreba signifies.

And his Flowers.] The Vulgar translates it Lillies; but the Word properly signifies the Blossoms of Trees.

Shall be of the same.] All of Gold, tho' not all of one piece; for as Fort. Scacchus not unreasonably conjectures, these several Parts of the Candlestick were separable one from another, when there was occasion to remove it from one Place to another. See his Myrothec. Sacr. Eleocrysm, c. 46.

Ver. 32. And six Branches shall come out of the Sides of it, &c.] In this and the following Verses he describes how all the above-named Parts should be disposed so as to make the Candlestick appear glorious; and first he here directs, that three Branches should come out of each side of the main Trunk or Shaft.

Ver. 33. Three Bowls made like unto Almonds, with a Knop and a Flower in one Branch, &c.] Next he orders that every Branch of the six, should have three Bowls (or Cups, as I said before) into which, perhaps, the Snuff was to fall; and between every one of them a Knop and a Flower: And the Cups were to be of the Figure of an Almond.

So in the six Branches.] Which were to be all alike.

That come out of the Candlestick.] i. e. Out of the Trunk; which is here, and in the next Verse, called the Candlestick, because it was the main part of it, which supported all the Branches.

Ver. 34. And in the Candlestick.] i. e. In the main Trunk or Shaft, out of which the Branches proceeded.

Shall be four Bowls like to Almonds, with their Knops and their Flowers.] The Branches were to have but three Bowls, and as many Knops and Flowers; but the Shaft or Trunk was to have four of each, it being longer than the Branches that came out of it.

Ver. 35. And there shall be a Knop under two Branches of the same, &c.] This being repeated twice, twice, signifies that the Knops should be so contrived, that out of three of them should arise two Branches, one on the one side, and one on the other. So that out of the fourth Knop, which I suppose was the lowermost, there was no Branch at all; but that, with the Cup and Flower, were the Ornament of that part of the Shaft which was under the Branches.

That proceed out of the Candlestick.] i. e. Out of the Shaft or Main Trunk, ver. 33.

Ver. 36. Their Knops and their Branches shall be of the same, &c.] No difference between them; but all solid, not hollow Work, of pure Gold.

Here is nothing said of the Foot of it; which was, no question, proportionable to the rest. Nor doth he mention the Length of the Start or Trunk: But Fortunatus Scacbus adventures to guess that it was near double the Height of the Table, and of the Altar of Incense, which made it look majestically, and yet did not raise it so much as to damnify the Roof of the Tabernacle; Myrothec. ii. c. 45. p. 439.

Ver. 37. And thou shalt make the seven Lamps thereof.] i. e. Cause them to be made. But of what Metal, it is not said; most likely of Gold, as well as the Tongs, and the other Things mentioned ver. 38. The Form is not here prescribed; which the fore-named Scacbus (Myrothec. i. c. 7.) thinks was like an Almond.

And they shall light the Lamps thereof.] They whose Work it is, viz. the Priests, ch. xxx. 7, 8. Lev. xxiv. 3, 4.

That they may give Light over against it.] That is, over against the Candlestick (as some will have it) the six Branches all inclining to the Trunk in the middle. But here he speaks of the seven Lamps; not of six only, which gave light over against some other Thing, which I take to be the Table. For it is plain, by ch. xxvi. 35. and xl. 24. that the Candlestick was placed over against the Table, being on the South-side of the House, as the Table was on the North. See Numb. viii. 2.

Ver. 38. And the Tongs thereof.] Or Snuffers belonging to it; which Scacbus (both in his first and second Myrothecium) probably proves were not of such a Form as are now in use, but were only little Tongs or Scissors, whereby the Lamps were clipt to make them shine more brightly; Myrothec. i. c. 10. & ii. c. 46. p. 455.

And Snuff-dishes.] In which the Snuffers, and the Snuffers of the Lamps, were put; and for the latter Use, he thinks they had Water in them.

Shall be of pure Gold.] It was most for the Magnificence of this House, and becoming the Divine Majesty who dwelt there, that the meanest Thing therein should be made of pure Gold.

Ver. 39. Of a Talent of pure Gold shall be made it, with all these Vessels.] A Talent was three thousand Shekels, as will appear afterward; which, how much it makes of our Money, see ch. xxxviii. 25.

Ver. 40. And look that thou make all after their Pattern.] Take care to observe that Precept which I have already given, ver. 9. and now repeat again; that every one of these Things be made according to that Model which I set before thee. For God would have nothing left to the Fancy of the People, whom he knew were too much inclined to the Gentile Superstition. And if Moses had not been determined by a divine Prescription, they would have been apt in all these Things to have interposed their own Inventions.

Which was shewed thee in the Mount.] By this it still plainly appears that Moses saw not only the House, but all the Furniture belonging to it; set up in the Mount before him, just as he afterward set it up below among the People.

CHAP. XXVI.

Ver. i. Moreover.] From the Furniture he proceeds to the House; and first orders him how to make the inward Part of it.

Thou shalt make me a Tabernacle.] The Hebrew Word Mischcan properly signifies a Place to dwell in, an Habitation (according to what was said, ch. xxv. 8.) For this was the Place of the SCHECHINAH (which comes from the same Root with Mischcan) which dwelt here as in its House. But it is commonly translated a Tabernacle, only to signify what kind of Dwelling it was, viz. a portable House, as Philo calls it, φορετόν ἱερόν; which might be taken down, and removed from one Place to another, and set up again, without any damage to it.

With ten Curtains.] These were so many Pieces of Tapestry (as we now call them) with which this Tent was hung on the Sides, and covered at the Top.

Of fine twined Linen.] Concerning fine Linen, see ch. xxv. 4. and concerning twined Linen, see ch. xxviii. 6.

With Cherubims.] It is uncertain what Figure these were of. See ch. xxv. 18.

Of cunning Work shalt thou make them.] There were two sorts of Work more artificial than ordinary; the one called Choscheb (which is that here mentioned) the other Rokem; which we translate Needle-work. The former was the most excellent, for it was done by weaving, and had Figures on both Sides; whereas that by Needle-work had only on one Side, as Jarchi here notes: Who says there was, suppose the Figure of a Lion on one side, and of an Eagle on the other. Or rather, he should have said, the same Figure appeared on both Sides, as Maimonides seems to take it, in his Kele Hammikdab, c. 8. 'Wherefore any Work is called Rokem in Scripture, it is to be understood of Figures which are made only on one side of the Web: But the Work called Choscheb had Figures on both Sides, before and behind.' See ch. xxviii. 39.

Ver. 2. The Length of one Curtain shall be eight and twenty Cubits, &c.] Every one of these Curtains were fourteen Yards long, and two Yards broad: For a Cubit was half a Yard of our Measure, according to common Estimation. It was some Inches more, as I have observed on ch. xxv. 10. But to make the Reader more easily comprehend it, I shall not exactly compute the Length and Breadth of these Curtains, but follow the vulgar Opinion. And with these, it will appear afterward, both the Roof of the Tabernacle was covered, and the Sides of it likewise, almost down.

down to the Ground; that is, within a Cubit of it, as Josephus saith, and as may be made out from the Text; the Tabernacle (according to the common Notion of a Cubit) being fifteen Yards long, five Yards broad, and as many Yards high.

Every one of the Curtains shall have one Measure.] Be exactly of the same Length and Breadth.

Ver. 3. The five Curtains shall be coupled together, one to another; and other five Curtains, one to another.] Being thus sewed together, of ten Curtains (each of which, as was said before, was fourteen Yards long, and two Yards broad) was made two large Pieces of Tapestry, each of them fourteen Yards long, and ten Yards broad. With one of these Pieces of Tapestry the Holy Place was covered, it being just so many Yards broad as that Place was long; so that it did not come down before at the East-end, which was the Entrance of the Sanctuary. The other Piece of Tapestry covered the Holy of Holies; which being but five Yards long, one half of this Piece hung down behind it at the West-end, and touched the silver Bases.

Ver. 4. And thou shalt make Loops of blue upon the Edge of the one Curtain, &c.] These two great Curtains being made by sewing five lesser together, the Loops were not woven with the Curtains, but tack'd to the Selvage of the outermost of them, and were made of blue Tape.

In the Coupling.] In that part of the great Curtains where they were to be coupled together.

Ver. 5. Fifty Loops shalt thou make in the one Curtain, &c.] Each of those great Pieces of Tapestry had fifty Loops, answering one to another so exactly, that they might take hold one of another.

Ver. 6. And thou shalt make fifty Taches of Gold, &c.] By these golden Clasps the Loops were so linked together, that the two great Pieces of Tapestry made but one Covering. Which is the Meaning of the following Words.

And it shall be one Tabernacle.] By this Union the Covering of the Tabernacle shall be as if it were one intire Piece.

Ver. 7. And thou shalt make.] Now he gives Directions about the outward Part of the House.

Curtains of Goats-hair.] Tho' a soft kind of Cloth was made of Goats-hair, yet in comparison with the other, it was a coarser sort of Covering, to be laid over the finer before-mentioned, for their preservation and sheltering from the Weather. The old Arabians, called Scenitæ, made their Tents of Goats-hair; for Solinus calls them Cilicina, which he interprets Caprarum pilis Texta. Concerning the Word we translate Goats-hair, see ch. xxv. 4.

To be a Covering upon the Tabernacle.] By Tabernacle in the foregoing Words, ver. 6. seems to be meant the Covering of the Tabernacle, which was of one intire Piece. And so it is to be understood here, where a second Covering is ordered to be thrown over the first.

Eleven Curtains shalt thou make.] There was one more of these Camlet Curtains (as I may call them) than of the Tapestry, which were but ten.

Ver. 8. And the Length of one Curtain shall be thirty Cubits.] As there was one Curtain more of these, so they were one Yard longer than the former.

And the Breadth of one Curtain four Cubits.] This was the Breadth of the former, ver. 2. (where see what a Cubit was) but there being one Curtain more of these than of the other, they were two Yards broader than them, when they were all joined together: Inasmuch that they both came down lower than the other, on either Side, half a Yard; and also hung down a Yard before the Entrance of the Tabernacle, which the former did not cover at all.

Ver. 9. And thou shalt couple five Curtains by themselves, and six Curtains by themselves.] They were to be coupled together after the same manner as the former, that they might make two large Pieces; but there being eleven Curtains in all, there were but five in one Piece, and six in the other.

And shalt double the sixth Curtain in the Forefront of the Tabernacle.] The Meaning seems to be, that he should turn up that part of the Curtain which hung down at the Entrance of the Tabernacle.

Ver. 10. And thou shalt make fifty Loops, &c.] This may be sufficiently understood by what was said concerning the Loops of the other Covering, ver. 4. 5.

Ver. 11. And thou shalt make fifty Taches of Brass, &c.] The two great Pieces of the inner Hangings being the richer, were coupled together with Clasps of Gold (ver. 6.) but these, being coarser, only with Clasps of Brass. Which did not lie directly over the Golden, but, as Dr. Lightfoot observes, were three Quarters of a Yard more westward; these two large Pieces not being of an equal Signefs.

And couple the Tent together.] i. e. These outward Hangings or Coverings (as we translate the Word Obel, ver. 7.) of the Tent.

That it may be one.] That the two Pieces may be knit together by the Loops and Clasps into one. See ver. 6. where this Place is there called Mishkan (Dwelling) which is here called obel, to show more clearly what kind of Dwelling it was; an ambulatory House, such as Shepherds have, which they remove from Place to Place, Gen. iv. 20.

Ver. 12. And the Remnant that remaineth of the Curtains of the Tent, the half Curtain that remaineth, shall hang over the backside of the Tabernacle.] These outward Curtains being four Cubits, that is, two Yards and more broader than the inward, they hung down above a Yard lower than the other on the backside (or West-part) of the Tabernacle, as they did on the Front or Entrance (I observed before, ver. 8.) which was on the East.

Ver. 13. And a Cubit on the one side, and a Cubit on the other side of that which remaineth in the Length of the Curtains of the Tent, it shall hang over the Sides of the Tabernacle, &c.] These outward Curtains being a Yard (as two Cubits are commonly esteemed) longer than the inward, as appears from ver. 8. they hung down therefore on either side a Cubit, that is, half a Yard lower than the inward did. And yet they did not come quite to the Ground; but the Foundation of the Tabernacle, which was of Silver, might be seen round about, save only at the West-end.

Ver. 14. And thou shalt make a Covering for the Tent of Rams-skins dyed red.] This was a third Covering to be laid over the other two, to keep them from wet. It is not said of what Dimensions it was, which hath made some fancy it covered only the Roof. But it is far more reasonable to think that it was as large as the foregoing going Covering of Goats-hair; which might have been spoiled by Rain and Dust, if the Sides had not been defended as well as the Roof. Concerning these Rams-skins, see ch. xxv. 5.

And a Covering above.] That is, a fourth Covering above that of Rams-skins, for the greater Security of the two inmost Hangings; which had need of all this Defence, especially on the Roof, because it was flat, and consequently the Rain was more likely to soak into it.

Of Badger-skins.] I observed on ch. xxv. 5. that all the antient Interpreters take Thachas for a Colour, and not for a Badger, or any other Animal. For which there is this considerable Argument, which I did not there mention; That when God sets forth his extraordinary Kindness to Israel, as his beloved Spouse, and shows, in many magnificent Expressions, how richly he adorned her, he saith, among other Things, that he shod her with THACHAS, which we translate Badger-skins; of which the meanest People never made any use for Shoes; And therefore Bachartus rightly concludes it signifies something of greater Value, viz. Rams-skins dyed of a kind of Purple-colour.

Ver. 15. Thou shalt make Boards for the Tabernacle.] Or Planks, which were the Walls of the House.

Of Shittim-wood.] See ch. xxv. 5.

Standing up.] Erect upon one end, and not lying side-ways.

Ver. 16. Ten Cubits shall be the Length of a Board.] By this it appears the House (according to the vulgar Opinion of a Cubit) was but five Yards in height. See ver. 18.

And a Cubit and an half shall be the Breadth of one Board.] Three quarters broad; by which, compared with ver. 18. it will appear how long the House was.

Ver. 17. Two Tenons shall there be on one Board, &c.] The Hebrew calls them Hands; because they were so made, as to take fast hold of the Sockets mentioned, ver. 19.

Set in order one against another.] They were in each corner of every Plank, at the bottom of it.

Ver. 18. And thou shalt make, &c. twenty Boards on the South-side, southward.] By this it appears the Tabernacle was thirty Cubits, that is (according to common Estimation) fifteen Yards long; each of these twenty Boards being three quarters of a Yard broad. But this seems not to be magnificent enough; and therefore it is more reasonable to follow their Computation, who think the Jewish Cubit was three Inches and more longer than our half Yard. Which makes the Tabernacle near half as big again, both in Length and Height, than it is commonly described. See ch. xxv. 10.

Ver. 19. And thou shalt make forty Sockets of Silver under the twenty Boards, &c.] There were two silver Sockets for each Plank, whose Tenons sinking into these Mortaises, the middle of the Planks settled upon these Bases, as the Foundation of the House. For so the Hebrew Word Adon imports; signifying that which supports another Thing which stands upon it. And these seem to have been so large, that two Sockets were as long as each Plank was broad, that is, three quarters of a Yard; and being joined close together, they made one entire Foundation, tho' consisting of several Pieces.

Ver. 20. And for the second side of the Tabernacle on the north Side, there shall be twenty Boards.] This Verse, and the next, only direct that the North Side of the Tabernacle should be answerable to the South.

Ver. 22. And for the Sides of the Tabernacle westward.] The Hebrew Word we translate Sides, should rather be translated Ends: For סוף, when it is applied to an inanimate Thing, signifies the End, the Term, or Extremity of it. As Gen. xlix. 13. we translate it a Border, and the LXX in Isa. xxxvii. 24. translate it, τὰ ἔσχατα, the extreme Parts of Lebanon. And so both the Chaldee Paraphrasts in this Place explain it, by the Ends of the Tabernacle westward; for the Entrance was on the East, and the End of it on the West.

Thou shalt make six Boards.] Of the same Breadth with the other, which made them four Yards and a half, according to the vulgar Notion of a Cubit.

Hitherto there is no Direction about the Entrance, or East-end; which is reserved till the last.

Ver. 23. And two Boards shalt thou make for the Corners of the Tabernacle on the two Sides.] Besides the six Planks before-mentioned, there was a Plank at each Corner, which joined the end of the Tabernacle and the two Sides together, and made the whole Building stronger and more stedfast. How broad they were, he doth not tell us; but I suppose only large enough to make the West End five Yards broad, that is, each of them half a Cubit.

Ver. 24. And they shall be coupled together beneath, and they shall be coupled together above the Head of it, unto one Ring, &c.] To make all more firm, these two Corner Planks (for of them he seems here to speak) were to be knit to the other Planks, both at the top and at the bottom, with a golden Link. Some think every Plank was thus linkt to the next (whence they are here called Twins) for the strengthening the whole Fabric: But if this be true, it is not clearly expressed.

Ver. 25. And they shall be eight Boards, and their Sockets of Silver, &c.] Thus there were eight Planks in all at the West End (ver. 22, 23.) whose Tenons struck into the Mortaises of sixteen Silver Bases. See ver. 19.

Ver. 26. And thou shalt make Bars of Shittim-wood.] Besides the Links of Gold which held the Boards together, at the top and at the bottom, there were also wooden Bars, which run into Staples of Gold, which were fastned in every Plank; as it follows, ver. 29.

Five for the Boards of the one side of the Tabernacle.] There were five of these Bars on each side, ver. 27. whereby the Planks were held tight together. Of what Length they were, is not here said; but Josephus tells us, they were each five Cubits.

Ver. 27. And five Bars for the Boards of the Tabernacle for the two Sides westward.] Besides those on the North and South-side (mentioned in the latter End of ver. 26. and the Beginning of this) there were five at the West-end. For so it should be translated, not the two Sides (for there was but one) but the two Ends; that is, the two Corners Corners at the West Part of the Tabernacle, which was much strengthened by these Bars. Or the Plural Number (as is usual) is put for the Singular, this being the End wherein two Sides terminated.

Ver. 28. And the middle Bar.] This seems to intimate that the other four were at the top, and at the bottom, and this in the midst of the Planks.

In the midst of the Boards, shall reach from end to end.] The Hebrew Doctors, whom Dr. Lightfoot follows, take this as if it signified that this Bar went through the very Planks, which was bored in the midst. But then the Planks must have been of such a Thickness, as would have made them less portable, than this Tabernacle seems to have been; for they would have been Timber, rather than Planks. I take it therefore that this was a long Bar, which reached from end to end, and went through Staples, which were in the middle of the Planks, as the other did above and below. The only Question is, Whether these Bars were in the inside of the Tabernacle, or the outside? It seems most probable they were without, under the Coverings; for they had not been so lightly within.

Ver. 29. And thou shalt overlay the Boards with Gold.] If they were overlaid with Plates of Gold, it made them very heavy; unless we suppose the Plates to have been very thin. Others therefore take it that they were only gilded.

And make their Rings of Gold, for Places for the Bars, &c.] The Staples were of massy Gold, into which the Bars went; which were also either overlaid with Plates of Gold, or gilded.

Ver. 30. And thou shalt rear up the Tabernacle, according to the Fashion thereof, which was shewed thee in the Mount.] When all these Materials were prepared, then he is here commanded to set it up, according to the Model which was shewn him now in the Mount. See ch. xxv. 40.

Ver. 31. And thou shalt make a Veil of blue, &c.] Concerning these Colours, see ch. xxv. 5. and of fine Linen, ch. xxv. 4. of twined Linen, ch. xxviii. 6.

Cunning Work.] R. Solomon here repeats what he said before on ver. 1. that the Work called Chofcheb was so artificial, that it had not only Figures on both sides, but those different one from the other: For example; on one side a Lion, on the other an Eagle. Josephus saith all sorts of Flowers, and other Ornaments, were wrought in this Veil, except only the Figures of Animals.

With Cherubims shalt thou make them.] See ch. xxv. 18. This Veil seems to have been of the same Work with the rest of the inward Hangings of the Tabernacle, mentioned ver. 1. unless we suppose that in them the Cherubims only were of Cunning Work. But I take the whole Work of this Veil to have been of that sort; the Cherubims being in the midst of all sorts of Flowers, and other Pictures.

The Hebrew Word Paroketh, which we translate Veil, coming from Perek, which signifies Hardness and Rigour (Exod. i. 13, 14.) it hath made some conclude that this Veil was of a great Thickness (the Hebrews say four Fingers) which makes it the more wonderful that it was torn in sunder at our Saviour's Passion. Certain it is, that it is so thick, that none could look thorow it into the Holy of Holies.

Ver. 32. And thou shalt hang it upon four Pillars of Shittim-wood, overlaid with Gold.] This is a sign that it was thick and heavy, there being four Pillars to support it, which stood at an equal distance one from another. Of Shittim-wood, see ch. xxv. 5. It is uncertain whether the Pillars were plated over with Gold, or only gilt.

Their Hooks shall be of Gold.] Some will have the Word Vavehim to signify the Heads of the Pillars; for so the LXX call them, κεφαλίδες. But it literally signifies Hooks (as we translate it) in the Form of the Letter Vau, which were on the top of the Pillars, upon which the Veil was hung; as appears from the next Verse.

Upon four Sockets of Silver.] As the Top of the Pillars were of Gold, so they stood upon Pedestals of Silver.

Ver. 33. And thou shalt hang up the Veil under the Taches.] The golden Clasps that knit together the two great Pieces of Hangings (ver. 6.) were just between the Holy and the most holy Place; so that the Veil, which separated these two, hung exactly under these Clasps.

That thou mayest bring in thither, within the Veil, the Ark of the Testimony.] A separate Place being made by this Veil, the Ark was to be brought into it (see ch. xxv. 16, 22.) and set at the West-end of it.

And the Veil shall divide unto you, between the holy Place and the most holy.] It made a Partition of the Tabernacle into two Parts; one of which was the holy Place, into which none but the Priests might enter; and the other the most holy, into which none but the High-Priest might enter, and that but once in the Year. The most holy Place was but a third Part of the Tabernacle; being a perfect Square, five Yards high, and as many long and broad, according to the common Opinion concerning a Cubit.

Ver. 34. And thou shalt put the Mercy-seat.] See ch. xxv. 17.

Upon the Ark of the Testimony, in the most holy Place.] This being the most precious Testimony of God's Presence with them, was put in the most secret Place of God's House. Just as the Palladium, or whatsoever other sacred Thing it was of which the Vestal Virgins were the Conservators (for Diodorus Siculus saith he could not certainly tell, nor did he think it became a religious Man to enquire into that which was intended to be a Secret) was kept in the inmost Part of the Temple of Vesta, which was called Penus, as we are told by Festus; who saith, Penus vocabatur, locus ultimus in aede Vestæ, tegetibus septus, &c. Into this Place none but the Vestal Virgins, and the Pontifex Maximus might go; as Lipsius observes, in his Sintagma de Vestæ & Vestalibus, c. 4.

Ver. 35. And thou shalt set the Table without the Veil, &c.] This Verse only directs how the Table and the Candlestick (which were ordered to be made, ch. xxv. 23, 31.) should be set in the holy Place, which was without the Veil; one of them on the South-side, and the other on the North-side, over against it. But whether in the middle of the Holy Place, or more toward the upper End, is not said.

Ver. 36. And thou shalt make an Hanging for the Door of the Tent.] Now Directions are given about the the entrance of the Tabernacle; before which he orders a Curtain to be hung; which may be called the first Veil, with respect to that before-mentioned (ver. 31.) which the Apostle calls the second, Heb. ix. 3.

Of Blue and Purple, &c.] Concerning these Colours, see ch. xxv. 5. and concerning fine twined Linen, ch. xxviii. 6.

Wrought with Needle-Work.] This was not such curious Work as that which we translate cunning Work (ver. 31.) which was in the other Veil before the most holy Place. See ch. xxxviii. 39.

Besides this, Josephus saith there was another Veil of Linen, to defend it from the Injury of the Weather, which was wont to be drawn aside upon Festivals, that the People might see the Beauty of this first Veil. And indeed it is very probable, that some Curtain or other, was in bad Weather, at least, hung before it, to secure it; as the Covering of Skins was over the Hangings of the Tabernacle.

Ver. 37. And thou shalt make for the Hanging, five Pillars of Shittim-Wood.] These Pillars seem to have been disposed in this Manner; Two of them were placed at each Corner, which, if they took up a Cubit, then the other Three being placed at an equal Distance, made four Spaces, each of two Cubits (i. e. a Yard) wide; at which the Priests enter'd when they went to minister in the Sanctuary.

And overlay them with Gold.] It is not certain, whether with Plates of Gold, or only gilded. But it appears from ch. xxxvi. ult. (where we read of the Execution of this Command) that by Pillars are here to be understood only the Chapters of them, which were all gilded; and the Pillars themselves had only Fillets, or Hoops of Gold about them, in several Parts of them.

And their Hooks shall be of Gold.] As those for the other Veil were. See ver. 32.

And thou shalt cast five Sockets of Brasses for them.] Their Bases on which they stood, were meaner than those for the Pillars on which the second Veil hung; for they were of Silver, as the Foundation of the whole House was, ver. 25, 32.

CHAP. XXVII.

Ver. 1. AND thou shalt make an Altar.] Of Burnt-Offering, as it is explained ch. xxxviii. 1. And the Hebrew Word Mizbeach, properly signifies, that upon which Sacrifices were slain and offered.

Of Shittim-Wood.] What Sort of Wood this was, see ch. xxv. 5.

Five Cubits long, and five Cubits broad, &c.] It was two Yards and a half Square (according to the common Notion of a Cubit) at the Top and Bottom of it.

And the Height thereof shall be three Cubits.] Being a Yard and half in Height from the Ground, the Priest (as Fortunatus Scacchus observes) who minister'd at it, was half a Yard above it; the common Stature of a Man being four Cubits, i. e. two Yards, Sacr. Elæo. Myroib. ii. c. 65. It is not said how thick the Wood was, of which this Frame (as I may call it) was made; but it's certain that it was Hollow within, that the Grate mentioned ver. 4. might hang in the midst of it.

VOL. I.

Ver. 2. And thou shalt make the Horns of it upon the four Corners thereof.] The Hebrew Word Kerem, which properly signifies an Horn, signifies also an eminent or high Place; as in Isa. v. 1. God, saith he, had planted a Vineyard in a fruitful Hill; where the Words in the Hebrew are, in a Horn of the Son of Oil; from whence it signifies a Pinacle, or Spire rising up from any Building, as these Horns did from the Altar, for the Ornament of it. Some will have it, that they were useful also to tie the Sacrifices to it (which they gather from Psalms cxviii. 27.) and that they were of the Fashion of Oxen or Rams Horns. Fortunatus Scacchus contends earnestly for this (in his Myrobec. ii. Sacr. Elæochrism, c. 65.) such Horns being much in use in the ancient Religion, as appears (he observes) from the Altars of the Gentiles. And yet he confesses in the lxix Chapter of the same Book, that such kind of strait Pinacles as I mentioned before, after the Manner of Obelisks (as his Words are) were more convenient for the putting of the Blood of the Sacrifices round about them, as is required, Lev. xvi. 18.

His Horns shall be of the same.] These Spires seem to have been wrought out of the same Piece of Wood, with the Corners of the Altar.

And thou shalt overlay it with Brasses.] Some think it was overlaid with Brasses, not only without, but within, that the Fire which burnt in the Grate might not take hold of the Wood. To prevent which, others fancied it was lined within with unhewn Stone; but there is no mention of any such Thing, and it was necessary, if the Brasses be supposed to have been of such a Thickness as to secure the wooden Frame of the Altar.

Ver. 3. And thou shalt make his Pans.] The Hebrew Word Siroth signifies Pots as well as Pans; but here is determined to the latter Sense, by the Use of them, which here follows.

To receive his Ashes.] Or rather to carry out the Ashes which fell from the Altar upon the Earth; and being taken up, were put into these Pans, to be carried into a clean Place, Lev. iv. 12. Fortunatus Scacchus hath adventured to delineate the Form of them, in the Book before-mentioned, cap. 73.

And his Shovels.] The Hebrew Word Hajabim properly signifies Beesoms or Brooms, but here is rightly translated Shovels, by which, being made of Brasses, the Ashes under the Altar were scraped together on an heap, and then thrown into the Pans.

And his Basins.] The principal Use of these Vessels was to receive the Blood of the Sacrifices, which was to be sprinkled as the Law directed; for the Hebrew Word Mizrakoth carries this Signification in it. Besides which, Fort. Scacchus thinks they served for the Mixture of the Oil with fine Flour and Frankincense, which were to be burnt on the Altar; for when any Man offered a Meat-Offering, the Priest was to take an handful of the Flour and of the Oil, with all the Frankincense, as God's part, to be consumed on the Altar; and therefore we must suppose some Vessel wherein these were brought to the Priest, as the Law requires, Lev. ii. 1, 2.

And his Fleeth-hooks.] Or Forks, as the Word Mizlegoth may be translated; which Fort. Scacchus thinks were in the Form of a Trident; with which they stirred up the Fire; and also ordered the Pieces of the Sacrifice, if any chanced to lie out of it, and put them into it, that every bit might be surely consumed.

And his Fire-pans.] These are commonly taken for Dishes or Censers, in which the Priest carried burning Coals from the Altar into the Sanctuary, to offer Incense upon the golden Altar. But the above-named Fort. Scacbus thinks they did not minister in the holy Place with brazen Censers; and therefore takes these Fire-pans for a larger sort of Vessel, wherein the sacred Fire, which came down from Heaven, was kept burning whilst they cleansed the Altar and the Grate from the Coals and Ashes; and when this Altar was to be carried from one Place to another, as it was often in the Wilderness, Myrothec. ii. Sacr. Elæochrism, c. 73.

Ver. 4. And thou shalt make for it a Grate.] This was the principal Part of the Altar, the Wood being laid here, and the Sacrifices burnt in it; whence the Greeks call it εγδαρ, which was the Name the Heathen gave to the Fire-place upon their Altars, as we learn from Jul. Pollux. The figure of it was round (as Fort. Scacbus gathers from the very Name in Hebrew; for Mich-bar signifies a Sieve) but grew less and less, till at the Bottom it ended, like a Top, in a Point. So he describes it in the fore-named Book, cap. 71.

Of Net-Work.] It was made full of Holes, like a Sieve or Net (and thence called simply the Net, in the latter End of this Verse, and in the next) that the Ashes might fall thro' them to the Bottom of the Altar, where there was a Door, on the East-side, to open and take out the Ashes.

Of Brass.] The Metal of which all the fore-named Things were made, and the Altar it self was overlaid.

And upon the Net.] i. e. The Grate full of Holes, as was said before.

Thou shalt make four brazen Rings.] The Use of which was double; first that by them it might be hung upon the Altar; and then, when it was to be cleansed, or removed in their Travels, it might by them be taken off.

In the four Corners thereof.] This seems to overthrow what I now said of its Circular Figure; but it is to be observed, that Moses doth not use the same Word here, which he doth when he speaks of the four Corners of the Altar, which he calls Pinoth, ch. v. 2. but calls these only Ketzoth, which may be better translated the Extremities of it, as the said Fort. Scacbus hath noted.

Ver. 5. And thou shalt put it under the Compass of the Altar beneath.] Some have fancied that this Grate was placed only at the Top of the Altar; but that doth not agree with these Directions, which only place it beneath, in the hollow Part of the Altar (called in the Hebrew Carcob, which signifies, as R. Solomon saith, any Thing that is round, and is by us translated the Compass) but so much lower than the Top of the Altar, that it was even to the Midst of it, as it here follows.

That the Net may be even to the Midst of the Altar.] This shows the Depth of the Grate to have been a Cubit and an half; for the Altar being three Cubits high (ver. 1.) and the Bottom of this being even to the Middle of the Altar, it must hang down half way to the Ground, and consequently be a Cubit and an half from the Top of it to the Bottom; so that this Grate seems to have been made like to a Furnace, full of Holes round about, as well as below; and, perhaps, was hung by Chains, in the Rings before-mentioned, to the Horns of the Altar.

Ver. 6. And thou shalt make Staves for the Altar, &c.] Of such a Length, that they might be laid upon the Shoulders of the Priests; and the Altar, when they carried it, hang between them.

Ver. 7. And the Staves shall be put into the Rings.] Besides the Rings for the Grate, there were others (it appears by this) in the Altar it self, into which the Staves were to be put, when it was to be removed.

And the Staves shall be upon the two Sides of the Altar to bear it.] It's plain by this, that the Staves were not put into the Rings of the Grate (which was within the hollow part of the Altar) unless we imagine, as Dr. Lightfoot doth, that the Rings of the Grate came thro' the Frame of the Altar, and hung out on the Sides of it; so that the Frame and the Grate were carried together. But besides other Objections against this, from the different Form of the Grate and the Altar, it may be doubted whether they were carried together, and not separate one from another; especially if we conceive the Grate to have been carried with the Fire still burning on it, which would have immediately consumed the Purple Cloth, where-with the Altar was to be covered, when they removed it, Numb. iv. 13. But the Fire-pans before-mentioned, ver. 3. it is probable, as I noted there, received the Fire out of the Grate; and then, it being cleansed from the Ashes, was carried together with the Altar, to which it was fastened by its Rings, a purple Cloth being spread over both.

Ver. 8. Hollow with Boards shalt thou make it.] Otherwise the Grate could not have been in the Midst of it, as is before ordered, ver. 5.

And it was shewed thee in the Mount.] Of this also he had a Model set before him, as he had of other Things. See ch. xxv. 9, 40.

So shall they make it.] By that Pattern he was to direct the Workmen to make it.

Ver. 9. And thou shalt make the Court of the Tabernacle.] The Hebrew Word Chatzar properly signifies a green Field or Close. Such was this Place, uncovered in the open Air, but inclosed with Pillars and Hangings, which made it such a Place as we call a Court-yard before an House. In this Court stood the Tabernacle, or Dwelling-House of God, not just in the Midst of it, but towards the upper End. And here the Altar of Burnt-Offering stood, between the Tabernacle and the lower End of the Court; and the Laver, wherein they washed, stood on one side of the Altar. David speaks of more Courts than one, Psal. lxxv. 5. Psal. lxxxiv. 3. but Moses made only one, into which the Priests came to offer Sacrifice. Whether the People were admitted into it, is not certain; if they were, it could contain no great number; and they stood at a great Distance from the Priests in the lower part of the Court, and were separated by some Bounds or other, as they were in after Times when they came into Canaan. Where being settled, and the Tabernacle fixed in Shilo, the Hebrew brews say it was inclosed with a Wall, as well as with Hangings; and then, it is likely, a distinct Court was made for the People; at least, it was so in David's Time, as the Places above-mentioned prove. And in the Temple of Solomon we read plainly of more Courts than one, 1 Kings vi. 36. ch. vii. 12. 2 Cbron. iv. 9. ch. xxxiii. 5. viz. the Court of the Priests, and the Court of the People. Unto which, in the Temple of Herod, after the Captivity, was added a third, the Court of the Women.

For the south Side southward.] It was to have two large Sides, as the Tabernacle had, whose south Side being first ordered to be made (ch. xxvi. 18.) so is the same Side of the Court.

There shall be Hangings for the Court of fine twined Linen.] What fine Linen and twined were, see ch. xxv. 5. ch. xxviii. 6. These Hangings were not curiously embroider'd with Flowers, as those of the Tabernacle were (ch. xxvi. 1.) but were made of simple fine fix threaded Linen.

Of an hundred Cubits long for one Side.] By this it appears that the Length of the Court was an hundred Cubits, or fifty Yards, though of Yards longer than ours, as I have said before, ch. xxv. 10. See ver. 18.

Ver. 10. And the twenty Pillars thereof.] These are thought by most to be made of Sittim-Wood.

And their twenty Sockets shall be of Brass.] The Pillars were placed five Cubits distant from each other, upon Bases of Brass, which were more firm and lasting than Wood.

The Hooks of the Pillars.] These were, like our Teniers, to hang the Curtains of the Court upon. See ch. xxvi. 32. concerning the Word Vave.

And their Fillets shall be of Silver.] The Hebrew Word Chuschuk properly signifies a Circle, but whether these were thin Hoops of Silver, or only Fillets (as we translate it) or silver Twist, is uncertain; yet it seems to be plain from the xxxviiith Chapter, that the Heads of the Pillars, into which the Hooks were fastened, were silver'd over.

Ver. 11. And likewise for the north Side, &c.] Here are the very same Directions given for the Hangings, Pillars, Bases, &c. of this side of the Court, which are nothing different from the former.

Ver. 12. And for the Breadth of the Court, on the west Side, shall be Hangings of fifty Cubits, &c.] By this it appears that the Court was as long again as it was wide, there being Hangings but of half the Length for the west End, and only half so many Pillars and Sockets.

Ver. 13. The Breadth of the Court on the east Side, &c.] This End was of the same Dimensions with the west End.

Ver. 14. The Hangings of one Side of the Gate shall be fifteen Cubits, &c.] The Hangings of this End of the Court were divided, because there was to be a Gate; the Entrance into the Court being at the east End. Each Side of the Gate consisted of fifteen Cubits, and accordingly the Hangings were of that length, upon three Pillars on each side; as this Verse and the next direct.

Ver. 16. And for the Gate of the Court shall be an Hanging of twenty Cubits.] The Entrance being twenty Cubits wide, if we add to them the fifteen Cubits which were on each Side of the Entrance, they make in all fifty Cubits, which was the Breadth of the east End of the Court, as well as of the west, ver. 12, 13.

Of blue, and purple, and scarlet, &c.] Concerning all this see ch. xxv. 5. And here only observe, that the Hangings of the Gate were far richer than of the rest of the Court, which were merely of fine twined Linen, ver. 9. but these of several other beautiful Colours, and adorned with that Work they called Rokem, which we translate Needle-work. What that was, see ch. xxxviii. 39.

And their Pillars shall be four, and their Sockets four.] Proportionable to those on each Side of the Gate; which were three for Hangings of fifteen Cubits (ver. 14, 15.) as these were four for Hangings of twenty.

Ver. 17. All the Pillars round about the Court shall be filleted with Silver.] Those at the east and west End, as well as those on the south and north Sides.

Their Hooks shall be of Silver, and their Sockets of Brass.] As was before directed, ver. 10, 11.

Ver. 18. The Length of the Court, &c.] Here all the Dimensions of the Court are put together; the Length and Breadth of which might be inferred from the Hangings (ver. 9, 12, &c.) but here are expressly determined; together with the Height, which was not at all intimated before, and now appointed to be five Cubits, i. e. two Yards and an half, of larger Measure than ours. So that the Tabernacle might be plainly seen by the People, for it was as high again as the Walls (if I may so call them) that encompassed it.

Of twined Linen, and their Sockets of Brass.] This seems to be a brief Repetition of what was said before concerning the Hangings, and the Pillars which stood on Bases of Brass.

Ver. 19. All the Vessels of the Tabernacle in all the Service thereof.] This is also a Repetition in general of what was said before, particularly (v. 3.) for all the Vessels belonging to the Tabernacle it self were of Gold, as we read in the xxvth Chapter.

And all the Pins thereof.] The Tabernacle had nothing of Brass in the Fabrick of it, but the Bases of the Pillars at the Entrance, ch. xxvi. 37. and therefore these Pins, I suppose, belong to them, whereby the Pillars were fasten'd in their Sockets.

And all the Pins of the Court shall be of Brass.] These brazen Pins were struck into the Ground (as Dr. Lightfoot understands it) that the Hangings, which were tied to them by Cords, might be kept from flying up at the Bottom.

Ver. 20. And thou shalt command the Children of Israel, that they bring thee pure Oil-Olive beaten.] Not squeezed out by a Press, or by a Mill (for such was full of Sediment and Dregs) but which run freely from the Olives, being bruised with a Pestel.

For the Light.] In the golden Candlestick, ch. xxv. 37.

To cause the Lamp to burn always.] Sufficient to keep the Lamp always burning. Some imagine, that it did not burn Day and Night, but being lighted every Evening went out in the Morning. And there are some Places which seem to favour this Opinion, particularly 1 Sam. iii. 3. where mention is made of the Lamp going out, viz. in the Morning. See also, 2 Chron. xiii. 11. where we read of setting the Lamps to burn every Evening; which seems to signify that they did not burn in the Day. But Josephus, who was a Priest, and could not but know, and had no reason to tell a lye, faith they burnt Day and Night. And indeed it was but necessary, for otherwise the Priest must have ministred in the Dark, at the Altar of Incense, before the Divine Majesty; who kept a Table in the Sanctuary, which required Light, for no body feasts in Darknes; and therefore R. Levi of Barcelona (Præcept. xcvi.) faith, God commanded a Lamp should always burn in the Sanctuary for the Honour and Majesty of it; there being no Light conveyed to it otherways. But it is highly probable, there were not so many of the Lamps burning in the Day, as in the Night, when all the seven Lamps were lighted; some of which were put out in the Morning, and lighted again in the Evening. So Josephus faith expressly, L. iii. Antiq. c. 9. Three burnt all Day before the LORD, and the rest were lighted in the Evening.

Ver. 21. In the Tabernacle of the Congregation without the Veil.] That is, the second Veil which was before the most holy Place.

Which is before the Testimony.] That is, the Ark of the Testimony. See ch. xxv. 21, 22.

Aaron and his Sons shall order it from Evening to Morning before the LORD.] As Direction is more fully given, ch. xxx. 7, 8.

It shall be a Statute for ever, &c.] See ch. xxxviii. 43.

C H A P. XXVIII.

Ver. 1. AND take thou Aaron thy Brother, and his Sons with him, from among the Children of Israel.] Here Aaron and his Sons are designed to the Priest's Office; and afterward (ch. xxxii. 19.) the whole Tribe of Levi were Consecrated to the LORD by a noble Act of Zeal which they performed. And at last (Numb. i. 51. and many other Places) it was made Capital for any one else to officiate at the Tabernacle, but they only.

That he may minister unto me.] Attend on me as my Servant in my Court; for Cohen signifies one that serves in ministerio honorabili, in an honourable Office, as appears from Job xii. 19. Therefore David's Sons are called by this Name, 2 Sam. viii. 18. and it was given to the Priests; quatenus fuerunt primarii Dei Ministri, as they were the principal Ministers of God; as Junius observes upon Gen. xli. 45.

In the Priests Office.] Wheresoever there hath been any Religion there have been Priests, whose Office it peculiarly was to minister unto God in the Service belonging to him. But this is the first Time we read of any constituted in Israel by a Divine Appointment; at least, the Priesthood was not confined to the particular Family of Aaron, who was made High-Priest, and his Sons Priests of a lower Order. Some Heathens imitated this, by continuing the Priesthood in a certain Family; for Plato says there were in some Places πρεσβυται ιεροσύναι, both of Men and Women; which in the Founding of a City he would not have a Law-giver alter; but where there was no such Constitution he would have annual Priests, and none but grave Men of Sixty Years of Age put into the Office, L. vi. de Leg. p. 759.

Even Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar, Aaron's Sons.] These were all the Males in this Family at present, whose Descendants in future Ages were all Priests.

Ver. 2. And thou shalt make holy Garments for Aaron thy Brother.] If very good Authors did not affirm it we should scarce think it credible, that the Priests among some of the antient Heathens offered Sacrifices to their Gods naked; particularly the old Arabians, as Hottinger observes in his Histor. Orientalis, L. i. c. 7. But such Filthiness was abhorred by most People, whose Priests were not only clothed, but performed their Service at the Altar in a peculiar Habit; so that there is scarce any Author, who treats of the Sacrifices and the Priests of the Heathen, that doth not speak of their Garments also. As Moses here in the first Institution of the Priesthood among the Jews, to offer peculiar Sacrifices at God's House, takes a special Care, by the Divine Direction, about their Vestments; which the Hebrew Doctors think so inseparable from the Priesthood, that they fancy Adam, Abel and Cain did not sacrifice without them. See Gen. iii. 22.

They are called Holy, because they might be worn by none but them; and by them only when they minister'd unto God.

For Aaron thy Brother.] The High-Priest had some Garments peculiar to himself, which none of the other Priests might wear; they were four, the Breast-plate, the Robe, the Ephod, and the Plate of Gold. There were four more he also wore, but they were common to him with the other Priests, viz. the Coat, the Drawers, the Girdle, and the Bonnet: Their Bonnets indeed and his Mitre were of a different Form, yet they are not considered, by the Jews, as distinct Vestments, being both Coverings of the Head. And they make account the High-Priests never wore at one Time above eight Sorts of Garments, nor the Lower above four. This is the universal sense of the Hebrew Writers; and I cannot give any account why Grotius mentions only seven Garments of the High-Priest (reckoning the golden Plate for one) which he will have to answer unto the seven Lamps in the Candlestick; for it is evident by this very Chapter he wore eight, viz. the Ephod, ver. 8. the Breast-plate, ver. 15. the Robe, ver. 31. the Plate of Gold, ver. 36. the embroider'd Coat, the Girdle, and the Mitre, ver. 39. which are all ordered for Aaron the High-Priest; and afterward (ver. 42, 43.) Breeches are order'd for him as well as his Sons, which make up the Number of eight.

For Glory and for Beauty.] To make their Office more respected, and strike Men with an awful Sense of the Divine Majesty, whose Ministers they saw appear in such Grandeur. For this, and the foregoing Precepts (as Maimonides observes) were given to render the Sanctuary of God more august and magnificent; for which End he magnified the Dignity of those who minister'd there; and not only separated them from other Men, but ordered them to be clothed in beautiful and precious Garments, that they might appear there like Men of Honour, More Nevoch. L. iii. c. 45. unto which R. Levi of Barcelona well adds (Præcept. xcix.) that by these glorious Garments the Priests were put in mind of their Dignity, and admonished to perform the Divine Service, with a Spirit suitable to the Greatness of him, unto whom they were consecrated. It may be fit for me also to add, that there being two sorts of Garments, which the High Priest wore (those they called white, and these they called golden) both of them were very rich, and made him look gloriously; whether the Materials, or the Colours, or the Art wherewith they were made, be regarded; as will appear in the particular Account which is given of them in this Chapter. See ver. 40.

Ver. 3. And thou shalt speak unto all that are wise-hearted.] So the Hebrews call those who had extraordinary Skill in any Art; according to the antient Opinion, which made the Heart the Seat of the Mind.

Whom I have filled with the Spirit of Wisdom.] Endued with singular Skill. For the Word ruach in Scripture sometimes signifies a Gift of God; whereby they who had it, performed what they undertook excellently. And Mechanical Arts are called Wisdom, as well as higher Sciences: So St. Paul calls himself, a wise Master-builder. Which was the antient Language of the World before the Time of Pythagoras, as Cuperus observes (in his Apotheosis Homeri, p. 119.) out of Georgius Diaconus his Preface to Aristotle's Logick, and out of Nicbomachus Gerasimus, whose Words are very remarkable. ‘When all before

‘Pythagoras were called by the common Name
‘of $\Sigma\omicron\phi\omicron\iota$, even Builders of Houses, and Cur-
‘riers of Leather, and Pilots, $\eta\ \alpha\pi\lambda\omicron\varsigma\ \delta\ \tau\acute{\epsilon}\chi\eta\varsigma$
‘ $\tau\omicron\upsilon\delta\epsilon\ \eta\ \delta\iota\mu\alpha\tau\epsilon\gamma\iota\alpha\varsigma\ \epsilon\upsilon\mu\epsilon\tau\epsilon\varsigma$, and, in general, every
‘one that was skilful in any Art or publick Work,
‘that Philosopher denied this Name to them.’ Notwithstanding which, some Authors, in After-times, still observed the antient Use: Inasmuch that Ælian calls Fishermen, who understood their Art well, $\sigma\omicron\phi\iota\ \tau\omicron\iota\ \alpha\iota\sigma\iota\omega\tau$, L. i. de Animal. c. 2. and Lucius calls Perilaus $\sigma\omicron\phi\iota\ \chi\alpha\lambda\kappa\iota\alpha$, a wise Brasier; and Aristotle himself observes that Pbidias was called $\lambda\iota\theta\omicron\tau\omicron\gamma\iota\iota\ \sigma\omicron\phi\iota\varsigma$, a wise Stone-cutter, L. v. Moral. ad Eudemum. Nor were the Latins Strangers to this Language (as Cuperus shows in the same Place) which is here used by Moses; whose intire Sense, in these Words, is this: That the Men here spoken of being very skilful of themselves in their several Arts, their Skill was so increased by God’s special Gift, that they became marvellous Artists.

That they make Aaron’s Garments.] They were first employed in making Garments for Aaron; which were the most costly, and required most care in the Work about them. The principal of these excellent Artists were Bezaleel and Aboliab, ch. xxxi. 1, 2, &c.

To consecrate him.] To be put on at his Consecration, ch. xxix. 5, 6, &c.

That he may minister to me in the Priest’s Office.] For without these Garments he might not minister. Whence that common Saying in the Talmud, concerning the Priests, While they are clothed in their Garments they are Priests; when they want them, they are not Priests. Which Maimonides expresses thus: When they are clothed in their Garments, their Priesthood is upon them; when they are not clothed with them, their Priesthood is not upon them. That is, they might no more perform Divine Service, than mere Laymen. Whence it was, that under the second Temple when they wanted that holy Oil to anoint him, the High Priest was made thereby by cloth-ing him with the fore-named white Garments. And as they might not minister without these, so they might not add any other to them: If they did, their Ministry was unlawful. For which Reason they might not wear Gloves on their Hands, or Shoes on their Feet: For from their Knees (to which their Breeches reach’d) to their Feet, they were naked; only their Coats, in some sort, covered their Legs. But they stood barefoot in the Sanctuary, while they ministered. We do not find indeed that God any where forbid them to minister in Shoes; but they being not com-manded, when God orders other Vestments, particularly Bonnets for their Heads, and saith here expressly these are the Garments thou shalt make, that Aaron may minister to me in the Priest’s Office, the Jews thence concluded that God intended they should use no other, and not so much as any thing on their Feet in the Sanctuary. And this out of Reverence to that holy Place; as Moses was com-manded to put off his Shoes, because of the Pre-sence of God in that Ground where he stood.

Which to me is an Argument that Moses did not intend to come as near to the Egyptian Rites as he might with safety, but rather to oppose them. For their Priests had $\psi\tau\omicron\delta\acute{\alpha}\mu\alpha\lambda\alpha\ \beta\acute{\epsilon}\lambda\omicron\mu\alpha$ on their Feet, as Herodotus tells us, L. ii. c. 7. And so the Priests of several other Nations ministered in Shoes of several kinds: Though others, it is cer-tain, ministered barefoot; particularly the Priests of Diana at Castobala, as Strabo tells us, L. xii. And nothing is more known than that Saying of Pythagoras, $\alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\iota\sigma\iota\ \theta\ \delta\acute{\omicron}\varsigma\ \eta\ \pi\epsilon\tau\alpha\delta\omicron\upsilon\epsilon$, Sacrifice and Worship unshod; the People, as well as the Priests, putting off their Shoes when they came to the Temple, as the Jews did.

Ver. 4. And these are the Garments which thou shalt make, &c.] These which follow were the principal Garments wherewith the High Priest was clothed: Besides which there was a Plate of Gold; and also Breeches, common to him and all the rest of the Priests.

And they shall make.] The skilful Men be-fore-mentioned were to make them, by his Order and Direction.

Holy Garments.] Which none should wear but they. See ver. 2.

For Aaron thy Brother, and his Sons.] Some of these were peculiar to Aaron, others of them com-mon to him and to his Sons; as will appear in the particular Account which is given of them after-ward.

That they may minister unto me in the Priest’s Office.] See ver. 3. These Garments were only to be used in the Time of their Ministration; at other Times they never wore them, but were then habited like other Men; as Mr. Seiden proves, L. ii. de Succession. c. 7. and at large confirms, L. iii. de Synedr. c. 11. n. 3, &c.

Ver. 5. And they.] i. e. The skilful Workmen before-mentioned.

Shall take Gold, &c.] This Verse directs to the Materials, of which the Priest’s Garments were to be made. For though these five Words denote so many Colours, yet the first Word and the last (viz. Gold, and fine Linen) show the Matter also is included, from which Colour cannot be sepa-rated.

rated. And as for the Matter of their Garments; they were made either of Woollen or Linen; nothing of Hair, or Silk, being used in their Contexture: For as to Gold and Jewels, they were rather for Ornament, than for the making the Substance of the Garments. So all the Hebrew Doctors, whose Maxim is this; The Priests are not clothed in their Ministry at the Temple, but in Woollen and Linen. The Matter of them indeed is not here expressed in this Chapter, save only of their Breeches, which are order'd to be made of Linen, ver. 42. But in ch. xxxix. 27, &c. all the Garments of Aaron's Sons are expressly said to be made of fine Linen; except the Girdle, which was partly of Linen, partly of Woollen. The Garments of the High Priest, which the Jews called white Garments, were certainly made of Linen; and his Girdle also was of the same, without any mixture of Woollen, when he wore those Garments on the great Day of Expiation, as Braunius shows, L. i. de Vestitu Sac. Hebr. c. 7.

Gold.] The Hebrews say there were seven sorts of Gold, which was diversified either by its Colour, or the Place from which it came, or its Goodness. But that which was used about these Garments, they conclude was the Gold they called Tabor, which we translate pure Gold, ver. 22, 36. i. e. the finest, and of the brightest Colour, between a yellow and red.

And Blue, and Purple, and Scarlet.] Of these Colours, see ch. xxv. 4.

And fine Linen.] The Hebrew Word Schesch signifies a pure kind of fine Linen, not Silk (as some have imagined) for there was no such thing known in Moses's Days. It was of a shining white Colour; and therefore all the inferior Priests were clothed in white, their Garments being made of this. And such were all the Garments where-with the High-Priest entred into the most holy Place, on the great Day of Expiation. And wheresoever the Scripture speaks of fine Linen, and mentions no Colour, we are to understand white.

Ver. 6. And they shall make the Ephod.] We retain the Hebrew Word, which doth not express the Form of this Garment: But the next Verse reaches us something of it; that it was a short Garment, which hung behind upon the Shoulders down to the Buttocks, and came down before upon the Breast and the Belly. It consisted of three Parts; that which covered the Breast and the Back (which the Hebrews take to be properly called the Ephod) then the two Shoulder-pieces, which came up from the Arm-holes to the Shoulders (mentioned in the next Verse) and then the Girdle belonging to it, ver. 8.

Of Gold, of Blue, and of Purple.] See the foregoing Verse.

And fine twined Linen.] Here is another Word added to Schesch (or fine Linen) which is Maschazar. Which is never joined with any thing but Schesch in all the Scripture; and only once found without Schesch, which is to be understood, ch. xxxix. 24. It is thought by Maimonides, and other Hebrew Doctors, to signify Linen of six Threads. Some will have it, that where it is mentioned alone, it signifies eight threaded Linen.

With cunning Work.] The Hebrew Word Chofcheb, which we translate cunning, signifies the most artificial, or ingenious sort of Work; which consisted in the great Variety of Figures and Colours that were in it; like that which is sometimes made of divers Birds Feathers; as J. Braunius shows, L. i. de Vest. Sac. Hebr. c. 17.

Ver. 7. It shall have the two Shoulder-pieces thereof.] They are so called, because they covered the Shoulders; from whence the LXX call the whole Ephod by the Name of ἐπώμια. The Jews think they were woven by themselves, and then sewed to the Back and Breast-pieces with a Needle. So the next Words seem to them to signify.

Joined at the two Edges thereof.] Which Abarbinel interprets in this manner: The Ephod shall have two Shoulder-pieces, which being made by themselves, separate from it, were afterwards sewed to the two Extremities of the Ephod. But the Hebrew Words, if they be examined, import no such thing; but run thus, It shall have two Shoulder-pieces, joined at the two Ends of it. Now they might be joined in the very weaving of it, and not by a Needle afterward: And so they were, in all probability, as Braunius hath endeavoured to demonstrate.

And so it shall be joined together.] In the Hebrew the Words are no more but these, And it shall be joined together; which may be understood of the Coherence of the fore-part and hinder-part; by the two golden Buttons set with Onyx-stones, which joined them together on the Shoulders.

Ver. 8. And the curious Girdle of the Ephod.] The Word Chofcheb, which we translate curious Girdles, signifies it was of such artificial Work as the Ephod it self was. And it seems to have been two Strings (as we may call them) which went out of each side of it, and tied it to their Bodies, under their Arm-holes, about the Heart. So the High-Priest had two Girdles; that Belt (as we may call it) which tied his Coat to him; and this Girdle, which tied the fore-part and hinder-part of the Ephod together. It is called the Girdle of the Ephod, because it was annexed to those two Cloths, and not to the Shoulder-pieces.

Shall be of the same.] Or, out of it; to signify that the Girdle was woven together with the Ephod, and went out of it. So Jarchi and Abarbinel.

According to the Work thereof.] This signifies it was to be made of the same Matter, and woven after the same Manner, with all the Ornaments of the Ephod it self; having all those five Colours in it, mentioned ver. 4. and here repeated again.

Ver. 9. And thou shalt take two Onyx-stones.] Concerning the Onyx-stones, see Gen. ii. 12.

And grave on them the Names of the Children of Israel.] The Princes (as Abarbinel observes) presented Moses with these Stones; on which he himself did not engrave the Names of the Children of Israel, but some Person skilful in that Art: For it is expressly called, ver. 11. The Work of an Engraver in Stone.

Ver. 10. Six of their Names on one Stone, and the other six Names of the rest on the other Stone, according to their Birth.] The six eldest on that Stone which was upon the right Shoulder, and the six younger on the other upon the left; as several of the Hebrew Doctors expound it: Particularly Jarchi, with whom Josephus agrees, L. iii. Antiq.

Antiq. c. 8. The Talmudists indeed dispose them otherwise; but this is most suitable to the Word Toledoth, according to their Generations, or their Birth, as we render the latter End of the Verse.

Ver. 11. With the Work of an Ingraver in Stone.] Done with such Art as such Workmen use.

Like the Engravings of a Signet.] The same Words are used again, ver. 36. where he speaks of the Engravings upon the Plate of Gold. On which Abarbinel faith the Letters were protuberant, as they are upon Coins, or upon Wax impressed with a Seal: But here on the Ephod and the Breast-plate, he thinks the Names were cut deep in the Stones, as Letters are in a Seal. For which I can see no reason, the Words being the very same; and therefore if the Letters were protuberant in the one, they were so in the other.

Thou shalt make them to be set in Ouches of Gold.] The Hebrew Word Mischbetsoth, which we translate Ouches, signifies as much as the Latin Word Funda; the Socket, as I may say, wherein the Stones were set. Both which made a Button; not of a round Figure, but something like a Lozenge; or, as Maimonides expresses it, like the Figure of those Holes that are in the Stomach of such Animals as chew the Cud, called Reticulum. See Jo. Braunius de Vest. Sac. Hebr. L. i. c. 17. n. 8. By these Buttons the hinder-part of the Ephod was fastened to the fore-part upon the Shoulders; and the Breast-plate also hung upon them, by golden Chains.

Ver. 12. And thou shalt put the two Stones upon the Shoulders of the Ephod, for Stones of Memorial unto the Children of Israel.] This is explained in the following Words, that Aaron might bear their Names before the LORD, upon his Shoulders, for a Memorial. That is, might remember to recommend the twelve Tribes of Israel unto God, when he offered Incense, and made his Prayers before him: Or, for a Token that he appeared before God in the Name of the whole People of Israel.

Others will have this Memorial refer to God, before whom he presented himself, that he might be gracious unto his People, when the High Priest came thus attired, according to his own Order, to pray for them, with assurance that he would be mindful of them all. And to this the 29th Verse seems to incline, where the same is said to be the Intention of engraving their Names upon the twelve Stones on the Breast-plate. See cb. xxxix. 7.

Ver. 13. And thou shalt make Ouches of Gold.] See ver. 11. where the Word Mischbetsoth is explained.

Ver. 14. And two Chains of pure Gold at the Ends, &c.] These Chains did not consist of many little Rings, but of many Threads or Wires of Gold, twisted together like a Rope. For which reason Moses adds, of wreathen Work shalt thou make them. This Bartenora takes to be the Meaning of the Word Migbaloth (which we translate at the Ends) which he expounds Cords or Cables. They were not, faith he, like to those iron Chains wherewith Prisoners are bound, consisting of several Joyns, but twisted of golden Threads, till they were as thick as Cords. Others think Migbaloth signifies equal, because they were of an equal Thickness, or of an equal Length.

But our Translation also may be defended; for the Ends of them were annexed to the Rings of the Breast-plate, ver. 24. But as these Chains were annexed at one End to the Rings of the Breast-plate, so at the other End they were annexed to the Golden Buttons upon the Shoulders; so that the Breast-plate hung upon the Golden Buttons by the Chains.

And fasten the wreathen Chains to the Ouches.] Moses only briefly mentions the two Chains in this Place, to signify that the Ouches in the Ephod served for the Support of the Breast-plate, by these two Chains; which properly belonged to that, and not to the Ephod, as Jarchi observes. And therefore after Directions for the Breast-plate (which here follow) they are again spoken of in their proper Place, ver. 22. As, ver. 27. there are two golden Rings spoken of, which belong to the Ephod; but not mentioned till then, because by these Rings the Breast-plate and Ephod were knit together.

Ver. 15. And thou shalt make the Breast-plate.] Next after the Ephod, Directions are given for the Choschen, which we translate Breast-plate; taking it, I suppose, to come from the Hebrew Word Chazek, which signifies the Breast. For by the Change of a Letter (which is not unusual) Choschen may well be thought to come from thence, because it lay upon the Breast, and covered it.

Of Judgment.] For the Priest wore it, when he went to consult the Divine Majesty about the great Concerns of their Religion or Government; and received such Answers, as directed them what to determine in dubious Cases, either in War or Peace. See ver. 29.

With cunning Work.] See ver. 6.

After the Work of the Ephod thou shalt make it, &c.] It was to be made of the same Materials with the Ephod, and with the same Artifice as it here follows.

Ver. 16. Four-square shall it be, being doubled.] The Words are in the Hebrew, four-square shall it be doubled. Which are to be thus understood, that the whole Piece was not square, till it was doubled. So Maimonides. It was a Cubit long (i. e. two Spans) and its Breadth a Span; but being doubled, it was a Square of a Span, both in Length and in Breadth. From whence it follows that it was hollow; so that it may be compared to one of our Purfes; only it doth not appear whether it were sewed together at the Sides, or on one Side, or open on both Sides; though it is commonly said so to be. But it is possible that it was doubled, merely that it might be stronger to bear the Weight of so many precious Stones, and of the Rings and Chains; not that it might have any thing put between it.

A Span shall be the Length thereof, &c.] This is just the Measure of a Man's Breast.

Ver. 17. And thou shalt set in it Settings of Stones.] Or, as it is in the Hebrew, fill it with Fillings of Stones. Which plainly signifies that these Stones were set, as precious Stones are now in our Rings, in a Funda or Hollow, which was filled up with the Stone. In the 20th Verse we translate it Inclosings. So Jarchi, because the Stone filled up the Hollowness of the Ouches to which they were fitted, and therefore Moses uses the the Word Fillings: Abarbinel here observes that Moses saith Fillings of Stone in the Singular Number, not the Plural (and so in the next Words, four Rows of Stone, or Stones, as we translate it) to signify that all the Stones were so set in the Breast-plate, as if they were but one Stone. For all the Fundæ in which they were set, consisted of one Mass of Gold, wherein were twelve Ouches; in which every single Stone was set, as we see it now, in our present Lockets.

Even four Rows of Stones.] With a Square of precious Stones.

The first Row shall be a Sardius, &c.] There is so little Certainty what these Stones were, that nothing can be affirmed about them; as appears by the vast Variety of Interpretations that have been made of them, by Writers both old and new. The first of them is called Odem in the Hebrew, which some take to be a Ruby; but have no other Reason for it, than only because אֶדֶם signifies red. Others take it for an Adamant; which may seem to be derived from Odem, as a Jasper is from Jasphe. And there are several other Conjectures, but none so probable as that of our Translators; who call it a Sardius (or Sardine Stone, as they render it, Rev. iv. 3.) which is of a red flaming Colour (as Braunius hath demonstrated from several Authors, L. ii. de Vest. Sacr. Hebr. c. 8. n. 8.) but, as some describe it, with a cast of yellow in it, like that of fresh Oil. And it is not improbable that this Stone had the Name of Sardius from the Hebrew Word Sered, which signifies red, Isa. xlv. 13. as Kimchi there interprets it. And thence the Divine Majesty is said to look like a Sardine Stone (in the Place above-named) because he appeared in great Anger. So an ancient Writer, Διὰ τὸ φοβερὸν τῆ Θεᾶς, πνευματικὸς γὰρ τὸ Σαρκινόν.

A Topaz.] The second Stone in this Row is in Hebrew called Pitdab, which we truly translate a Topaz; which was a Stone of a green Colour, not a yellow, as we now commonly understand it. So Pliny and others, as the same Braunius shows, L. ii. c. 9. where he fancies that the Word Topazion, by an easy Change of Letters, was made out of Pitdab; for the Syriack Interpreter, Rev. xxi. 20. calls this Stone Topadion, in which there are the same Letters that are in Pitdab. But however this be, it appears from Job xxviii. 19. that this is the right Translation of the Word; for there it is Pitdab Cusb, the most excellent Topaz Stones being found in an Island belonging to Arabia, called thence by the Name of Topazion.

And a Carbuncle.] So we translate the third Stone of the first Row (which in Hebrew is called Bareketh) following perhaps Abarbinel. But the greatest part of Interpreters take it for the Smaragdus: Which good Authors describe as the most radiant of all other Stones, and therefore called perhaps Bareketh, from its extraordinary Splendor; for barak, every body knows, signifies to glitter, Ezek. xxi. 10. The best Authors say the Colour of it is a Grass-green, wonderfully refreshing (as Pliny describes it) to the Eyes, when one looks upon it.

Ver. 18. And the second Row shall be an Emerald.] The Hebrew Word Nophech, which we translate Emerald, is by most Interpreters taken to signify a Carbuncle. Some of which Stones are white; but the most excellent of all other are red, shining like Fire, or a burning Coal: Whence the Name of Carbuncle, from Carbo a hot Coal. And to this the Hebrew Word Nophech agrees; which Braunius ingeniously conjectures comes from Phuch, which signifies that red wherewith Women painted their Faces, 2 Kings ix. 30. And, in short, he takes it for that Stone which we now call a Ruby. And so Abarbinel translates it, and Luther also; vid. L. ii. c. 11.

A Sapphire.] This Stone is mentioned before, ch. xxiv. 9. and it retains its Name to this day, almost among all People. So that there is no question, but only what kind of Stone it was, about which Authors differ. For some say it was a white Stone (and there are some so pale, that they incline to that rather than any other Colour) but it is plain that Stone was called antiently a Sapphire, which is now so called; being of the Colour of the Heavens, or the Veins, that is, a Sky-colour. See ch. xxiv. 10. Cant. v. 14. Lam. iv. 7.

And a Diamond.] So we rightly translate the Hebrew Word Jabalom; which is thought to come from halam, which signifies to break. Whence Halmuth is an Hammer, or a Maul, Judg. v. 26. For the Adamant or Diamond is the hardest of all Stones, which breaks them all, but is broken by none; as Abarbinel speaks. It was antiently accounted the most precious of all Gems, as Pliny acknowledges, L. xxxvii. c. 4.

Ver. 19. In the third Row a Ligure.] So we translate the Hebrew Word Leshchem, which being no where else found, the Meaning of it is uncertain. But a great many, both of the Antient and Modern, translate it as we do; though what a Ligure is, cannot easily be resolved. Some think λεγύσιον, or λισχύσιον, to be nothing but the best Amber. But that is no precious Stone, as all here mentioned are; and therefore (to mention no other Conjectures) Braunius thinks we are to understand by this Word a kind of Jacinth; of which there being divers sorts, he judges it likely to be that which nearest approaches to the Colour of Amber: Which hath made Authors take them for the same. The Antients indeed commonly by a Jacinth understand a Stone of a Violet-colour, but more pale and dilute than in the Amethyst; and the Stone now called an Amethyst, was antiently called a Jacinth. Yet they mention Jacinths of divers other Colours, and some shining like Fire: Vide L. ii. de Vestit. Sacr. Hebr. c. 14. n. 11, 12.

An Agate.] So the Hebrew Word Schebo (which is no where else mentioned in Scripture) is translated by the greatest part of Interpreters, who take this for that Stone the Greeks call Achates. Which is so well known, that it needs no Description; being that beautiful Stone which Nature hath painted with great Variety: From whence it hath got several Names, as the same Braunius observes in the same Book, cap. 15. n. 4, &c. And the very Name of Achates seems to be derived from its various Colours; Akud in Hebrew signifying that which is spotted, as Jacob's Cattle were, Gen. xxx. 35. Though now, because they are common, they are of no great Value; yet antiently, it appears from Theophrastus and Pliny, they were more precious. See there, n. 9.

And an Amethyst.] The Hebrew Word Achlama is no more to be found in Scripture elsewhere, where than the two former. But the best and most antient Authors take it as we do, for that Stone which other Writers call an Ametyst; which is of a bright violet Colour, or like red Wine, from whence it has its Name in the Greek. The nearer these Stones came to a Purple, and the more they had of the Flame of a Carbuncle, the more precious they were esteemed, as the forenamed Braunius shows, L. ii. c. 16. n. 56.

Ver. 20. In the fourth Row a Beryl.] The Hebrew Word Tharschisch is very variously interpreted, but the LXX, Josephus, and a great many others, take it for that which the Antients call a Chrysolite; that is, a Stone of a golden Colour, which others call a Topaz. This Braunius endeavours to prove was the Colour of Tharschisch, out of Dan. x. 5, 6. Cant. v. 14, &c. See c. 17. n. 12, 13, &c.

An Onyx.] The Hebrew Word Schobam we meet withal in the Beginning of the Bible (Gen. ii. 12.) and translate it as we do here, an Onyx. But Josephus, St. Hierom, and the Vulgar, translate it Sardonyx, which was of a mix'd Colour of White and Red; for the most precious Indian Sardonyx had a Radix (as they call it) white, like the Nail of one's Finger, and the Superficies red like Blood, and both of them transparent; from whence it had its Name; the Sardius Stone (as was said before) being red, and the Onyx signifying the Nail of one's Finger. See the forenamed Braunius, c. 18.

A Jasper.] Tho' the Hebrew Name, which is Jaspeth, be retained among all People to this Day, yet all Interpreters have not translated it as ours do, who no doubt are in the right; for why should we not think Jaspeth is certainly that Stone which the Greeks and Latins call Jaspis? As we doubt not the Sapphire before-mentioned (ver. 18.) is the Stone they call Saphirus. The best of these Stones are of a green Colour, like a Smaragdus, but sometimes they have little Spots or Points in them of various Colours, which hath made some Authors call this Stone Panthera. See Braunius, c. 19.

They shall be set in Gold in their Inclosings.] Or, more literally, They shall be golden Ouches in which they are set. See ver. 17. and ver. 11.

Ver. 21. And the Stones shall be with the Names of the Children of Israel, &c.] Upon each Stone was to be engraven the Name of one of the Sons of Jacob; and, in all probability, in the same Order wherein they were engraven upon the two Stones of the Ephod, where it is ordered they should be engraven according to their Birth, ver. 10. And so Josephus saith it was here, καὶ τὰς ἐν ἑκάστῳ αὐτῶν γενήσεσθαι συμβέλλεν; which is but the Translation of Moses's Words now named, according to their Generations. And so Maimonides understands it, tho' here it be only said, according to the twelve Tribes; as if he had said, upon the first Stone in the first Row (viz. the Sardius) shall be the Name of Reuben; upon the second the Name of Simeon; upon the third the Name of Levi; and so of the rest.

Like the Engraving of a Signet.] See ver. 11.

Ver. 22. And thou shalt make upon the Breast-plate, Chains.] These Chains are not different from those mentioned ver. 14. as some imagine, who think there; he speaks of the Chains of the Ephod, and here of those of the Breast-plate; for the Ephod had no Chains belonging to it; nor needed any; and the Breast-plate had only these two, which though mentioned before, are now more exactly described in their proper Place, and the Use of them directed.

At the Ends.] Concerning the Word Gabluth, see ver. 14. where I observed, some think it signifies Cords, from Gabal, which, as well as Chabal, signifies a Rope or Cord; from whence some faintly comes our English Word Cable.

Of wreathen Work.] So many Wires of Gold were wreathed together, as to make a Chain of some thickness, like a Cord. So Bartenora interprets it. Abarbinel saith they were weaved; but he must mean such a Weaving as we make with our Fingers, when we twist several Threads together, which the LXX call ἐργον πλοκῆς, twisted Work.

Ver. 23. And thou shalt make upon the Breast-plate two Rings of Gold, and shalt put the two Rings on the two Ends of the Breast-plate.] The Breast-plate had four Rings in all, one at each corner of the Square. And here he gives Direction for the Making those two, which were at the two upper Corners of it. The other two are ordered, ver. 26.

Ver. 24. And thou shalt put the two wreathen Chains of Gold in the two Rings, which are on the Ends of the Breast-plate.] This Verse and the next show how these Chains were to be disposed, and for what End they served. Below they were fasten'd to the two Rings in the upper Part of the Breast-plate, as is here directed; and above they were fasten'd to the two Buttons, upon the Shoulder Pieces of the Ephod, as is directed in the next Verse. So the Breast-plate was supported by these two Chains which hung upon the Buttons, as the Breast-plate did upon them.

Ver. 26. And thou shalt make two Rings of Gold.] That is, two other besides those mentioned, ver. 23.

And thou shalt put them upon the two Ends of the Breast-plate.] This is to be understood of the lower Corners of the Breast-plate, as ver. 23. of the higher.

In the Border thereof.] In the lower Border of it. Which is in the Side.] Or, over against.

The Ephod inward.] So that these two lowermost Rings were not seen, being inward; lying, as it were, between the Ephod and the Breast-plate.

Ver. 27. And two other Rings of Gold thou shalt make.] These, tho' belonging to the Ephod, are not mentioned till now; because the Use of them would more plainly appear in this Place.

And shalt put them on the two Sides of the Ephod.] Or rather, Shoulder Pieces of the Ephod, for so we translate it more plainly, ver. 7.

Underneath.] Below, or at the lower End of the Shoulder Pieces.

Towards the Forepart thereof.] Or, in its forepart.

Over against the Coupling thereof.] Opposite to the Rings of the Breast-plate; being to be coupled to it by these Rings.

Above the curious Girdle of the Ephod.] All this is said only to mark out the Place exactly, where these two Rings were to be fasten'd to the Ephod; that the Breast-plate might be inseparable from it.

Ver. 28. And they shall bind the Breast-plate by the Rings thereof, unto the Rings of the Ephod, with a Lace of blue, that it may be above the curious Girdle of the Ephod.] A blue Lace, or Ribbon, being put through the two lower Rings of the Breast-plate, and then through the Rings of the Ephod; they by it were tied together, a little above the Girdle of the Ephod.

And that the Breast-plate be not loosed from the Ephod.] And thus being joined, they were not to be separated one from another; no, not out of the Time of Ministration; but always continued so fast together, that the Ephod could not be put on without the Breast-plate! Thus Maimonides, and the Gemara, c. 7. of Joma, If any one remove the Breast-plate from the Ephod, or the Staves from the Ark, he shall receive forty Stripes.

Ver. 29. And Aaron shall bear the Names of the Children of Israel in the Breast-plate of Judgment upon his Heart.] Appear in the Name of the whole People of Israel, to beg Direction of God in all difficult Cases.

When he goeth in unto the holy Place.] Where with his Face toward the Ark (where the Divine Glory sat) he prayed to God for them.

For a Memorial before the LORD continually.] That God might remember them, when he remember'd him daily of the Promises made to them, and to their Forefathers; which in Scripture Phrase denotes God's gracious hearing his Prayers, when he address'd himself unto him in the Manner he required: For then he is said to remember his People, when he granted their Desires; and they remember'd him, when they did as he had them.

Ver. 30. And thou shalt put in the Breast-plate of Judgment.] It is called both here, and in the foregoing Verse, the Breast-plate of Judgment, not only for the Reason there named, but because the High-Priest (nay, the whole Body of the Priests, but he especially) sat as a Judge to determine several Controversies, as appears from many Places, Lev. x. 11. Deut. xvii. 8, 9. ch. xix. 7. ch. xxxiii. 8. 2 Chron. xv. 3, &c.

The Urim and the Thummim.] There is not the least Intimation any where what these were, nor any Direction given to Moses for the making of them, as there is for the rest of the priestly Attire; which may incline one to conclude one of these two Things, either that they were Things delivered to Moses by God himself, as the two Tables of Stone were; or that they are not Things different from the precious Stones before-mentioned. But if the former of these were true, I should think it would have been as plainly mentioned, that God delivered these unknown Things to him, as that he did the two Tables of Stone. The other hath something in the Scripture to countenance it. For in the xxxixth Chapter of this Book, where Moses sets down the Making of all those Things which are here ordered, he mentions only the four Rows of Stones, in the same Manner as he doth here; but saith not a Word of putting the Urim and Thummim in the Breast-plate, tho' he spake particularly of other Things, even of the Rings, and the Chains, and the Lace, whereby it was tied to the Ephod. And on the other Side, when he speaks of habiting Aaron with all these Vestments, in order to his Consecration, he only saith, Lev.

viii. 8. that he put the Breast-plate upon him, also be put in the Breast-plate the Urim and the Thummim, but saith not a Word of the four Rows of Stones; for which it is hard to give a Reason; unless it be, because the Urim and the Thummim were one and the same Thing with the twelve precious Stones; so that it was indifferent, whether he said Urim and Thummim were put into the Breast-plate, or the twelve precious Stones, which are the only Things in all this Description of the holy Vestments; that can be thought to be Urim and Thummim. And indeed, there being such a particular Direction for every Thing else, and also a Description of their Form and Fashion (as that the Chains should be of wreathen Work) one cannot but think there would have been something said of these, if they had been distinct from what was mentioned before. Mr. Mede indeed thinks, that nothing is said concerning them, because they were Things well known to the Patriarchs. But this is well confuted lately by another great Man, Dr. Pocock, in his late learned Commentary upon the Prophet Hosea, p. 149. unto which I refer the Reader, because I have other Things to note, and would not willingly enlarge too much on this Subject.

As for that which some have said concerning two little Images, or Representations of Angels, which were put in the Hollow of the Breast-plate, I see no Foundation for such a Conceit; one may better say, that these two Words Urim and Thummim were written, or wrought on the Breast-plate, signifying, that from hence they should receive the clearest and most perfect Resolution of all their Doubts. And of his Opinion was R. Afaria in his Meor Enajim, c. 46.

But if we take the Former to be the truer Account, that he only repeats what he said before (as he doth what he had said of the Rings belonging to the Breast-plate, ver. 14, 22.) then the Meaning is, that the twelve Stones should be the most sparkling, and most perfect in their kind, that could be got (for Urim, all acknowledge, signifies Fires or Illuminations; and Thummim, the greatest Perfection) and that all belonging to the Breast-plate (the square Stuff, the Stones engraved, the Rings, the Chains and Lace) should be prepared, and made ready before they were set in the Breast-plate.

And of this Opinion (that the precious Stones were the Urim and the Thummim) were Josephus and the Talmudick Doctors, who therein, I take it, were in the right; tho' they do not give a likely Account how the Mind of God was declared by them.

And they shall be upon Aaron's Heart.] So it is said concerning the Names of the Children of Israel (ver. 29.) which were engraven on the twelve Stones; and seems to confirm the foregoing Interpretation.

When he goeth in before the LORD.] To minister unto the Divine Majesty, and to enquire of him; which he did in the holy Place, standing with his Face towards the Ark, in the Holy of Holies. Into which he went only once a Year, upon a particular Business, to expiate the Sins of the People, and had not on these glorious Robes here mentioned, but was only clothed in fine Linen, as we read, Lev. xvi. and therefore it is strange that Buxtorf should say he went into into the Sanctum Sanctorum with the Urim and Thummim, to enquire of God. See his History of them, cap. 1. (where he alledges this Verse for it) and cap. 3.

And Aaron shall bear the Judgment of the Children of Israel.] By Judgment is here meant the Breast-plate of Judgment, as it is called, when he begins to speak of it, ver. 15. and in the foregoing Verse, just as the Ark of the Testimony is sometimes called the Testimony. Or else the Meaning is, that he should carry the great Concerns of the Children of Israel (their weighty Causes and Doubts) before God; and desire his Direction for the King, for the great Council, and for the People, in all difficult Matters, both in War and in Peace, whether belonging to Religion or to Civil Government.

Upon his Heart before the LORD.] He was never to appear in the holy Place without this Breast-plate, with the Names of all the Children of Israel upon it. Many learned Men have taken Notice of that Passage in Ælian, L. xiv. Var. Hist. c. 34. where he relates how the Egyptian Priests had an Image made of Sapphire Stone, about their Neck (which was called Ἀλήθεια, i. e. Truth) when they sat in Judgment. And Diodorus Siculus saith, L. i. c. 75. that it consisted of more precious Stones than one; from whence some have imagined, that Moses took his Pattern of this Breast-plate. But as they did not wear this Badge of Authority when they minister'd about sacred Things, but in their Civil Courts, where they sat as Judges; so there is no Reason to think this Ornament of theirs was so old as the Time of Moses (there being no mention of it in Herodotus) but was rather a later Invention, unto which other Countries were not Strangers; for the vestal Virgins among the Romans, at least she that was called Maxima, wore an Ornament upon her Breast made of precious Stones, as a Statue digged up at Rome, in the Beginning of the last Century, seems to represent it (see Lipsius, cap. ult. de Vesta & Vestal.) And Gutherius hath proved that these vestal Virgins sat in Judgment, and tried Causes, as the Pontifex Maximus did; and then it is likely, and not at other Times, wore this Antepetorale. There is more ground also to say, that the Egyptians took their Pattern from the Jews, than that these took it from the Egyptians, there being in the Time of Solomon a great Correspondence between them, by his Marriage with Pharaoh's Daughter.

Continually.] Whensoever he appeared before the LORD, to enquire of him. The greatest Difficulty is, how the LORD answered by Urim and Thummim? Which the Jews generally think was by the Shining of the Stones, and the prominence of such Letters in them as made the Answer. If they had left out the latter Part of this Resolution (about the Prominence of the Letters) what they say would have been more likely: Especially since Josephus only mentions their extraordinary Splendor; telling us, for Instance, that when the High-Priest enquired, Whether they should go to War or not? If God approved of it, there were such a refulgent Brightness in the Stones, ὡς τῷ πλήθει παντὶ γνώσιμον εἶναι, τὸ παρῆναι τὸν Θεὸν εἰς ἐπιουσίαν, That made all the People know, God would be present for their Help and Succour.

VOL. I.

And when God did not approve of their Undertaking, he saith there was a Cloudiness upon the Stones, as there had been for two Hundred Years (he confesses) before he wrote his History, τὸ Θεὸς θυμωμένος ἐπὶ τῇ παραβόλῃ αὐτῶν νόμων, God being angry with them for the Transgression of his Laws, L. iii. Antiq. c. 9. But this alone could not resolve such Questions as that, Judg. i. 1. Who shall go up first to fight against the Canaanites? To which the LORD answered (ver. 2.) Judah shall go up. For if this Answer was given in the Way now mentioned, that Stone alone, which had the Name of Judah engraven on it, must have had a Splendor in it above all the rest; which if we should suppose, yet an Answer could not have been given to all their Questions, merely by the Refulgency of all, or of any one Stone, as if they ask'd, Which Way they should go against an Enemy? Therefore it is more likely, that there was a Voice which spake to the High-Priest, from the Divine Glory, on the Mercy-seat; as we read there was to Moses, when he went into the most holy Place to speak with God, Numb. vii. 89. against which I do not see what can be objected; and it seems far more probable than their Opinion, who think God inspired the High-Priest at that Time, when he consulted him, as he did the Prophets; for this makes no difference between enquiring by Urim and Thummim, and by the Prophets, but only this, That God (they say) constantly answered when the High-Priest consulted him, which Favour he did not always grant the Prophets. If there be any Truth also in what the Jews say concerning the Bath-col under the second Temple, it seems to me to tell us, That God then directed them, without the Urim and Thummim, in the same way as he had formerly done with it. Certain it is, that such a Voice often spake to our Saviour in the Audience of his Apostles, out of the High and Holy Place in the Heavens, to show that he was the Prophet like unto Moses, whom he promised to raise up unto them, Deut. xviii. 15.

There are those who have adventured to affirm, that others besides the High-Priest might wear the Urim and Thummim, to consult the Divine Majesty, particularly their Kings. But how weak the Grounds of this Assertion are, will appear when I come to those Places which they alledge to justify it. I shall conclude what I have to note about this Matter with one Observation more, That this is one of the principal Reasons why the Government of this People, before they had Kings, was (as Josephus calls it) Theocracy, that is, The Empire of God, because he, by this Oracle of Urim and Thummim, prescribed how they should proceed in all their publick Affairs of great moment. And another Reason was, because he stirred up Judges, when he thought it necessary; who being of his immediate Appointment, are so far acknowledged by him, that when they were weary of Samuel's Government (who was a Judge) and desired a King, God declared it was not Samuel whom they rejected, but himself.

Ver. 31. And thou shalt make the Robe.] The Hebrew Word Mebit, which we translate Robe, is by the Latins called Pallium, and by the LXX ποδήνη, a Garment coming down to the Ankles. The Form of it is intimated in the next Verse; and the Matter of it is here ordered to be all of blue, i. e. of blue Cloth. Some indeed say of Silk; but it is certain Thechelet signifies Wool dyed of a Sky-colour. See Braunius, L. i. de Vest. Sacr. Hebr. c. 9. n. 1.

Robe of the Ephod.] So called, because the Ephod was put upon it.

Ver. 32. And there shall be an Hole in the Top of it.] From hence the Form of it may be gathered, that it was like one of our Surplices, or Shirts without Sleeves; but with two Holes on the Sides, to let their Hands through: And it was put on over their Heads, as appears by this Hole at the Top, and so covered their whole Body.

In the midst thereof.] Not cross-wise, from Shoulder to Shoulder; but long-wise, from the Back to the middle of the Breast, as Abarbinel expounds it. Wherein it differed from a Surplice, and from the Tunick, or Coat; the Hole of which at the Top was round, whereas this was oblong, as they speak.

It shall have a Binding.] This was both for Handfomness and for Strength, that it might not be further slit. Josephus mentions the former as a Reason for this Binding or Border, that there might appear no δυσωπεία (as his Word is) no Deformity about the Priest: And the Text it self, in the End of the Verse, mentions the latter, that it be not rent. This Binding Abarbinel thinks, on the former Account, was on the Inside, for Decorum sake, that nothing might be seen but the Robe.

Of woven Work.] It was not to be sewed to it, but woven with it, of one entire Piece; which could not be done without a great deal of Art. So Abarbinel; the Opening, or Hole, was not to be cut with Scissars, and then sewed with a Needle, but it was woven with the very Garment.

As it were the Hole of an Habergeon.] The antient Habergeons, or Corsets, being made of Leather and Linen, needed a Limbus about the Neck, to keep the Part firm and tight. But whether the Binding had Hooks and Eyes (as we call them) like those which are in Corsets, to fasten the Parts together, is uncertain. Abarbinel affirms it, but without any Authority.

That it be not rent.] That is, the Robe be not rent in putting it on; or by the Ephod and Breast-plate, that were upon it: For that had render'd it contemptible; a Rent among us (saith R. Levi Barzelonita) being dishonourable, Præcept. ciii.

Ver. 33. And beneath, upon the Hem of it.] Or upon its Skirts. Κατὰ πέζαν, saith Josephus, towards the Bottom, where it touched the Feet.

Thou shalt make Pomegranates.] So the Hebrew Word Rimmonim undoubtedly signifies, as Maimonides, and other learned Jews affirm. Jarchi saith, they were to be of the Bigness of an Hen's Egg.

Of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, round about the Hem thereof.] Though the Robe it self was of one simple Colour, yet the Skirts of it were very much adorned by variety of Colours in the Pomegranates; which were made of Yarn dyed blue, purple, and scarlet (of these see ch. xxv. 4.) and the LXX add, of fine Linen. For so we read they were made, ch. xxxix. 24.

And Bells of Gold between them, round about.] The Targum upon Esth. vi. 10. makes the Kings of Persia to have worn such kind of Garments. For he represents Abasuerus as saying to Haman, Go to my Wardrobe, and take one of my best purple Cloaks, and of the best silk Vests, with Gems at the four Corners of it, and golden Bells and Pomegranates hanging round about. And no doubt they were intended partly as an Ornament to the High Priest, their Matter being of Gold; but what their Form was, we are not told. There were round Bells in use amongst them, like those which we commonly see upon the Collars of our Horses Necks: But Maimonides saith these were of a Pyramidal Figure, open at the bottom, with Clappers in them, like our little Hand-Bells.

Ver. 34. A golden Bell and a Pomegranate, a golden Bell and a Pomegranate, upon the Bottom, &c.] So there was a Bell (as the Jews explain it) between every two Pomegranates, and a Pomegranate between every two Bells. But how many of each there were, is uncertain; tho' the Jews commonly say there were seventy-two. Which, if it was true, and the Pomegranates were of such a Bigness, as was said before, this Robe would have been so wide at the bottom, as to have been cumbersome, especially with so many Pomegranates and Bells hanging upon it.

Ver. 35. And it shall be unto Aaron, to minister.] He was never to appear before God without this Garment, nor to wear it but when he ministered. The same is said of all the Priestly Garments, both of his and of his Sons, ver. 3, 4.

And his Sound shall be heard, when he goeth in unto the holy Place before the LORD.] That the People, upon this Notice, might fall to their Prayers, while he was offering Incense; which represented their going up to Heaven.

And when he cometh out.] That they might then dispose themselves, to be dismissed with his Blessing.

That he die not.] For neglecting to appear before God in this solemn Manner, as he required. For it is the common Maxim among the Jews, that when the Priests were clothed with their Garments, they were held to be Priests; when they were not so clothed, they were not Priests. That is, if they presumed to minister without this Attire, it was an illegal Act, and unacceptable to God. See ver. ult.

Ver. 36. And thou shalt make a Plate of pure Gold.] The Hebrew Word Zitz is translated πέταλον by the LXX; which signifies a Leaf expanded. And such was this Plate (as we render it) a thin Piece of Gold, two Fingers broad (as Jarchi tells us) and so long, as to reach from one Ear to the other; being bound to the Forehead with a String, which was tied behind the Head; and thence is called a Crown (ch. xxxix. 30.) as all Things are which compass the Forehead. And Crowns being antiently made of Flowers, or Leaves, which we call Garlands, Josephus saith this Crown was adorned with the Figures of that Flower which the Greeks call κωνίς, of which there were three Rows; L. iii. Antiq. c. 8. And indeed the Hebrew Word Zitz signifies a Flower; which hath made some think this Plate had its Name from the Flowers which were wrought in it, to make it look more beautiful. See ch. xxix. 6.

And

And grave upon it like the Engravings of a Signet.] Not by cutting the Letters deep in the Plate, but by making them protuberant, like those which are made by a Seal upon Wax. See ver. 22.

HOLINESS TO THE LORD.] The antient Crowns perhaps had some Image or other in them (for in later Times Domitian had a golden Crown with the Effigies of Jupiter and Minerva, as Suetonius tells us) instead of which, God commands his own great Name to be engraven on Aaron's Crown; in these Words; which signify, that he was separated to the Service of the Most High. It is but a frivolous Question, which the Jews make, Whether these Words were engraven in one Line, or in two, one above another? For there is no reason to make us think they were not in one Line, as they are here written.

Ver. 37. And thou shalt put it on a blue Lace.] It hung on a Ribband of blue, by which it was fastned upon the Mitre, as it follows in the next Words. The Talmudists fancy there were three Ribbands, one at each Ear, and one in the Middle; which is this here mentioned. But this one was sufficient for the Purpose, as will appear when the next Words are rightly understood.

That it may be upon the Mitre.] There was an Order before for making a Mitre, among other Vestments; but we have not been told, hitherto, of what it was made (which is mentioned below, ver. 39.) nor what was the Form of it. The Latins antiently called it Stroppus, which is the same with the Greek σέτρον; being a Fillet wound about the Head of their Priests, as Festus tells us. Prudentius calls it tortam infulam, because it was made sometimes of three or four Ribbands or Laces wreathed together: Vid. Cuperus, in his Apotheosis Homeri, p. 138. The antient Greeks call it Tiara, and Cidaris, and sometimes Diadema; which was commonly made of Byssus, or fine Linen, as appears even from the Story of Alexander the Great, who (as Justin tells us) took his Diadem from his Head, to bind up the Wounds of Lyfimachus, L. xv. Which shows that it was made of fine Linen, which was proper for that Purpose.

They were of divers Colours, but commonly white: And such were the Diadems of Kings, which Ammianus calls fasciolam candidam regie majestatis insigne, L. xii. Such was the Mitre of the High-Priest (ver. 39.) and the Bonnets of the lower Priests. The former of which they called Mitznepheth, and the other Migbaath. They did not differ at all in their Matter, but only in their Form. Both consisted of sixteen Ells of fine Linen, as the Hebrew Doctors agree; but do not tell us of what Breadth; which might be wrapt round several Times about, into what Form they pleased. And the Migbaath, or Bonnets, they all say, came lower down upon the Forehead than the Mitre, and rose up higher, like an Hillock. But the Mitznepheth did not cover the Forehead at all, and was flatter than the Bonnets, but much broader, consisting of more Folds round; like the Turbants which are now worn in the East, or like an half Sphere.

Now some understand these Words, that it may be upon the Mitre, as if the golden Plate was bound upon the Mitre; which is contrary to what follows, ver. 38. It shall be upon Aaron's Forehead. This therefore must be understood of the Lace or Ribband, which was to come down over the Mitre, to fasten the golden Plate, which depended upon it. For being put thro' a little Hole in the middle of the Plate, it went over the Mitre; and each End of it being put into the Holes of the Plate, which were at each Ear, it was brought up again, and tied over the Mitre. Thus we must interpret it, if there was but one String to fasten it. It cannot be denied indeed, that sometimes more than one Thing of a kind is intended, where the Scripture speaks in the Singular Number (as in ch. viii. 21. x. 4, &c.) and therefore we may conceive, as I said before, that there were three Ribbands, one at each End, and another in the Middle, by which it hung upon the Forehead; whereby they might more easily be fastned at the Top of the Mitre.

Upon the Forefront of the Mitre it shall be.] That is, the golden Plate shall be in the Forefront of it. By which it appears that the Hebrew Doctors rightly described it, as reaching before from Ear to Ear, but no part of it behind. That is, it was an half Circle, not a whole; incompassing only the fore-part of the Head, not like other Crowns that compass it round.

Ver. 38. And it shall be upon Aaron's Forehead.] The Mitre, as I said before, did not come down low (as the Bonnets did) but only covered the Crown, and the upper Part of the Head; the whole Forehead being left bare, that there might be space enough for this Plate of Gold to lie upon it, and for his Phylacteries, as the Jews will have it, which were next to the Mitre, and then the Crown, a little above the Eyes. But some of them think the High-Priest wore no Phylacteries, having no need of them, when he was clothed with so many holy Garments. But, not to trouble our selves with that, it appears, by these Words, that the Plate did not lie upon the Mitre, but upon the High-Priest's Forehead.

That Aaron may bear the Iniquity of the holy Things, which the Children of Israel shall hallow in all their Gifts.] These Words suppose there might be some Defects in their Sacrifices and Gifts, which they consecrated and presented unto God (though they were ignorant of it) which were all pardoned (for that's meant by bearing, that is, taking away Iniquity) by the Intercession of their High-Priest, when he appeared before God with this Crown upon his Head, that is, thus perfectly and compleatly attired. Wherein he represented our great High-Priest, Christ Jesus; by whose perfect Sanctity and Satisfaction all the Defects of our sincere Services are supplied.

And it shall be always upon his Forehead.] That is, whensoever he went in to minister in the Holy Place.

That he may be accepted before the LORD.] That the Children of Israel, and their Sacrifices and Gifts, might be accepted, when they presented them to God; which they were not, if the High-Priest did not appear before him in this Manner, on their Behalf. The Heathens themselves (as Athenaeus informs us, L. xv. c. 5.) thought Prayers and Sacrifices then acceptable to their Gods, when they offered them with Crowns on their Heads. And therefore a great many Authors tell us, the Priests in all Countries were crown'd crown'd when they ministred; nay, the Sacrifices themselves, and their Altars, and their holy Utensils, were crown'd; as if all their Services had been ineffectual, if made without a Crown. For they that prepared the Beasts for Sacrifice, and the Musicians, and all that were present were crown'd, as appears out of antient Coins, and innumerable antient Writers. See Cuperus, Apotheos. Hom. p. 70.

Ver. 39. And thou shalt embroider the Coat of fine Linen.] This Coat is one of the Garments ordered to be made, ver. 4. in Hebrew called Ketonab; from whence both the Greek Word χιτών, and the Latin, Tunica, seem to be derived. The Matter of it was fine Linen, and therefore it was white. The Form of it was not much unlike one of our Shirts, with Sleeves coming down to the Wrists; but made pretty close to the Body, and so long, as to reach down to the Heels. It was the most inward of all the Priestly Garments, being next to their Body. And though it be not mentioned in the Description of it, there is no doubt that it had a Slit in the Neck of it, by which it was put over their Head, and then tied to the Neck with Strings.

Embroidered.] The Hebrew Word Taschbetz all agree signifies a Work with certain Figures woven in it, either of Gold, or other Materials. But what sort of Figures, is not certain. The famous Salmasius thinks they were round, like to our Eyes. Others take them to have been square, or cubical. R. Sol. Jarchi saith in general, that it was a Work like the Ouches (as we translate Mischbetzoth) in which the precious Stones were set. But none, I think, hath made such likely Guesses at the Figure of them, as Jo. Braunius, who takes them to have been nothing else but lacus aut fossalus angulares, &c. such little deep Holes, as resemble those that are in one of the Stomachs of those Animals that chew the Cud, called Reticulum. See L. i. de Vestitu Sacerd. Hebræorum, c. 17.

And thou shalt make the Mitre of Linen.] See ver. 37. where the Mitre is mentioned.

And thou shalt make the Girdle of Needle-work.] It is mentioned before, ver. 4. under the Name of Abanet, or Abnet, which no doubt signifies a Girdle, or Belt; yet not like our common Girdles, but like that which we call a Schafsch, being made of twined Linen, and Worsted of divers Colours, as we find ch. xxxix. 29. where blue, and purple, and scarlet, signifies Wool, or Worsted-yarn of these Colours. Such were the Girdles of all the Priests, which they wore all the Year, the High-Priest as well as the rest; except upon one Day (that of Expiation) when he had on a Girdle of fine Linen only, not mixed with Woolen. These Girdles were of such a Length, that they might go round the Body more than once, as Josephus tells us, L. iii. c. 8. For, if we may believe him, they were two and thirty Ells long, and four Fingers broad, being hollow within. When they were not in the Act of Ministration, both Ends of them hung down to their very Feet, περὶ ἐντέπνια, &c. (as the same Josephus speaks) for Comeliness sake, that they might appear more goodly to the Beholders: Which agrees to what Moses saith in the next Verse, that they (as all the Priestly Garments, ver. 2.) were made for Glory and Beauty. But when they went about any holy Work belonging to their Office, they threw them over their left Shoulder, that they might not be an hindrance to them. The Use of this Girdle was to gird their Coat close to them; which they tuck'd up also in the Girdle (when they went about their Ministry) to the middle of their Legs, that it might not incumber them in their Service.

Of Needle-work.] This was a different sort of Work from Taschbetz (which we translate broidered, ver. 4.) and from Choschbe (which we translate cunning, ver. 6, 15.) and is here called Rokem. Which signifies the same with Choschbe, as to the Variety of Colours and Figures in the Work: But Choschbe, as the Hebrew Doctors tell us, was done by weaving, and Rokem with a Needle, as we rightly take it. Of the two, Choschbe was the most artificial; as the Word seems to intimate; being wrought on both Sides with the same Figures, whereas Rokem was only on one Side. This they gather from ch. xxvi. 31. where the Veil is ordered to be made of the Work called Choschbe, which it's probable was glorious on both Sides, both within and without the most holy Place. Josephus saith this Girdle was wrought with Flowers, of the several Colours mentioned ch. xxxix. 29.

Ver. 40. And for Aaron's Sons thou shalt make Coats.] The Coats of all the Priests, as well as of the High-Priest, were embroidered, as Maimonides expressly affirms. And it seems to be the Sense of ver. 4. where he is commanded to make Garments not only for Aaron, but for his Sons (i. e. all the rest of the Priests) among which the broidered Coat may well be thought to belong to them. See ch. xxxix. 27.

And thou shalt make for them Girdles.] The Girdles of the inferior Priests were the very same with that of the High-Priest (as well as their Tunicks or Coats) being to bind their Coats to their Body.

And Bonnets.] How these differed from the Mitre of the High-Priest, in their Form, not in their Matter, see ver. 37.

For Glory and for Beauty.] The Garments of all the Priests were contrived to make them appear in a splendid and comely Manner, when they ministred to the glorious Majesty of God; being of fine Linen, which was worn by the greatest Persons, made with great Art, especially their Coats and Girdles, which were finely adorned (as I have shewn in the Verses foregoing) with elegant Figures, and rich Colours; for blue, or Sky-colour, purple and scarlet, belonged to Kings, and Persons of Honour. But the Garments of the High-Priest were above all the rest most glorious, and designed so to be, ver. 2. For besides those common to him with all the Priests, which were very costly, he had others far more precious: Particularly the Ephod and its Girdle, the Breast-plate set with Stones of great Value; the Robe, and the Crown of Gold. The two Stones also on the Shoulders of the Ephod were not only precious in their kind, but for their Bigness; being so large, that Twelve Names were engraven in them, containing six and thirty Letters. All which considered, Philo had reason to say (L. de Sacerd. Hon.) it is manifest the Law dress up their Priest, βασιλεὺς εἰς σεμνότητα καὶ τιμὴν, to the Venerableness and Honour of a King. For the Priesthood in old Time was so honourable, that Kings themselves discharged it: Which is the Reason that in Scripture Princes and Priests have the same Name of Cohenim.

To all which I may add, That they took such Care all their Garments should be for Glory and Beauty, that when they were foul, they did not wash them, nor repair them when they had any Breach in them; but new ones were bought, and the old employed about the Lamps in the Feast of Tabernacles. See Mr. Selden, L. iii. de Synedr. c. 11. p. 142.

Ver. 41. And thou shalt put them upon Aaron thy Brother, and his Sons with them.] As we read he did, Lev. viii. 6, 7, &c. 13. and this was part of Aaron's Consecration, ver. 3. of this Chapter.

And shalt anoint them.] He anointed Aaron by pouring the holy Oil upon his Head, Lev. viii. 12. but he anointed his Sons only by sprinkling some of it upon their Garments (as he did upon his also) with the Blood of the Sacrifice, ch. xxix. 21. Lev. viii. 30.

And consecrate them.] By the Sacrifice of a Ram, called the Ram of Consecration; the Blood of which he put upon the Tip of their right Ear, &c. ch. xxix. 20. Lev. viii. 22, 23, &c. and by the Wave-offering which he put into their Hands, that they might wave them before the LORD, ch. xxix. 24. Lev. viii. 27. From whence the Phrase for consecrate here in this Place, is in Hebrew fill their Hand.

And sanctify them.] By the foregoing Ceremonies. For they were set apart to the Divine Service, by putting on their Garments, anointing them, and offering the Sacrifice of Consecration, and by washing them with Water, as appears from Lev. viii. 6, 7, 12. where it is said, he anointed Aaron to sanctify him; and, ver. 30. having sprinkled their Garments, it is said, he sanctified Aaron and his Garments, and his Sons, and his Sons Garments with him.

Ver. 42. And thou shalt make them linen Breeches.] Tho' these are mentioned in the last Place, yet they were put on the first of all the Priests Garments; after them the Coat, which being girt about with the Girdle, the Bonnet was put upon the Priest's Head. The High-Priest, in like manner, having put on his Breeches, Coat and Girdle (which were common to all Priests) was clothed with his Robe, and next with the Ephod and Breastplate, which were inseparable; and last of all with his Mitre, and the golden Crown. To which Order Nature it self directed them; the inward Garments being always put on before the outward.

Now as to these Miknese, which we truly render Breeches, the Matter of them was Linen, as we are here informed; and not ordinary Linen, but that which the Hebrews call Scheshb, which was fine Linen; and more than that, they were of twined (or fix-threaded) Linen, as we read ch. xxxix. 28. They were made with great Art, being woven of one Piece, and not sewed together, as Maimonides tells us. The Form of them was like our Breeches or Drawers; which may be the Reason why Moses here uses a Word of the dual Number, because they had two Parts, which covered each Thigh distinctly.

To cover their Nakedness.] This was opposed, as Maimonides thinks, to the idolatrous Worship of Peor; which, if we may believe him, was so beastly, that it was performed by discovery of their Nakedness, More Nevoch. Part iii. c. 45.

From the Loins even to the Thighs they shall reach.] They were bound about the Loins with Strings, which run through the Top of them, that they might be drawn straiter or looser, as they pleased; and came down the Thighs, as far as to their Knees. There were some Breeches antiently which covered the Legs also, and came down to the Feet, such as Sailors use in cold Countries: But these did not come down so low, the Intention of them being only to cover those Parts (as it goes before) which ought not to be exposed. For though they had a Coat over their whole Body, yet that being loose and wide below, by some Accident or other, those Parts might have been seen which ought to be secret, if that had not been prevented by these Drawers, which so covered the lower Parts, that nothing could possibly be seen. For in this they differed from our Drawers, that they had no Opening, either behind or before. Some think before this Time there were no such thing as Breeches in use among the Hebrews; nor after this among any other Men but the Priests, in their Ministration. But in latter Ages they came in use, as appears from Dan. iii. 21.

Ver. 43. And they shall be upon Aaron, and upon his Sons, when they come in unto the Tabernacle, or when they come near unto the Altar, to minister in the holy Place.] They could not be permitted so much as to appear in the Tabernacle, much less to minister, especially in the holy Place, without their holy Vestments: Which they wore there only, but in no other Place; for at home, or abroad, or in the Sanhedrim, and all other Places out of the Temple, they wore common Garments, such as other Men did. Insomuch that St. Paul could not distinguish the High-Priest, when he sat in the Court, by his Habit, from other Judges, Acts xxiii. 5. And accordingly as we read, Ezek. xlii. 14. xlii. 17, 18, 19. an express Precept for putting off the Priests Garments, and laying them up in the Chambers appointed for that Purpose, when they went out of the Court where they ministered. The High-Priest, as Maimonides informs us, had a Chamber, or Vestry peculiar to himself, where his Garments were laid up, when he put them off, as the Robes of Kings are in their Wardrobe. Of this one cannot reasonably doubt, that they being not only precious, but sacred Things, were kept safe in the Temple, which was an holy Place. And so were the Garments of the inferior Priests, as we may learn from Ezra and Nebemiah; who, among other Things put into the Treasury, mention a certain Number of Priests Garments, Ezra ii. 69. Neb. vii. 70. In their Vestries also there were peculiar Chests, where every sort of Vestment were kept by themselves. All the Breeches, for instance, which had this Inscription Miknese, i. e. Breeches. In like manner all the Coats and the Bonnets had two distinct Chests, with this Inscription, Ketonoth and Migbaoth: And so had the rest, as we are told in the Mishna Tamid, c. 5.

But while they were in the Temple, they might keep on their holy Garments (only not sleep in them there) even at those Hours when they did not minister. Which this Text seems to suppose, when it saith, they shall be upon them, when they come into the Tabernacle, as well as when they come near unto the Altar to minister. Thus the Talmudists: In the Temple they might keep on their Garments, whether in the Time of their Ministration, or out of it. But this they understand only of their Breeches, their Coat and Bonnet; for their Girdle they were bound to lay aside, as soon as they had done ministering.

That they bear not Iniquity, and die.] That God do not punish them with Death, for being so profane as to appear before him without their holy Garments, which he appointed to preserve his Service from Contempt.

It shall be a Statute for ever unto him, and his Seed after him.] That is, as long as there shall be any Priest of the Order of Aaron, they shall appear before God in these Garments. But that Priesthood being abolished by the true eternal Priesthood of Christ, there is no longer any Use of them; no more than of the Sacrifices those Priests offered, which are compleated in the Sacrifice of Christ. As for the Jewish Sense of these Words, it is manifest that it hath been long confuted; there having been no Priesthood, nor holy Garments, nor Sacrifices, no nor Temple among them, for above sixteen hundred Years. Nay, before the coming of our Saviour, some of the Priestly Ornaments, and those the chief of all, were gone, viz. the Urim and the Thummim in the Breast-plate; which they generally confess were not in the second Temple; and it may be a Question, whether they continued to the End of the first. But the Truth is, there was the Breast-plate and the Ephod, and consequently the Urim and Thummim, as to its Matter and Form (tho' it had lost its Use, there being no Answers from God given by it) and accordingly all the rest of the Priestly Garments remained as long as there was any Priesthood: Which is the full Sense of these Words, a Statute for ever to him, and his Seed after him.

C H A P. XXIX.

Ver. 1. AND this is the Thing that thou shalt do unto them, to hallow them.] Having ordered Aaron and his Sons to be set apart to attend upon him in his House, as his Ministers, he now directs how they should be hallowed (or made holy) that is, separated to his Service in the Priest's Office.

To minister unto me in the Priest's Office.] This was the Design of their Separation from other Men, as was often said before, ch. xxviii. 1, 3, 4, 41, 43.

Take one young Bullock, and two Rams without Blemish.] There were several Things to be done before this, though this was the chief. For they were to be washed, and robed with their Priestly Garments, and anointed; and then they were compleated by peculiar Sacrifices, which are directed and described, ver. 10, 11, &c. and put in execution, Lev. viii. 1, 2, &c.

Ver. 2. And unleavened Bread, &c.] Together with the foregoing Sacrifices (which it will appear hereafter were of several Sorts) there was a Mincha to be offered; Bread being necessary at a Table, together with Flesh. And this consisted of three Parts; unleavened Bread, unleavened Cakes tempered with Oil, and unleavened Wafers (or thin Cakes, like to our Pan-cakes) anointed with Oil, before they were put into the Pan to be fried. All these were to be made of wheaten Flour: And the two last were accounted a delicious Bread among the Greeks, as Athenæus tells us, L. iii. Deipnosoph.

Ver. 3. And thou shalt put them into one Basket, &c.] All these making but one Meat-offering, were to be put into one Basket, and so brought to the Door of the Tabernacle, to be presented there to God, together with the Bullock and Rams, ver. 23.

Ver. 4. And Aaron and his Sons thou shalt bring unto the Door of the Tabernacle.] To be presented unto God, together with their Sacrifice.

And shalt wash them with Water.] This was the first Thing that was done for the hallowing them (ver. 1.) as we read Lev. viii. 6. and was performed, some think, at the Laver, which is directed to be made in the next Chapter (xxx. 18, 19.) where they were to repeat this Washing every time they went in to minister unto God. But now, I take it to be more likely, at their first Consecration, Water was brought from thence to wash them at the Door of the Tabernacle, before they were permitted to enter into it. Whether their whole Bodies were now washed, is not said; but we may probably gather that they were; for they were now looked on as wholly unclean (being unhallowed) and therefore were to be washed all over: Tho', being once cleansed, they needed not do more, when they went to minister, but only wash their Hands and their Feet. Which agrees with our Saviour's Words, John xiii. 10. Such Washings, every body knows, were in use among the Gentiles, before they offered Sacrifice.

Ver. 5. And thou shalt take the Garments.] Their Bodies being washed, they were, next of all, robed with those Garments prescribed in the foregoing Chapter.

And put upon Aaron the Coat, and the Robe of the Ephod, and the Ephod, &c.] The Order wherein these Garments were put on, according to the Talmudists, was this: First, the Breeches were put on by the Priest himself, and that privately; which is the Reason perhaps they are not here mentioned. They being tied about his Loins, Moses put upon him the close Coat, which came down to his Ancles. This then being bound to him by the Girdle (which went round several times about him under the Arm-holes) he put upon him his Bonnet. This was the manner of habiting an ordinary Priest. But when the High-Priest was consecrated, after the Girdle before named was put on the Robe, with the Ephod and Breast-plate, and then his Mitre; to which was added the Golden-plate, tied with a blue Ribband upon his Forehead. See Selden, de Succession. ad Pontif. L. ii. c. 8.

Ver. 6. And put the holy Crown upon his Head.] By this Crown is meant nothing else but the Golden-plate, on which was written Holiness to the the LORD, ch. xxviii. 36. which is expressly called by the Name of a Crown, (ch. xxxix. 30. Lev. viii. 9.) being bound upon the Forehead with a blue Ribband like a Diadem. Josephus seems to call the Mitre by the Name of a Crown (L. vi. Halof. c. 15.) but then he immediately adds, αὐτὸν τὸν χρυσοῦν ἀλλὰ τὸ στέφανον, &c. about which there was another golden Crown, having holy Letters written in it, &c. Vide Selden, L. ii. de Succession. c. 7.

Ver. 7. And thou shalt take the anointing Oil.] The next Thing that was done for the Consecration of Aaron, was anointing him with that Oil which God ordered to be made, ch. xxx. 31, 32, &c.

And pour it upon his Head, and anoint him.] The Jews seem to think these two distinct Things, pouring Oil on his Head, and then anointing him. The Manner of which they say was thus: The Oil being poured upon his Head, which ran down to his Face, he that anointed him drew with his Finger the Figure of the Greek Letter Chi (or St. Andrew's Cross) upon his Forehead between his Eyebrows. This was done, Aben Ezra thinks, before his Mitre was put upon his Head. But that is contrary to the Order here set down, which prescribes the putting on all his Priestly Garments (of which this was one) before the anointing. And he was therefore to be anointed in all his Habiliments, because he was anointed to minister unto God, which he could not do without all the holy Garments (ch. xxviii. 43.) particularly this, it being unlawful to appear before God with the Head uncovered; as it was also among the Gentiles. Other of the Jewish Doctors therefore think, that when his Head was wrapt about with the Mitre, a Place was left bare upon his Crown, for the pouring the Oil upon it. Certain it is, that it was so poured on his Head, as to run down upon his Beard, Psal. cxxxiii. 2. And the Jews say, the Form of the Letter Chi was drawn upon his Forehead, to distinguish his anointing, from that of their Kings, who were anointed in the Form of a Circle or Crown. See Selden de Succession. L. ii. c. 9. Where he observes also, that there being no holy Oil all the Time of the second Temple after the Captivity, they made High-Priests, only by putting on their holy Garments. Which that they might have compleat they made an Imitation of Urim and Thummim (though they had not the Oracle it self) that none of the eight Garments might be wanting. So Maimonides.

The only remaining Difficulty is, Whether all Aaron's Sons were anointed as well as himself? And Mr. Selden, in the Place before named, thinks they were at the first, but not in future Times, tho' all Aaron's Successors in the High Priesthood were consecrated by anointing, as long as the holy Oil lasted; that is, to the Captivity of Babylon; or as some say, fifty Years before, when it was hid, and no more found. And there is a Place in the next Chapter which seems to favour this Opinion, ch. xxx. 30. But as we read of no Command for their Anointing, as there is here for Aaron's; so when this Command came to be executed, it is said expressly, that Moses poured Oil on Aaron's Head; but that upon his Sons he only put the holy Garments, Lev. viii. 12, 13. And therefore he is peculiarly called, The High-Priest from among his Brethren, upon whose Head the anointing Oil was poured; Lev. xxi. 10. The Anointing therefore of his Sons, ch. xxx. 30. is only meant of that Unction which is here mentioned, ver. 21. of this Chapter, where a Mixture is ordered to be made of the Blood of the Sacrifice and of the anointing Oil, which was order'd to be sprinkled both upon Aaron and his Sons, and upon their Garments, and was a part of their Consecration; for it was done accordingly at that Time, as we read Lev. viii. 30. So that Aaron himself had a double Unction; one proper to him alone as High-Priest, upon whose Head the holy Oil was poured, another common to him with his Sons, as he was a Priest, whose Garments were sprinkled with the Oil and Blood mingled together.
